Mr. FINDLEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the establishment of dairy price support levels at 85 percent of parity. Not only is this action urgently needed, it is totally justified. Because of the short time remaining in this session, it is essential that the House act with dispatch to approve this bill today.

In late September and again last month, the Dairy and Poultry Subcommittee of the Agriculture Committee held hearings on the dairy price situation. Out of these hearings we developed House Resolution 1414 which calls for an immediate increase in the dairy price support level to 90 percent of parity. The present bill would require the setting of the support level at a lower level, but it would hold them at least at that level through March 31, 1976, and would provide for a quarterly adjustment in the support level so that it would be maintained at this minimum level throughout the year.

During our hearings, we heard testimony from dairy farmers from every part of the Nation. They uniformly told us one thing. They are today losing money in producing milk. The inflation that has plagued the economy has sharply increased their costs. At the same time, milk prices last spring and summer skidded sharply, largely due to expanded imports of dairy products ordered by the administration.

In November 1973, farmers received $7.76 per hundredweight for manufacturing milk. Last month, the price was $7.11. In November 1973, the index of prices paid by farmers for commodities and services, interest, taxes, and wage rates stood at 519. Last month it was 610. The comparison of this data tells the story of the economic squeeze in the industry very clearly.

Using the data available in November, 85 percent of parity would be $7.68—less than the price for manufacturing milk a year ago.

The dairy price support law requires the establishment of a level of price support that will assure the production of an adequate supply of milk today and in the future. Today, the adequacy of our milk supply is threatened. Milk production has declined in each of the last 2 years. USDA now predicts a further decline in production for next year. At a time when there is growing concern over the price of food and the availability of an adequate supply of major food items, we would indeed be derelict if we permitted the productive capacity of a major segment of agriculture to be so eroded as to create market shortages.

This can be prevented very simply. The provisions of S. 4206 provide a means to prevent this loss of productive capacity by giving dairy farmers an increased assurance that they will be able to recover their costs.

December 20, 1974

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GILMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of S. 4206, providing an increase in the floor price of milk to 85 percent of parity.

Dairy farmers throughout our Nation are in dire financial straits. In my own region, the number of dairy farms has dropped from 667 in 1968 to only about 300 this year, and threatens to go even lower as more and more small farms are driven out of business.

The rise in all of the costs of operation has far outstripped the rise in the cost of milk. Feed grains, labor, taxes, equipment—all have gone up drastically in price and threaten to go even higher. Yet our farmers have gone without relief, still struggling along on the same, woefully inadequate revenues they have been subsisting on for years.

I was among those who urged the President to increase the floor price of milk to $7.50 per hundredweight, and who protested his decision not to do so.

We cannot sit idly by and watch while hundreds of vital family dairy farms close up. This bill is one thing we can do to help, and I urge my colleagues to join in support of this measure.

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I rise in strong support of S. 4206. This bill represents the last best effort to provide needed assistance to America's dairy farmers. Only if we can pass the bill tonight can we help to alleviate the cost-price squeeze which so presses the dairy farmers.

Mr. Speaker, the numerous times I have pleaded, urged and coaxed the Department of Agriculture, the President and anyone else I could find have to a large extent fallen on deaf ears. This House has the chance tonight to correct a series of wrongs to assure an adequate supply of quality products and a return to the farmer.

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this bill. I commend the gentleman for calling it up.

I compliment the gentleman for bringing this bill to the floor. I do not know of any more urgently needed bill for both our dairymen and the consumers, because, Mr. Speaker, it is not very far down the road when we will not have dairy products in this country unless action is taken such as contemplated in this bill.

Mr. DENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. DENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I concur with the statements of my colleagues.

I compliment the chairman for bringing this bill to the floor.

The agricultural sector is suffering deeply and it is important for the national interest that this legislation be enacted.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. QUIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. QUIE. Mr. Speaker, I certainly urge support of this legislation. Just recently we passed an authorizing bill for $6.5 billion to help the unemployed and we already had appropriated $4 billion to help them. Now we have a segment of our economy in dire straits, the dairy farmers of this Nation, and that will affect the consumers of this Nation who are dependent on the dairy farmers, who cannot stay in business and survive unless they get this help.

I urge support of this bill for the farmers and the consumers of this Nation.

Mr. FINDLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FINDLEY. This bill would establish Government price support for dairy products at 85 percent of parity. This would be the highest level of support for any commodity, controlled or uncontrolled.

The support for dairy by law is for unlimited, uncontrolled production. USDA experts estimate that this bill could lead to such a substantial Government takeover of dairy products that the resultant Government losses would be as high as $400 million for the 1975-76 year. This relates only to losses sustained by the American people as taxpayers. The bill would also increase costs to the American people as consumers, because it undoubtedly would have the effect of forcing up retail prices of milk and other dairy products.

No other commodity is supported higher than 75 percent of parity, and only peanuts, a commodity that is produced under strict Government controls, is supported as high as 75 percent.

Dairymen are in financial difficulty, but this bill is the wrong remedy.

The Congress should not pass judgment on a measure important to the American people under these circumstances. A similar measure was considered but not even reported by a subcommittee of the Agriculture Committee.

The unanimous consent procedure precludes debate as well as amendments. A bill that could cost taxpayers as much as $400 million should not be permitted to slip by without debate in the last few minutes of the Congress.

Production plans by dairy interests should respond to the market, not Government prices assurances. To the extent that Government supports influence the plans of farmers, they carry the grave risk of stimulating uneconomic production.

Retail fluid milk prices have been increasing rapidly this year. In comparison to year-earlier figures, they have increased: 24 percent in July, 19.8 percent in August, 16.6 percent in September, and 10.2 percent in October.

USDA estimates that the average support payment under the terms of this bill for the 1975-76 year will be $8.30. This would cost taxpayers up to $400 million dollars according to USDA estimates.

USDA reports that production is falling off sharply—which means that supply-demand disciplines are having effect. This will mean higher returns for the producers as the result of market, rather than Government price-fixing. This is as it should be.

Government data already shows that per capita milk consumption is steadily going down. Much of that decrease can be laid at the feet of high retail prices for milk. If the support level is increased, the resulting jump in the retail price would likely further decrease consumption and at the same time could cause surplus production.

That would further harm the dairy industry. A vital dairy industry needs more consumption, not less, and if the Government tampers with that market it tampers unwisely with the future of thousands of producers.

I sympathize in the plight of dairymen. Many are going out of business. No doubt others will follow.

I have heard from a number of constituents who want me to support, not oppose, this bill.

Some of them will be upset at my action against this bill. However, I strongly believe this bill is a costly mistake, and in the long term will weaken the economic base of American dairymen.

We will get less consumption. We will get higher Government costs.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FINDLEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. STRATTON. I might say to the gentleman from Illinois that at one time I represented more dairy farmers than any other Member of the House from the State of New York. My district was the third largest dairy district in the country, so I think I know something about the dairy farmers.

I think the one thing the gentleman from Illinois is not aware of is that when we use the parity formula for computing the return to the dairymen, the gentleman is overlooking the fact that the dairymen's costs come from items which are not adequately reflected in the standard Consumer Price Index. Therefore, we have in New York State—and I am sure it applies to other States, although I cannot comment about them—that the actual costs of producing milk today with the grain prices as they are, are greater than what the dairymen receive for their products; so when we talk about giving them 85 percent of parity, it sounds as if we are talking about 85 percent of their costs; but the fact is that we are not taking care of 85 percent of their costs. That is the reason for the crisis that has confronted the dairy farmer in New York State and in other States as well.

December 20, 1974

At some time—and it should be soon—we ought to change the formula, but until we can do that, this emergency legislation is the only way we can keep these people in business and keep supplying the milk we need, not only for ourselves, but for the starving millions in other countries as well.

Mr. FINDLEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his contribution. It has a familiar ring. I have heard exactly the same argument presented against the parity formula in other things.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. O'NEILL was allowed to speak out of order.)

REPORT OF COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, your committee appointed to join a committee of the Senate to inform the President that the Congress is ready to adjourn, and to ask him if he has any further communications to make to the Congress, has performed that duty. The President has directed us to say that he has no further communication to make to the Congress.

The President further says that he is extremely grateful to the Congress of the United States, and particularly for the election today, and more particularly for the actions of the last 2 days in the confirmation of Mr. NELSON ROCKEFELLER and for the fact that we have sent to him the trade bill.

The President has no further requests at this time. The President wants to inform the House that he has plenty of action awaiting the 94th Congress, and with that the President said that Betty joins him in wishing to the Congress of the United States a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. FINDLEY) has the floor.

(By unanimous consent Mr. McFALL was allowed to speak out of order.)

WILLIAM "FISHBAIT" MILLER

Mr. McFALL. Mr. Speaker, the Doorkeeper of the House, Mr. William "Fishbait" Miller, just announced to the delegation of the committee as the last act of his career of 43 years serving this House.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend my friend, "Fishbait," and wish him well in his retirement.

Mr. FINDLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment very briefly on the objection made by the gentleman from New York (Mr. STRATTON). The parity formula is an imperfect formula established in the early part of this century, but what is curious is that I have heard the very same charge of imperfection which the gentleman from New York makes against the parity formula as applied to wheat, corn, or almost every other commodity.

I do think we can well spend some time to correct the formula today to make it more applicable to current needs, but I do not see anything about the formula which would tend to set dairies apart from the rest of the commodities.

Mr. BERGLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FINDLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. BERGLAND. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois is one of our most prized members of the Committee on Agriculture, and a source of great excitement, as we consider what otherwise might be mundane matters.

Mr. FINDLEY. I hope the gentleman will put that in the printed Record.

Mr. BERGLAND. I certainly will. I am sure the gentleman from Illinois was listening to the expert testimony presented in the subcommittee and is aware of the fact that the cost of feed is now about equal to the cost of milk. Few dairymen are paying their feed bill, let alone paying other expenses.

I am sure the gentleman from Illinois knows that it is important to maintain an adequate supply now and in the future, and I believe the best way to assure adequate supplies to consumers in the United States is by providing a very modest increase in income so that the farmers can stay in business and work their way through this tide of high expenses.

Mr. FINDLEY. I recognize that dairy farmers have pressing and national problems, but this bill is not the answer.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FINDLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Speaker, I have great respect for my colleague from Illinois, but I disagree with him as does my colleague from New York State, on the merits of this bill.

The hour is late and I have no desire to prolong this debate, but the hour is late for the American dairy farmer also. He is being driven from the land. We are in a period of critical economic times and this factor, I say to my friend from Illinois, speaks more than anyone as to why this bill will be passed.

I regret that I must disagree with my friend, but I could not let the record stand without making a few remarks.

Mr. FINDLEY. I understand, but milk consumption is going down and it certainly serves no good purpose for the interests of the dairymen to raise price supports and thus make the matter worse.

Mr. McDADE. There is unseasonable variance at all times. The important thing to remember is that the production of milk is going down because farmers are being driven off the land.

Mr. FINDLEY. Consumption is going down, too.

Mr. McDADE. At this time, I can take the gentleman to Pennsylvania, New York State, Vermont, and he can see the farmers being led to the auction block.

Once they leave the land, they are not going back. You will find them in the cities of America swelling the ranks of the unemployed, and find the consumers of this Nation are not aware that what they pay for milk, as less milk is produced, demand stays the same and prices continue to rise. That will happen unless we give them some help.

Mr. FINDLEY. That is the way the marketplace ought to function. That is why I oppose this bill, because the dairymen increased income from the market.

Mr. McDADE. I think we need it, and need it now.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of S. 4206 to increase the parity for milk to 85 percent.

In spite of theoretical arguments to the effect that this bill should not be necessary, or that we should correct the problem by future modification of the parity formula, the basic fact facing this country today is that dairy farmers from all over the country, including my own State of Washington, are going bankrupt, and are being forced out of business.

The result is more unemployment—the result is a shortage of dairy products for our children—and the result is that the dairy products on the supermarket shelves are more and more expensive.

With this bill—S. 4206—we have an opportunity to do two worthwhile things at once. We can protect some of our dairy farmers from bankruptcy, and we can help stabilize the supply and price of dairy products.

My dairy farmers from Washington State need this bill, and so do those from all across the Nation.

I only wish the bill called for 90 percent of parity, but this bill should be enacted now.

Mr. ICHORD. Mr. Speaker, as a Member of one of the largest dairy producing areas in the Nation, I rise in support of S. 4206 and urge the Members to give the bill the necessary two-thirds support as S. 4206 is definitely an emergency measure for the dairy farmers of America. I shall be very brief in view of the lateness of the hour. Many of my dairy farmers have already gone out of business and I fear that if this bill is not passed more than one half of my dairy farmers will disappear during the next six months. They cannot survive with the present prices of feed and grain, which high prices have in great part been brought about by the action of the Federal Government.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, the 12th District of Pennsylvania has over 4,400 dairy farmers which have been seriously damaged by the rampant inflation in this country.

All the prices of the goods that the farmer uses in the production of milk have increased as much as 120 percent yet the price of their products to the farmer has actually decreased and the farmers are being forced off the farms in droves.

I urge the passage of this bill immediately.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker I support the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. JONES), in his effort to assist the dairy farmers of America. They deserve our assistance and this matter is but a small measure of justice. I urge all my colleagues to join us by voting for this measure.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. JONES), that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill S. 4206.

The question was taken.

Mr. FINDLEY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 205, nays 58, answered "present" 1, not voting 170, as follows:

[Roll No. 726]

YEAS—205

Abdnor Alexander Anderson, Ill. Annunzio Armstrong Aspin Badillo Bafalls Baker Bauman Bergland Biester Boggs Bowen Brademas Bray Breaux Breckinridge Brooks Brown, Calif. Brown, Mich. Brown, Ohio Broyhill, Va. Burke, Fla. Burke, Mass. Burlison, Tex. Burlison, Mo. Burton, John Burton, Phillip Byron Casey, Tex. Cederberg Chamberlain Chisholm Clausen Don H. Cochran Cohen Conable Coughlin Cronin Culver Daniel, Dan Davis, S.C. Davis, Wis. de la Garza Dellenback Dellums Denholm Dickinson Dingell Dorn Downing Duncan du Pont Eckhardt Fish Fisher Flood Foley Ford Forsythe Fountain Fraser Freilingerhuysen Frenzel Frey Gaydos Gettys Gilman

Ginn Gonzalez Gray Green, Oreg. Gross Gubser Guyer Hamilton Hammer Schmidt Hansen, Idaho Harsha Hastings Heinz Henderson Holt Horton Johnson, Pa. Jones, Tenn. Jordan Karth Kastenmeier Kazez Kyros Lagomarsino Leggett Lehman Snyder Long, La. Casey, Md. Lott Lott McClary McCloskey McCollister McCormack McDade McEwen McFall Symington Symms Talcott Taylor, Mo. Taylor, N.C. Teague Thomson, Wis. Thone Thornton Treen Udall Ullman Vander Jagt Vander Veen Veysey Vigorito Waggonner Wampler Ware White Whitten Wilson, Charles, Tex. Wright Wyllie Young, Fla. Young, Ga. Young, S.C. Young, Tex. Zablocki

NAYS—58

Abzug Arends Ashley Bennett Broyhill, N.C. Buchanan Clawson, Del. Conyers Crane Danielson Dennis Derwinski Drinan Edwards, Ala. Fawcett Findley Gialmo Goldwater Green, Pa. Gude

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—1

Daniel, Robert W., Jr.

NOT VOTING—170

Adams Addabbo Anderson, Calif. Andrews, N.C. Andrews, N. Dak. Archer Ashbrook Barrett Beard Bell Beville Blaggi Bingham Blackburn Blatnik Boland Bolling Brasco Brinkley Broomfield Brozman Burgener Burke, Calif. Butler Camp Carey, N.Y. Carney, Ohio Carter Chappell Clancy Clark Clay Cleveland Collier Collins, Ill. Collins, Tex. Conlan Conte Corman Cotter Daniels, Dominick V. Davis, Ga. Delaney Dent Devine Diggs Donohue Dulski Edwards, Calif. Ellberg Erlenborn Esch Eshleman Evans, Colo. Evans, Tenn. Flowers Flynt

Gunter Hanrahan Hechler, W. Va. Heckler, Mass. Hillis Illinshaw Holtzman Hosmer Huber Hutchinson Mazzoli Michel Mookley Moorhead, Pa. Parris Pike Rangel Rhodes Rinaldo Rodino

Rogers Rosenthal Roybal St Germain Sarasin Steiger, Ariz. Studds Thompson, N.J. Towell, Nev. Van Deerlin Vanik Walde Whalen Whitehurst Wiggins Williams Young, Alaska Young, Ill.

Mr. Wolff with Mrs. Collins of Illinois. Mr. Hanley with Mr. Gibbons. Mrs. Sullivan with Mrs. Burke of California.

Mr. Howard with Mrs. Grasso. Mr. Jarman with Mr. Goodling. Mr. Corman with Mr. Cleveland. Mr. Cotter with Mr. Archer. Mr. Biaggi with Mr. Eshleman. Mr. Barrett with Mr. Camp. Mr. Nix with Mr. Dulski. Mr. Morgan with Mr. Erlenborn. Mr. Dominick V. Daniels with Mr. Broomfield.

Mr. Dent with Mr. Chappell. Mr. Delaney with Mr. Froehlich. Mr. Kluczynski with Mr. Ashbrook. Mr. Rostenkowski with Mr. Collier. Mr. Pickle with Mr. Carter.

Mr. Murphy of Illinois with Mr. Blackburn. Mr. Mitchell of Maryland with Mr. Blatnik. Mr. Molohan with Mr. Collins of Texas. Mr. Minish with Mr. Beard.

Mr. Madden with Mr. Conte. Mr. Macdonald with Mr. Butler. Mr. Evin with Tennessee with Mr. Devine. Mr. Flowers with Mr. Bell.

Mr. Adams with Mr. Conlan. Mr. Landrum with Mr. Clancy. Mr. Diggs with Mr. Donohue. Mr. Koch with Mr. Brinkley. Mr. Anderson of California with Mr. Grover.

Mr. Bingham with Mr. Landgrebe. Mr. Chappell with Mr. Hudnut. Mr. Edwards of California with Mr. Luken. Mr. Ellberg with Mr. King.

Mr. Clay with Mr. Hanna. Mr. Evans of Colorado with Mr. Maraziti. Mr. Flynt with Mr. Haley. Mr. Fuqua with Mr. Latta.

Mr. Harrington with Mr. Lujan. Mr. Hawkins with Mrs. Griffiths. Mr. Helstoski with Mr. McKinney. Mr. Jones of Alabama with Mr. Milford.

Mr. Metcalfe with Mrs. Hansen of Washington. Mr. Moss with Mr. Kuykendall. Mr. Patten with Mr. Lent.

Mr. Jones of North Carolina with Mr. Hungate. Mr. Randall with Mr. Martin of Nebraska. Mr. Rooney of New York with Mr. Hogan.

Mrs. Schroeder with Mr. Mathias of California. Mr. Stark with Mr. Kemp. Mr. Traxler with Mr. Martin of North Carolina.

Mr. Yates with Mr. Mills. Mr. Hicks with Mr. Hollifield. Mr. Yatron with Mr. Minshall of Ohio. Mr. Johnson of California with Mr. O'Brien.

Mr. Jones of Oklahoma with Mr. Moorhead of California. Mr. Patman with Mr. Pettis. Mr. Peyser with Mr. Quillen.

Mr. Rallsback with Mr. Powell of Ohio. Mr. Rarick with Mr. Pritchard. Mr. Reid with Mr. Robinson of New York.

Mr. Roe with Mr. Roncallo of New York. Mr. Sebellius with Mr. Sandman. Mr. Shoup with Mr. Scherle.

Mr. Skubitz with Mr. Schneebell. Mr. Steele with Mr. Stephens. Mr. Stokes with Mr. Tiernan. Mr. Walsh with Mr. Bob Wilson.

Mr. Wyatt with Mr. Widnall. Mr. Wyatt with Mr. Wylder. Mr. Wyman with Mr. Zion. Mr. Rostenkowski with Mr. James V. Stanton.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. ARRINGTON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and concurrent resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 510. An act to authorize and direct the Secretary of Agriculture to convey any interest held by the United States in certain property in Jasper County, Georgia, to the Jasper County Board of Education.

H.R. 1715. An act for the relief of Cpl. Paul C. Amedeo, U.S. Marine Corps Reserve.

H.R. 1820. An act to direct the Administrator of General Services to release certain conditions with respect to certain real property conveyed to the State of Arkansas by the United States, and for other purposes.

H.R. 2208. An act for the relief of Raymond W. Suchy, second lieutenant, U.S. Army (retired).

H.R. 2933. An act to improve the quality of unshelled filberts and shelled filberts for marketing in the United States.

H.R. 3203. An act for the relief of Nepty Masauo Jones.

H.R. 3339. An act for the relief of Delmira DeBow.

H.R. 5264. An act to amend section 3(f) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, with respect to American Samoa, Guam, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

H.R. 7599. An act to amend the Trademark Act of 1946 and title 35 of the United States Code to change the name of the Patent Office to the "Patent and Trademark Office."

H.R. 7684. An act for the relief of Nicola Lomuscio.

H.R. 7767. An act for the relief of Samuel Cabildo Jose.

H.R. 8214. An act to modify the tax treatment of members of the Armed Forces of the United States and civilian employees who are prisoners of war or missing in action, and for other purposes.

H.R. 8322. An act for the relief of William L. Cameron, Jr.

H.R. 8591. An act to authorize the President to appoint to the active list of the Navy and Marine Corps certain Reserves and temporary officers.

H.R. 9182. An act for the relief of Fernando Labrador del Rosario.

H.R. 9654. An act for the relief of Mr. Aldo Massara.

H.R. 10827. An act for the relief of Kiyonao Okami.

H.R. 17802. An act designating the Laneport Dam and Lake on the San Gabriel River as the "Granger Dam and Lake".

H.R. 11144. An act to amend title 10, United States Code, to enable the Naval Sea Cadet Corps and the Young Marines of the Marine Corps League to obtain, to the same extent as the Boy Scouts of America, obsolete and surplus naval material.

H.R. 11796. An act to provide for the duty-free entry of a 3.60 meter telescope and associated articles for the use of the Canada-France-Hawaii Telescope Project at Mauna Kea, Hawaii.

H.R. 11847. An act for the relief of certain fire districts and departments in the State of Missouri to compensate them for expenses relating to a fire on Federal property.

H.R. 11897. An act to name the United CXX—2639—Part 31

States Courthouse and Federal Office Building at 110 Michigan Street, N.W., Grand Rapids, Mich., the "President Gerald R. Ford Federal Office Building".

H.R. 12044. An act designating the lake created by the Hidden Reservoir project, Fresno River, Calif., as "Hensley Lake".

H.R. 13022. An act to amend the Act of September 2, 1960, as amended, so as to authorize different minimum grade standards for packages of grapes and plums exported to different destinations.

H.R. 14461. An act for the relief of Judith E. Sterling.

H.R. 14600. An act to increase the borrowing authority of the Panama Canal Company and revise the method of computing interest thereon.

H.R. 15322. An act designating San Angelo Dam and Reservoir on the North Concho River as the "O. C. Fisher Dam and Lake".

H.R. 16215. An act to amend the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972, to provide more flexibility in the allocation of administrative grants to coastal States, and for other purposes.

H.R. 17558. An act to amend the Act of May 13, 1954, relating to the Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation to provide for a seven-year term of office for the Administrator, and for other purposes.

H.R. 17628. An act to designate a national laboratory as the "Hollifield National Laboratory".

H. Con. Res. 693. Concurrent resolution providing for the printing of the prayers of the House Chaplain.

H. Con. Res. 694. Concurrent resolution authorizing a correction in the enrollment of H.R. 14689.

H. Con. Res. 696. Concurrent resolution directing the Clerk of the House of Representatives to make corrections in the enrollment of H.R. 10710; and

H. Con. Res. 697. Concurrent resolution providing for the sine die adjournment of the second session of the 93d Congress.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following title:

S. 251. An act for the relief of Frank P. Muto, Alphonso A. Muto, Arthur E. Scott, and F. Clyde Wilkinson.

S. 544. An act to amend title 18 of the United States Code to permit the transportation, mailing, and broadcasting of advertising, information, and materials concerning lotteries authorized by law and conducted by a State, and for other purposes.

(S. 663). "An act to improve judicial machinery by amending title 28, United States Code, with respect to judicial review of decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission and for other purposes."

S. 754. An act to give effect to the sixth amendment right to a speedy trial for persons charged with criminal offenses and to reduce the danger of recidivism by strengthening the supervision over persons released pending trial, and for other purposes.

S. 1017. An act to promote maximum Indian participation in the government and education of the Indian people; to provide for the full participation of Indian tribes in programs and services conducted by the Federal Government for Indians and to encourage the development of the human resources of the Indian people; to establish a program of assistance to upgrade Indian education; to support the right of Indian citizens to control their own educational activities; to train professionals in Indian education; to establish an Indian youth intern program; and for other purposes.

S. 1418. An act to recognize the 50 years of extraordinary and selfless public service of Herbert Hoover, including his many great humanitarian endeavors, his chairmanship of two Commissions of the Organization of the Executive Branch, and his service as 31st President of the United States, and in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of his birth on August 10, 1874, by providing grants to the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace.

S. 2149. An act to amend title 10, United States Code, to provide certain benefits to members of the Coast Guard Reserve, and for other purposes.

S. 2854. An act to amend the Public Health Service Act to expand the authority of the National Institute of Arthritis, Metabolism, and Digestive Diseases in order to advance a national attack on arthritis.

S. 3433. An act to further the purposes of the Wilderness Act by designating certain acquired lands for inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System, to provide for study of certain additional lands for such inclusion, and for other purposes; and

S. 3976. An act to amend title 17 of the United States Code to remove the expiration date for a limited copyright in sound recordings, to increase the criminal penalties for piracy and counterfeiting of sound recordings, to extend the duration of copyright protection in certain cases, to establish a National Commission on New Technological Use of Copyrighted Works, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 10710) entitled "An act to promote the development of an open, nondiscriminatory, and fair world economic system, to stimulate the economic growth of the United States, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the State."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the State."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the State."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the State."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the State."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the State."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the State."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the State."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the State."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the State."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the State."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the State."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the State."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the State."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the State."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the State."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the State."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the State."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the State."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the State."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the State."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the State."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 17045) entitled "An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the State."

December 20, 1974

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING PRINTING OF REPORTS OF COMPTROLLER GENERAL

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution (H. Res. 1524).

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

H. RES. 1524

Resolved, That, notwithstanding the sine die adjournment of the House, reports of the Comptroller General of the United States made to the Congress pursuant to the Government Corporation Control Act (31 U.S.C. 841 et seq.) shall be printed during such adjournment as House documents of the second session of the Ninety-third Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING SPEAKER TO ACCEPT RESIGNATIONS AND APPOINT COMMISSIONS, BOARDS, AND COMMITTEES

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, notwithstanding the adjournment of the 2d session of the 94th Congress, the Speaker be authorized to accept resignations, and to appoint commissions, boards, and committees authorized by law or by the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING THE CLERK TO HAVE COMMITTEE INVESTIGATION REPORTS PRINTED

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that reports filed with the Clerk following the sine die adjournment by committees authorized by the House to conduct investigations may be printed by the Clerk as reports of the 93d Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING MEMBERS TO REVISE AND EXTEND THEIR REMARKS IN THE RECORD

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House shall have the privilege, until the last edition authorized by the Joint Committee on Printing is published, to extend and revise their own remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on more than one subject, if they so desire, and may also include therein such short quotations as may be necessary to explain or complete such extensions of remarks; but this order shall not apply to any subject matter which may have occurred, or to any speech delivered subsequent to the adjournment of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION FOR CHAIRMEN AND RANKING MINORITY MEMBERS TO EXTEND REMARKS UP TO AND INCLUDING PUBLICATION OF THE LAST RECORD

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the chairmen of all the standing committees and the subcommittees of the House may extend their remarks up to and including the publication of the last Record and to include a summary of the work of their committees; also that the ranking minority members of such standing committee or any subcommittee may have the same permission to extend their remarks and to include a summary, if they desire, from their point of view, separately from that of the chairman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

TO ESTABLISH WITHIN THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR AN ADDITIONAL ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR FOR INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. MEEDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the conference report on the bill (H.R. 620) to establish within the Department of the Interior an additional Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Indian Affairs, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of December 7, 1974.)

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington (Mr. MEEDS) will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MEEDS).

(Mr. MEEDS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MEEDS. Mr. Speaker, first of all I apologize for taking the time of the Members at this late hour, but this bill was knocked out just a little while ago as a conference report on a very technical little matter, and I think the House should have the opportunity to consider it on its merits. The purpose of this legislation is to provide for an Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Indian Affairs to create a 13th region composed of non-resident native Alaskans and to provide for a method under which they can manifest their desire to join that 13th region. It requires distribution of funds.

The background of this controversy, Mr. Speaker—and I do not intend to go into the entire background—briefly is that the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act created automatically 12 regions for native Alaskans and provided a system, a method under which the nonresident native Alaskans could make a choice for a 13th region.

I will not bore the House with all of the details, but it is sufficient to say that because of the way the election was conducted and the way the BIA conducted it, the forms that were made, the lack of information that was given in it, and a number of other things, approximately 2,500 people, nonresident native Alaskans, were either denied the right to make amendments to their petitions and become residents of the 13th district or region or have votes counted against them when they wanted them counted in another way. That action was lost by a mere 200 votes.

Mr. Speaker, any one of the coincidences which all combined against them would have, had they redounded in their favor, allowed the creation of the 13th region. The members of this 13th region are constituents of all of ours. They are nonresident native Alaskans who live in Washington, Oregon, California, Texas, Florida, New York, and other places in the United States, and they have differing desires. They would like to be considered in a different way than those who still reside in Alaska, and they ought to have the opportunity to decide their own fate.

This bill as passed by the Senate and as accepted by the conferees would create that 13th district and give them a chance to vote as to whether they want to join that 13th region and allow them to distribute their per capita share of the funds as they wish, rather than having that dictated to them from the other 12 regions in Alaska.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEEDS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Will the gentleman describe briefly what the nongermane amendment was?

Mr. MEEDS. Yes; the nongermane amendment was an amendment put on in the conference which required the Secretary to give back to corporations and individuals and distribute the funds they would have received had a 13th regional district been created. It is a function which he would have had to do in any event if the Senate bill was passed. It was not germane, because it was automatic.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. I heard the gentleman's point, and it was made when the

December 20, 1974

Speaker overruled him. My point is this: Did the House ever consider this non-germane amendment?

Mr. MEEDS. No.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. So we have never really discussed it or debated it?

Mr. MEEDS. We have debated it.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. What is the great crisis that confronts us that we have to have this Assistant Secretary of a bureaucracy that will not keep until we get back?

Mr. MEEDS. It is a matter which has been pending before this body for over a year.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Yes, but that non-germane amendment was never considered by the committee. The gentleman said that himself. It is just another addition to the bureaucracy. What is the big rush?

Mr. MEEDS. We will have an opportunity to consider it now when they vote.

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Yes, but they will not totally know what they are voting for. That is why the Speaker overruled the gentleman.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, this matter has been before the body for a year or in the committee for a year. It is a matter that passed the House unanimously for the under secretaryship within the Department of the Interior and it is strongly supported by the administration, but somewhere along the line, against my objection and against the objection of the constituents in my State, the 12 regional corporations, we are now denied and we are trying here to overturn a bona fide sanctioned election. It is true they voted against the 13th region by 267 votes. The argument was made and they took it to court. The judge is going to rule in 21 days whether the election was bona fide. I say to you tonight we are trying to set a precedent that is wrong, the overturning of an election held by people in the democratic process we have today.

I wanted the under secretaryship myself within the Department of the Interior, because I think it was the right way to go, but the 13th region was created to satisfy his actions and it is against every principle of democracy. It is wrong. I urge the Members to vote "No" on this. I urge the Members to consider carefully what they are doing.

Although my colleague, as he says, represents his people in Washington, I represent the majority of the Alaskans, the Natives affected by this bill passed by the Congress. The election was held. It was a legal election. We must consider this when we vote for this tonight. I urge the Members to vote "No." Do not accept this compromise. It was just ruled out of order by the Speaker of the House. I used the laws I had to use to try to vote down this bill. It is wrong. It is contrary to the democratic process.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MEEDS) to suspend the rules and agree to the conference report on the bill H.R. 620.

The question was taken.

Mr. MEEDS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 109, nays 132, not voting 193, as follows:

(Roll No. 727)

YEAS—109

Abdnor	Hechler, W. Va.	Rodino
Alexander	Henderson	Roncallo, Wyo.
Aspin	Holtzman	Rooney, Pa.
Badillo	Jordan	Rose
Bergland	Karsh	Rosenthal
Boggs	Kastenmeier	Roush
Brademas	Kazen	Roy
Brooks	Kyros	Roybal
Brown, Calif.	Lehman	Runnels
Burke, Mass.	Long, La.	Ruth
Burleson, Tex.	Long, Md.	St Germain
Burton, John	McCormack	Sarbanes
Burton, Phillip	McDade	Seiberling
Casey, Tex.	McFall	Sisk
Clausen	McKay	Slack
Don H.	McSpadden	Smith, Iowa
Culver	Mahon	Staggers
Danielson	Matsunaga	Stanton
Davis, S.C.	Meeks	Stanton
de la Garza	Meeker	J. William
Dellums	Mezvisky	Stanton
Denholm	Mink	James V.
Dickinson	Moakley	Steed
Dorn	Moorhead, Pa.	Steiger, Ariz.
Drinan	Murphy, N.Y.	Studds
Eckhardt	Nedzi	Symington
Esch	O'Hara	Taylor, N.C.
Fascell	O'Neill	Udall
Fisher	Owens	Van Deeren
Flood	Passman	Vander Veen
Foley	Perkins	Vigorito
Ford	Price, Ill.	Waldie
Fraser	Rangel	White
Gaydos	Rees	Wright
Gettys	Reuss	Young, Ga.
Gonzalez	Riegle	Young, Tex.
Gray	Roberts	Zablocki
Hamilton

NAYS—132

Anderson, Ill.	Frenzel	Myers
Arends	Freym	Natcher
Armstrong	Glaimo	Parris
Ashley	Ginn	Pepper
Bailes	Goldwater	Pike
Baker	Green, Oreg.	Preyer
Bauman	Gross	Price, Tex.
Bennett	Gubser	Quie
Blester	Gude	Regula
Bowen	Gunter	Rhodes
Bray	Guyer	Rinaldo
Breaux	Hammer-	Robinson, Va.
Brockinridge	schmidt	Rogers
Brotzman	Hanrahan	Roussellot
Brown, Mich.	Hansen, Idaho	Ruppe
Brown, Ohio	Harsha	Sarasin
Broyhill, N.C.	Hastings	Satterfield
Buchanan	Heckler, Mass.	Shriver
Burleson, Mo.	Helms	Shuster
Byron	Hill	Smith, N.Y.
Cederberg	Hinschaw	Spence
Chamberlain	Horton	Steelman
Chawson, Del	Hosmer	Steiger, Wis.
Cochran	Huber	Stratton
Cohen	Hutchinson	Stubbiefield
Conable	Ichord	Symms
Coughlin	Johnson, Pa.	Talcott
Crane	Jones, Tenn.	Thone
Cronin	Lagonarino	Thornton
Daniel, Dan	Litton	Towell, Nev.
Daniel, Robert	Lott	Treen
W., Jr.	McClary	Vander Jagt
Davis, Wis.	McCloskey	Vanik
Dellenback	McCollister	Veysey
Dennis	McEwen	Waggonner
Derwinski	Madigan	Wampler
Dingell	Mallary	Ware
Downing	Mathis, Ga.	Whalen
Duncan	Mayne	Whitten
du Pont	Mazzoli	Williams
Edwards, Ala.	Michel	Wylie
Findley	Miller	Young, Alaska
Forsythe	Mitchell, N.Y.	Young, Fla.
Fountain	Mizell	Young, Ill.
Frelinghuysen	Montgomery

NOT VOTING—193

Abzug	Ashbrook	Bolling
Adams	Barrett	Brasco
Addabbo	Beard	Brinkley
Anderson	Bell	Broomfield
Calif.	Bevill	Broyhill, Va.
Andrews, N.C.	Blaggi	Burgener
Andrews	Bingham	Burke, Calif.
N. Dak.	Blackburn	Burke, Fla.
Annunzio	Blatnik	Butler
Archer	Boland	Camp

Carey, N.Y.	Holt	Powell, Ohio
Carney, Ohio	Howard	Pritchard
Carter	Hudnut	Quillen
Chappell	Hungate	Railsback
Chisholm	Hunt	Randall
Clancy	Jarman	Rarick
Clark	Johnson, Calif.	Reid
Cleaveland	Johnson, Colo.	Robison, N.Y.
Collier	Jones, Ala.	Roe
Collins, Ill.	Jones, N.C.	Roncallo, N.Y.
Collins, Tex.	Jones, Okla.	Rooney, N.Y.
Conlan	Kemp	Rostenkowski
Conte	Ketchum	Ryan
Conyers	King	Sandman
Corman	Kluczynski	Scherle
Cotter	Koch	Schneebell
Daniels	Kuykendall	Schroeder
Dominick V.	Landgrebe	Sebelius
Davis, Ga.	Landrum	Shipley
Delaney	Latta	Shoup
Dent	Leggett	Sikes
Devine	Lent	Skubitz
Diggs	Lujan	Snyder
Donohue	Lukens	Stark
Dulski	McKinney	Steele
Edwards, Calif.	Macdonald	Stephens
Ellberg	Madden	Stokes
Erlenborn	Mann	Stuckey
Eshleman	Maraziti	Sullivan
Evans, Colo.	Martin, Nebr.	Taylor, Mo.
Evins, Tenn.	Martin, N.C.	Teague
Fish	Mathias, Calif.	Thompson, N.J.
Flowers	Metcalfe	Thomson, Wis.
Flynt	Milford	Tierman
Froehlich	Minish	Traxler
Fulton	Minshall, Ohio	Ullman
Fuqua	Mitchell, Md.	Walsh
Gibbons	Mollohan	Whitehurst
Gilman	Moorhead, Calif.	Widnall
Goodling	Morgan	Wiggins
Grasso	Mosher	Wilson, Bob
Green, Pa.	Moss	Wilson
Griffiths	Murphy, Ill.	Charles H., Calif.
Grover	Murtha	Wilson, Charles, Tex.
Haley	Nelsen	Winn
Hanna	Nichols	Wolf
Hansen, Wash.	Nix	Wyatt
Harrington	O'Brien	Wyder
Hawkins	Patman	Wyman
Hays	Patten	Yates
Hebert	Pettis	Yatron
Helstoski	Peyser	Young, S.C.
Hicks	Pickie	Zion
Hogan	Poage	Zwach
Hollifield	Podell

So (two-thirds not having voted in favor thereof) the motion was rejected. The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Mr. Anderson of California with Mr. Grover.
Mr. Bingham with Mr. Landgrebe.
Mr. Chappell with Mr. Hudnut.
Mr. Edwards of California with Mr. Luken.
Mr. Ellberg with Mr. King.
Mr. Clay with Mr. Hanna.
Mr. Evans of Colorado with Mr. Maraziti.
Mr. Flynt with Mr. Haley.
Mr. Fuqua with Mr. Latta.
Mr. Harrington with Mr. Lujan.
Mr. Hawkins with Mrs. Griffiths.
Mr. Helstoski with Mr. McKinney.
Mr. Jones of Alabama with Mr. Milford.
Mr. Metcalfe with Mrs. Hansen of Washington.
Mr. Moss with Mr. Kuykendall.
Mr. Patten with Mr. Lent.
Mr. Jones of North Carolina with Mr. Hungate.
Mr. Randall with Mr. Martin of Nebraska.
Mr. Rooney of New York with Mr. Hogan.
Mrs. Schroeder with Mr. Mathias of California.
Mr. Stark with Mr. Kemp.
Mr. Traxler with Mr. Martin of North Carolina.
Mr. Yates with Mr. Mills.
Mr. Hicks with Mr. Hollifield.
Mr. Yatron with Mr. Minshall of Ohio.
Mr. Johnson of California with Mr. O'Brien.
Mr. Jones of Oklahoma with Mr. Moorhead of California.
Mr. Patman with Mr. Pettis.
Mr. Peyser with Mr. Quillen.
Mr. Railsback with Mr. Powell of Ohio.

Mr. Rarick with Mr. Pritchard.
 Mr. Reid with Mr. Robinson of New York.
 Mr. Roe with Mr. Roncallo of New York.
 Mr. Sebellus with Mr. Sandman.
 Mr. Shoup with Mr. Scherle.
 Mr. Skubitz with Mr. Schneebell.
 Mr. Hays with Mr. Andrews of North Carolina.
 Mr. Hébert with Mr. Bevil.
 Ms. Abzug with Mr. Clark.
 Mr. Addabbo with Mr. Boland.
 Mr. Shipley with Mr. Cary of New York.
 Mr. Charles H. Wilson of California with Mr. Davis of Georgia.
 Mr. Fulton with Mr. Carney of Ohio.
 Mr. Wolf with Mrs. Collins of Illinois.
 Mr. Hanley with Mr. Gibbons.
 Mrs. Sullivan with Mrs. Burke of California.
 Mr. Howard with Mrs. Grasso.
 Mr. Jarman with Mr. Goodling.
 Mr. Corman with Mr. Cleveland.
 Mr. Cotter with Mr. Archer.
 Mr. Blaggi with Mr. Eshleman.
 Mr. Barrett with Mr. Camp.
 Mr. Nix with Mr. Dulski.
 Mr. Morgan with Mr. Erlenborn.
 Mr. Domlnick V. Daniels with Mr. Broomfield.
 Mr. Dent with Mr. Chappell.
 Mr. Delaney with Mr. Froehlich.
 Mr. Kluczynski with Mr. Ashbrook.
 Mr. Rostenkowski with Mr. Collier.
 Mr. Pickle with Mr. Carter.
 Mr. Murphy of Illinois with Mr. Blackburn.
 Mr. Mitchell of Maryland with Mr. Blatnik.
 Mr. Mollohan with Mr. Collins of Texas.
 Mr. Minish with Mr. Bernd.
 Mr. Madden with Mr. Conte.
 Mr. Macdonald with Mr. Butler.
 Mr. Evans of Tennessee with Mr. Devine.
 Mr. Flowers with Mr. Bell.
 Mr. Adams with Mr. Conlan.
 Mr. Landrum with Mr. Clancy.
 Mr. Diggs with Mr. Donohue.
 Mr. Koch with Mr. Brinkley.
 Mr. Steele with Mr. Stephens.
 Mr. Stokes with Mr. Tiernan.
 Mr. Walsh with Mr. Bob Wilson.
 Mr. Winn with Mr. Widnall.
 Mr. Wyatt with Mr. Wylder.
 Mr. Wyman with Mr. Zion.
 Mrs. Chisholm with Mr. Leggett.
 Mr. Green of Pennsylvania with Mr. Burke of Florida.
 Mr. Conyers with Mr. Murtha.
 Mr. Thompson of New Jersey with Mr. Fish.
 Mr. Nichols with Mr. Hunt.
 Mr. Nelsen with Mr. Gillman.
 Mr. Sikes with Mrs. Holt.
 Mr. Ryan with Mr. Taylor of Missouri.
 Mr. Ullman with Mr. Thomson of Wisconsin.
 Mr. Stuckey with Mr. Whitehurst.
 Mr. Teague with Mr. Wiggins.
 Mr. Charles Wilson of Texas with Mr. Young of South Carolina.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ARENDs) take the chair?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ARENDs). The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arizona, the minority leader (Mr. RHODEs).

THANKS OF THE HOUSE TO THE HONORABLE CARL ALBERT, SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. RHODEs. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 1525) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. Res. 1525

Resolved, That the thanks of the House are presented to the Honorable CARL ALBERT, Speaker of the House of Representatives, for the able, impartial, and dignified manner in which he has presided over the deliberations and performed the arduous duties of the Chair during the present term of Congress.

Mr. RHODEs. Mr. Speaker, I am sure it will take nothing from my great respect for the Speaker of the House that the present occupant of the chair has improved the looks of the Chamber rather considerably.

Seriously, it is a real pleasure to see the great gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ARENDs) in the chair which many of us feel he should have occupied many, many years ago.

We will all miss him. We are all pleased that he will be in this area and we will see him often.

The Speaker of the House, my good friend, the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ALBERT), is one of the great Members of this body. He is one of the great Speakers of the House of Representatives, and it with great honor that I sponsor this resolution to express to him in words which are completely inadequate the feeling that all of us have for him as an individual and as a Speaker.

He is a fair man. He is an honest man. He is a capable man. And he, in the best traditions of the House, has upheld the traditions of that House as well as any man ever has or ever could. He is a person who, when he sits in the chair, is not a member of a political party; he is the Speaker of all the Members of the House, which is certainly the way that all the Speakers under whom I have had the privilege to serve have regarded the great office which they hold.

So, Mr. Speaker, may I, on behalf of the Members certainly, and also on my own behalf, thank you for all that you have done to expedite the business of this Chamber in the last 2 years, and also for the great consideration which you have shown all of us in general and me in particular.

The Speaker and I have been friends for years, and certainly nothing has happened in this last year during which I have had the privilege of serving as minority leader to do anything but enhance that friendship.

It is with that, Mr. Speaker, that I wish you many, many more years as a Member of this House, perhaps as majority leader or something like that—or perhaps as minority leader.

But seriously, I hope that both of us will be spared, and that the voters of our various districts will be kind enough to allow us to serve together for many more years in the greatest deliberating body ever known to man.

Mr. McFALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RHODEs. I yield to the majority whip.

Mr. McFALL. Mr. Speaker, the Members on this side are overjoyed in joining in this resolution honoring our friend and colleague and leader, the Speaker, CARL ALBERT. We wish to express our appreciation to the minority leader for his bringing this resolution before this body.

All of us have great admiration and respect for the Speaker.

I wish to add these words: that this has been a magnificent Congress under the leadership of CARL ALBERT. We have done a remarkable job on both sides of the aisle. Those of us on this side of the aisle wish to express our appreciation to you, the minority leader, and all the Members on the Republican side for their cooperation and assistance in compiling this magnificent record. We express to you our thanks for presenting this resolution honoring our leader, the leader of all of us, CARL ALBERT, who has done such a great job in compiling this record.

At the same time, we wish all of you a very merry Christmas.

Mr. RHODEs. Mr. Speaker, I thank my good friend, the majority whip. May I also wish all of you a very Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ARENDs). Before we ask for action on the resolution, I would like to say how pleased I have been to serve during these many years with various Speakers, and particularly with our good and loyal friend, CARL ALBERT, who has been a friend of mine ever since the first day he came to Congress.

CARL, I, too, appreciate your friendship, the warmth of friendship we have shared, and the opportunity we have had to work together with the leadership so many times, and always in the spirit of cooperation and in the spirit of thinking about what is good for our country. I deeply appreciate that friendship, and I am glad I have had an opportunity to express my feelings before I leave here.

Before I do put the question, I would like to make one more remark. Now that I will be leaving here after 40 years, I leave with some mixed emotions, of course.

But I would like to make one statement for the benefit of the Members of the House: Now that I am about to become one of the so-called oft-downtrodden taxpayers, as they have been referred to in this body, I hope you will be very considerate in the forthcoming Congresses by being very efficient and very economical, and I hope you cut down on the expenditures for the benefit of those of us who will be your taxpayers now and in the future.

If anybody wants to hire me as a lobbyist for raising, shall we say, the pension rate for retirees, please look me up.

Now I put the previous question on the motion by the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. RHODEs).

Without objection, the previous question is on the resolution.

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

(The Speaker resumed the Chair).

The SPEAKER. Thank you, my good friend. There have been highly commendatory speeches, and I will not try to refute any of them.

I do appreciate the friendships that I have made in this House, the friendships with the Republican leaders and with all the wonderful colleagues who have supported me, and I cannot leave the Chair for the last time this year without wishing you all Godspeed, good health, Merry Christmas, and a Happy New Year. Have a good rest and come back feeling fine, ready to take on another job for our great Nation.

Will the gentleman from California (Mr. McFALL) take the Chair.

PERMISSION TO INSERT RESOLUTION IN RECORD

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place a resolution in the Record at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The resolution referred to follows:

H. Res. —

Whereas Congressman Harold Royce Gross of Iowa is retiring from Congress after twenty-six years; and

Whereas the bill numbered H.R. 144, a bill to provide that Federal expenditures shall not exceed Federal revenues, except in time of war or grave national emergency declared by the Congress, and to provide for systematic deduction of the public debt, has been introduced by Mr. Gross for many Congresses; and

Whereas this legislation is symbolic of his efforts to restore fiscal responsibility at the Federal level; and

Whereas Mr. Gross has distinguished his career in Congress by being the foremost advocate for the American taxpayer: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives that as a tribute to this outstanding legislator, the bill numbered H.R. 144 to be retired from use in future Congresses.

RECEPTION FOR RETIRING MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

(Mr. SMITH of New York asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of New York. I would like to call to the attention of the House that past or former Members of Congress are having a reception for the retiring Members of Congress in room EF100. They would like to see the Members there.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

STATEMENT CONCERNING VARIOUS ORDERS TO SHOW CAUSE SERVED UPON HOUSE EMPLOYEES

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that the Chair has been advised by various Members and officers of the House that certain employees under their direction and supervision have been served with applications for orders to show cause in the case of Common Cause, et al. against E. T. Klassen, et al., which is now pending in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia.

These applications are directed to the production of files, papers, and testimony which is within the possession and control of the House of Representatives and which cannot be released without the permission of the House. On December 18, 1974, the House adopted a resolution in relation to this case, following the receipt of subpoenas by various employees of the House, which resolution asserted the privileges of the House in relation to such subpoenas.

Without objection, the letters notifying the Chair of these matters, together with copies of the applications to show cause recently served on the various House employees, will be inserted in the Record at this point for the information of the House.

OFFICE OF THE MAJORITY LEADER, Washington, D.C., December 19, 1974.

Hon. CARL ALBERT,
 The Speaker, U.S. House of Representatives,
 Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: The attached Application for Order to Show Cause was hand delivered on this date to Mr. David Ramage, Majority Clerk, House Majority Room, U.S. House of Representatives, and was filed by Mr. Kenneth J. Guido, Jr., Common Cause, 2030 M Street, Washington, D.C. 20036 on this date in the case of Common Cause, et al., in Civil Action No. 1887-73.

The application in question is forwarded herewith and the matter presented for such action as the House in its wisdom wishes to take.

Sincerely,

THOMAS P. O'NEILL, JR.

[In the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, Civil Action 1887-73]

COMMON CAUSE, ET AL., PLAINTIFFS, AGAINST
 E. T. KLASSEN, ET AL., DEFENDANTS
 ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE

This matter came before this Court on the application of plaintiffs for the issuance of an Order to show cause why the deponent, David Ramage, should not be ordered to show cause why he should not be ordered to testify and produce documents subpoenaed from him or be held in contempt. The application to show cause is based upon the motion to compel testimony and to produce documents, and memorandum in support thereof, filed with the Court.

After having considered the papers filed in support thereof, and it appearing that plaintiffs' application for an order to show cause should be granted, it is by the Court this day of , 1974,

Ordered that the deponent, David Ramage, be, and appear in his own proper person before this Court on the day of , 1974, at , of said day, or soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, to show cause, if any he has, why he should not be ordered to testify and produce documents subpoenaed of him in the above entitled action or be held in contempt.

APPLICATION FOR ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE
 Plaintiffs, acting through their attorney, respectfully move the Court for the issuance of an Order to Show Cause why the deponent, David Ramage, Majority Clerk, House Majority Room, Rayburn House Office Building, New Garage WA-29, Washington, D.C., should not be required to testify in the above entitled action and produce documents or be held in contempt of court.

For the reasons in support of this application, the Court is respectfully referred to the motion to compel the deponent to answer questions and produce documents or be held in contempt, and the memorandum in support thereof, filed with the Court on November 25, 1974, and incorporated herein by reference.

ORDERED
 that the deponent, Victor C. Smiroldo, be, and appear in his own proper person before this Court on the day of , 1974, at , of said day, or soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, to show cause, if any he has, why he should not be ordered

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that I have caused copies of the foregoing Application for Order to Show Cause to be served upon deponent and defendants by hand delivery to deponent and defendants' attorney at the addresses listed below, this 19th day of December, 1974.

KENNETH J. GUIDO, JR.

COMMISSION ON CONGRESSIONAL MAILING STANDARDS

Washington, D.C., December 20, 1974.

Hon. CARL ALBERT,
 The Speaker, U.S. House of Representatives,
 Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This letter is in further reference to my correspondence to you dated December 5, 1974 and September 16, 1974 regarding a subpoena duces tecum, in the matter of Common Cause v. E. T. Klassen (Civil Action No. 1887-73), issued by the United States District Court for the District of Columbia naming Mr. Victor C. Smiroldo, Staff Director and Counsel for the Commission.

To date no affirmative action has been taken by the House which would authorize Mr. Smiroldo to appear in answer to the subpoena.

Mr. Smiroldo has now been served with an Application for Order to Show Cause why he should not be required to testify in the above entitled action and produce documents or be held in contempt of court.

A copy of the Application and related material are forwarded herewith and the matter presented for such action as the House in its wisdom wishes to take.

Sincerely,

MORRIS K. UDALL,
 Chairman.

[In the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, Civil Action No. 1887-73]

COMMON CAUSE, ET AL., PLAINTIFFS AGAINST
 E. T. KLASSEN, ET AL., DEFENDANTS

APPLICATION FOR ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE

Plaintiffs, acting through their attorney, respectfully move the Court for the issuance of an Order to Show Cause why the deponent, Victor C. Smiroldo, House Commission on Congressional Mailing Standards, 207 Cannon House Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20515, should not be required to testify in the above entitled action and produce documents or be held in contempt of court.

For the reasons in support of this application, the Court is respectfully referred to the motion to compel the deponent to answer questions and produce documents or be held in contempt, and the memorandum in support thereof, filed with the Court on November 25, 1974, and incorporated herein by reference.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE

This matter came before this Court on the application of plaintiffs for the issuance of an Order to show cause why the deponent, Victor C. Smiroldo, should not be ordered to show cause why he should not be ordered to testify and produce documents subpoenaed from him or be held in contempt. The application to show cause is based upon the motion to compel testimony and to produce documents, and memorandum in support thereof filed with the Court.

After having considered the papers filed in support thereof, and it appearing that plaintiffs' application for an order to show cause should be granted, it is by the Court this day of , 1974, that the deponent, Victor C. Smiroldo, be, and appear in his own proper person before this Court on the day of , 1974, at , of said day, or soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, to show cause, if any he has, why he should not be ordered to testify and produce documents subpoenaed of him in the above entitled action or be held in contempt.

ORDERED

December 20, 1974

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that I have caused copies of the foregoing Application for Order to Show Cause to be served upon deponent and defendants by hand delivery to deponent and defendants' attorney at the addresses listed below, this 19th day of December, 1974.

KENNETH J. GUIDO, Jr.

OFFICE OF DOORKEEPER,

Washington, D.C., December 19, 1974.
Hon. CARL ALBERT,
The Speaker,
U.S. House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: The attached Application for Order to Show Cause was hand delivered on this date to Mr. Eli S. Bjellos, Chief, House Publications Distribution Service, an employee of the Office of the Doorkeeper of the U.S. House of Representatives, and was filed by Mr. Kenneth J. Guido, Jr., Common Cause, 2030 M Street, Washington, D.C. 20038 on this date in the case of Common Cause, et al., in Civil Action No. 1887-73.

The Application in question is forwarded herewith and the matter presented for such action as the House in its wisdom wishes to take.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM M. MILLER,
Doorkeeper, U.S. House of Representatives.
Attachment

[In the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, Civil Action No. 1887-73] COMMON CAUSE, et al., Plaintiffs against

E. T. KLASSEN, et al., Defendant

APPLICATION FOR ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE
Plaintiffs, acting through their attorney, respectfully move the court for the issuance of an Order to Show Cause why the deponent, John M. Swanner, Staff Director, House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, 2360 Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, D.C., should not be ordered to testify and produce documents subpoenaed from him in the above entitled action.

For the reasons in support of this application, the Court is respectfully referred to the motion to compel the deponent to answer questions and produce documents, and memorandum in support thereof, filed with the Court on October 11, 1974, and incorporated herein by reference.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE

This matter came before this Court on the application of plaintiffs for the issuance of an Order to Show Cause why the deponent, Eli S. Bjellos, should not be ordered to testify and produce documents subpoenaed from him. The application to show cause is based upon the motion to compel testimony and to produce documents, and memorandum in support thereof.

After having considered the papers filed in support thereof, and it appearing that plaintiffs' application for an order to show cause should be granted, it is by the Court this — day of —, 1974.

Ordered that the deponent, Eli S. Bjellos, be, and appear in his own proper person before this Court on the — day of —, 1974, at —, of said day, or soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, to show cause, if any he has, why he should not be ordered to testify and produce documents subpoenaed of him in the above entitled action.

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that I have caused copies of the foregoing Application for Order to Show Cause to be served upon deponent and defendants by hand delivery to deponent and defendants' attorney at the addresses listed below, this 19th day of December, 1974.

KENNETH J. GUIDO, Jr.

COMMITTEE ON STANDARDS OF OFFICIAL CONDUCT, Washington, D.C., December 19, 1974.

Hon. CARL ALBERT,

The Speaker,

U.S. House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: The attached Application for Order to Show Cause was hand delivered on this date to Mr. John M. Swanner, Staff Director, Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, an employee of this Committee, and of the U.S. House of Representatives, and was filed by Mr. Kenneth J. Guido, Jr., Common Cause, 2030 M Street, Washington, D.C. 20038 on this date in the case of Common Cause, et al., in Civil Action No. 1887-73.

The Application in question is forwarded herewith and the matter presented for such action as the House in its wisdom wishes to take.

Sincerely,

MELVIN PRICE,
Chairman.

[In the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, Civil Action No. 1887-73]

COMMON CAUSE, et al., PLAINTIFFS AGAINST
E. T. KLASSEN, et al., DEFENDANTS

APPLICATION FOR ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE
Plaintiffs, acting through their attorney, respectfully move the court for the issuance of an Order to Show Cause why the deponent, John M. Swanner, Staff Director, House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, 2360 Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20515, should not be ordered to testify and produce documents subpoenaed from him in the above entitled action.

For the reasons in support of this application, the Court is respectfully referred to the motion to compel the deponent to answer questions and produce documents, and memorandum in support thereof, filed with the Court on October 18, 1974, and incorporated herein by reference.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE

This matter came before this Court on the application of plaintiffs for the issuance of an Order to Show Cause why the deponent, John M. Swanner, should not be ordered to show cause why he should not be ordered to testify and produce documents subpoenaed from him. The application to show cause is based upon the motion to compel testimony and to produce documents, and memorandum in support thereof.

After having considered the papers filed in support thereof, and it appearing that plaintiffs' application for an order to show cause should be granted, it is by the Court this day of 1974.

ORDERED that the deponent, John M. Swanner, be, and appear in his own proper person before this Court on the — day of —, 1974, at —, of said day, or soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, to show cause, if any he has, why he should not be ordered to testify and produce documents subpoenaed of him in the above entitled action.

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that I have caused copies of the foregoing Application for Order to Show Cause to be served upon deponent and defendants by hand delivery to deponent and defendants' attorney at the addresses listed below, this 19 day of December, 1974.

KENNETH J. GUIDO, Jr.

OFFICE OF THE MINORITY LEADER,
Washington, D.C., December 19, 1974.

Hon. CARL ALBERT,

Speaker, U.S. House of Representatives,

Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: The attached Application for Order to Show Cause was hand delivered on this date to Mr. John M. Swanner, Staff Director, Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, an employee of this Committee, and of the U.S. House of Representatives, and was filed by Mr. Kenneth J. Guido, Jr., Common Cause, 2030 M Street, Washington, D.C. 20038 on this date in the case of Common Cause, et al., in Civil Action No. 1887-73.

livered on this date to Tom Lankford, House Minority Room Clerk, an employee of the U.S. House of Representatives, and was filed by Mr. Kenneth J. Guido, Jr., Common Cause, 2030 M Street, Washington, D.C. 20038 on this date in the case of Common Cause, et al., in Civil Action No. 1887-73.

The Application in question is forwarded herewith and the matter presented for such action as the House in its wisdom wishes to take.

Sincerely,

JOHN J. RHODES, M.C.,
Minority Leader.

In the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia
COMMON CAUSE, et al., PLAINTIFFS, AGAINST
E. T. KLASSEN, et al., DEFENDANTS
Civil Action No. 1887-73

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE
I hereby certify that I have caused copies of the foregoing Application for Order to Show Cause to be served upon deponent and defendants by hand delivery to deponent and defendants' attorney at the address listed below, this 19th day of December, 1974.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE

This matter came before this Court on the application of plaintiffs for the issuance of an Order to show cause why the deponent, Thomas J. Lankford, should not be ordered to show cause why he should not be ordered to testify and produce documents subpoenaed from him or be held in contempt. The application to show cause is based upon the motion to compel testimony and to produce documents, and memorandum in support thereof, filed with the Court.

After having considered the papers filed in support thereof, and it appearing that plaintiffs' application for an order to show cause should be granted, it is by the Court this — day of —, 1974.

ORDERED that the deponent, Thomas J. Lankford, be, and appear in his own proper person before this Court on the — day of —, 1974, at —, of said day, or soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, to show cause, if any he has, why he should not be ordered to testify and produce documents subpoenaed of him in the above entitled action or held in contempt.

APPLICATION FOR ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE

Plaintiffs, acting through their attorney, respectfully move the Court for the issuance of an Order to Show Cause why the deponent, Thomas J. Lankford, Majority Clerk, House Majority Room, Rayburn House Office Building, New Garage WA-29, Washington, D.C., should not be required to testify in the above entitled action and produce documents or be held in contempt of court.

For the reasons in support of this application, the Court is respectfully referred to the motion to compel the deponent to answer questions and produce documents or be held in contempt, and the memorandum in support thereof, filed with the Court on November 25, 1974, and incorporated herein by reference.

Respectfully submitted,
KENNETH J. GUIDO, Jr.,
Attorney for Plaintiffs.

FREE BOOZE TO FLY

(Mr. QUIE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. QUIE. Mr. Speaker, I have just read an article where Floyd D. Hall, board chairman of Eastern Airlines, deplored as "unconscionable" the recent decision of National Airlines to provide free cocktails to its coach passengers.

December 20, 1974

While it would be expected that a competing airline might find it difficult for them in competition to have another airline provide services or benefits beyond that of competing airlines, I find his explanation of great merit. Mr. Hall warned that if all U.S. airlines offered free drinks, the total cost would approach $100 million a year, but what is more, Hall said:

This is definitely unfair to the nondrinking passengers since the cost of this free liquor will be figured into future fare computations.

It should be noted, however, that Eastern now also provides free cocktails. Looking at the need of hungry people throughout the world, this $100 million, if spent for grain which would be saved if it were not processed into cocktails, would be enough to provide the total annual grain intake for 2,800,000 people.

With world famine a severe crisis, it seems to me that these two segments of our economy must have their priorities straight.

THE ADMIRABLE 93D

(Mr. BRADEMAs asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. BRADEMAs. Mr. Speaker, as the 93d Congress draws to a close, I am sure that Members of the House and Senate will read with some gratification the following editorial in the December 20, 1974, issue of the Christian Science Monitor, entitled "The Admirable 93d."

The editorial follows:

THE ADMIRABLE 93D

Americans are not in the habit of patting Congress on the back. More often than not, it is the target of criticism and the butt of "do-nothing" jokes. And so, as this historic Congress draws to a close, it warrants observing that the American legislature, when tested to the extreme, can perform vigorously, responsibly, and even with a measure of greatness.

Foremost, the 93rd Congress will be remembered for surmounting one of the two greatest constitutional challenges in the nation's history. The Senate Watergate committee took up the crimes of the Nixon administration, and the House of Representatives, with reluctance but with strong conscience, inexorably moved toward impeachment. No one who watched the televised hearings of the House Judiciary Committee could have remained unmoved by the sense of justice and integrity that characterized the proceedings.

That probe forced the resignation of Richard Nixon and led to an unprecedented peaceful transfer of power. It also spawned needed reforms. Congress moved quickly to adopt a new system of financing political campaigns and voted to make Nixon's tapes and documents public property.

Significantly for the workings of political democracy, the 93rd Congress reasserted the authority of the legislative branch vis-a-vis the executive, restoring a balance of power. It did so by curbing the presidential war-making ability and setting up a budget mechanism to improve control over federal spending.

Even apart from Watergate, this two-year Congress chalked up some admirable legislation. Countless Americans will benefit by the new minimum standards for private pension plans, the extension of federal aid to public elementary and secondary schools, and the authorization of funds to develop new sources of energy. And citizens of the District of Columbia can now elect their local officials.

Further, at this writing Congress was moving unflappably to enact the crucial foreign trade bill, despite Moscow's last-minute disavowal of any pledge on Jewish emigration. This basic legislation will give the President the power he needs to press for freer world trade.

Accolades are also due the House leadership, which got behind the reforms pushed through by the newly constituted Democratic Caucus. The impending reorganization, including that of the powerful House Ways and Means Committee, is the most significant in recent decades.

The overall record is not without flaws of course. The 93rd Congress failed to come to grips with such overriding problems as the economy, energy conservation, and tax reform. How the new 94th Congress—more Democratic, more reform-minded and a little more youthful—will tackle these and other issues remains to be seen.

But as the men and women of the 93rd speed homeward for the holidays, they deserve a "well done" from their constituents.

CONSIDERATION BY SENATE OF CONFERENCE REPORT ON EX- PORT-IMPORT BANK

(Mr. FRENZEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, yesterday during consideration in the Senate of the conference report on the Export-Import Bank, the junior Senator from Illinois made some remarks which, to the best of my recollection, did not accurately represent the deliberations of the conference committee. I did not sign the conference report, but I did participate actively in all of the three conferences which we have endured on this bill, including the one on Wednesday. I heard plenty of weird statements, but none that would corroborate the Senator's flight of fancy.

The Senator said in his speech, which can be found on page 41060 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 19, that it was the intention of the conferees that the $40 million subceiling for energy project financing in the U.S.S.R. would not permit the transaction for the $49.9 million Yakutsk project. He further states that it was the intent of the conferees that any "attempts to break up the Yakutsk project or any other large project into smaller parts" would be a violation of the law.

Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, there is nothing in the law, nor was there any agreement among the conferees, which would prevent any project under $40 million from going ahead, if it met all the other qualifications, including being limited to only research and exploration.* The Senator also quoted from the original report of the Senate Banking Committee and indicated that that language holds true under the compromise reached in conference the other day. The conference made no agreement on any Senate committee report. Later in the debate, the Senator responded to a question from the junior Senator from Pennsylvania regarding the Yakutsk project. His response was contrary to my understanding of the conference agreement. It is true that the Yakutsk project could not go forward at its present cost. However, if the project were reduced in size, or more importantly, if the Eximbank's exposure on the project were trimmed to below the $40 million subceiling for energy transactions, then Yakutsk in much different composition could go forward.

*I know the Senator does want Yakutsk to proceed. It was successful in messing up the bill pretty well, but there is no language, and no conference agreement sustaining his statement on Yakutsk.

What the conferees agreed to on Wednesday was not that Yakutsk, or the North Star project, or any of the other fabled undertakings could not go forward. The agreement was on limiting the amount of the Soviet loan/guarantee ceiling that could be employed by the Bank for transactions involving research and exploration equipment. I did not agree with such an arbitrary limitation then, and I do not now, but that is all the conference agreed to. Attempts to convert wishful thinking into legislative intent should be so described. The law is what the law says—not what some protectionist Senator says it is.

THE NOMINATION OF NELSON ROCKEFELLER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PATMAN) is recognized for 45 minutes.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, Ralph Nader, in a recent letter to the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, the Honorable PETER W. RODINO, Jr., had some very interesting and important observations to make concerning the proposed nomination of NELSON ROCKEFELLER to be Vice President of the United States.

In my opinion these observations made by Mr. Nader deserve widespread dissemination. They are clearly and incisively set forth in the document submitted to the House Judiciary Committee.

The remarks are as follows:

MEMORANDUM TO MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

As you consider your vote on the nomination of Nelson Rockefeller to be Vice President, you may find the two attachments to be of interest. One is a letter from Ralph Nader to Chairman Peter Rodino which outlines some serious structural deficiencies in the Judiciary Committee's handling of the Rockefeller nomination. The other is a memorandum which summarizes many of the issues left unresolved by the incomplete work of the Committee.

DECEMBER 12, 1974.

Hon. PETER W. RODINO, Jr.,
Chairman, House Judiciary Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR CHAIRMAN RODINO: Numerous issues concerning the Rockefeller nomination remain unsettled. These are issues of substance which have been raised by staff, by members of the Committee, by witnesses, by media reports, and citizen inquiries. There is no need to repeat them here as they are well known to both the Committee and staff. The question is why they are allowed to remain unresolved.

It appears that the dominant forces of the House and the Committee are determined to rush to a precipitous judgment before the close of the session for reasons that are separate from the seriousness of the responsibility that is being so lightly assumed. The Rockefeller confirmation process is a political act which could have serious consequential impact for the nation's future. At least the Committee must proceed on that level of expectation. Yet, knowing the complexity of the area to be examined and the derivative nature of the abundant political and economic power deployed by the nominee over the years, the Committee majority, under your chairmanship, did not authorize a single subpoena, did not call a number of highly material witnesses, did not require that staff depositions be conducted under oath where needed, did not provide expeditious and full access to background materials (having nothing to do with statutory bars or legitimate privacy) to the media and interested citizens, and did not permit a decent interval for the members of the Committee, their staff, House members and the public to review the transcripts and background material. The Committee relied totally on voluntary disclosure that was grossly incomplete and substantially unverified.

December 20, 1974

In short, there has been a massive and hardly subdued prejudgment of the needed scope and intensity of the Committee's inquiry and that is as deplorable as a prejudgment of the question of the confirmation itself whose direction it helps make inevitable. Since a reported majority of the Committee members do not believe that what has been already disclosed in both Houses is sufficient to deny the nomination, a remarkable assessment in itself, this self-restricted inquiry is doubly deplorable.

The least the Committee should do before adjournment is to establish a clear information policy on public access to background materials which do not appear in the published Committee hearings and report. Hopefully, the published record will reflect a desire to include as much supplementary material as possible since that will be the only set of documents available to most Americans throughout the country. And hopefully there will be an adequate print run of these hearings and reports. But the basic policy should relate to the information collected by the staff, members and by other means which are now not public due to the Committee's Rule 3 concerning non-disclosure. Apart from statutory restrictions, there is much information, such as contributions to the nominee's campaigns or agency by agency reports requested by the Committee, which are now secret. It is such information to which an explicit Committee information policy should be addressed.

The following guidelines are suggested for such a policy. Information should be specifically categorized and generally described that is to remain secret with reasons given for such confidentiality. All other information which is within the discretion of a majority Committee vote to release, under the rules of the House, should be publicly available from the Archives or Committee files. Such information should be indexed and the index printed in the Committee's report for easy reference by interested citizens.

It would be helpful for public evaluation of the Committee's work to have the Committee report set forth the scope and methodology of the Committee's inquiry, including the extent to which staff requests for subpoena authority and other lawful powers were denied. It is expected that the Committee which helped air the Watergate cover-up will be eager to open up to public review the materials which the public has the right to know. For it is, among other reasons, of the utmost importance that citizens be able to evaluate specifically how the Committee displayed its will, used its resources and authority, and interpreted the 25th Amendment to fulfill its responsibilities.

Sincerely,

RALPH NADER.

UNANSWERED ISSUES ON ROCKEFELLER INTRODUCTION

Hearings held by the Senate Rules Committee and the House Judiciary Committee have left unanswered a number of questions about Nelson Rockefeller's qualifications to be Vice President. The following summaries illustrate—but by no means exhaust—those issues. Some, such as the gifts to public officials, entail possible legal liability which could jeopardize the nominee's tenure in office should he be confirmed. Others point to the dangers inherent in the unique merger of private wealth and public power which should make Congress pause before it acts in lieu of the electorate to install Mr. Rockefeller as Vice President. All are probative matters requiring further and fuller investigation. Cumulatively, these issues raise one overriding question: whether, on the basis of an incomplete and troubling record, a lame-duck Congress should confirm Nelson Rockefeller.

STRUCTURE OF THE HEARINGS

The manner in which the House Judiciary Committee went about its investigation of Nelson Rockefeller raises serious questions as to whether the House possesses sufficient information to discharge its constitutional duties. Not one subpoena was issued during the course of the investigations, and sworn statements were not required except in committee room testimony and responses to letters to Rep. Holtzman. The Committee had neither the time nor the staff expertise to digest and analyze the financial information which was disclosed. Each member of the Committee was limited to five minutes of questioning which barely allowed the member to ask a question and receive a general answer; it precluded the members from following, probing and piercing Rockefeller's necessarily short and often general responses. The Committee failed to call numerous key witnesses. For example, David Rockefeller, head of the Chase Manhattan Bank, was never called. James Stillman Rockefeller, Chairman of the Board of First National City Bank while Nelson Rockefeller was Governor, was never called and asked about his role in the Long Island Railroad. No witnesses, except the Governor, testified on the Morhouse scandal. Stuart Saunders, who was the head of Penn Central and concurrently on the Board of Directors at Chase, was not called though he could have explained the strange acquisition of L.I.R.R. With the exception of William Ronan, none of the recipients of Rockefeller gifts and loans were called.

VIOLATIONS OF CRIMINAL LAW

Early in November, a group of law professors wrote to the Senate Rules Committee suggesting that Rockefeller had violated New York statutes relating to unlawful gratuities, by virtue of gifts to public officials. When questioned by the Senate Rules Committee concerning the New York anti-tipping statute, Rockefeller submitted an exculpatory legal memorandum. (Hearings, Sen. Rules Comm. 674-687). Later, the exculpatory effort was rebutted by legal memoranda submitted for the record by Representative Abzug (Hearings, Hs. Jud. Comm. 1179-89). The Committees have not resolved the legal controversy and potential legal liability still looms over the nominee.

INATTENTION TO RECIPIENTS OF GIFTS AND LOANS

Between 1957 and 1974 Nelson A. Rockefeller gave over $1,700,000 in cash gifts or cancelled loans to personal and political associates and to state employees. Rockefeller loaned another $650,000, of which almost $250,000 is still outstanding. Neither the House nor Senate committees have acquired complete information on the gifts or loans of other members of the Rockefeller family even though the record clearly shows that their resources were mustered on behalf of Nelson's political aims. Nor did the committees explore in kind gifts such as air transportation, accommodations, entertainment and the like.

These gifts and loans raise three crucial questions. Did they give Nelson Rockefeller an influence over the recipients, spoken or unspoken, which he would not otherwise have had? Did the gifts and loans violate sections of the New York State laws dealing with gifts to public officials? Did the recipients use the loans and gifts or the income derived from investments made with loans and gifts, for other than personal purposes?

At least forty-four individuals received gifts and/or loans from Nelson Rockefeller, but the Senate Rules Committee called only five of these to testify or present statements. The House Judiciary Committee called only one recipient. The staff of the House Judiciary Committee interviewed all recipients of more than $3,000, but did not take sworn depositions nor require production of financial records beyond those which the recipients voluntarily disclosed.

William Ronan

Dr. William Ronan is the official associate upon whom Nelson Rockefeller has bestowed the greatest largesse—over one-half million dollars. Until 1966 Dr. Ronan was the Governor's Secretary, receiving in addition to his salary over $300,000 in interest free loans. Ronan helped Rockefeller plan a take over of transportation in the New York City metropolitan area, entailing a merger of the Metropolitan Commuter Transportation Authority and the Triborough Bridge and Tunnel Authority. This plan squeezed out Robert Moses, who had built the Triborough and other authorities into power bases from which he could defy even the Governor. The merger was greatly facilitated when David Rockefeller and the Chase Manhattan Bank compromised as trustees certain covenants protecting holders of the Triborough's bonds. In 1968 Rockefeller made Ronan head of the resulting Metropolitan Transit Authority, potentially a position of enormous independence and power. The next year Rockefeller loaned Ronan another $150,000 (again, interest-free) making his total debt to the Governor over one-half million dollars. (In 1967 he had loaned Ronan another $50,000.) On May 1, 1974, Ronan resigned this MTA post and two days later Rockefeller completely forgave the one-half million debt on which Ronan had paid back nothing. Ronan is now a $100,000/yr. Senior Advisor of Rockefeller Family and Associates and holds other positions including one as Commissioner of the New York-New Jersey Port Authority, to which Rockefeller appointed him.

Robert Anderson

In the fall of 1957, the International Basic Economy Corporation (IBEC), of which Nelson Rockefeller was President, agreed to buy a one-half interest in Dalada, Inc., which owed then Treasury Secretary Robert B. Anderson to $900,000. There is evidence that Dalada's $900,000 debt to Anderson was part of a complex arrangement to encourage Anderson to leave private life and accept the Treasury post. As Treasury Secretary, Anderson played a key role in developing the system of oil import quota which has protected the domestic price of oil and has provided windfall profits to inland-based refiners, in which the Rockefellers have substantial interests. In early 1957 Rockefeller had loaned Anderson $84,000 to purchase shares in IBEC. A month or less before the Senate confirmed Anderson for the Treasury post—July 2, 1957—Rockefeller purchased back from him the IBEC stock.

December 20, 1974

Fred Young

When Fred Young stepped down from the New York Court of Claims to replace Judson Morhouse as Republican State Chairman, he received a $15,000 gift from Rockefeller. Within a year, the Governor re-appointed him to the Court of Claims. The Court handles matters of great interest to the State and the Governor. Rockefeller described the Court as being behind in its business because of the State's active program of highway takings, parks, recreation facilities and institutions.

William E. Miller

Laurance Rockefeller belatedly disclosed that in 1961, at Nelson's request, he loaned $30,000 to William E. Miller, Chairman of the Republican National Committee. The Committee did not probe the reason behind the gift to a party official who in 1964 reported his net worth at $250,730.

MORHOUSE TAPES

After Republican State Chairman Judson Morhouse had been convicted of involvement in a bribe and graft scheme for sale and renewal of state liquor licenses, Governor Rockefeller continued his involvement with Morhouse. Rockefeller's Secretary, William Ronan, wrote to Judge Gellinoff asking for leniency for Morhouse. Rockefeller loaned a sum of money to Morhouse after his conviction while he was free on bail. Later Rockefeller commuted Morhouse's sentence. These incidents demonstrate an unusual interest in helping out a felon in need: Rockefeller's strange interest could perhaps be explained by tapes in New York City District Attorney Kuh's office. Taped conversations between Morhouse, the party's Secretary, Walter Bligh, and a business associate of Morhouse named Aler Court are in the possession of the New York District Attorney and have not been subpoenaed by the Committee. Indeed, the Committee staff has not even read the portions of the transcripts which are publicly available, but has relied on hearsay assurances that the recorded conversations are irrelevant to Nelson Rockefeller. However, the publicly available transcripts do contain references to Rockefeller and to Morhouse's hopes that the Governor would come to his aid.

EPSTEIN AND CREWS DEAL

In the 1966 campaign, Franklin Roosevelt said Rockefeller made a deal with Brooklyn leader John Crews which would give Crews the power to appoint the Chairman of the State Liquor Authority in exchange for Crews' support of the nomination of Rockefeller for Governor. The charge was chronicled in the New York Times, Oct. 16, 1966. Rockefeller was asked about the deal six times by reporters but did not deny the story; instead, he refused to "dignify that with a comment." Publicly available transcripts of the Morhouse tapes contain statements by Walter Bligh, Secretary of the State Republican Committee under Morhouse, secretly acknowledging the deal.

THE PEROT AFFAIR

In early 1973, Nelson Rockefeller intervened in the normal state contracting procedure and awarded a preliminary consulting contract to Electronic Data Systems, Inc., the firm headed by H. Ross Perot. Rockefeller's intervention, expected at the time to lead to a $15 million contract for EDS to administer the state's welfare and medical programs, overturned the judgment of a panel of six experts, none of whom had ranked EDS among the top six bidders. The firm's questionable practices had been well publicized in investigations by the House Subcommittee on Intergovernmental Relations, the General Accounting Office, and the State of California. But at the time of the Rockefeller intervention, Perot was deeply in debt to a consortium of New York banks, led by David Rockefeller's Chase Manhattan, which in 1970 had financed Perot's bail-out of the duPont, Gloré Forgan brokerage firm, Wall Street's third largest. In an unusual move, the consortium had accepted EDS stock as collateral for the loan, and this stock had dipped greatly in value. Nelson Rockefeller had this episode "investigated" by a Rockefeller appointee who with his wife contributed over $10,000 to the Governor's campaigns, and who found no evidence of impropriety or wrongdoing.

THE LONG ISLAND RAILROAD TAKEOVER

In 1964, Governor Rockefeller appointed Dr. Ronan Chairman of a Special Committee to investigate the Long Island Railroad, and the Ronan committee soon recommended that New York state purchase the railroad from Penn Central. Although the New York State Controller, Arthur Levitt, questioned whether the Long Island Railroad had any market value because of its inability to make a profit, Dr. Ronan and William Shea negotiated a purchase for 65 million dollars. While Long Island undoubtedly requires rail service, this particular solution operated as a bail-out of the Governor's relatives and friends. The Long Island Railroad was a subsidiary of the Penn Central—headed by Stuart Sanders, also a director of Chase—which was heavily indebted to First National City Bank, headed by James Stillman Rockefeller. The Penn Central wanted to unload the L.I.R.R. because it was losing money and little hope existed that it could repay its 76 million dollar debt to parent Penn Central. So the state bought Penn Central's problem child and everyone was happy. Penn Central recovered 60 million of a 76 million dollar bad debt. That shored up the ailing Penn Central while benefitting both Citibank, which had loaned millions to the L.I.R.R., and the Chase bank, which had invested in Penn Central securities. It was a cozy deal: David Rockefeller headed Chase, James Rockefeller headed Citibank—New York's largest banks—Stuart Sanders headed Penn Central and was a director at Chase, and Nelson Rockefeller headed New York.

THE HUDSON RIVER EXPRESSWAY

During the middle and late 1960's, Governor Rockefeller fought vigorously for a 47-mile, 6-lane Hudson River Expressway, which would have scarred the scenic Hudson River Bank and displaced the low income communities, mainly black and Puerto Rican, in Tarrytown and Ossining. A special spur would route traffic away from Rt. 117, which bisects the Rockefeller's 3000-plus acre estate at Pocantico Hills, and onto a new road on the estate's perimeter, along which the Rockefellers had been acquiring rezonings for commercial and industrial use. The Rockefeller family had sought such rezoning of 117 since 1932, and the bills authorizing these projects were now slipped through the state legislature at the tail end of the 1965 session. Rockefeller lined up a high-credentialed cast of supporters, including William Ronan, transportation expert and future recipient of the Governor's largest gifts, and the Hudson River Valley Commission, the prior Chairman of which had been Laurance Rockefeller and whose Executive Director, Alexander Aldrich, was the Governor's cousin and a staff assistant. The expressway was opposed by 75 national and regional conservation groups, the NAACP, and local officials.

The project seemed to hinge on then-Interior Secretary Stewart Udall, who had openly opposed it for three years. In early 1968 Nelson called Udall to a meeting at the Governor's Manhattan office, where he and his brother Laurance, who had known Udall for some time, prevailed upon the Interior Secretary together. "The whole thing was a matter of Laurance laying all his influence on the line," Udall said afterwards. Later that year Udall reversed his earlier opposition and declined to oppose the project. Litigation blocked the main expressway, but the special spur was built, along which the Rockefellers sold a large tract of land to IBM (in which the Rockefellers have substantial interests) for $2.5 million, according to the tax stamps on the deeds.

THE GOVERNOR'S CLUB

Rockefeller often entertained a group of business and governmental leaders known as the "Governor's Club" at the Pocantico Hills Estate. According to press reports, the club is composed of large contributors to Rockefeller campaigns. The Committees' inquiry overlooked the subject, failing to determine the club's membership, its scope of influence and whether its members received preferential treatment from the state administration.

GAINING A SALES TAX INCREASE

On March 28, 1969, two Democratic State Assemblymen, Charles F. Stockmeister of Rochester and Albert J. Hausbeck of Buffalo, joined New York Republicans in voting a 1% increase in the state's sales tax, which Governor Rockefeller had strongly advocated. In 1965 Stockmeister had introduced a bill to repeal the sales tax and in 1969, both he and Hausbeck had agreed with the Democratic caucus in opposing the increase. At the time the two were widely accused in the press and in political circles of having sold their votes to Rockefeller for political plums—for Stockmeister a position on the state Civil Service Commission and for Hausbeck one on the state Harness Racing Commission. Rockefeller denied the charge but said "What they did . . . doesn't make me feel punitive towards these individuals in their consideration for these positions." (New York Times, April 16, 1969.) On July 3rd of that year, while Rockefeller and the press corps covering him were in South America, the Governor's office announced the appointment of Stockmeister to the Civil Service Commission.

WORLD TRADE CENTER

The State of New York under Governor Rockefeller committed itself in 1965 to rent 60 floors in the World Trade Center at inflated prices when space was readily available in rent-free buildings and in commercial buildings for substantially lower rates. Public Employee Press (12-28-73) reports that the inflated rental cost for New York taxpayers amounts to 4 million dollars per year. David Rockefeller had organized the financing and construction of the World Trade Center in his capacity as chairman of the Downtown Lower Manhattan Association. This move was connected with the Chase Manhattan Bank's designs to prevent the decline of Lower Manhattan, in which it has substantial interests. The state commitment was a boon to the Trade Center which was experiencing great difficulty in arranging necessary financing, in part because of its inability to attract tenants. (Hearings, Hs. Jud. Comm. 381, 433, 434)

THE ALBANY MALL

Soon after becoming New York State Governor in January, 1959, Nelson Rockefeller resolved to turn Albany, N.Y. into "the most spectacularly beautiful seat of government in the world," modeled after the "new-city" capitol of Brazil, Brasilia. The original cost estimate of $400 million has since risen to over $850 million ($1.5 billion including interest) and the completion date has constantly retreated from the late '60's. State Controller Arthur Levitt estimates the cost of usable space in the structure at three times that of comparable space built privately. To finance the Mall, Rockefeller adopted a unique scheme that sidestepped the state constitutional requirement of voter approval of state debt. Instead of floating state bonds, Rockefeller arranged for the county to borrow the funds, which N.Y. counties can do without voter approval. The state agreed to manage the building of the project, and through a long-term lease Rockefeller in effect pledged the state's taxpayers to pay off, through current revenues, the principal and interest on the bonds. The interest charges were higher, moreover, than they would have been on voter-approved bonds. Rockefeller said of this financing scheme, "This was a magnificent concept. I mean, this was new. It was fresh. I went for it right away."

December 20, 1974

THE GOLDBERG BIOGRAPHY

During the 1970 New York gubernatorial campaign, Laurence Rockefeller, at the suggestion of his brother Nelson financed a biography critical of Nelson's Democratic opponent, Arthur Goldberg. The book was researched and written in a matter of weeks by Victor Lasky. Laurence camouflaged his interest through a dummy Delaware corporation held in the name of a Pennsylvania nominee. 100,000 copies were printed, many of which were used by Republican campaign workers for distribution during the campaign. Nelson at first denied any advance knowledge of the endeavor, then admitted having referred it to Laurence for financing. At Congressional hearings Laurence has insisted he saw the project mainly as a money-making business venture even though: 1) He had no prior experience in publishing, 2) the contract guaranteeing the Arlington House publishers a definite return was typical for campaign publications and extra-ordinary for genuine literary investments, 3) the book was given away during the campaign, and 4) Laurence did not take a deduction on his tax returns for losses he sustained through the book.

ATTICA

The effort to quell the Attica prison uprising resulted in 43 deaths due largely to an inflexible, hard-line stance taken by the Governor. In refusing to come to Attica physically, he passed up the opportunity to make a symbolic effort of concern and possibly to thereby maintain the status quo for a day or two and to break the impasse in negotiations. In overreaction to prisoner demands, he called in state troopers from all over the state, truncated further negotiations, and imprudently resorted to the use of firearms. When hostages were placed up front with knives at their throats, police were allowed to open fire resulting in deaths of prisoners and a number of hostages by gunfire—not by knife slashes. Rockefeller admitted before the Senate that the matter was handled improperly and that the established state procedure (precluding the use of weapons) should have been followed. (Hearings, Sen. Rules Comm. 125-128). As the ultimate derivative man, whose decisions are carried out by a stream of derivative representatives, Attica was one decision he could not make derivatively and obscurely. Attica provides a rare public glimpse into Rockefeller deciding directly under stress.

TWENTY-FIFTH AMENDMENT

The Twenty-fifth Amendment's provision for selecting a Vice President is the child of compromise. Alternate proposals were introduced in 1964; Senator Ervin favored permitting Congress to choose the Vice President and Senator Bayh favored permitting the President to make the choice. The resultant compromise was designed to give the President a person with whom he could work and still guarantee the people at least an indirect voice in the decision by designating Congress as the surrogate of the electorate. The President has performed his Constitutional duty but Congress has not; it has not acted as a surrogate for the people but has treated the hearings like advise and consent hearings exercised for judges and agency chairmen. Congress has not even confronted the question whether the vote should be postponed until after the lame ducks leave so that the people will have a more direct voice in their standby president. No consideration has been given to the inability of the new Congress to work with a Vice President it did not choose.

SHOULD MEMBERS OF CONGRESS BENEFITTING FROM ROCKEFELLER CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS VOTE ON CONFIRMATION

In the past eighteen years Nelson Rockefeller personally has influenced hundreds of campaigns for the Presidency and the Vice Presidency, the House and the Senate, through campaign contributions totaling at least $3,265,374. This does not include contributions of his family and associates which have not been totaled. These sums have gone almost exclusively to Republicans, who can hardly be unkindful of the nominee's generosity. Over 13 current members of the House and Senate have received a total of over $60,000 in direct contributions from Rockefeller since 1957, while untold hundreds have received funds from national, state and local Republican committees which the nominee has supported generously. Current Congressmen who have received direct contributions include Senator Jacob Javits (R-N.Y.), Peter Peyser (R-N.Y.), Rep. Ogden Reid (D-N.Y.), Senator Hugh Scott (R-Pa.), and Rep. William Cohen (who returned a small Rockefeller contribution to his 1974 campaign). There are in addition, of course, to those who have received direct and indirect contributions from Rockefeller family members.

Should members of Congress who have benefitted from the nominee's largess disqualify themselves from voting on their benefactor or at least acknowledge such contributions in the House debate?

CONCLUSION

The hearings and the attendant public attention have strengthened through concrete examples the apprehensions borne by many concerning the nominee. The Roman case shows how Rockefeller money can give rise to a civil service indentured to the nominee personally. Family members using their private resources and standing to advance the nominee's political aims appear when brother Laurence intervened with high federal officials to win approval for Nelson's planned Hudson River Expressway, and when David, as head of the Chase Manhattan Bank, greatly facilitated Governor Nelson's takeover of transportation in the New York metropolitan area. The Albany Mall case shows how a strong and wealthy individual accustomed to getting his way will sidestep the constitutionally protected rights of taxpayers in order to pursue his pet projects. The relation between the Hudson River Expressway and the Rockefeller estate at Pocantico Hills, and between the World Trade Center and the designs of the Chase Manhattan Bank for Lower Manhattan, illustrate the opportunities of Rockefeller using public office to advance private family interests. The generous campaign contributions and support of related campaign activities raise the spectre of Congressional opponents of the administration confronted in coming elections by Rockefeller-financed challenges.

The hearing records are punctuated continually by the question "Should private wealth disqualify one for public office?" The question is a red herring. It is apparent to all that vast wealth did not prevent Nelson Rockefeller from seeking national office in 1960, in 1964, in 1968, and even in 1972. Nor does his wealth handicap him in relation to most Americans in seeking office in 1976, 1980, and even after if he so chooses. The present situation is unique: Congress substituting its judgement for that of the voters in choosing their Vice President. Should Congress choose one in whom the potential for abuse is both so extraordinary and so awesome? As perceived by the Harris poll, conducted November 1-5, the American people disapprove of the Rockefeller nomination by a margin of 43% to 39%. By margin of 47% to 34% they believe that the nominee's wealth will create a conflict of interests.

If the voters were being asked to elect Mr. Rockefeller that would be another matter. In earlier years they have not been receptive to his advances, even though the information recently adduced was not widely known. Weak as the safeguards of the political process may sometimes be, they have made the Presidency and the Vice Presidency one of the few things in the world, literally, which Rockefeller's money has not been able to buy.

Will Congress now give him this prize as he gained his wealth—for free?

HON. CHET HOLIFIELD

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York (Mr. HORTON) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to join with the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. Moss) in honoring an individual who, in my opinion, will be recorded in the history of this Nation as being one of the greatest men ever to serve in the House of Representatives. CHET HOLIFIELD epitomizes the very best in just about every quality and characteristic that is desirable in a public servant and in a man.

During 32 years of service to his constituents and to America and mankind, he has shown himself to be fair, compassionate, objective, hard-working, and brilliant. He, more than any man I know, has lived his principles each day of his life. He is true to his family, to his country and to his ideals.

The following excerpts from a friend's letter to CHET sum up the reaction many of us have to his retirement:

Your retirement is, God knows, well earned. . . . It's the public in general, and your constituents and friends especially who are going to suffer the loss. Your work on the Atomic Energy Committee is historic. Your stature as a national leader is unassailable.

But it's your humaneness, your care and concern for those in trouble—the unfortunate ones—that mark your greatness.

Mr. Speaker, there are few combinations of people in human experience who get to know each other better than the chairman and ranking minority member of a committee—who must work day-in-day-out to solve problems on issues, and to forge compromises on bills in the heat of pressure and controversy.

For all my 12 years in the House, it has been my privilege to serve with CHET on the Government Operations Committee. Ten of those years have been spent serving opposite each other as leaders of our parties in subcommittee, and 2 of those years, during this Congress, we led the full committee together.

December 20, 1974

It would be impossible to sum up what this experience has meant to me, or to describe my respect for the man. Let me only say that I have never worked with any person who approached the needs of the public more objectively or keenly, or who was so devoid of selfishness or of either partisan or other prejudice. CHET HOLIFIELD, the legislator, comes as close as any man to the ideals Americans look to in a Congressman. He understands what the public interest is, and he puts it first—always. All other considerations, however worthy or tempting, however much easier they may be to serve, come second.

Last July, Mr. Speaker, CHET HOLIFIELD was honored at a testimonial gathering by the National Contract Management Association. A beautiful booklet, entitled "Holifield of California" was assembled and printed for that occasion. Parts of this book say better than can I, what CHET HOLIFIELD and his lovely wife and partner, Cam, have contributed to the people of this Nation.

One title CHET has earned is that of "Mr. Atomic Energy." Let me read to you the brief description of his achievements in this vital field from the booklet:

Congressman Holifield is one of the world's leading authorities on atomic energy—and that informal title still only skims the surface of his monumental contributions to the field.

He campaigned vigorously for civilian control of the atom, and then pressed successfully for a nuclear policy that served national well-being as well as national strength.

Because of his foresight and leadership, the nation now benefits from more than 1,500 peaceful applications of nuclear energy, from power generation to medicine, from industry to scientific research.

He was a charter member of the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy when it was formed in 1946, and served ten years as its chairman and vice chairman.

While committed to peaceful uses of the atom, he also anguished over its military implications and worked at length to shape a proper policy for the Nation's Defense.

His dedication to this field has made CHET one of the experts and prophets in the field of energy. Probably the deepest concern he will carry with him as he leaves Capitol Hill will be his concern about the course this Nation will take to meet the severe energy dilemma we face today. I want to say here and now that I have urged both President Ford and Vice President ROCKEFELLER to turn to CHET for consultation and advice on energy matters in the coming months and years. As you know, it was CHET who urged and succeeded in creating the new Energy Research and Development Administration, and who led the way in drafting and enacting the bill creating the Federal Energy Administration.

It is most fitting that this week, the Congress sent to the White House legislation renaming the Oak Ridge National Laboratory as the Holifield National Laboratory. There is no other man who has done more than CHET for the peacetime uses of atomic energy to which this facility is devoted.

I, of course, am more acquainted with CHET's accomplishments as an organizer and reorganizer of government, through his leadership on the Government Operations Committee. Let me read some passages from "Holifield of California" about his accomplishments in this field:

While internationally famed for his work in atomic energy, Congressman Holifield's years of investigating efficiency in government, of making it more effective and responsive, has had a profound impact on our national life.

As chairman of the Committee on Government Operations since 1970—a committee on which he has served since its creation in 1949—he has been instrumental in shaping the very structure of the national government.

While with the Committee, he has managed some seventy reorganization bills and plans to consolidate and streamline the functions of the federal government.

He conducted the hearings, then wrote and managed the legislation that created the Departments of Transportation and Housing and Urban Development during a single Congress—the first time two Cabinet level departments have been created in a single Congress since its beginning in 1790.

He also authored the Federal Property Act which created the General Services Administration, and he and the Committee did the initial work that led to creation of the Department of Defense.

He authored legislation that established a blue-ribbon commission to investigate and overhaul federal procurement practices.

Admired by his colleagues as expert in many fields, Congressman Holifield is also recognized as the Congressional authority on federal procurement.

Mr. Speaker, as this is the final week of the 93d Congress, from which many fine public servants are retiring, there have been and will be many sincere words of high praise spoken in this Chamber. I believe that in CHET HOLIFIELD, America is losing the services of a great man, a man who has given the most productive years of his life to his first love—the people of this country.

I feel that the most appropriate way to close my own tribute to CHET HOLIFIELD is with the words of CHET himself. At the close of a very moving ceremony held in the Government Operations Committee room last May, at which CHET's portrait was hung, CHET took the rostrum and spoke extemporaneously to the gathering of 400 friends. His emotion-filled words say better than anyone else could what CHET HOLIFIELD means to America, and what America means to him and Cam:

"What do you say after 32 years of hard work in the vineyard of the Lord? I can say the 32 years have been the most interesting and, I believe, the most productive years of our life, and we've shared them together. Now we have made this decision, and we made it jointly. Both of us made it reluctantly because it's mighty hard to lay down the axe and the hoe and the scythe when you've been farming a piece of land for 32 years. We feel that God has been good to us. He's given us three score and ten—and a little more. We hope He will continue to be good to us."

"I do want to say that I believe very deeply in our institutions of Government. I believe they're going to be the salvation of this Nation. Whatever blessings we have, whatever freedoms we have, we owe to that form of Government. Members will come and Members will go, but the important thing is that the institutions are preserved."

"I thank all of you and I think it's now time for me to retire."

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, the Honorable CHET HOLIFIELD has enjoyed long and distinguished service in the Congress. His is one of the most notable records of any who serve in this body. I have known him and admired him from the time that his service began here in 1943, and I have been proud to enjoy his friendship and that of his family. We shall miss CHET HOLIFIELD in the halls of Congress.

Here he has filled many important assignments rising in recent years to a position of power as chairman of the Committee on Government Operations. In this and in other positions, he is a man who has placed country above self and Nation above politics.

This is not the only assignment of importance he has filled. CHET HOLIFIELD has played an important role by virtue of his membership on the Committee on Official Conduct and I have always considered him an ideal selection for membership on that committee. He is a man whom other Members of Congress emulate, because CHET HOLIFIELD does not run afoul of the standards of conduct which have been set by his committee.

As a member of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, CHET HOLIFIELD played a key role in the development of the weapons systems and the power systems and nuclear developments which today play a vital part in the defense, safety, and health of the people of the United States and the free world.

I know he is looking forward to returning to his beloved State of California but we shall miss CHET and Mrs. HOLIFIELD and the members of their family. We want him to know that his accomplishments in the Congress over these years have earned him a host of friends and admirers both in and out of Government.

To say he will be missed is to understate the matter. He leaves a void which will be difficult, if not impossible, to fill.

From a personal viewpoint, CHET HOLIFIELD knows how much I respect him and his judgment. One does not sever a friendship of 32 years duration without sincere regret. As CHET HOLIFIELD leaves this hall, I know that I shall still have his friendship, but I shall miss his good work and his sound advice. I join in wishing CHET and Pam and all their family well in the years ahead.

Mr. PETTIS. Mr. Speaker, it is with a heavy heart that I join my colleagues in paying tribute to the dean of the California congressional delegation, Congressman CHET HOLIFIELD. Though I know that CHET and his wonderful wife, Cam, are looking forward to a more relaxed life than they have known these past 32 years, I am sad that the House is losing the aid and wisdom of this outstanding legislator.

As the chairman of the Committee on Government Operations, CHET HOLIFIELD has worked diligently to prevent the taxpayers' money being squandered on useless Government programs. In the field of energy resources development, he was far ahead of us all in his concern over the depletion of our resources and the need to expand the use of atomic power in this Nation. His work on the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy since 1946 is well known to Members of this body. Under his leadership the committee has compiled the most sophisticated data on the effects of radiation and the production of electrical power on man and his environment.

Those of us in the California delegation are particularly indebted to CHET HOLIFIELD for his tenacious efforts to win approval of legislation allowing California to set stricter air pollution standards than the Federal guidelines implemented in the 90th and 91st Congress. I hope the day is not far off when citizens of southern California will breathe the pollution free air which was the goal of CHET HOLIFIELD's work.

I hope my friend, CHET HOLIFIELD, will return to us now and then. There will always be a place in our hearts for him, a man who served in these times as an example of what a Representative should be—concerned, dedicated, and an honest and capable leader.

Mr. MINSHALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Honorable CHET HOLIFIELD, has brought honor to his office, to the Nation, and to mankind the world over by his dedication to good government, and to the wise and good use of scientific knowledge, the reverse of which could be so explosively detrimental to human freedom and progress.

It has been a great privilege to serve with such a true gentleman and scholar. May this able prophet find basking with us in the significant benefit he has accrued for all men as profitably rewarding as he richly deserves.

Mr. ADDABO. Mr. Speaker, I join in honoring one of the truly outstanding Members of this body, the Honorable CHET HOLIFIELD, who is retiring from the House after 32 years of service.

The full record of Chairman HOLIFIELD's career in Congress is to lengthy to recite here, but his special efforts in the areas of atomic energy and Government operations are known to us all.

History will reserve many pages to reveal the story of CHET HOLIFIELD's leadership in Congress. We who remain will miss him and take this opportunity to wish him well.

Mr. GUBSER. Mr. Speaker, it is with a mixed feeling of pleasure and sorrow that I join with my colleagues in saying goodbye and paying tribute to the dean of our California delegation, the Honorable CHET HOLIFIELD and his good wife, Cam. They have both worked so hard that they truly deserve the pleasures which will come with leisure and a chance to be with their wonderful family.

But it is also sad that the remarkable capabilities of CHET who has handled so many major pieces of legislation dealing with Government reorganization and atomic energy will be missing from the legislative scene. He will be sorely missed and Washington social affairs will never be the same without likable smiling Cam.

Californians are proud of this wonderful couple and I am proud to join with them and others across the Nation in wishing CHET and Cam a happy and joyous retirement.

Mr. McFALL. Mr. Speaker, it is a deep personal loss to me that CHET HOLIFIELD is leaving the House after 32 years of service here. I cannot count the many kindnesses and assistance that the distinguished dean of the California delegation has rendered to me since I came to this body 18 years ago. He and his dear wife, Cam, seem always to bring our California sunshine to Washington with them. For years they have been among my closest friends. I will always appreciate their warmth and love.

Little more than a week ago I had the privilege of visiting CHET's home district to pay tribute to him and to Cam, who have been such an effective and inseparable team for more than 50 years. It is well nigh impossible to do full justice to their contributions to the State of California and to the people of this Nation. The best that you can hope to do is give a glimpse of their achievements and great service to their country so that you can begin to appreciate their loss.

My very best wishes and affection go with my friends the Holifields. I include the text of my remarks at the Holifield appreciation dinner in their home district:

REMARKS BY HON. JOHN J. McFALL

I am very happy to be with you tonight and greatly honored to be invited to speak at this testimonial dinner.

It is a testimonial dinner for a high and noble purpose: To salute Chet and Cam Holifield.

I have served in the Congress of the United States with Chet Holifield for 18 years. You good people in the 19th Congressional District elected Chet in 1942—14 years before I came on the congressional scene.

Incidentally, Chet has broken all records for service as a United States Representative from the State of California: Thirty-two years of continuous service. What a record! Since California was admitted to the Union in 1850, no Congressional Representative has served a longer term than Chet Holifield.

For a third of a century, Chet has been working at his legislative tasks for the public good. Chet is dean of the California Congressional Delegation. The dean is the senior member of the State's elected representatives in Congress. He brings the members together on matters of mutual interest to the State of California.

We look to Chet for wise counsel, for true guidance, for inspired leadership, in dealing with the complex problems of our time.

As dean of the delegation, Chet has fought many battles for the State of California, and he can point with pride to his many solid achievements.

Chet is not only a good representative of his constituency in the State; he is cast in the larger mold of national statesmanship. You have before you a print in two parts, which highlights Chet's legislative career and enduring accomplishments in the Congress of the United States.

The first part was placed in the Congress-sional Record by the Honorable Carl Albert, the Speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives, on March 7, 1972.

The second part, which I placed in the Congressional Record on November 26, 1974, brings this account up-to-date—unless, of course, Chet manages to get some more bills passed between now and the end of the year, when the Congress adjourns.

Let me say at this point that I am representing the Democratic leadership here tonight. The Democratic leadership in the House of Representatives consists of the Speaker, Carl Albert, and the Majority Leader, Thomas P. (Tip) O'Neill, Jr., and myself.

I have the position of Democratic (Majority) Whip, and you can tell by the title that my job is to whip our members into line and make sure that they are on the House floor to cast their votes and to vote the Democratic position as much as possible.

The Congress, as you know, is based on the two party system, but we try not to be partisan in the narrow, selfish sense. Certainly Chet Holifield is highly regarded by the Republicans as well as the Democrats.

Members of both parties know that Chet is fair. He is considerate; he is well-balanced; he is responsible—and he does his homework.

One of Chet's important responsibilities in the Congress is to preside as Chairman of the great Committee on Government Operations. This is the committee that really works for the taxpayers. Its watchwords are economy and efficiency. It conducts many investigations and legislates in a broad field.

Chet has been a member of the Committee on Government Operations since 1946, serving, in recent years, as Chairman. He has been responsible for legislation which created major building blocks in our Government—laws to unify the armed forces, to give central direction to Federal procurement and constellations of agencies into such great departments of Government as HUD and DOT. HUD stands for Housing and Urban Development; DOT for Department of Transportation.

No one in the Congress of the United States knows more about atomic energy than Chet Holifield. He is a charter member of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, established in 1946, and has served as alternating Chairman and Vice Chairman of the Joint Committee for many years. I should explain that because this is a joint committee of the House and Senate, the chairmanship rotates between the two branches of the Congress.

Our children and their children will be grateful that men like Chet Holifield pressed forward in the early days, against great odds, to lay down a policy of nuclear power for the national strength and the national well-being.

Atomic energy was born in anger—as a weapon of war—the most devastating, destructive device known to mankind. The atomic bombs which laid waste the Japanese cities of Hiroshima and Nagasaki were small and primitive compared to what we have now. There is no greater task of statesmanship in the world than to insure that nuclear bomb are never used again, against anyone, anywhere.

For almost three decades now, the world has been safe from the horrors of nuclear war, and Chet Holifield has participated in those demanding tasks of statesmanship.

The first great task in the aftermath of World War II was to get atomic energy under civilian control. This was accomplished in 1946, when the Atomic Energy Commission was created; with a Joint Committee in the Congress to keep constant watch of atomic energy developments.

As I said, Chet was a charter member of that committee. It was from that observation post and that platform that Chet Holifield, and others like-minded, helped to discipline the military atom and shape the course of nuclear energy development.

The second great task, in that context, was to put the atom to work in kindness rather than in anger—to harness nuclear energy for peaceful and beneficial purposes.

Today, there are more than 1500 peacetime applications of nuclear energy in medicine, agriculture, industry and general scientific research.

After watching over atomic energy development for more years than some of you in this audience have lived, Chet Holifield decided that the whole operation ought to be reorganized.

The oil embargo in the Middle East last year served as a grim reminder that this nation is heavily dependent on unstable foreign sources of oil supplies, and that we had better pay more careful heed to future requirements if this nation is to grow and prosper.

It was Chet's idea that the great national laboratories and industrial facilities of the Atomic Energy Commission should be put to work to develop all promising forms and sources of energy.

And so he drew up a legislative plan which transformed the Atomic Energy Commission into two separate organizations: One, called the Energy Research and Development Administration, would work at developing energy resources on a broad front to meet future national needs and to minimize our dependence on foreign oil sources.

The other, called the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, would concentrate on regulatory matters, which includes the licensing of nuclear power plants. Nuclear energy can make a large contribution to the fulfillment of national energy needs. At the same time, we must be sure that rigorous safety standards are maintained in the design, construction, and operation of nuclear plants—for the protection of the people who work in these plants, and for the public at large.

These new organizations now have been established by law and are preparing to go to work—thanks to Chet Holifield's initiative and foresight.

In dealing with vast, impersonal organizations of Government, Chet Holifield has never forgotten that the ends of Government are to serve people—people is what this Government is all about.

And, therefore, Chet has always been concerned about individual rights and about the less-privileged in our society. His legislative efforts through the years have been pointed toward broadening opportunities for education, jobs, housing, medical care, consumer protection, and the dignity and privacy of the individual.

No successful man in Congress works alone, and Chet has had the help of a very able staff and, above all, the irreplaceable support of a wonderful wife and family.

The Holifields are family people in the good old-fashioned sense. They love each other. They help each other. And Cam Holifield has been an important part of Chet's congressional career.

You know, Chet has had a most unusual life. He was born in Kentucky after the turn of the century—on December 3, 1903, to be exact. Five days ago he had his 71st birthday.

From Kentucky, Chet moved with his family to Arkansas, and then he left the Ozark hills of that State when he was 15½ years old. Settling in Montebello about 1920, he met a very pretty dark-haired, vivacious young lady of the Canear family—Vernice Canear. They were married before Chet was 19.

Let me hasten to assure you that Vernice and Cam are one and the same. She has been called Cam these many years.

By the time he was 24, Chet had his own business, and he still has it. It returns him a modest profit each year. His devoted employees continue to manage Chet Holifield's Store for Men long after he put aside business concerns to serve in the Congress.

In reviewing the experiences of one's life, it is curious to reflect on those incidents or unplanned events which can influence a person's whole career for better or worse. In Chet's case, it was a hunting accident which brought him into politics.

It happened in Catalina Island, early in 1931. Chet was shot in the leg and laid up for three years during the worst years of the depression, from March 1931 to March 1934.

Cam helped to run the store, while managing the home and taking care of the children. Chet, in the meantime, started to do some serious reading—there was not much else he could do. He read deeply in economics and the workings of Government, and became interested in national policies and problems.

Finally, Chet got back on his feet. He and his family worked hard, and often "went without," during the depression, as many of you here well known from shared experiences in that greatest economic disaster of the 20th Century.

Well, during those years, and especially when he was bedridden, Chet had a lot of time to think about things and develop new interests, which drew him into the political arena.

And, thus, it came about that a painful and costly personal accident had a beneficial result, not only for Chet but for the United States of America.

Some months ago, the members and staff of the Committee on Government Operations in the House of Representatives decided that they wanted to do something special for Chet Holifield, both in appreciation for his great service and in commemoration of his retirement.

They arranged to have his portrait painted and hung in the committee hearing room. If you have occasion to visit the Rayburn House Office Building, Room 2154, you will see that very fine portrait.

When the portrait was painted, the committee passed a resolution and transmitted a copy of the resolution to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The committee said, in its resolution, that the portrait would "be hung on the wall of the main hearing room of the committee, both as a tribute to, and a reminder of, Chet Holifield's lifetime of dedicated service to his committee, his Congress, and his country."

That resolution had some more words to say, and I would like to close my remarks by reading a few of them.

The resolution had several "whereas" clauses, saying that Chet was to retire from the House of Representatives at the end of the 93rd Congress, after 32 years of continuous service.

It said that he will have completed 28 years of distinguished service on the committee, serving four years as chairman.

It said that as chairman of the committee, he presided and administered "with intelligence, skill and fairness."

Then the resolution said that Chet Holifield's "greatness combines many things," and here I will quote the exact words of the resolution:

A man of high purpose, integrity, and unstinting devotion to duty.

A gentleman of dignity, courtesy, and candor.

A pioneer with the vision to see great governmental goals and the knowledge and resolve to attain them.

A courageous fighter for his party and his principles,

A statesman who understands the uses and limitations of politics and power, and

An exemplar of legislative achievement through leadership and accommodation.

A man who loves his country and its people. No member of Congress, so far as I know, has ever received a more eloquent tribute than that. It is a tribute fully deserved and, as I said in the conclusion of the statement about Chet that I placed in the Congressional Record, "Thanks, Chet, for a job well done."

Let the people in this district and elsewhere take inspiration from the record of Chet Holifield's career. Let their young people have renewed confidence in the purposes of Government, and let more of them train and prepare themselves for public service.

Mrs. MINK. Mr. Speaker, it is my great pleasure to join with my colleagues in honoring CHET HOLIFIELD today as he prepares to leave the House after a distinguished record of 32 years of service in this Chamber.

In those 32 years CHET HOLIFIELD has consistently distinguished himself as a skilled legislator and an outstanding leader. The legislation resulting from his chairmanships of the Joint Atomic Energy and Government Operations Committees has always reflected the care and dedication with which he worked.

As legislator and participant in national and international conferences, CHET HOLIFIELD has been a guiding force in the development and productive use of atomic energy. While I could never accurately recount all of his remarkable contributions, I believe the Nation owes a special debt to CHET HOLIFIELD for his work in atomic energy. His career has spanned a precarious, difficult time in the development of atomic energy policy. His contributions have played a major role in insuring that atomic energy would be a constructive, creative source of energy.

CHET HOLIFIELD leaves the House and takes with him a wealth of personal knowledge and expertise. But he has left behind a legislative legacy that will influence this body and the course of the Nation for years to come.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, the retirement of Congressman CHET HOLIFIELD is something no one here welcomes. He has been an outstanding legislator and committee chairman. He is a Congressman's Congressman; and by that I mean that all of us go to him for advice on the many areas of great expertise that he has developed. He is a friend whom we will greatly miss not only for his great knowledge and ability but also for the warm and kindly friendship which he manifests at all times. Truly we will miss not only him but also his lovely and able wife, Vernice.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, as a colleague, close friend, and long-time admirer of Hon. CHET HOLIFIELD of the California 19th District, I would like to express, on the eve of his retirement, my admiration for his years of service to his country and the people of his district.

Throughout his tenure in this Chamber—indeed, throughout his entire political career—CHET HOLIFIELD has done the job as it ought to be done, and for so doing is respected by everyone famillar with the facts of his accomplishments.

December 20, 1974

As a senior Member of the House, he served throughout the 1960's as chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, before assuming the position he holds today as chairman of the Government Operations Committee. In his current capacity he monitors Federal expenditures with the object of insuring their compliance with congressional intent; and no one, to my knowledge, could handle that supreme authority with greater skill nor greater certainty than he.

In his former position with the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, CHET HOLIFIELD was required to deal with awesome national security problems, which he did with great skill and expertise. Also concerned for the public health, as well as for the national security, he was responsible in 1957 for investigations into the hazardous effects of radiation on human life, with the object of imposing stronger safety standards in the production of nuclear devices.

He has been in the forefront on every piece of legislation affecting the well-being of every American for the past 30 years. He has been a devoted and dedicated public servant contributing his talents in drafting some of the finest legislation ever enacted in the area of consumer protection.

The record of CHET HOLIFIELD is one of outstanding performance and outstanding recognition. On all problems of importance he has responded with the alacrity of a man who is the willing servant of public duty, and always with that same resourcefulness which never seems to fail him.

He has served his district and his country with equal intensity and devotion, and his record is one of hard work and deep concern.

Mrs. Annunzio joins me in extending our sincerest best wishes to CHET and to his lovely wife, and we wish for them continued good health and many, many more fruitful years during their retirement. I am sorry to see him leave and he will be missed in his House—the House of Representatives.

Mr. VEYSEY. Mr. Speaker, before I came to the Congress in 1970, I had learned to know and respect CHET HOLIFIELD as one of California's most capable Congressmen. During my tenure in the State assembly, we found numerous occasions to seek his assistance, and he graciously and willingly responded to our requests.

Now after 32 years CHET HOLIFIELD has decided to step aside. During his tenure in the House of Representatives, many Federal programs have been shaped by his extensive activities to improve Government and make it more responsive to the people. As chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy he has played an active role in developing energy legislation. His position on Government procurement is well documented. He served as chairman of a blue ribbon panel in 1969 seeking ways to improve Federal procurement procedures. His efforts to eliminate waste and duplication are seemingly endless.

As chairman of the Committee on Government Operations, he has fought a continuing war against the evergrowing burden of paperwork in Federal agencies. In fact, he sponsored a bill to require an authoritative study to identify means to reduce the volume of paperwork. The House has already enacted the measure, and it has been referred to a Senate committee.

He was one of the first to champion environmental legislation, and during his entire career, he has supported more than 200 environmental and conservation laws. As dean of the California delegation he was in a unique position to guide significant legislation through guidance, the laws to combat California's air and water pollution problems likely would not have been approved by the Congress during the late 1960's.

The outstanding characteristics of Congressman HOLIFIELD's career are hard work, dedication, integrity, and leadership. His absence will leave a void in the ranks of the California delegation as well as in the House. His unflagging interest and dedication to public service will be sorely missed in the coming years. We commend him for an outstanding job, and we trust that he will enjoy the same degree of success in retirement as he pursues personal goals. In addition, our best wishes go to Cam, the lovable and dedicated wife of CHET HOLIFIELD. She has served so capably as the "first lady" of the California delegation, and we all love and respect her.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, for the past 22 years I have had the very great and distinct pleasure of serving on the Government Operations Committee with our distinguished chairman, CHET HOLIFIELD. Although many Members of Congress have served long and outstanding careers, few have risen to such a high position of respect and esteem among fellow Members as CHET HOLIFIELD.

Chairman HOLIFIELD's congressional career spans one of the most exciting periods in our history—in which our Nation moved into the atomic age. Without question, CHET HOLIFIELD will be remembered as the Congressman who did more for the peaceful use of nuclear energy than any of his contemporaries.

As a member of the Government Operations Committee since its creation in 1949, Chairman HOLIFIELD has had a profound impact on the structure of our National Government. The establishment of three of our major Departments of Government—HEW, HUD, and DOT—reflect his creative leadership. His work as chairman of the Government Operations Committee has greatly enriched our national history and will continue to be felt throughout the Federal Government for years to come.

In his 32 years of service in the U.S. House of Representatives, CHET HOLIFIELD has set a high standard of achievement and excellence for our country. He has worked hard at building a moral environment in which man's full potential can be realized in dignity and honor. He is recognized throughout our Nation for his compassion and understanding. His public and private acts always reflect good government, good citizenship and human brotherhood.

I can understand why, after 32 years, he now chooses to take a little time for himself and his family. He has earned it. So has his lovely wife, Cam, who has been so helpful to him throughout his distinguished career.

When CHET HOLIFIELD retires at the end of this session, I will greatly miss his presence in the Congress and on the Government Operations Committee. He is a great American and I deeply value his warm friendship, his wise counsel, and his intense dedication to better government.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, a giant of the Congress, indeed the Nation, has decided to leave public service and enter a well-deserved retirement.

Congressman CHET HOLIFIELD, the chairman of the Government Operations Committee, the chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, and the dean of the California delegation, is stepping down after 32 years of dedicated and devoted service to this Nation. And over those years, the list of achievements is virtually endless—but at the top of the list, one would have to place his efforts toward the peaceful use of nuclear energy, and his leadership in modernizing the Government.

Not only has CHET HOLIFIELD been a national leader, he has been an international leader, recognized around the world as an expert on nuclear energy. Since 1955, he has served on the U.S. Delegation to the International Conference on the Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy. At international conferences held from 1957 through 1970, he has been instrumental in efforts to use nuclear power in a safe, efficient method for the good of mankind.

In the Congress, his leadership on the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy has led to many advances in the field of energy derived from atomic power. And these advances could effectively serve the energy needs of future generations.

In addition, as the chairman of the Government Operations Committee, CHET has worked for an efficient, responsive Government that meets the needs of the people it serves. As a businessman, engaged in the manufacture and selling of men's apparel, CHET has used these commonsense business techniques to bring economy to the Government.

Mr. Speaker, this Congress will not be the same without CHET HOLIFIELD, and the kind of caliber he brought to the Nation will be missed.

Mrs. Anderson joins me in wishing CHET and his lovely wife Cam the very best in their retirement, and we hope that they will continue to be active in the community, sharing their years of experience with a grateful Nation.

Mr. CEDERBERG. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to imagine a session of Congress without our friend and colleague, CHET HOLIFIELD. In this political arena where new faces and names are a way of life every 2 years, CHET HOLIFIELD's familiar face had become a welcomed and accepted fixture.

The examples of his distinguished service are so numerous that it is impossible to do justice to his outstanding 32-year congressional career. He has made enormous contributions in the areas of atomic energy, Government organization, and Government procurement and his achievements will remain as a living legend to the fruits of his labors. His tireless attention to detail and his insuperable dedication to public service has sparked the conscience of his peers, both friend and foe, to follow in his footsteps.

December 20, 1974

CHET HOLIFIELD filled an indispensable role in the House and he leaves giant's shoes to be filled. It is indeed a tribute to this man that his colleagues from both sides of the aisle of every ideological stripe and geographical region should acclaim him with their most laudatory respects.

Mr. Speaker, I think that all will agree with me that CHET HOLIFIELD will be sorely missed. He takes with him over three decades of legislative experience—experience that can be acquired in no other way than the day-to-day routine of legislative exposure.

In these days of shifting moralistic values and subjective judgments of right and wrong, CHET HOLIFIELD stands as a shining example of those ideals considered by our founding fathers to be the bastions of our Government. His exemplary conduct both in private and public life are a credit to himself and to this Congress.

Mrs. Cederberg and I both wish CHET and his lovely wife, Cam, many years of good health and happiness and hope that they will enjoy their well-deserved retirement.

Mr. BURGNER. Mr. Speaker, the end of this Congress marks the end of a distinguished career as a Representative for the dean of the California State congressional delegation, CHET HOLIFIELD.

After more than 30 years of good and faithful service in this body, CHET has made the decision to retire. He will be sorely missed.

CHET has contributed greatly to the legislative process on behalf of his constituents, his fellow Californians and all Americans. His willingness to moderate partisan considerations in bringing the California delegation together on crucial issues has left a legacy of accomplishment unique among today's membership.

As a recognized expert on atomic energy as well as a superlative parliamentarian, CHET has again and again been the catalyst around which real legislative success has been built.

We will miss CHET in the months and years ahead and the people he served so well will miss his continued contributions. But we have all been especially privileged to have his skill, his intelligence, and his statesmanship for the more than three decades he has served a Member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. WAGGONER. Mr. Speaker, I take great pride in joining with my colleagues in paying tribute today to one of the House's most dedicated Members and my good friend, CHET HOLIFIELD.

I have known and respected the gentleman from California for 13 of his 32 years of service to our great constitutional Republic. He has been an outstanding patriot, and never has the district he so ably represents had more devoted service. CHET epitomizes the prestigious statesman who has placed love of country above all else.

That the voters of the State have seen fit to elect him to 16 consecutive terms is testament to his untiring energy and devotion to what is best for America and the values we hold so dearly. His skill in all facets of legislative process will be sorely missed by fellow Members, and the respect he has earned through the years, built on a solid foundation of constituent service, will be a tough act to follow.

I want to give my personal best wishes to CHET HOLIFIELD for the future. His example will long be remembered. His retirement is a loss not only to me, but to the entire Nation. My regards, CHET, and may our friendship be a part of the long list of fond memories and wonderful relationships which will be your legacy in this body.

Mr. NIX. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to a great man, CHET HOLIFIELD of California, who has decided to retire after 32 years of service in this House. He has earned his retirement, and I wish him well as he leaves us. Yet, all of us, I am sure, regret that he will no longer serve with us. For CHET HOLIFIELD is truly a pillar of the House, and he will be sorely missed.

It would be nearly impossible to list all the achievements that he will leave behind him. His legacy to us is large. As chairman of the Committee on Government Operations, he has worked diligently to reorganize, reform, and improve the workings of the Federal Government. He has brought into being important new agencies, such as the Departments of Transportation and of Housing and Urban Development and the General Services Administration. He has sought to simplify paperwork requirements and to improve procurement procedures.

Since his days on the Hoover Commission he has striven to make Government more efficient and more accountable. He has sponsored the Cabinet Committee on Opportunities for the Spanish Speaking People. He worked to improve the Freedom of Information Act to make the workings of Government more open. He has labored to preserve and defend the right of privacy of individuals. In short, he has never forgotten that Government must be the servant of the people, not the master.

We shall never forget CHET HOLIFIELD's contributions in the field of nuclear energy. As an original member of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, he has helped to tame the enormous power of the atom, to make it the servant of mankind. Recently he has sponsored the reorganization of Federal agencies in the energy field, to step up our efforts to find new sources of energy.

He has been in the forefront of the effort to protect the consumer and to protect the environment. He has represented the Congress of the United States in many international conferences on disarmament, the peaceful uses of atomic energy, and water desalinization.

Mr. Speaker, I will not go into any greater detail in attempting to describe the vast legislative accomplishments of CHET HOLIFIELD. I am sure that other Members here are better qualified for that difficult task. Let me say simply that I have known no other Member of the House who has contributed more to our country or who has been held in higher esteem than CHET.

His colleagues have honored his character and integrity with a seat on the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct. The American Political Science Association has awarded him with their Congressional Distinguished Service Award. As dean of the California Congressional Delegation, he has been an exemplary servant of his State and of his constituents.

Although CHET HOLIFIELD will not be here with us in the next Congress, he has left behind him a legacy that will stand the test of time. His legislative achievements are a record that may never be matched. Throughout his career, he has reflected great credit on the House and has enriched its history permanently. I shall miss CHET HOLIFIELD as a colleague and as a friend. I wish him the best of luck in his retirement.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, there are always mixed feelings at the end of any Congress: Satisfaction and disappointment at the record of the last 2 years, anticipation of the next 2, and above all, deep feelings of loss as old friends and colleagues decide to step down. Few have earned their retirement as much as the gentleman from California (Mr. HOLIFIELD). Few will be as sorely missed.

Congressman HOLIFIELD's legislative accomplishments are legion. Frankly I do not have the patience to recount all the landmark bills he has steered through the House. CHET's range of interest and expertise is truly extraordinary. He is a real master in the areas of Government organization, atomic power and Government procurement. His experience and knowledge in these fields are irreplaceable.

The people of the 19th Congressional District in California have never had another Representative. They have been well served and they have shown their appreciation with their votes. Time and again he has been honored with large majorities.

It will be strange indeed to be part of a Congress without CHET HOLIFIELD. There are very few of us who have had that experience. Still, we will all be for better able to cope with the future because of the many things he has done for the House and for the Nation. My very best wishes go to CHET and his wife Cam as they look forward to a retirement which I am sure will be as interesting and rewarding as his long period of public service.

Mr. CORMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am privileged today to pay tribute to my good friend and dean of my delegation, the Honorable CHET HOLIFIELD. But, I am obligated to add a note of deep, personal regret because of his retirement from the House with the adjournment of the 93d Congress. I shall miss him very much.

CHET is completing 32 years of an outstanding congressional career. He has served with superb distinction as chairman of the House Committee on Government Operations in the 92d and 93d Congresses. As a member of the House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, CHET served with the sensitivity and impartiality that this very important committee assignment demanded.

December 20, 1974

Many years ago—back in 1959—when a handful of House Democrats, recognizing the need for a show of organized strength in support of liberal legislation, formed the Democratic Study Group, it was predictable that CHET HOLIFIELD would be among the founders of this effective group. His chairmanship of DSG in its formative years and his continued influence as a member have been an important force in DSG's growth, both in membership and in effort.

There are many other ways one can pay tribute to CHET HOLIFIELD, but I believe the most important is to speak of his service on the Joint Committee of Atomic Energy of the Congress. The responsibilities of the Joint Committee are great. The very nature of the legislation it produces has a tremendous impact not only on our own citizenry, but on the whole world's population and upon generations yet unborn. One cannot speak of the importance of civilian control of atomic energy nor of the abiding need to find peaceful purposes of atomic energy without recognizing CHET HOLIFIELD as a pioneer in this field.

Appointed to the Joint Committee when it was organized on August 2, 1946, serving through the years as chairman, vice chairman, subcommittee chairman, CHET has always been a vital force in all its operations, particularly in its "watchdog" function with regard to problems relating to the development, use, and control of atomic energy. A strong advocate of the principle that atomic energy should be retained under civilian control, he made this one of his major responsibilities. His commitment to the protection of the public interest against the private interest in the growth and development of the industry in the United States became his signature. One needs only to look at the vast list worldwide commissions, committees, delegations, symposiums and conferences in which he has been involved over the years to know that he has served this country well in immeasurable ways.

While the accomplishments in the continuing search for more peaceful uses of atomic energy cannot be laid to one man or to one woman, nor to one committee nor to one governmental department, we in the House of Representatives can—and I am sure we do—take great pride in knowing that CHET HOLIFIELD played a very important role in this undertaking. Since 1946, the House has been content with the knowledge of his extraordinary service on the Joint Committee. Those who follow him will gain a great deal from the standard of performance he now leaves behind him.

Mr. Speaker, it has been a rare privilege and honor to have served here with this distinguished Californian. I wish for him and his lovely wife, Cam, who has been so devotedly at this side in all his endeavors, the best of everything yet to come—years of happiness, contentment and good health.

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise to add my voice to the many others praising our outstanding colleague, the dean of the California delegation, Mr. CHET HOLIFIELD.

From the very beginning, Mr. HOLIFIELD's career is a subject for admiration. Even before running for office himself in 1942, he was instrumental in electing Jerry Voorhis to Congress in 1936, serving as Mr. Voorhis' campaign manager. Mr. Voorhis is known for his own outstanding career and his correct judgments on so many subjects. When the 19th District was carved out of Jerry Voorhis' district, it was at Mr. Voorhis' wise suggestion that Congressman HOLIFIELD first ran for office. He has been returned to Congress every time since by the voters of his district.

Congressman HOLIFIELD has distinguished himself in so many respects that it would take more time than I am allowed in which to cite them all. Touching on only a few of the highlights, I must not fail to mention his role in fighting Government waste, his responsibility for developing atomic energy under civilian control, and his support for measures important to consumers.

As a watchdog for the public in guarding against waste, for several years Mr. HOLIFIELD led the Subcommittee on Military Operations in investigations of waste and inefficiency in the Department of Defense. As a result of these investigations, he introduced legislation to establish a blue ribbon commission to study all Federal procurement practices and procedures. Upon the bill's passage, he was appointed by the Speaker as one of the two House Members to serve on the commission. In addition, because of his continuing concern about this problem, he authored the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act, otherwise known as the Holifield act, which established the General Services Administration.

Our very Government structure can lend itself to efficiency or inefficiency. Because of Congressman HOLIFIELD's reputation for reform in this area, he was appointed by the President to membership on the Second Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, one of the famous Hoover Commissions. In his role in Congress, he also served as chairman of the Subcommittee on Executive and Legislative Reorganization in which capacity he passed on 45 Presidential Reorganization Plans, 35 of which were approved by Congress. In addition, he was instrumental in passage of the legislation to create the two Cabinet-level Departments of Transportation and of Housing and Urban Development.

Only because of his keen eye for the implications of seemingly routine legislation was the Nation spared from a dangerous increase in power by the military. In 1945, Mr. HOLIFIELD spotted a bill in the Military Affairs Committee which would have given control of atomic energy to the Pentagon. He and Representatives Voorhis, Helen Gahagan Douglas, George E. Outland, and Andrew

J. Biemiller publicly appealed to all the Nation's scientists to come to the Capitol and present their case for civilian control of atomic energy. This they did by the hundreds and it was the start of a successful legislative effort to insure responsible control for this awesome power. In recognition for his responsibility for this, Congressman HOLIFIELD was appointed by Speaker Sam Rayburn to membership on the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy in 1946. Since then, Mr. HOLIFIELD has become identified as the Member of Congress most responsible for the shaping of our program of peaceful use of the atom.

The third point which I particularly believe should be made is Congressman HOLIFIELD's concern for the consumer. In 1943, he was fighting for grade labeling of food. Since then, he has voted and worked for some 90 consumer protection laws dealing with product safety, truth in packaging, truth in lending, low interest rates, housing, and many other matters. Most recently, Mr. HOLIFIELD was instrumental in passage of the Consumer Protection Act.

On this occasion I wish to say that all the Members of the House of Representatives wish our distinguished colleague a rewarding retirement with his family and friends. After so many years of honorable service to his district and the Nation, he deserves an opportunity to relax and enjoy it.

Mr. FOUNTAIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to pay tribute to one of the most remarkable men to serve in the Congress.

When I began my congressional service in 1953, CHET HOLIFIELD had already distinguished himself through 10 years of able and effective service in the House. During the succeeding 22 years, it has been my privilege to work with CHET HOLIFIELD on an almost daily basis, first as fellow members of the Committee on Government Operations and later under his leadership as chairman of that committee.

I know CHET HOLIFIELD well and admire him greatly. CHET HOLIFIELD—through demonstrated ability, hard work and sincere dedication to public service—has become an outstanding leader in not just one but in several vitally important fields. He has lived the true meaning of those words "public office is a public trust."

As a member and chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, CHET HOLIFIELD is universally recognized as one of the world's leading authorities on the peacetime use of atomic energy.

Through his work on the Hoover Commission and as chairman of the Committee on Government Operations and its Reorganization Subcommittee, CHET HOLIFIELD has had more impact on the restructuring of government activities during the last generation than any other Member of Congress.

Through his committee work and his service as vice-chairman of the Commission on Government Procurement, CHET HOLIFIELD has made a major contribution to improving the procedures under which the Federal Government spends billions of dollars annually for goods and services.

December 20, 1974

No ordinary man could have done this—and CHET HOLIFIELD is no ordinary man.

Although he has never had legal training, CHET HOLIFIELD's quick grasp of complicated subjects and his penetrating questions at committee hearings would do credit to a highly skilled trial lawyer.

The country has been fortunate to have the dedicated service of CHET HOLIFIELD as a Member of Congress for the past 32 years. We are losing CHET as a Member of Congress, but I am confident that the Nation will continue to have the benefit of his wise counsel in other capacities for many years to come.

I am also proud to join with many in expressing my very best wishes to both CHET and his able helpmeet, Cam, and the sincere hope that they will enjoy together during the remainder of their lives an abundance of the blessings of life wherever they are and in whatever they may undertake.

Mr. FUGUA. Mr. Speaker, CHET HOLIFIELD is a man I admired and respected as a colleague even before I really got to know him.

I served in the House for 8 years before being named to the Government Operations Committee 4 years ago, as a second committee. That was when I found that the respect and regard I held for Congressman HOLIFIELD was well founded.

I was named to his Subcommittee on Legislative and Military Operations and have admired the fairness with which he has conducted our deliberations. It is easy to say that about a man with whom you agree all the time, but he and I have had very honest and sincere differences about certain provisions of major legislation.

That is the real measure of the man. He never tried to take advantage of his position. Rather, he bent over backwards to see that my rights were protected.

One of our colleagues aptly described CHET the other day when he said he was a tireless worker in a coalition, and an honorable and avid foe in disagreement. Those sentiments are expressed with respect and regard on both sides of the aisle here today.

He will be leaving us after 32 years of distinguished service. He has served with seven of the Presidents of the United States, five of whom came from the Congress. He has known the great and the near great. No man in the history of the Nation has had more to do with streamlining and reorganizing Federal agencies than has this distinguished Californian. I feel I will be losing a warm friend when he leaves our midst.

Yet, I know that he and his lovely wife, Cam, are richly deserving of some years out of the hustle and bustle of congressional life to spend with their family and friends.

He leaves us with a record in which the Holifields can take pride. He leaves many warm friends and I am proud to consider myself in that number. He leaves a distinguished record of service to his State and Nation which those coming behind would do well to emulate.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Speaker, CHET HOLIFIELD, who came to Congress when I did 32 years ago, has been one of the most valuable Members of this body. He is very knowledgeable, and he has made valuable contributions to important legislation on many occasions. A man of stature and influence, his retirement will leave a mark on many important enactments during these years.

I join with my colleagues in wishing CHET and his family good health, happiness and prosperity after he leaves the House of Representatives.

Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I take this opportunity to praise and say farewell to our most distinguished colleague, CHET HOLIFIELD.

Chairman HOLIFIELD's 32 year career in this House has been marked by dedicated and outstanding service to our country.

In the short time that I have been a Member of this great body, I have been fortunate enough to work with this fine gentleman who is chairman of the Government Operations Committee to which I am assigned. As a member of that committee, I have been able to observe his work at close hand; and am proud of the record of important legislation that has emanated from this committee during his tenure as chairman. This record graphically illustrates his legislative and leadership abilities.

There is no doubt that we will all miss Chairman HOLIFIELD.

I wish him and Mrs. Holifield happiness and the best of health.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished dean of our California delegation, Congressman CHET HOLIFIELD, has made a decision not to run for reelection to the Congress. It is a decision that saddens all of us who have long admired CHET and his dedicated service as a leader of Congress. I know that we will all miss him and his lovely wife, Cam.

I would like to include for the RECORD part of an article from the Los Angeles Times, written by reporter Paul Huston:

[From the Los Angeles Times]

HOLIFIELD'S 32-YEAR FLASHBACK ON HIS CONGRESS-CAREER
(By Paul Huston)

WASHINGTON.—Several decades before he became a congressional kingpin on atomic energy and other weighty matters, Chet Holifield dropped out of high school in Springdale, Ark., and drifted West on an upraised thumb.

He eventually landed in California. "I'd read of the romance of the forty-niners," he said later, "and California was a kind of golden legend to young people in the Middle West. So I went there."

Holifield married at 19, started a cleaning business in Montebello and a men's clothing store in Norwalk, got interested in Democratic reform politics and won election to the House of Representatives, in 1942.

He was reelected 15 times. By the time he retires at the end of this year—he officially announced his retirement Tuesday—he will have served longer in Congress than any other Californian—32 years.

As he reminisced in his memento filed office last week, Holifield was asked how he was able to become one of the country's leading experts on a complex technical subject like atomic energy without obtaining even a high school diploma.

"I tried to make up for my lack of knowledge in this field, as in many other fields, with hundreds of hours of intensive study," he said, tilting forward in his swivel chair. "When I first came to Congress, I had done a lot of hunting, fishing and golfing. I gave that up because I did not have the time for it. I've never played a round of golf in Washington."

Holifield, a Santa Claus-like figure with white hair, white bushy eyebrows, white mustache and a considerable midsection, looks back with enormous pride on a career as chairman of the Joint Atomic Energy Committee, chairman of the House Government Operations Committee and dean of the California congressional delegation.

He has been centrally involved in some of the country's most monumental achievements, including creation of the Atomic Energy Commission and development of nuclear power plants, the hydrogen bomb and nuclear-propelled warships.

He has been instrumental in setting up some of Washington's best-known bureaucracies: the departments of Defense, Transportation, and Housing and Urban Development, the Central Intelligence Agency, the Environmental Protection Agency and the General Services Administration.

He and his wife, Cam, say they look forward more than anything else to being close to their four daughters, 15 grandchildren and two great-granddaughters.

"I plan to do a great deal of reading and studying and hope to be able to write a book recounting some of the important accomplishments I believe I have made," Holifield said.

In the interview, Holifield flipped through a well-worn House committee report of 1945—"the only copy I know of." He showed where he and Rep. Melvin Price (D-Ill.) began a lonely, uphill struggle to have the post-Hiroshima atomic energy program placed under civilian, not military, control.

Holifield organized a 1946 conference on the subject and "we rallied universities and scientists throughout the country to fight for civilian control." Eventually, Congress set up the Atomic Energy Commission.

Holifield considers the development of nuclear-powered electrical generating plants "probably the most important and long-lasting event in which I have had a leading part in bringing to reality."

His pet project is the still-experimental nuclear fast breeder reactor, which in using uranium breeds another fuel, plutonium—"sort of like perpetual motion," Holifield said.

"We've lost about three years as a result of the government not plunging in and taking over the whole expense of the thing," Holifield fumed. "We've spent over $50 billion to put a man on the moon, and I was only asking for $3 billion over the next 15 years to give us a reactor that will furnish mankind an inexhaustible supply of energy for the decades to come."

Holifield is credited with contributing to development of two mighty deterrents against Soviet attack—the hydrogen bomb and the nuclear-powered submarine.

After the Russians exploded an atomic bomb in 1949, Holifield was appointed chairman of a special congressional committee to study the feasibility of building a U.S. H-bomb.

"We visited all the labs and were briefed by the top scientists," Holifield recalled.

He and Sen. Brien McMahon (D-Conn.), then chairman of the Joint Atomic Energy Committee, gave President Harry S. Truman a 5,000-word report and spent 45 minutes urging him to approve H-bomb development.

"Our information wasn't too complete, but I just had a gut feeling that the Soviets were working on this themselves," Holifield said.

A month later, Mr. Truman gave the green light: within 18 months the United States exploded a hydrogen device. Nine months after that, the Russians exploded their hydrogen weapon.

December 20, 1974

"So we beat the Soviets by nine months to the most powerful weapon in the world," Holifield related. "I've often asked myself, What if they had done it first? With their openly stated desire to conquer the world, would they have then called on the rest of us to surrender?"

Holifield takes pride that Adm. Hyman G. Rickover once hailed him as the "congressional father" of the nuclear Navy.

In the early 50s, Rickover sailed around his superiors' opposition to proposals for nuclear-powered submarines and went to the Joint Atomic Energy Committee for support.

Holifield, Price, Sen. Henry M. Jackson (D-Wash.) and others on the committee got behind Rickover and funded reactors for the first two nuclear subs, the Nautilus and the Sea Wolf. The Navy now has more than 100 nuclear submarines and a number of nuclear surface ships.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join in recognizing the accomplishments of the dean of the California delegation, Congressman CHET HOLIFIELD.

I thank my good friends, the gentlemen from California and New York, (Mr. Moss and Mr. Horton), for arranging for this time.

There are so many things that can be said in admiration on behalf of the gentleman, that I am going to direct my remarks to only two areas. That of atomic energy and Government procurement.

When the gavel closes the 93d Congress in the latter part of this week, we will lose one of our foremost experts on nuclear energy. Indeed, CHET HOLIFIELD is noted throughout the world for his knowledge in this area. He has served as an active member of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy since its establishment in 1946. An example of the gentleman's fairmindedness was brought home to me just this summer. When he brought the Price-Anderson Nuclear Indemnity Act extension bill to the floor, I was successful in tacking on an amendment concerning the Rasmussen study that would have delayed the effective date by at least a year.

My distinguished colleague opposed this amendment. But once it had passed, he adopted the will of the House as his own, saw this amendment through the conference committee and insured that it was part of the final bill passed by the Congress. Ironically, this particular provision was the sole reason President Ford subsequently vetoed the bill. I make this point not to pour salt in an old wound, but to underscore the essential humane, trustworthy quality of this very distinguished colleague.

As the ranking minority member of the Select Committee on Small Business, I am aware of the paperwork burden faced by small businessmen who deal with the Federal Government. I am grateful for all the gentleman's efforts, in his capacity as vice chairman of the Commission on Government Procurement, to reduce the amount of paperwork and simplify procedures in small purchases by the Federal Government. I also want to mention his efforts to see that small businessmen get their fair share of Government business.

I am pleased, at this time, to salute CHET for these and all of his efforts during his outstanding career and to wish CHET and his delightful wife, Cam, all the best that the coming days can bring.

Mr. CASEY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the retirement of CHET HOLIFIELD will bring to an end one of the most distinguished careers in the history of the House of Representatives.

His foresight into the problems of government and his adherence to the rights of Americans are monumental in themselves.

CHET HOLIFIELD has never been afraid to lead and he has been a most worthy leader, as the development of our peaceful uses of atomic energy will prove for years to come. At the same time, he has never been afraid to stand alone on an issue when he knew he was right, even though his personal stand may not have been either popular or politically advantageous.

Many of us will recall his opposition to the massive incarceration of Japanese-Americans in California after the outbreak of World War II. His stand was not popular at the time, but history has been on his side and that wholesale destruction of civil rights is now viewed as one of the blackest acts in American history.

I think we can already see how history will regard his leadership as chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. His efforts have been a moving force toward bringing safe, inexpensive sources of nuclear power that in the future hold great promise for overcoming the Nation's energy shortage. When his efforts began, few of us could envision the importance that we now place on this power source.

Also, we must recognize his efforts to strengthen and economize in our Government as the able chairman of the Committee on Governmental Operations. I know that our taxpayers have been saved billions of dollars through his work on this committee.

Mr. Speaker, the citizens of California have proved time and time again their good judgments in keeping CHET HOLIFIELD in the Congress for 32 years. And all Americans have been the beneficiaries.

I am proud to call CHET HOLIFIELD my warm friend and a colleague whose counsel I will always value and respect.

I join today in wishing him a successful and fulfilling retirement.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, after more than three decades of singularly productive service to his country as a Member of the U.S. House of Representatives, CHET HOLIFIELD's decision to retire and enjoy the southern California sunshine cannot be reasonably challenged. However, since his expertise and knowledge of the field of atomic energy is without peer, I am hopeful that he will continue to lend this body his counsel on this subject as we continue the search for energy sources. I salute Mr. HOLIFIELD with the observation that when it comes time for my retirement from Congress I may exit with a fraction of the respect and recognition that he enjoys.

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with my colleagues in saluting one of the really great legislators in the history of the House of Representatives.

CHET HOLIFIELD, the dean of the California delegation, has served in the House for 32 years. They have been years marked by consistent excellence and high courage. They were years in which he advanced new and progressive ideas. They were years in which he stood almost alone on many issues—and was proven right in the end. They were years of creativity which will leave their constructive mark on American Government and society for the centuries ahead.

There have been repeated "Hoover Commissions" on how best to run and organize our Government. But CHET HOLIFIELD, through his own work and knowledge, has done more to provide for modernization of our Federal Government than any other single man since President Washington appointed his first Cabinet. The GSA, the AEC, consumer agencies, and energy agencies, all owe their creation to the work and legislative genius of Chairman HOLIFIELD.

The House of Representatives will miss this master legislative craftsman. My wife and I will miss one of the most wonderful, warm, husband-and-wife teams ever to come to Washington. To Cam and CHET, we extend our best wishes for good health and happiness.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, because I know a large number of my colleagues will want to join in this special order of tribute to CHET HOLIFIELD, I will be brief in my remarks this afternoon.

During the 8 years I have had the privilege of serving with CHET, I can say without reservation or qualification that he is the hardest working Member of Congress I have ever known. He knows from top to bottom the duties and responsibilities of being a good lawmaker. More importantly, CHET has always done his homework on legislation under consideration, especially those bills for which he had direct responsibility. Even though I might not always agree with every provision of a bill CHET was handling on the floor, I always knew that he had thoroughly researched the subject and had considered every possible alternative. For this dedication to the job I commend and thank him. He has certainly made our job easier.

Mr. Speaker, I will miss CHET when the 94th Congress convenes, but I wish him and his lovely wife, Cam, much happiness on his well-deserved retirement.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleagues in this tribute to the 32 years of dedicated service of Congressman CHET HOLIFIELD, of California, who has announced that he will retire at the end of this session of Congress.

In his years of service in the House, which have spanned the terms of seven Presidents CHET has ably served his constituents in the 19th District of California. During those years, he has shown persistence and vigor in fighting for the public good. As a member of the Government Operations Committee, of which he is chairman, I know that his leadership has earned the respect of colleagues on both sides of the aisle.

Of CHET's many accomplishments, I think in particular of his proposals to modernize and reorganize the executive branch of Government, and of his continued efforts to advance the safe and peaceful uses of nuclear energy. His tireless service fulfills the highest meaning of the word "Representative," and the example he has set will continue to influence legislators for years to come.

December 20, 1974

I know I speak for us all when I say that we will miss CHET. But I also know that his dedication will continue on his retirement from the House, and that he and Cam take with them our warmest wishes for the future.

Mr. VANDER JAGT. Mr. Speaker, adjournment of the 93d Congress will mark the retirement of Congressman CHET HOLIFIELD, who has served in this Chamber with extraordinary distinction since 1943. Representative HOLIFIELD played a major role in the development of nuclear energy for peaceful applications. His influence in this field as chairman and vice chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy will long be reflected in our Nation's energy policies.

As chairman of the Committee on Government Operations, a committee on which I have been privileged to serve, Congressman HOLIFIELD has provided knowledgeable leadership to deliberations on major legislative issues and to the committee's central oversight responsibilities.

Our colleague has received many honors during his long and distinguished congressional career. I can only add this testament of my deep respect for him, together with my sincere wishes for a satisfying and rewarding retirement.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, the CHET Holifield years have spanned an incredible period for our country. Those years include World War II, the dawn of the nuclear age, the jet age, the race to the Moon, cold war, and détente.

Playing a key role in all of these, CHET HOLIFIELD has demonstrated judgments and actions that have been keen and always in the best interest of the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, CHET HOLIFIELD has been in this fishbowl called Washington, D.C., for all this time without the slightest breath of scandal or any discredit. With his wife, Cam, one of my favorite people on Capitol Hill, they have been a great team.

Together they have displayed love for their country, family, and the House.

In my early years here, CHET HOLIFIELD was a courageous leader in the early efforts to make the House more democratic and responsible.

Mr. Speaker, I hold great personal affection and fondness for CHET HOLIFIELD and I hope his and Cam's years of retirement are filled with the content and happiness that comes from knowing a job well done.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, in 1944, I went to Europe with our colleague, Hon. O. C. FISHER. We met a freshman Member while we were in England—CHET HOLIFIELD from California. We visited Normandy beaches together and later returned to the United States on a troopship. Ever since that time I have felt an especial interest in and friendship for CHET HOLIFIELD. He has worked conscientiously and without stopping; and has proven himself a leader. His wife, Cam, has carried much of the load of his office while he devoted himself to problems of legislation.

More than 20 years ago, Mrs. Poage and I bought a home about two blocks from the Capitol and the Holifields remodeled the place across the street from us. Later they moved to an apartment in Prospect House in Arlington. Shortly afterward, we moved to the same building and for some years have lived as their neighbors on the 11th floor. They have been good friends and good neighbors, just as they have both been good public servants.

CHET is a man with whom I have disagreed on many occasions because he is one who does not cover up his disagreement but brings it into the open. I have, however, often realized that he was not trying to disagree with me but trying to sustain his own position, just as I have done under similar circumstances. He has served his State and Nation well. His place in this House is not going to be easily filled; but I join with their many friends in wishing both CHET and Cam every good fortune as they go back to their home State.

Mr. McCLOREY. Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to take part in this tribute to our colleague, CHET HOLIFIELD of California, who is retiring voluntarily from the Congress after 32 years of distinguished service.

After my election to the Congress in 1962, CHET HOLIFIELD and his wife, Cam, were among the first congressional personalities with whom I became acquainted. We occupied the same apartment building in Southwest Washington, and Congressman CHET HOLIFIELD and I became fast friends as well as colleagues.

Mr. Speaker, my first assignment in this House was as a member of the Committee on Government Operations on which CHET HOLIFIELD served as a ranking member. Although not on the same subcommittee, I followed closely his work and the particular interests of CHET Holifield and his fellow committee members relative to our military operations. Later, I became aware of CHET HOLIFIELD's expertise in the area of atomic energy—particularly in the development of the peaceful uses of nuclear power.

Mr. Speaker, all of us who have given attention to the work of this Congress have been impressed by the hard work and application to the job which CHET HOLIFIELD has demonstrated. He has held out tenaciously in behalf of his convictions—frequently setting aside partisan interests in order to advance those principles which coincided with his individual beliefs.

Mr. Speaker, we are all aware of CHET HOLIFIELD's effective and influential services on the important committees upon which he has served. In addition, we recall many instances where his spirited and convincing debate has persuaded the Members of this House to support the positions and causes which he has espoused. Mr. Speaker, throughout CHET HOLIFIELD's dramatic and illustrious years in Washington, he has had the steadfast support of his capable and charming wife, Cam. It does not detract from CHET HOLIFIELD's own talents to suggest that Cam Holifield has, indeed, contributed substantially to the effectiveness of his work. CHET and Cam Holifield have been an attractive and popular team on Capitol Hill. My wife, Doris, and I join in extending to CHET and Cam our affection and good wishes for many healthful and happy years together.

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to take part today in this special order in recognition of the long and dedicated service of my good friend, the Honorable CHET HOLIFIELD. It has been a true pleasure to know CHET and his lovely wife, Cam.

When I came to Congress 12 years ago, CHET had already been here 20 years and established himself as a hard-working leader, a man of commitment and principle. His service in Congress has been outstanding and CHET can retire proudly, knowing he has done his job well.

To extol the numerous and historic contributions which this man has made during his distinguished career in the House of Representatives could fill a book—and hopefully someday it will. It is sometimes difficult to imagine that one man could have such a major impact on shaping our Government's development and our Nation's history.

CHET is one of the original members of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy and was chairman at the time extensive hearings were held on nature of radioactive fallout and its effect on man. He was instrumental in placing atomic energy under civilian rather than military control and in the development of nuclear-powered electrical generating plants, the hydrogen bomb and nuclear propelled warships. He has been a constant proponent of a strong program of research to develop peaceful uses of atomic energy and considers the still-experimental nuclear fast breeder reactor able to provide an inexhaustible source of energy for decades to come.

As chairman of the Government Operations Committee, CHET managed legislation to establish two Cabinet-level departments, the Housing and Urban Development and the Department of Transportation. Further, it was through his leadership and assistance that my bill, to establish the Cabinet Committee on Opportunities for the Spanish-Speaking People, was able to become a reality. It was CHET who authored legislation establishing the General Services Administration, which has custody over Federal buildings and property and serves as the purchasing agent for civil departments of the Government. He has, also, represented the United States at several critical international conferences, including the SALT talks. And the list goes on.

But even more important to CHET, has been his work at home for the 19th Congressional District of California. He has secured unused and surplus Government land for public parks and recreation areas and has worked hard to obtain Federal funds for flood control, bilingual educational programs and other special projects. Individual constituent problems have also been given high priority.

CHET will certainly be missed in the 94th Congress. I know he and Cam are looking forward to retiring from public life and having more time to spend with friends and family, so I will only add my sincere best wishes for their continued health and happiness in the years ahead.

Mr. CHARLES H. WILSON of California. Mr. Speaker, when I was a wet-behind-the-ears, first-term Congressman in 1963, CHET HOLIFIELD was always available to give me the benefit of his 20 years of congressional experience. And over the next 11 years he has continued to guide and inspire me and many others by his example of hard work, loyalty, and probing intelligence. Now he is retiring from this Chamber, and I know all my colleagues in the House will miss this man of great character and unimpeachable integrity.

CHET HOLIFIELD's 32-year congressional career began when he was first elected to the 78th Congress in 1942 as the first Representative from the newly reapportioned 19th Congressional District in California. And, during his service in Congress, CHET has compiled an amazing record. He is chairman of the House Committee on Government Operations, a member of the House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, and, most significantly, has on many occasions served as chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

It is particularly for his contributions to the field of atomic energy for which CHET will be remembered. As an articulate spokesman for our atomic energy problems, he has traveled around the world to virtually every major atomic energy conference to present the U.S. viewpoint on how to use this awesome power for peaceful means.

My late wife, Betty, and I were close personal friends of CHET and his devoted Cam—two remarkable people who share a wonderful marriage. I know all Members of Congress join me in this tribute to a fine gentleman and a great legislator and wish him and his wife a retirement rich in the joys of home and family.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. Speaker, our retiring colleague, the Honorable CHET HOLIFIELD, has been commended many times today for his achievements in the fields of atomic energy, Government organization, and Government procurement. And indeed, the people of California and the Nation can be grateful for his enlightened leadership in these complex and important fields.

But it is CHET HOLIFIELD, the man of courage and conviction, dedicated to the principles of individual liberty and equal justice for all that I wish to praise today. There are many examples, during the past 32 years, of CHET's devotion to these principles, but the one which stands out in my mind and in the minds of all Americans of Japanese ancestry is his long and often lonely fight against the Emergency Detention Act of 1950 which was finally repealed in 1971.

While serving his first term in the House in 1942, Congressman HOLIFIELD saw many of his Japanese American neighbors in California "summarily rounded up and placed in detention camps where they remained until the end of World War II." Vigorously protesting the action, which was carried out under Executive order, Congressman HOLIFIELD recalled years later that he "really laid his career—in public service—on the line."

Nevertheless, in 1950, CHET and a small handful of his House colleagues, again stood up for justice when Congress moved to enact over President Truman's veto the Emergency Detention Act, a measure described as "A concentration camp measure, pure and simple," during the 1950 congressional debate. Of that debate, he later recalled—

Good men went down to defeat at the polls for defending civil liberties. Others were able to gain high public office by catering to the public hysteria.

Never one to cater to the public hysteria, CHET voted against the bill, voted to sustain the President's veto, and, even after the measure was enacted, continued to speak out against it. His perseverance was rewarded in 1971 when the repeal measure, which he cosponsored with me, was overwhelmingly passed by Congress.

CHET's unwavering loyalty to the principles upon which our Nation was founded inspired me in 1950 when I was a young law student at Harvard and has continued to inspire me during my own career in public service. I am sure all CHET's colleagues share this feeling and join me in wishing him and his lovely wife, Cam, continued success and happiness in retirement.

To CHET and Cam, all Americans say, "Thank you and God bless you."

Mr. FRASER. Mr. Speaker, a wise man said of our political system that this Nation wrote controversy into its Constitution. Our legislative bodies are set up on the theory of controversy, our free press is based on the belief that controversy is vital and the heart and soul of our judicial system are controversy.

In view of this, it cannot be thought strange that CHET HOLIFIELD, whom I respect as a colleague, and I have sometimes faced each other over a divide of controversy. This is the nature of our legislative system.

And, as any casual reader of Chairman HOLIFIELD's Congressional Directory biography can discover, here is a man who has dedicated his life to the legislative process. His service on the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy and the House Committee on Government Operations has been distinguished by hard work both as the chairman of these committees and as a rank and file member. During his career he, more than any other House Member, has understood the complexities of atomic energy. He has served his district, his State and his Nation long and well.

And he has served this body well, too. I feel an especial respect for him because he was one of the original organizers of the Democratic Study Group. While in his later years he may have momentarily felt a certain understanding of Dr. Frankenstein's situation, on reflection, I am certain he does not regret what his progeny has become and has accomplished.

Mr. Speaker, Chairman CHET HOLIFIELD earlier this month celebrated the 71st anniversary of his birth. Thirty-two of his years have been spent laboring in these vineyards. He has harvested an impressive legislative crop. He has earned a respite from the controversy of this House. But he will be missed.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I join with my colleagues in adding a few words to the written record in tribute to a genuinely heroic figure in this House, the Honorable CHET HOLIFIELD, of California. I can only partially convey in words the deep respect that I have for CHET HOLIFIELD, whom I have come to know well as a member of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. As a charter member, and longtime Chairman of this unique committee, he has displayed a special brand of courageous leadership, and has offered a particularly astute sense of the role that the atom can play in the lives of Americans. Many members have come and gone on the Joint Committee, but the consistent and unswerving leadership of the gentleman from California will be shown in the future to have been an important factor in the widespread development of this remarkable technology.

Twenty-seven years ago, security concerns threatened to tear apart the very core of the fledgling field of atomic energy. Key atomic scientists were accused of behavior detrimental to the welfare of the country. The courage and dignity of the gentleman from California was evident in this successful defense of the constitutional rights of the scientists against those who were trying to discredit them. It was a difficult time and it took a strong sense of justice to stand and be counted for individual rights.

As scientists came to understand the properties of the atom better, Mr. Speaker, CHET HOLIFIELD again was among the leaders of this body who diligently sought the financial support for basic research that has made possible the current developments in nuclear energy. Considerable public concern has arisen over the years about atomic energy. We are seeing his ideas of safe and clean power and the general usefulness of the technology very clearly being verified. We will benefit for generations from the efforts that he has invested on behalf of basic research and atomic energy.

In working with CHET HOLIFIELD on the Joint Committee, I have appreciated the level of expertise that he has achieved in a highly complex and technical area. He has worked consistently to bring atomic energy to a place where it would be useful and acceptable to the American people. He has been, over the years, an ideal example of effective public representation. The literally thousands of hours he has invested in coming to understand the complicated problems of the Joint Committee have earned him the respect of the scientific community and the industry representatives who interact with the Joint Committee. The Joint Committee on Atomic Energy will clearly be different when he leaves.

With many thanks for what I have learned from CHET and for what his leadership and talents have meant to the people of his district, this Congress and the people of this country, I personally wish him and his lovely wife, Cam, much happiness and fulfillment in the coming years.

Mr. ERLÉNBOEN. Mr. Speaker, one of the giants of the House of Representatives will retire to private life on January 3 next. He is CHET HOLIFIELD, dean of the California delegation to this body, in which he has served for 32 years.

It has been my privilege to serve with him on the Government Operations Committee, of which he has been chairman for the past 4 years. His grasp of the issues which come before the committee, and before its seven subcommittees, indicates a keen mind and a willingness to work hard.

I have come to know him in another capacity. Two major laboratories of the Atomic Energy Commission are in the district which I represent, and he has been chairman, vice chairman and member of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy for a number of years. Again, his detailed knowledge and his remarkable understanding of that committee's work is noteworthy.

Mr. Speaker, CHET HOLIFIELD has been one of the great men in this House, and we shall not soon find anybody to take his place. My wish for him is a long and fruitful retirement.

Mr. MURPHY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to be able to pay tribute to a man who has served the 19th Congressional District of California for 32 years. During that time he has distinguished himself as one of the outstanding legislative leaders in the House.

He has served his constituents with distinction. He has been an able Representative of his district, his State and the Nation, serving all with the dedication and devotion so characteristic of CHET HOLIFIELD.

One cannot pay homage to this man without mentioning his outstanding work on the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. As a member of the Joint Committee, and in his capacity as chairman, CHET HOLIFIELD has been in the forefront in promoting atomic energy as an alternate source of power. His expertise in this field is an accomplishment few men can match. His stewardship of the committee will seldom be equalled.

It has been a privilege working with CHET HOLIFIELD. It is always sad to see a good man leave the House but I wish him well in his retirement.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I should like to add my own best wishes to those others which Congressman CHET HOLIFIELD has received upon the occasion of his retirement from Congress.

Because of my own involvement with energy legislation, in the Science and Astronautics Committee, I certainly recognize the importance of Mr. HOLIFIELD's achievements in the field of atomic energy. The Congress owes him a special debt of gratitude for his dedicated service in developing policies of atomic energy research, regulation, and application.

I regret that CHET HOLIFIELD will not be returning to work with us during the coming session of Congress. His direction and leadership will be missed.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, CHET HOLIFIELD's retirement after an outstanding 32-year career leaves a large void in the House of Representatives. As chairman of the House Committee on Government Operations, CHET presided over the development of literally hundreds of important bills, and his well-known ability to facilitate compromises was most important in reconciling the many viewpoints which members of any committee have. In addition to his time-consuming duties as chairman of the Government Operations Committee, he served on the Standards of Official Conduct and Joint Atomic Energy Committees, lending his wise counsel to the deliberations there.

CHET's expertise in nuclear energy affairs will be sorely missed in the 94th Congress. We all know of CHET's overriding concern that atomic energy be used for peaceful purposes, and he labored hard to develop international understandings and limit the unwarranted dissemination of atomic fuels. At the same time, however, he recognized that nuclear sources could play a key role in providing the energy needed to operate our factories, heat our homes, and improve the living standards of people everywhere. I believe that one of CHET's greatest achievements is his astute recognition of the benefits, as well as the dangers, of nuclear power and the development of legislation which equitably balanced all competing factors.

Mr. Speaker, CHET HOLIFIELD has earned the respect of all of us here on Capitol Hill, and I know that his wise judgments will be missed in the House of Representatives. Mrs. Morgan and I extend our very best wishes to CHET on his retirement.

Mr. ROSENTHAL. Mr. Speaker, comparatively few Americans know who CHET HOLIFIELD is. But the lives of the vast majority of Americans have benefited from his 32 pioneering years in the Congress of the United States.

I am delighted to join with my colleagues in paying tribute to a distinguished American. I believe it is fair to say that CHET's extensive accomplishments in the fields of congressional and executive branch organization, Government procurement, military operations and energy, have made him one of this Nation's most influential public servants.

His numerous achievements are far too many to chart or catalog. But it is a mark of CHET's distinguished career, that those achievements resulted not so much from his House seniority as from his creative energies.

He obviously came to Congress in 1942 with strong convictions about the need to make our governmental institutions more responsive to the people and with equally strong ideas on how to accomplish that goal. As one of the original founders of the House Democratic Study Group and as the architect of dozens of major bills, CHET HOLIFIELD has succeeded to an amazing extent in placing his personal imprimatur on the future face of our Nation.

CHET and I have disagreed, from time to time, on certain public policy issues. But I know that his public positions were formulated with only one test in mind: Will the public interest benefit? Perhaps the greatest tribute I can pay him is that I will always remember him as a "doer," an "innovator" and a "builder."

I want to wish CHET and his lovely wife, Cam, and their entire family the very best of everything in the coming years.

Mr. HELSTOSKI. Mr. Speaker, one of the most experienced and dedicated Members of Congress, CHET HOLIFIELD of California, will retire at the end of this session. Today, I would like to take a few moments to thank Congressman HOLIFIELD for the many fine contributions he made to our Nation, and to extend to him my best wishes on the occasion of his retirement.

Congressman HOLIFIELD has served in the House for 32 years. During this time, he has provided the people of California's 19th Congressional District with excellent representation and has been a forceful and dynamic leader on the floor of the House.

As chairman of the House Government Operations Committee, Mr. HOLIFIELD made many important contributions in the area of governmental relations, organization and activities. Furthermore, through his work as a member of the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct and the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, Congressman HOLIFIELD earned the respect and admiration of Members of the House and Senate.

Mr. Speaker, though Congressman HOLIFIELD no longer will represent the people of the 19th District, I am confident that he will continue to play a vital role in that community and that the people of California will continue to benefit from his dedication, experience and leadership.

Mr. LEGGETT. Mr. Speaker, this week the congressional delegation will lose its most distinguished dean of all time, the House will lose not only a part-time haberdasher, but one of its brightest lights of this generation.

The story of CHET HOLIFIELD and his wife, Cam, is a possible story, but not altogether probable. A kid from Kentucky gets through grade school in Arkansas and without elaborate collegiate degrees builds a small haberdashery of note in southern California. No great veteran he, too young for the first war and too senior for the second, determines to save his community in the usual pre bono public positions and is finally elected chief of the Los Angeles Democratic Party before World War II.

The bombs drop on Pearl Harbor and in 1943 the young haberdasher breaks the bank and is elected to the 78th Congress as one of 24 Californians in Washington. CHET served for 32 years and has seen the California delegation almost double in size.

Like Harry Truman, another great Democrat haberdasher, CHET HOLIFIELD in those 32 years proved that a well-intentioned, aggressive, creative American obtaining continuous support every 2 years from an alert California constituency and with his wife Cam's loving support could rise step by step to become clearly the most valuable articulate

December 20, 1974

Member in the most secret and complicated subject matter in the U.S. Congress that of nuclear power and atomic energy. Whether as chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy or as chairman of the Committee on Government Operations, HOLIFIELD performed as an expert. He helped reorganize the Congress before many of us got here, he unified the California delegation. With his wife, Cam, he unified both the Republican and Democratic California delegations.

He had his enemies, but show me a public servant who has no enemies, and I will show you a person who does not do much.

But CHET and Cam got their friends—hardly a room in the Capitol will hold them all, we have tried.

CHET has left his mark around Washington on dozens of major bills, set standards in his personal and public life we will all be trying to match for years. The history books may not mention much HOLIFIELD, but for those of us who have been privy to his zeal and personality we know well the place of CHET HOLIFIELD, a haberdasher of distinction in the 20th century history of America.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, with the close of business this week, I anticipate final adjournment of the 93d Congress. As we leave town for the Christmas holidays, we leave behind one of the finest, most effective, and efficient legislators I have ever known, for our colleague CHET HOLIFIELD is bringing a distinguished career to an end with the end of the 93d Congress.

CHET came to Washington in 1942 as a young freshman Member of Congress. He will retire at the end of this year following 32 years of continuous service in the House of Representatives. Since the Golden State of California was admitted to the Union in 1850, no other individual has served the State in Congress anywhere near as long as the record achieved by the chairman of our delegation.

In looking back over his career in this House, and especially during those 16 years which I have been privileged to serve with him, there are many things which come to mind. Some of them are well known, such as his dedicated efforts to bring some sort of order to the administration of our Federal Government's management and housekeeping services, plus the major efforts he has undertaken in cutting down of paperwork and other administrative details.

Others will recall his efforts and leadership in the field of atomic energy for the environment, and for consumers.

I, personally, commend him for his farsighted efforts in the field of energy. We all know that under his direction and leadership, the Federal Energy Administration was established in this Congress, and we created the Energy Research and Development Administration and the Energy Resources Council.

I recall many years ago his many warnings that the Nation was facing an energy crisis. These warnings go back 10 or more years ago when CHET HOLIFIELD did so much to insure that the Pacific Northwest-Southwest Intertie was established as the start of a nationwide electrical power grid which is so helpful in this day and age.

His accomplishments have been enumerated by the Speaker, by our distinguished whip, JOHN McFALL, and others. On my part I want to express, on behalf of the people of the Second District of California, on behalf of the people of the State of California, and personally, my deep appreciation for the efforts and my admiration for his leadership, assistance, tenacity, and dedication.

Albra joins me in saying we are going to miss you and your fine wife. We hope that retirement brings all that you deserve for many years ahead and wish you and your family lots of happiness.

Mr. DANIELSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with my many colleagues in paying tribute to one of the grand Members of the House of Representatives, the dean of my delegation, CHET HOLIFIELD, who is retiring at the end of this Congress.

As we all know, CHET has served those whom we all have served, the people of the United States, for 32 years. This has been a long and also a fruitful service, and he has lived up to the finest traditions and the finest ideals of our great Republic. Those who have already spoken and who are yet to speak have, and will, catalog many of the highlights of CHET's career, as a Member of the people's House, I fully agree with all of their comments and adopt them as my own. However, I would like to talk about another aspect of CHET HOLIFIELD. I would like to talk a while about his personal life, to illustrate what a wonderful human being he is. Because I believe that it is only through an understanding of CHET the man that we can understand how he has compiled such an outstanding record as a Member of Congress.

It is most fitting that I touch upon this subject, because I have enjoyed a close personal relationship with CHET during the past few years. As you all know, to some extent I am the successor to CHET in the new 30th Congressional District. True, the district is made up of parts of several old districts, one of which was my own, but the unfortunate result of the last reapportionment was that CHET and I found ourselves in the same district. The fact that I was successful in being reelected, is due in large part to the fact CHET HOLIFIELD chose not to seek reelection and gave me his unstinted support.

I wish to add that ever since I first ran for the Congress in 1970, CHET has given me invaluable support and has favored me with his wise counsel, good advice, and unquestioned support at every turn in the road. When CHET HOLIFIELD decides to help someone, he puts his whole heart into it. That is simply his nature and the pattern of his whole life.

Born on December 3, 1903, in Mayfield, Ky., CHET comes from pioneer stock, a family which crossed the Appalachian Mountains into Daniel Boone's Kentucky, shortly after the Revolutionary War. The Holifields were successful pioneers and farmers and later were in-involved in politics in Kentucky at both the county and State levels, from the very first days of Kentucky. One of CHET HOLIFIELD's ancestors was General Holifield whose story is one of the legends of Kentucky.

When CHET was but a small child, his immediate family moved from Kentucky to eastern Arkansas to establish a new home. A short time later his mother contracted what was then known as consumption and the family then moved further west to Springfield, Ark., sharing the common belief, and hoping, that the higher altitude would remedy her affliction and improve her condition. That was not to be, unfortunately, and CHET lost his mother when he was but 9 years of age.

CHET HOLIFIELD has never been a stranger to hard work. As a young boy in grade school and high school, he worked after school and on weekends and vacations in his father's cleaning and tailor shop. There he learned to press pants, a trade which eventually became most valuable to him and played an important part in a remarkable life.

When CHET was only 14 he felt that it was time for him to strike out on his own and he left school and "rode the rods" to Springfield, Mo., where he obtained work pressing pants in a factory manufacturing uniforms for the U.S. Marine Corps. At about the same time, while CHET was on his own, he also followed the work, finding employment in the oilfields of Oklahoma and the wheatfields of Kansas. Those were 10- and 12-hour days, 6 and 7 days each week. His money went home to his father to help out with family expenses. His travel between jobs was "on the rods" or in boxcars. His bed was usually straw.

At age 14, CHET journeyed to California to seek a better life "out West." He worked hard, saved his money, and with a small amount of borrowed money, he began a small cleaning and haberdashery shop in what became his hometown—Montebello, Calif.—in 1920, at the ripe age of 16. In the course of time, that store grew into CHET HOLIFIELD's store for men, which is still in operation in the neighboring city of Norwalk.

While working in his small shop one day, pressing pants, CHET was visited by two high school girls, who were selling tickets to the senior class play. One of these lovely girls was Vernice Caneer. CHET was smitten, apparently Vernice was also, for this began a romance which is still going strong today, having lasted for more than 52 years. For CHET and Vernice, known as Cam to their thousands of friends, were soon married. Neither was yet 19 years of age.

CHET and Cam Holifield have worked as a team for more than 52 years. They worked together in CHET's business enterprise, in their home, and for the last 32 years in the Congress. They have supported each other in good times and times of great adversity, especially during the long illness and ultimate loss of their daughter, Willa, earlier this year. They are also blessed with three other daughters, Lois Anita, Betty Lee, and Jo Ann.

December 20, 1974

I will never forget attending the Holifield's golden wedding anniversary party 2 years ago, where my wife and I passed through a receiving line of Holifields, including in addition to Cam and CHET, 4 lovely daughters, 4 sons-in-law, 15 grandchildren, and 1 great-granddaughter—another great-granddaughter has been added since that time.

Cam and CHET are very close to their family and all family members are close to each other—an exceptional thing to see these days. All of the members of their family have inherited and share in common the traits of courage, industry, integrity and affection, which characterize Cam and CHET HOLIFIELD.

When we understand this firm base of honor, decency and family devotion, it is not hard to understand and appreciate the exemplary record which CHET and Cam have established in representing their district and the people of our land here in the Congress. They have set a standard for all of us. I am sure that all who know them join in wishing them many happy years of retirement.

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, as the remaining days of the 93d Congress draw to a close, and as the rush of House business intensifies, I would like to pause a moment and pay tribute to my good friends, CHET and Cam Holifield.

Our offices, as you may know, are directly across the hall from one another. Seldom does a day pass when we have not shared a special hello. Cam, in particular, has endeared herself to each member of my staff. Her smile, her warmth, her compassion have certainly brightened our days.

CHET and Cam Holifield are indeed fortunate. They possess a rare quality of life and communication which all who know them deeply respect and admire. They have worked hard together over a long and distinguished career.

In looking back over CHET's extensive legislative achievements these 32 years, we recognized immediately how Chairman HOLIFIELD's skill, sensitivity, insight, and leadership have helped our country respond to her challenges, pressures, and changing needs. Since his election to the 78th Congress in 1942, CHET has been reelected by overwhelming majorities to each succeeding Congress. His influence, his wisdom, his ability to fight for that in which he believes, and his understanding of the collegial nature of this body have earned him our deep respect and staunch praise.

CHET's record on behalf of civil liberties for all citizens is unsurpassed. It was Chairman HOLIFIELD who authored and obtained passage of this measure which established the Cabinet Committee on Opportunities for the Spanish Speaking. It was Chairman HOLIFIELD whose committee reported out Public Law 93-502, amending the Freedom of Information Act, designed to make Government information more accessible to our citizenry. It was Chairman HOLIFIELD whose committee passed H.R. 16373, insuring protection of individual rights of privacy in the handling of Government records.

During the 89th Congress, CHET became the only Representative in our history to manage legislation creating two Cabinet-level departments—the Department of Transportation and the Department of Housing and Urban Development—in a single Congress. In 1967, he managed the President's reorganization plan for the District of Columbia. CHET HOLIFIELD has personally handled over 45 reorganization plans for the Federal Government, including establishment of the General Services Administration, the Environmental Protection Agency, and the Consumer Protection Agency.

Often, it was through Chairman HOLIFIELD's leadership that the American public became sensitized to such problems as the need to combat air and water pollution or the importance of adequate consumer protection. During the 90th and 91st Congresses, CHET was extremely instrumental in winning a major victory in the battle against air pollution. His work in consumer protection extends back to 1943 when he led the fight for grade labeling of food. Since that time, Chairman HOLIFIELD has voted and worked for more than 90 consumer protection laws.

Perhaps CHET's most outstanding contributions have been in the field of energy. He served for 10 years as chairman and vice chairman of the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy. Through the hearings he conducted, CHET developed far-reaching information on the effects of radiation on man, the environmental impact of producing electrical power, and the problems of civil defense in case of atomic war. He has been a vigorous proponent of research to develop the peaceful uses of atomic energy. And, since 1946, when the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy commenced, his wise counsel has guided and influenced the scientific uses of energy in each decade.

It was indeed fitting that H.R. 17628, designating Oak Ridge National Laboratory at Oak Ridge, Tenn., as the Holifield National Laboratory, passed the House Wednesday. For CHET's devotion to our energy needs deserves the highest recognition.

In 1972, he served as chairman of the Subcommittee on Agreements on Cooperation between the United States and other countries in nuclear development. And, over the past 3 years he has been appointed a congressional adviser to the Official U.S. Delegation of the International Atomic Energy Agency. In this 93d Congress alone, Chairman HOLIFIELD directed legislation which created the Federal Energy Administration, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, and the Energy Resources Council. His skillful guidance of the Energy Research and Development Act to final approval will no doubt stand out as one of his landmark achievements. The insight of this able chairman will affect the lives of all America's people for decades to come.

All of us in the House today, all of us who have labored alongside CHET over these many years, will remember him for his sensitivity to our Nation's needs and for his continuous service to his constituents. As CHET and Cam return to their native California, I want them to both know that may staff and I will dearly miss them. Their enthusiasm, their love for people, and their strong belief in our constitutional system of Government have made a lasting imprint on the history of our great Nation.

Mrs. GREEN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, one of the recurrent nightmares of 20th century man is that he will become the slave or victim of the technology he, himself, has created. The conception of the mechanical nonperson, for example—the computerized robot—which finally takes control of his human master, is common in modern literature, anecdote, and cartoons. It is the symbol of a fear which I believe to be justified: that man's discovery of the secrets which control his physical universe may well outpace his capacity to employ that knowledge for humanity's best benefit.

If we are to control, rather than be controlled by the explosion of scientific knowledge and development, then we must have in public policymaking positions men and women of extraordinary vision, courage, and devotion to the public welfare. I can think of no one who matches that description better than our colleague, CHET HOLIFIELD. His congressional career began in the atomic age. He has ever since, with enormous poise, rationality, and intelligence, sought to sensibly regulate this fearsome power.

Mr. Speaker, as Congressman HOLIFIELD knows full well, we are not going to "undiscover" the splitting of the atom until or unless civilization itself fails; we are not going to "undiscover" the pleasures and comforts of central heating or electric lights or television or automobiles or any of the other conveniences of modern living.

But neither do we possess unlimited resources for limitless consumption and technology. Some must stand between: balancing-moderating the tug-of-war between those who view virtually all technology as inimical and those who believe it to be a virtue in itself. No one has done this more superbly or more skillfully than CHET HOLIFIELD. In a dangerous and endangered world, his knowledge, his commonsense, and his moderation have been of magnificent service to us all.

To CHET and Cam—my wishes are for many, many happy years when they can not only continue to serve their State and the Nation, but years when they can enjoy some leisure time to spend with their children and their grandchildren.

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, it is most difficult to add to that which has been said about our distinguished colleague from California, CHET HOLIFIELD. It is a privilege for me to pay tribute to this fine man as he retires after 32 years of service to California, the Nation, and the Democratic Party.

CHET and his lovely wife, Cam, have been very close personal friends to me and my wife, Reta, during our 20 years in Washington, and gave us helpful assistance when we arrived here, inexperienced, in 1955. It has been a pleasure to associate with them, both socially, and in concert with our duties in the Congress.

December 20, 1974

CHET has always taken the time to discuss and counsel junior Members, such as I was then, on legislation and legislative procedures, and I well remember the many times his guidance has benefited me in serving my constituents.

He has had the respect and admiration of Members on both sides of the aisle regardless of political philosophy.

CHET, throughout his long and industrious service in the Congress, has contributed immeasurably to the well-being and strength of this country. His pioneering in the field of atomic energy legislation is legendary. His creation and guidance of the Government Operations Committee has been the leading factor in seeing that the executive departments carry out the legislative mandates of the Congress. And, within the party structure and caucus he has been a beacon of progress, leadership, and reform.

As the long time dean of the California delegation the Golden State owes him a great debt for his farsightedness in guiding legislation through Congress which makes it the greatest State in the Nation.

I hope the years ahead will hold much happiness and contentment for CHET and Cam and that their retirement will be the most fulfilling and best years of their lives.

Mr. GIAIMO. Mr. Speaker, CHET HOLIFIELD has ably served his country and his constituents in the House of Representatives since he was first elected to the 78th Congress in 1942.

As chairman of the Committee on Government Operations and its Subcommittee on Legislation and Military Operations, as chairman and vice chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, and as an adviser or member on numerous international conferences, CHET HOLIFIELD has indelibly inscribed his imprint on the pages of history. He never shirked the responsibilities that fell on his shoulders during these eventful years, and never made a decision that he felt was not in the best interests of the Nation.

In Geneva, he served as congressional adviser to the U.S. delegations to a series of disarmament conferences, to International Conferences on the Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy, and to Conferences on the Discontinuance of Nuclear Weapons.

In Tokyo, he served as congressional adviser to the U.S. delegation to the ninth general conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

In Vienna, he was the representative of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy at the first organizational meeting of the International Atomic Energy Agency, and congressional adviser to the U.S. delegation to the 3d, 7th, and 12th general conferences of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

For over three decades, both at home and abroad, CHET HOLIFIELD has tirelessly served his country—and served it with distinction. It is a pleasure for me to join my colleagues today to salute him.

Mr. ICHORD. Mr. Speaker, it is with a deep sense of personal regret that I note the forthcoming retirement of Representative CHET HOLIFIELD, long one of the most sage and respected Members of this House. As a charter member and later as alternating chairman of the Joint Atomic Energy Committee, CHET played a pivotal role in the development of sound and positive nuclear energy programs in this country which benefit us all today. When the committee was founded in 1946, atomic energy was a new and frightening power, but during CHET's tenure on the committee atomic energy has been brought into its maturity as peaceful applications have been discovered and developed, and safeguards applied to military uses. His leadership as chairman of the Government Operations Committee witnessed during the 93d Congress the passage of a measure to create an Energy Research and Development Administration, the capstone of a long and productive career.

Like Harry S. Truman from my own State of Missouri, CHET rose from a modest background to a position of great influence and power. Like President Truman, he made his living in the clothing business for many years; and though he lacked—like Mr. Truman—a college education, CHET HOLIFIELD was able to grasp and master the many complexities of the atomic energy field. Like the late President from Missouri, CHET is a man of few pretenses: a plain-talking individual who has never hesitated to speak out in behalf of an unpopular issue if he felt that it was right. I am reminded, in this connection, of his courageous and unqualified opposition during the 1940's to the forced removal of Japanese-Americans from the Pacific coast to detention camps in the interior. During the dark days of World War II this was not a popular position nor an easy position; and it is a tribute to the man that he rejected the hysteria that gripped the Nation at that time and defended those principles that have always been dear to him.

Mr. Speaker, there will be a great void in the 94th Congress without CHET; and most of all I regret that the many new Members who will enter this Chamber for the first time in January will not have the benefit of his leadership and wisdom. No higher tribute can be paid to CHET than to observe that he has won the esteem of his fellow Members of Congress and of Americans everywhere. Those of us who have known him will always remember CHET HOLIFIELD.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I want to join other friends in taking note of the retirement from Congress of the gentleman from California, CHET HOLIFIELD.

I have watched his performance in the House of Representatives through the years in behalf of his beloved West and in behalf of the American people. He has made a distinguished record of which his State and the country can be proud. I make reference to his pioneer leadership as former chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy and his present distinguished work as chairman of the House Committee on Government Operations.

Others have spoken in more detail about the record of this great American and I shall not extend my remarks. I do wish to salute him and his lovely wife, Cam, and wish them a great abundance of health and happiness in the coming years. Their friendship has meant much to Mrs. Mahon and me throughout the years.

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, for me this is a sad day, because one of my closest friends, CHET HOLIFIELD, is retiring from the Congress after 32 years of distinguished leadership and dedicated service.

I am pleased, however, to have this opportunity to pay tribute to CHET HOLIFIELD. Few men who have served in the House have contributed as much to this Nation as CHET HOLIFIELD. His work in the fields of atomic energy, Government organization, and Government procurement has earned CHET HOLIFIELD a special place in the history of Congress.

CHET HOLIFIELD is a national legislator in the truest sense of the word. His leadership in the atomic energy field alone has established his preeminence in this Chamber.

It has been my privilege to serve with CHET HOLIFIELD on the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy since its creation in 1946. No man who has served on the committee has been a more forceful and dedicated advocate of the tremendous uses of nuclear energy to our national well-being than CHET HOLIFIELD. While CHET HOLIFIELD may not be a nuclear scientist he has done more to advance the development of atomic power than any man I know.

In the field of Government organization, CHET HOLIFIELD has earned the title—the father of the modern Cabinet. As chairman of the Committee on Government Operations he has been responsible for establishing both the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the Department of Transportation. He has fought for a Consumer Protection Agency, and as a result of his effort Congress next year will approve legislation establishing such an agency. No man has done more to modernize Government so that it works for the benefit of the American public.

With Government procurement, CHET HOLIFIELD has sought to streamline and rationalize Federal procurement policies so that the American taxpayer receives full value for his tax dollar. CHET HOLIFIELD has made this multibillion dollar Government enterprise more manageable and more accountable.

For 30 years I have sat side by side with CHET HOLIFIELD, first on the old Military Affairs Committee and then on the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. It will not be easy for me to get accustomed to work in committee without CHET at my side.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to say thank you to CHET HOLIFIELD for a job well done. This House will be the less for his departure. I am confident, however, that his legacy of leadership and service will guide our future deliberations.

Mr. VAN DEERLIN. Mr. Speaker, congressional oratory traditionally has run to hyperbole, and I confess I am as prone as any of our colleagues to engage in this kind of exaggeration. A person or idea that is merely good easily becomes "great."

There is, however, in our midst a man who can truly be described as a giant of our times, a figure of historic consequence. Despite his myriad of accomplishments during 32 years of distinguished service in this body, he has never been what you would call a media superstar. His trademark is productive work.

December 20, 1974

Our colleague, PHIL BURTON, may have said it best about CHET HOLIFIELD, when he told CHET a few years ago:

You may not be a lawyer, but you're the best damn legislator around.

We Californians have the largest, but not necessarily the most cohesive, State delegation.

We have been most fortunate to have a man of CHET's consummate abilities and parliamentary skills to serve as our dean and chairman.

There have been many occasions on which CHET has demonstrated his encyclopedic knowledge of the House, its Members, and procedures. Our laws concerning the peaceful uses of atomic energy, and the very structure of Government itself, are in large measure the result of his efforts.

Late in 1967, California was engaged in what seemed a losing struggle to rescue a provision proposed for the Clean Air Act to permit the State to set and enforce its own standards for controlling automotive emissions so long as they were more stringent than the national code.

Needless to say, the auto manufacturers were not happy at the prospect of having to fit special emission control equipment in cars destined for sale in California. The auto builders were not unduly concerned over the fact that smog problem was far more critical in California than elsewhere, particularly in the sprawling Los Angeles basin.

The auto people went to work with a vengeance on the Hill, and almost succeeded in killing the California exception. I say almost, because the lobbyists failed to reckon on the skill and determination of Congressman HOLIFIELD, who took it upon himself to save the provision.

CHET's first job was to pull together the then 37-Member California House delegation, a task for which he was uniquely suited, because of the respect he commands from Members of all political persuasions. Then he oversaw a massive communications effort aimed at persuading other Members of the rightness of the California cause. And finally, he took charge of mapping strategy for the floor fight to get the California language back in the clean air bill.

The Los Angeles Times was so impressed by CHET's leadership that Publisher Otis Chandler arranged with him for the printing and air-shipping to all House Members of a special edition with page 1 photos showing Los Angeles under thick clouds of smog. The papers were delivered to Members' offices as they hit doorsteps in Los Angeles, on the morning before the critical debate.

Will all the careful groundwork, largely laid by CHET, no one was really surprised when the California amendment prevailed on a 3-to-1 teller vote. At the end, CHET's main problem was dissuading other delegations from weakening California's case by proposing special waivers for their own States.

CXX—2640—Part 31

CHET's other legislative achievements are legion. He managed the bills setting up the Departments of Housing and Urban Development, and Transportation—and in the process became the only Member in history to preside over the creation of more than one Cabinet-level department. He was author of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act, setting up the General Services Administration. As a Member of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy since its beginning in 1946, he has had a hand in virtually every major piece of atomic energy legislation.

His work on AEC matters carried over to his service as chairman of the Committee on Government Operations, where he has been involved in reconstituting the AEC as a broad-based energy agency. He also helped set up the Federal Energy Administration and twice has guided legislation for a consumer protection agency through the House.

His accomplishments go on and on. But if I may intrude a personal note—let me tell my first and fondest recollection of CHET HOLIFIELD. He and Mrs. Holifield once gave up an evening and drove many miles to appear on behalf of a young Democratic nominee in a year and in a congressional district in which they must have known he had no chance of winning.

I was that candidate. And CHET carried off the occasion in a way that could not have been improved upon if I had been the odds-on favorite. I shall never forget his kindness.

Mr. Speaker, this man leaves Congress and the Nation—and me—much in his debt.

Mr. BOB WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in this tribute to one of our most distinguished retiring colleagues, CHET HOLIFIELD, who has served his constituency and country so well during his long tenure in the House. CHET has in recent years been the stalwart of our California delegation. He has always been nonpartisan in working with Members from both sides in the delegation on issues and projects of significant importance to our great State.

He leaves behind a tremendous record of legislative achievements including his work on the Joint Atomic Energy Committee on which he has served since its formation. He became a leading advocate of the development of nuclear propulsion for shipping, atomic energy for production of electricity, and the use of the atom in medical science. All of this was achieved while he served with distinction as a ranking member and in the past few years as chairman of the important Government Operations Committee. All of us who have worked with and known him will miss him greatly and wish him and his lovely wife, Cam, many more years of happiness together.

Mr. WINN. Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to join our many colleagues in paying tribute today to CHET HOLIFIELD, as he retires after 32 years of service to the residents of the 19th District of Columbia. He has been the sole representative from the 19th District since it was reapportioned in 1942.

He is admired and respected by his colleagues on both sides of the aisle as a result of his work in the fields of atomic energy, Government reorganization and procurement. His contributions have been landmark during his long career of public service. His leadership ability has meant much to the Nation and the State of California.

After a career of service to his fellows, we all wish for CHET HOLIFIELD, good health, happiness and the best of everything in his retirement.

Mr. HOSMER. Unique and extraordinary is the only phrase I know that properly characterizes our departing colleague CHET HOLIFIELD. He is a most special and most precious person. One cut out of no mold, but individually fashioned and endowed with inimitable style, extraordinary wisdom, inexhaustible energy, great physical stamina, and total perseverance of purpose.

For these reasons CHET HOLIFIELD has been able to make a deep and lasting imprint upon his times and all the people he has shared them with. This is an imprint for good. Because of him men's lives are better in our country than otherwise they would have been. His accomplishments in the area of peaceful nuclear power alone guaranteed that. But also in the area of government organization CHET HOLIFIELD's leadership has fashioned a structure for this Government which enables it to better serve the people.

In the area of men's individual lives CHET also has left marks on habits, character traits, enlightened outlook, compassion, dedication, foresight and patriotism of great value. Everyone with whom he associated has been enriched by his example and inspiration. I am deeply grateful for the privilege of serving closely with CHET for many years during our work together in atomic power and nuclear strategy. I know my life has been greatly enriched in many, many ways because of it.

With CHET HOLIFIELD's departure from the Congress those who remain will have a great responsibility and challenge to match his accomplishments and contributions to our beloved country.

The April 1974 issue of Power Engineering magazine in its "Washington Energy Report" section written by Lilwell King commented on CHET's departure, including some over generous statements regarding my own leaving, as follows:

WASHINGTON ENERGY REPORT
(By Lilwell King)

HOLIFIELD AND HOSMER CLOSE A UNIQUE ERA
Whether this November's elections produce a Democratic landslide or not, one thing is certain: the venerable Joint Committee on Atomic Energy will never be the same again. Reps Chet Holifield and Craig Hosmer are retiring this session and with them closes an era unique in the history of science and of Congress. Between them, Holifield and Hosmer have dominated the JCAE and through it the entire civilian and military nuclear programs of the United States for the best part of 25 years.

It was an odd partnership between two disparate but dedicated men. Holifield, the undisputed leader—tough, frugal, implacable—a man who would choose a battering ram over a foil. He aimed to do what he believed to be in the interest of the public, and he classed those he met along the way simply as friend or enemy on the basis of where they stood in relationship to what he wanted. Holifield, now 70, has been a Democratic member of Congress since 1942 and in that time has never hesitated to make an enemy or coerce a friend in the service of the atom.

Hosmer, a Republican, and now the minority leader of both the Joint Committee and the House Interior Committee, at 58, is milder and more approachable, although he has an acerbic tongue. He provides humorous counterpoint to Holifield's relentless advocacy for the atom.

THE ATOM: LAST FRONTIER FOR MANKIND

There is little doubt that both Hosmer and Holifield could have had careers of much greater public recognition in Congress if they had not spent so much of their effort and talent on the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. Both men see in the atom the last frontier for mankind and his best hope for the future. As public opposition to nuclear power has mounted, they have been forced into positions of seemingly less and less sensitivity to the genuine concerns that nuclear power raises. In reality both men, and particularly Holifield, have had years of soul-searching on many of the nuclear issues that have recently been discovered and exploited by the environmental groups.

It was, after all, the Joint Committee that drafted and approved the legislation providing for public participation in the hearing process. At that time Holifield was Chairman of the Joint Committee and the fact that there is more for the public to comment on nuclear power than any other major industrial undertaking is evidence, not that he conspired to promote the atom at the cost of the people, but of his basic egalitarianism. "I AM PLANNING TO LIVE ANOTHER TEN YEARS"

Holifield is leaving Congress embittered that the Liquid Metal Fast Breeder Demonstration Reactor, his last great ambition, is not very far along. He said rather sadly at a recent hearing: "We can't get off the ground. We can't even break ground and pour some foundations down in the territory that Senator Baker represents (Tennessee). I say this much: I said about three years ago that if I could get the Liquid Metal Fast Breeder Reactor set up as a project and approved by the Administration that I would be willing to hang up my gloves. That was about three years ago. One of the reasons I am hanging up my gloves is the inexcusable and unconscionable delay and other factors that are involved in this project.

"I doubt very much if I will live long enough to see it finished. I am sincere about that. I doubt that I will live long enough. I am planning to live about another 10 years."

TAKE OVER ENRICHMENT PLANTS UNTIL INDUSTRY GETS INTO THE ARENA

Hosmer, a younger man, is deeply concerned with the future of uranium enrichment and is the most aggressive proponent anywhere of the creation of an United States enrichment corporation. It would provide new enrichment capacity and take over the existing United States enrichment plants as an interim measure until, and if, private industry gets into the arena. Whereas Holifield will retire, Hosmer intends to be around for a long time, and no doubt would very much like to be the first president of the enrichment corporation that he dreams of creating.

Holifield is leaving the Congress for a variety of reasons—his age, a drastic reapportionment of his district and a general sense of having done as much as he can do. Hosmer, however, does not face such severe problems in his district and has reached a point in life where he quite simply feels he would like a change. He said: "I have had a magnificent privilege in being in on the genesis of nuclear energy. We have established procedures which will be in effect for centuries after I am dead. That part of the job is done. I find I am at an age when I am no longer in touch with young people. It is a time when there ought to be some movement and some new faces. Also Congress has changed. It is more difficult and demanding though not more effective."

The departure of these two great figure produces questions about the future of the Joint Committee itself.

PASTORE: A DEVOTED FRIEND HAS LESS TIME

Next year the Chairmanship passes from Melvin Price, the mild-mannered Illinois Congressman who has been Chairman or Vice Chairman since Holifield relinquished the spot three years ago (to take the Chairmanship of the House Government Operations Committee) to Sen. John O. Pastore of Rhode Island. Pastore is a devoted friend of atomic energy, but he has less time for the Committee as an institution than Holifield and is not given to presiding at contract hearings or to leading the Atomic Energy Commission around by the nose, both hallmarks of the Holifield-Hosmer axis. Pastore's way is not to set the pace and the policy, but to oversee it. Essentially he sees the job of the Joint Committee as giving the Atomic Energy Commission the money and the legislation that it needs to do the job. By contrast, Holifield and Hosmer were part of the old guard at the JCAE that decided what had to be done and presided, sometimes overbearingly, over its getting done. Hosmer, Holifield and others, such as former Sen. Clinton Anderson, who gave birth to the Atomic Energy Commission and the nuclear power programs of the last quarter century, were possessive parents. That certainly is gone forever.

But maybe the Joint Committee itself will disappear. Rep. Richard Bolling is preparing recommendations for reorganization of the Congress that will dissolve the Joint Committee, and there are many members of both Houses who believe a legislative joint committee (the JCAE is the only joint committee with the authority to introduce legislation) is a parliamentary aberration and should be abolished.

DO NOT EXPECT THE FIRE, THE WIT, THE AUTOCRACY, THE GENIUS OF THE PAST

If the considerations were purely organizational and parliamentary, then the JCAE itself would no doubt be on its way to retirement. However, with the AEC budget running $3.9 billion this year, it is hard to see how the 18 members of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy will bring themselves to condone its demise, and there is a better than even chance that it will be around next year. But don't expect from it the fire, the wit, the autocracy or the genius of the past.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, it has been a distinct honor and privilege to serve in the Congress with my friend, CHET HOLIFIELD of California.

My friend, CHET HOLIFIELD, is a fine gentleman in every sense of the word and during his tenure as a Member of Congress tenaciously adopted a code early in his tenure of simple, unpretentious demeanor, plain direct expression and the courage and intelligence to face every issue placed before him with assurance and confidence. As a Member of Congress, he has shown generous understanding and sympathetic consideration.

The House of Representatives and the Nation will miss CHET HOLIFIELD. He has established a record that will go down in history.

Few men in any walk of life have attracted so large a share of public attention and attained such honored distinction.

As a Member of Congress, he has never lost the common touch.

It has been a privilege for me to know and to work with CHET HOLIFIELD and I want to wish for him and for the members of his family, the best of everything in the future.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of the special order by the gentleman from New York (Mr. HORTON) and to include therein extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alaska?

There was no objection.

TRIBUTE TO THE HON. THOMAS S. GETTYS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. DAVIS) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. DAVIS of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor a dear colleague and a true friend, the Honorable THOMAS S. GETTYS, of the Fifth District of South Carolina.

All too soon this able legislator will return to his home in South Carolina and leave these halls. He is not departing because of voter dissatisfaction. In fact, if you were to take a poll of the people he has served so well for the last 11 years, I am sure they would say, "Keep Mr. Tom in Congress." It is his own decision to return to South Carolina and—as he puts it—"fish and eat watermelon."

In many ways, Tom GETTYS is a "returnee" to Congress. He worked here shortly before World War II as a secretary to Congressman James P. Richards. When that war broke out, he was one of the first to offer his services to his country. He returned from the war and served his native State as the postmaster of Rock Hill, S. C. until 1954. Always ambitious, he studied law in night school and was admitted to the South Carolina Bar in 1953. Shortly thereafter he began to practice law with two partners as a trial attorney.

Somewhere along the line he learned to tell stories and develop a strong sense of humor. He is acknowledged to be one of the finest "wits" in the entire House of Representatives. This talent in no way hindered his ability as a legislator. As a member of the House Banking and Currency Committee, Tom GETTYS was known as a diligent worker and a conscientious voter.

He has taught school, coached sports, and was a principal in the Rock Hill school system. He has helped the United Fund, the YMCA, and the Chamber of Commerce. He has been a member of the VFW, the Rotary Club, and the American Bar Association to name a few. There is little he has not done or seen.

His leaving will create a void on the South Carolina delegation which will be hard to fill. I will miss his wise counsel and sound advice. I think one of the most descriptive assessments of Tom GETTYS was given by Joseph McCaffery of WMAL in his "Meet the Member" series. He said:

THOMAS GETTYS of South Carolina is a bubbly man, who meets people with gusto, makes friends easily, and keeps them forever.

Such truer words were never spoken. I am glad I got to meet Tom GETTYS, and I look forward to being his friend forever.

Mr. FLOWERS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join my colleagues in recognizing the outstanding service of my friend Tom GETTYS, who is retiring from the House of Representatives after 10 years of continuous service.

I understand he is going back to South Carolina to fish and eat watermelon. In other words, he is moving from Capitol Hill to Rock Hill.

As for fishing, I know he will find it a welcome change to sit on the water's edge rather than tread water as he has done for many years.

As for watermelon eating, I am sure he will find that infinitely preferable to eating words.

As he leaves these premises, we need to remind him that it is never too late to develop a sense of humor, even at the age of 62.

We will miss him in this chamber and we will eagerly await his first batch of fish stories or his first batch of fish, whichever comes first.

My family and I want to extend every good wish for his future health and happiness.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to join my colleagues in recognizing the long and outstanding service of WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN, who is retiring from the House of Representatives after 26 years of service.

He ably represented the people of the Third District of South Carolina and served with distinction as chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee.

We will miss him in this chamber, and I want to extend every good wish for his future health and happiness.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, the Honorable Tom GETTYS of South Carolina truly is one of those good work will be missed in the halls of Congress. He has been a hard worker and a constant friend and these have been his hallmarks ever since he came to Congress in 1964. Now, 10 years later, he can look back on a distinguished career as an important member of the Banking and Currency Committee and the Committee on House Administration and take pride in his accomplishments. Prior to this time he had good training as a staff member on the hill.

Tom GETTYS took his share of the load when he came here and he has never shirked his duty or his conscience. When his friends needed help on legislation or in developing sound positions on the isues, we knew we could call on Tom. He has been a leader in every sense of the word and his service has earned him the respect and admiration of hundreds of Members of Congress who have come, and gone, during his time with us.

Tom GETTYS has been one of those careful and conscientious workers who has gained widespread influence because his friends have known they could trust him and rely upon his guidance. In this way he has exerted unusual influence in legislative matters. I have enjoyed his friendship and I have noted time and again through the years, Tom GETTYS has never hesitated to take a proper and courageous course in support of national defense, a strong and free America, and an economically sound fiscal policy.

He leaves behind a legacy of service which will not soon be surpassed. He carries with him and his family our best wishes in all the years ahead.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, Tom GETTYS is leaving the House, and it makes me very sad.

I have rarely met a more genuine, fair, perfectly delightful human being than our South Carolina colleague.

His great strength and his enormous influence in this body flowed from many great traits, and I would only mention two: a great fund of commonsense, and a gentle manner which made it easy to reconcile differences.

Mr. Speaker, Tom has had a most distinguished public career. I am proud to be his friend, and to have had the great privilege of being with him among his friends, and in his own home in the South Carolina he loves so much.

Tom GETTYS deserves the grateful thanks of his country, and I wish him and his family all the very best the future has to offer.

Mr. BURGNER. Mr. Speaker, it is a rare privilege to join with his legion of friends in honoring Tom GETTYS as he voluntarily retires after a distinguished career in the U.S. House of Representatives.

The good people of the Fifth District of South Carolina have demonstrated their good judgment by returning Tom GETTYS to Congress, year after year, for six terms. He has served them wisely and well.

I had the privilege of serving with Tom GETTYS on the House Committee on Banking and Currency. Although I was a freshman member from the minority party, and Tom a senior member from the majority party, he took the extra time necessary to help smooth the path for a newcomer. I shall always be grateful for the guidance counsel, and hand of friendship extended by this distinguished public servant. I join with all my colleagues in wishing him and his wonderful family only the best as he again takes up his private pursuits.

This House and this country is better for Tom GETTYS tenure here.

Mr. YOUNG of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, South Carolinians have always been proud of our history, our State's natural beauty, and our people. I have, of course, shared that pride all of life.

Nothing in my life has done more to justify, and increase, that pride than my coming to Washington and serving with this State's fine congressional delegation. Tom GETTYS stands out as one of the most delightful and effective Members of this body. He is popular with his colleagues because he has that quality most respected here—he speaks his mind. Tom GETTYS does not leave us wondering where he stands. We do not wonder if Tom GETTYS is going to do what he says he is going to do. Tom GETTYS speaks his mind.

I am proud to have served with Tom GETTYS. I am proud that he and Mary Phillips will be returning to South Carolina with their heads held high. Washington will miss them both.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, former President Lyndon Johnson, who honored me with his friendship as he did many other Members of this body used to say about a man of whom he approved "he'll do to go to the well with." Tom GETTYS who is leaving us after this session to return to his beloved South Carolina is preeminently such a man.

Tom and I came to the House at the same time 10 years ago next month. I have come to know him well. He is a man with a gift of friendship. As my colleagues know, he also has proved himself a legislator of no mean ability—a Member who always did his homework and never neglected to look out for the interests of the people who sent him to Congress.

He is now going back to where he came from and nobody can doubt that he will be welcomed by the citizens of Rock Hill, S.C. Their gain is our loss. Tom GETTYS will be missed in this Chamber where he has served with distinction and honor always with a sense of perspective.

Mrs. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, THOMAS S. GETTYS is leaving the Congress at the conclusion of this session, and I believe his service to his State and the Nation should be recognized.

He made a legion of friends on Capitol Hill, and we will miss his personal warmth and his talents as a legislator. Tom GETTYS has served 10 years in the Congress and previously served as a congressional assistant. Although he is on the other side of the aisle from me, I learned that I could rely on this veteran for expert advice.

Not only are we losing a good friend. Mr. Speaker, but the people of South Carolina are losing a most able Representative in the Congress.

We wish him well.

Mr. BURLESON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is with regret we must bid our colleague Tom GETTYS farewell as he retires from the House of Representatives. He will be remembered with fondness by those of us who have served with him here in the Congress and his contributions to our Nation and the people he represents have been many.

Not the least of his contributions has been his good humor and not only will there be a void in the House Chamber when Tom leaves, but we will be in short supply of good stories to take back home and share with our constituents.

I wish Tom the best as he returns to

December 20, 1974

South Carolina to "fish and eat watermelon," but I know he will continue his contributions to this Nation in many other ways.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I am sad to see a youngster like TOM GETTYS step down, but he has crowded an extraordinary variety of achievements into his 62 years, and he has contributed more than many able and public-spirited people who are far his senior.

TOM GETTYS has managed to reach the top in three separate fields: education, law, and politics. He has established a reputation for excellence which has followed him from specialty to specialty. His diverse interests have led to frequent new directions, and his loss has been felt by his school system, his law firm, and now it will be felt by us. As always, it will be someone else's gain, in this case his family and friends. They will share a very bright future together.

Mr. Speaker, TOM's decade in the House has seemed a very brief time. The House will be losing a fine Representative and a valuable committee member. He has served his constituents and his country well, and he has been a pleasure to work with. My very best wishes go with TOM for many more years of happiness. They will be well deserved.

Mr. WOLFF. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this time to join with my colleagues in paying tribute to TOM GETTYS.

TOM has been unselfishly dedicated to serving the public. During his days as a teacher, coach, principal, Congressional Secretary, Postmaster and legislator, he has devoted himself to improving the quality of life of all Americans.

During his tenure in the Congress, TOM has had a profound impact on the important legislation that will shape our Nation for years to come. Though we may have disagreed at times, I have always respected TOM's actions as I knew that he always acted in ways true to his conscience.

I would also like to pay tribute to the citizens of South Carolina who have shown their good judgment in sending to Washington a man of TOM GETTYS's caliber. I can assure them that they have been well represented over the past 10 years.

I wish TOM all the best fortune as he returns to his home to, as he says, "fish and eat watermelon."

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, recently the House resolved into a Committee of the Whole and TOM GETTYS was handed the gavel. Even before he took his seat in the Speaker's chair, the House rose and gave him a standing ovation. With a friendly gesture, Chairman GETTYS acknowledged the acclaim and turned to the business at hand—but not until after Member after Member had nudged one another to say, "Look at TOM. He's our chairman."

That ovation is a measure of the love the Members of this body, Democrat and Republican alike, have for TOM GETTYS.

For years TOM GETTYS has moved quietly about the floor, exchanging greetings, swapping stories and humorously looking at himself and others in critical yet friendly analysis. He has the ready quip, the pertinent retort, the happy remark about any given situation. Always the gentleman, he debates the issues and casts his votes for his district and the country and tends to the business at hand.

If we had a popularity contest, he would be the leader; and he is a southerner who is highly respected across the board.

It has been my privilege to work with this man here in the House, to attend many functions together, and to learn to love him and his wife Mary. The GETTYS lived next door to us in this city and thus our paths have crossed many times.

Last year I had the privilege to be asked to his district to speak to a radio broadcasters meeting. I did not get to go but our colleague LIONEL VAN DEERLIN did go—and tells me he never had a better time in his life. It was a wonder to behold how much the people of TOM GETTYS's district hold him in high esteem. I do too. He is fine folks. We shall miss him greatly.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from South Carolina, Hon. TOM GETTYS, closes his career of dedicated service in the House of Representatives, I am happy to join with those who want to take special note of his contributions to this body.

TOM GETTYS and I have served together for 4 of the dozen or so years that he has been here. We have been on opposite sides of the aisle as far as our party labels are concerned, but our stand on legislation and issues has been close and I have always considered him as one of the "solid" Members in thought and deed.

It is an understatement to say that he will be missed. He had the knack of not taking himself so seriously that he could not see a bright side to almost every situation. To this approach he added a delightful sense of humor. The proceedings of this Chamber can stand the lighter touch as supplied by TOM GETTYS from time to time.

The cloakrooms abound with TOM GETTYS's stories. Many of them will be repeated in this tribute to him today and this special order could be reprinted as a thesaurus of TOM GETTYS's humor. This is just one more area where he has made a contribution, and these stories will be told and retold as long as people reminisce about the gentleman from South Carolina.

TOM has told his close friends that he is determined to return to his native State to "fish and eat watermelon." He has earned this right and that carefree estate of relaxation and enjoyment is one to which many of us aspire. I am pleased that TOM has made it. I wish him many enjoyable days to compensate for the years, months, and weeks he spent in the service of his district, State, and Nation.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, TOM GETTYS leaves his numerous friends in the Congress countless stories that have often replaced frowns with smiles, laughter, and joy.

He also leaves us with the privilege of having observed a friend who possibly without knowing it, lived the scripture that follows:

But I say unto you which hear, Love your enemies, do good to them which hate you, Bless them that curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you.

And unto him that smiteth thee on the one cheek offer also the other; and him that taketh away thy cloke forbid not to take thy coat also.

Give to every man that asketh of thee; and of him that taketh away thy goods ask them not again.

And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise.

For if ye love them which love you, what thank have ye? for sinners also love those that love them.

And if ye do good to them which do good to you, what thank have ye? for sinners also do even the same.

And if ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thank have ye? for sinners also lend to sinners, to receive as much again.

But love ye your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again; and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be the children of the Highest; for he is kind unto the unthankful and to the evil.

Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful.

Judge not, and ye shall not be judged; condemn not, and ye shall not be condemned; forgive, and ye shall be forgiven: Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete withal it shall be measured to you again.—St. Luke 6: 27-38.

My friend, TOM, I will miss you and so will George.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, as we complete the work of the 93d Congress, I am reminded that our friend and colleague, TOM GETTYS, will be leaving this body and returning to his home in Rock Hill, S.C. He leaves behind a distinguished record of public service and a long list of accomplishments.

Public service has come naturally to TOM and his long and successful career are evidence to that fact. TOM is a personable fellow and found early success as a teacher, coach, and principal in his local school district.

His first taste of congressional life came as a clerk for former Congressman James P. Richards. He learned the ins and outs of Capitol Hill which were to become valuable to him in later life.

He returned to his hometown where he served as Postmaster and participated in numerous civic organizations, working with his fellow citizens in many areas of community development and improvement.

During this time, TOM, again demonstrated his devotion to his goals and his determination of effort by reading law textbooks and essays. With a keen understanding of the law and a self-learned knowledge, he was able to take the South Carolina bar examination and pass it without setting foot in a law classroom.

This drive for excellence has been TOM's mark throughout his congressional career which began in 1964. Through his service on the Banking and Currency and House Administration Committees, he has had an important influence on fiscal and monetary policies of the Nation. It has been through his unceasing efforts that restraint has become a recognized need in our Government today.

December 20, 1974

We are going to miss TOM GETTYS in the future, but his contributions to his district, the State of South Carolina, and the Nation will not soon be forgotten. Albra and I want to wish him and his family every success as they return to their home, and hope that retirement from Congress will not end their contributions to the betterment of mankind, which already have been plentiful.

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, our colleague TOM GETTYS whose days on Capitol Hill go back to 1942 when he served as secretary to former Congressman James P. Richards retires at the end of the session.

I am going to miss TOM GETTYS, not only because of the affinity of our coming up through the ranks as congressional secretaries before being elected to the House but because of the contributions he has made during his 12 years of service at the House.

Serving on the House Banking and Currency Committee, TOM GETTYS has been an effective spokesman for small business. Serving on the Subcommittee on Domestic Finance, TOM GETTYS has been one of the most well-informed members on economic policy. His counsel and advice during these critical times will be missed.

TOM GETTYS has been serving as chairman of the Subcommittee on Contracts of the House Committee on House Administration. In this capacity, TOM GETTYS has been mindful of the efforts to maintain the efficiency and to improve the operations of the House. His leadership in this area will be missed.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to express my best wishes to TOM GETTYS as he plans to return to his beloved South Carolina.

Mr. GIAIMO. Mr. Speaker, TOM GETTYS has led a fascinating career as a teacher, coach, principal, congressional secretary, postmaster and, since 1965, a Member of the House of Representatives from the Fifth Congressional District of South Carolina.

In the House he has served with distinction on the Banking and Currency and House Administration Committees. More than a fine legislator, however, TOM is a remarkably gracious individual. Those of us who have the pleasure to know him as a friend only share in a richer sense this conviction that he is a genuinely warm and sincerely dedicated human being.

We all carry in our own mind's eye our personal reminiscences of TOM GETTYS. His charm and hospitality go far beyond courtesy. He is a true southern gentleman of genuine wit and good temper, of gentleness and decency, of integrity and honesty.

It is his human quality that produced this great sense of friendship and regard that we all have for TOM GETTYS. Now that he is retiring, South Carolina is fortunate indeed to have him permanently back home; and the House of Representatives is a sadder place for his leaving. I wish him my very best on his retirement.

Mr. STUBBLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to pay tribute to my good friend, TOM GETTYS, whom I have appreciated and enjoyed over the years we have served together in the House. I am certain many of you will agree that TOM's sense of humor, his clean jokes and stories have pulled us through many a hectic day in this body.

TOM GETTYS's dedicated service to his country and to the people of his congressional district is unsurpassed and while he will be greatly missed by Members on both sides of the aisle, he will, I am confident, continue to be alert to the needs of the people of South Carolina and to his country as a whole.

My sincere good wishes go with this friend as he returns to Rock Hill to engage in the practice of law.

Mr. HELSTOSKI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to extend my best wishes to Congressman TOM GETTYS who will be returning to South Carolina at the close of this session. Since his election to Congress in 1964, Congressman GETTYS has provided the people of South Carolina's Fifth District with outstanding representation and service.

Through his work as a member of the House Banking and Currency Committee and the House Administration Committee, Congressman GETTYS played a key role in drafting some of the most important bills to come before the House during the past few years.

Widely respected throughout his State for his intelligence and resourcefulness, Congressman GETTYS brought a great deal of wit and warmth to these Chambers. Not only has he been a good friend to the people of his community, but he has been a good friend to many Members of Congress as well.

Mr. Speaker, though TOM GETTYS will no longer represent the people of his community in Congress, I am certain that he will continue to play an important role in the fifth district and that his constituency will continue to benefit from his leadership.

Mr. HELSTOSKI. Mr. Speaker, though Congressman WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN is only one of many Members who will retire from Congress at the end of this session, he will be among those most sorely missed. For 26 years, Congressman DORN has represented the people of South Carolina's Third Congressional District with dignity and dedication.

As chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, Congressman DORN has played a dynamic role in creating and enacting legislation which has helped thousands of veterans throughout the Nation. In addition, he made many important legislative contributions through his work as a member of the Committee on Public Works.

As a member of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, it has been a privilege to work with Chairman DORN on many pieces of legislation, and through working with him I have developed a tremendous amount of respect for his knowledge and expertise.

Mr. Speaker, as you know BRYAN DORN is respected throughout the Nation for the leadership and legislative skill he has demonstrated during his distinguished career of public service. Though he will no longer represent the third district, I am confident that his constituency will continue to benefit from his leadership and experience.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Carolina, our good friend, TOM GETTYS, will be leaving us at the end of this 93d Congress to return to his native State. I know I speak for every Member on this floor when I say that THOMAS SMITHWICK GETTYS will be sorely missed.

To me, TOM is a timeless man. I have known him for 10 years—I have known him forever. A warm-hearted sympathetic man, he has served his country and his people with rare ability and understanding. He has been a fine Member of Congress.

Early in his time with us TOM established an easy rapport with Members on both sides of this center aisle. TOM GETTYS stories abound. They are legion and I have the feeling that the tall tales, the yarns spun by this man from Rock Hill will be told and retold for many a year to come.

A man like TOM GETTYS will be remembered with respect and affection. It has been my privilege and my pleasure to work with TOM and I wish for him and for his family the best of everything in the future.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, during my service in the House many Members have come and gone. We have lost the services of many valuable Members through death, the turn of the political wheel of fortune, by promotions to higher office, and by retirement. It has been my pleasure to know many outstanding Members of this body, but I have never known a Member for whom I have higher regard than my good friend, TOM GETTYS, of South Carolina.

During his lifetime TOM has been a teacher, coach, public school principal, secretary to Congressman James P. Richards, of South Carolina, and he also served for a time as the Rock Hill, S.C., postmaster. During this time he studied law at night and was admitted to the South Carolina bar in 1953.

TOM GETTYS is a hard worker. He has been an outstanding Member of Congress. His absence will leave a real void in this body.

I will always remember TOM for his fine character, sincerity of purpose, loyalty and devotion to duty, as well as the personal friendship I have enjoyed. Industry, integrity, and ability have marked his record of public service.

In his departure from public life, the Nation, the State of South Carolina, and his own district will lose a valuable public servant. May good fortune and happiness go with him as he returns to South Carolina and may the fishing always be good and the watermelons plentiful.

Mr. COTTER. Mr. Speaker, I want to add my voice to those of my colleagues who are lamenting the departure of Tom GETTYS.

For the last 4 years in Congress I have enjoyed my friend from South Carolina who has never failed to enliven the legislative process with his sense of humor.

I will miss the distinctive aroma of Tom's "3 for a nickel" cigars which he smoked continuously as he presided as chairman of the "lower row" on the House Banking Committee.

I can only hope that Tom will take time from his beloved South Carolina to visit us in the years ahead. We will all miss him, but wish him well as he returns home.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, our colleague MENDEL DAVIS invited those of us who have known and loved Tom GETTYS over the years to participate in this tribute and to "bring along your favorite Tom GETTYS story."

Maybe I have known Tom too long and too closely to do that. If he and I do not start telling everything we know on each other, I have a feeling we will both be better off.

Tom was smart enough to quit a job on Capitol Hill in 1951 about the time I took one here. He went home to become the Postmaster of Rock Hill.

I think that this time he has found a job even more suitable to his disposition than Postmaster and that what he really plans to do after a decent interval is to take on a short rural route.

He jumped from the Postmastership to the House of Representatives. Who knows? he might jump from a rural route to the Senate or even the Vice Presidency.

At the rate we are picking Vice Presidents lately, under the 25th amendment, that might be the best option. I am assuring him in advance of my support for that position. I will vote to confirm him in spite of his great wealth and the expetives he has found it necessary to delete from time to time.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with my colleagues in paying tribute to my good friend and colleague, Tom GETTYS of South Carolina. During his tenure in the House, he has distinguished himself as a public servant and will be remembered for his valuable contribution to legislation which has maintained the strength of this nation and at the same time applied brakes on excessive Federal spending. As Tom leaves the Congress, I extend to him and his family my very best wishes.

Mr. NEDZI. Mr. Speaker, the legislative process, as we all know, has its moments of drama and is generally one of the most interesting of activities. But it can have its periods of drabness and tedium, too.

Every legislative body can use men of wit and humor, men who have the gift for composing differences and bridging regional and ideological gaps.

What I am trying to say is that we in the House of Representatives have been lucky this past decade to have had with us Congressman Tom GETTYS, one of the most enjoyable figures on Capitol Hill, a man of wit, folksiness, and all-around good humor.

While we were often on different sides on political issues I liked and respected Tom GETTYS as a human being. Tom brightened our days time and again and he will be missed. I join his many friends in wishing him fine fishing and good eating and all the good things of life.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, as the 93d Congress draws to a close, we have the unhappy task of bidding farewell to many of our colleagues. One I will miss is my good friend, Tom GETTYS.

Tom and I both began serving in the 88th Congress and my admiration of him has grown with each succeeding Congress. Through service on two of our important committees, Banking and Currency and House Administration, Tom's influence has been felt on numerous and varied proposals that have emerged from this Chamber. Even though Tom and I sat on different sides of the aisle, I sought and valued his counsel. And I found him to be not only wise but fair in his views.

Much has been made today of Tom's determination to go home to South Carolina and "fish and eat watermelon". Knowing Tom as we do, we can rest assured that those goals will be pursued with great vigor. I can only hope that Tom will find the time in his busy schedule to return to this hall occasionally. He will find that we have not forgotten his friendship nor his contributions to our Nation.

Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Speaker, Tom GETTYS likes to refer to a trio of House Members as the DSG—not the Democratic Study Group, but rather DAVIS, STEPHENS, and GETTYS.

Now the D and G are leaving and we must listen to Bob STEPHENS of Georgia tell us that the brains of the outfit remain. JOHN DAVIS of Georgia, Bob STEPHENS of Georgia and Tom GETTYS of South Carolina, three close friends and three of the nicest guys ever to serve in the Congress.

My remarks today will be limited to a very sincere tribute to my friend Tom GETTYS. There are few persons with whom I have come in contact whose friendship I have enjoyed as much. He is ready with a quip or joke and he makes telling points on critical details of legislation with an anecdote or story.

In short, Tom GETTYS has that natural wit that few are fortunate to possess. He is also, as we say back home, "a smart cookie."

Tom has seen both sides of office life on the Hill. He served as administrative assistant to Congressman James P. Richards of South Carolina.

Later, he was to be elected to fill a vacancy to the 88th Congress and he has been elected five times since. He would have easily won reelection this year had he not decided to take a well-deserved rest.

He tells us that he is going home to South Carolina to "fish and eat watermelon." Tom is like a farmer in my district who told me he was "gonna put soil in the soil bank, his blood in the blood bank and his posterior on the river bank."

Tom will surely be missed. In his years here, he has made many, many friends, their number in all walks of life on the Hill. I consider it an honor to be among that number.

Mr. DAN DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, for some reason our colleague, Tom GETTYS, has decided to leave us. I find this hard to understand, and cannot imagine why anyone would abandon, voluntarily, the serenity of these marbled halls.

I suppose Tom has given this some thought, although it does appear he has been something of a job-hopper. Teacher, coach, secretary to Congressman Richards, attorney—at one point he even ran away to sea before settling down to join the bureaucrats as postmaster of Rock Hill, S.C.

Tom is such a soft touch that he permitted his favorite golf putter to be pilfered by a colleague and to date has not hailed him into court.

Levity aside, the breadth of his experience has added an extra dimension to Tom GETTYS' character, and his efforts in this body reflect a knowledge and awareness of what it means to function as something other than legislator.

It is my understanding Congressman GETTYS plans to go back to Rock Hill, where he says he will fish and eat watermelon. I have known Tom for many years, and admit to some surprise at learning of his strange eating habits, for I happen to have it on good authority that another item—cheese balls—has been added to the menu. If he has the constitution for this combination, I would not be in the least surprised to learn 6 months from now that he has embarked on some new career.

Tom, we shall miss you greatly. You and your family have our very best wishes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to join my colleagues in paying tribute to my good friend, Tom GETTYS of South Carolina, who is retiring at the conclusion of the 93d Congress.

During my 10 years in the Congress, Tom served as what is affectionately called the "chairmanship of the lower row" on the House Banking and Currency Committee, and I was his whip.

During the 10 years that we served together, Tom has been a conscientious, effective, and dedicated Member of the House Banking and Currency Committee of the Committee on House Administration, where we also served together, and of the House of Representatives itself.

We not only served on the same committees, but we lived in the same apartment building for 6 out of 10 years. He, his wife, and his daughters, and I, my wife, and daughter, Susan, all got to know each other well and became good friends.

We enjoyed the type of relationship that is developed by people who live away from home.

Tom is a great American, dedicated to the principles that have made America a strong Nation. We shall miss him very, very much—especially his warm personality and hospitable friendliness that immediately puts people at ease, and makes friends and strangers alike feel welcome.

My wife, Angie, joins me in extending to Tom and his devoted wife, Mary Phillips, our sincerest best wishes for an abundance of good health and good fortune in the years ahead.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I would wish to commend my close friend and colleague on the House Committee on Armed Services, the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. DAVIS) for arranging this special order in behalf of our friend, Tom GETTYS, who will be retiring at the end of this Congress.

I know there will be many Members of this body who will wish to say a few kind words in behalf of our friend, Tom, and I will not speak at length. I would wish to note, however, that we are losing a valuable Member of this body. Tom GETTYS was a friend of us all and I shall remember him for his good humor and the many stories which he related to his colleagues from time to time, many of which we were able to use in our presentations in our own districts.

Congressman GETTYS, of course, leaves an illustrious record in the Congress. His dedication and his service on behalf of all that is good and great and wonderful has greatly benefited this great country. He has served with dignity and honor for many years on the Banking and Currency and House Administration Committees, and he is certainly beloved by all of us and particularly those of us from the Deep South.

Certainly I would wish to join with his many friends and colleagues in wishing for him and Mary many years of pleasant retirement as he returns to his native State of South Carolina, which in his heart he never left. We will miss him at the Thursday morning prayer breakfast where he was a faithful attendant and we shall miss him in the cloakrooms. If Tom GETTYS had an enemy in the Congress I never knew of it and it is for this reason that I know that he will be welcomed back home by his many friends whom he had served with such dedication over the years.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, for more than 10 years the people of northern South Carolina have been represented in this body by a distinguished gentleman, Thomas SMITHWICK GETTYS.

He has been an eloquent and effective spokesman for them, and it has been a privilege and a pleasure to serve with him.

He has been a hard working and dedicated member of both the Banking and Currency and House Administration Committees. His efforts on these two important committees have earned him the respect and admiration of all of us here in Congress.

It is with sincere personal affection and professional respect that I join in honoring him today. Although he is retiring from Congress, I hope we will continue to receive the benefit of his wise counsel on the important issues which the Congress and the Nation must face.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I arise with mixed emotions to honor my good friend and colleague from South Carolina, the Honorable THOMAS SMITHWICK GETTYS. It is very sad on the one hand to realize that the distinguished congressional career of Tom GETTYS will expire with the 93d Congress; but on the other hand, one is pleased to see his friends happy, and I know how much Tom is looking forward to going back home.

Undoubtedly, during this hour others will discuss how popular and highly respected Tom GETTYS is among his colleagues, this is very important, of course. But there is another aspect to his popularity which I think is very revealing; that is, Tom is a favorite among staff assistants and administrative personnel on Capitol Hill. To me, this says a great deal about the man whom we honor today—a gentle man whose warm and witty manner creates an appeal which spans political and ideological spectra.

During his five terms in Congress, Tom GETTYS has served the Nation with distinction, and he has reflected great credit upon the people of South Carolina. As for that special group of people to whom the Honorable Congressman THOMAS SMITHWICK GETTYS is merely "Tom"—citizens of the Fifth Congressional District of South Carolina—he is an object of pride and deep affection.

Tom GETTYS has been a personal friend of mine, and a counselor whose opinion I value highly. He has been, in the words of Shakespeare, "A gentleman on whom I built an absolute trust." I shall miss Tom, as we all will, and I can only assume that the next Congress will be a slightly less cheerful and friendly place for his leaving.

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues in saluting the gentleman from South Carolina, Tom GETTYS. Like everyone who has known and worked with Tom, I admire his integrity and devotion to the House. He has always been a gentleman, and his contribution to the legislative process will be missed.

TOM GETTYS is a man of good cheer, good will and high purpose.

I hope that he will enjoy good health and pledge to keep us in his counsel.

Mr. ADDABBO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join my colleagues in honoring my distinguished friend and colleague, the Honorable Tom GETTYS, upon his retirement from Congress. As he has often expressed I wish him success and long life in his retirement upon his return to South Carolina to quote him to "fish and eat watermelon."

The record of service compiled by Congressman GETTYS has been a distinguished one.

I have always been an admirer of his ability and energetic approach to his legislative duties. It has been my privilege to serve with him in this Chamber and we shall miss his most valuable participation in our daily deliberations and his sense of joy and humor following the close of this session of Congress.

I join with my colleagues in wishing him a healthy, and enjoyable life in his retirement from Congress.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, as Tom GETTYS leaves the House of Representatives for his beloved South Carolina, all of us in the Chamber feel a deep sense of loss. Tom can count many people in Washington as his friends, and the personal qualities which endeared him to all of us will be surely missed.

In his younger days, Tom served as the secretary to Congressman Jim Richards. Jim was a close friend and often spoke of Tom's leadership abilities, and Tom has indeed fulfilled the promise which he displayed while "learning the ropes" from Jim Richards.

Tom distinguished himself with his effective work on the Banking and Currency and House Administration Committees, and he was always an articulate advocate on important national issues. I know that Tom will continue to speak out in his beloved South Carolina and that his retirement will be productive and enjoyable. Mrs. Morgan and I extend our best wishes to Tom.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, one of the friendliest and most cordial Members of this body whom we shall all miss when he retires is TOM GETTYS of South Carolina. He is the one person who could always brighten your day and offer a word of encouragement.

While mentioning his attributes as a warm and personal friend, I certainly do not intend to overlook his outstanding accomplishments as a lawmaker. TOM is a colleague to whom I always looked for advice on legislation because I knew he had done his homework. I appreciate him freely sharing his knowledge with me and offering very wise and sage counsel.

Mr. Speaker, Tom claims he is going home to South Carolina to do a little fishing and watermelon eating. I do not doubt that he will, but I also have a feeling he will remain active in politics and his community because that is the type person he is. I feel sure he will continue to have an active interest in programs to benefit his fellow South Carolinians and his fellow Americans.

We all wish Tom much happiness and rest in retirement as we bid him a fond farewell.

Mr. COLLINS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to join in honoring Tom GETTYS, our lovable neighbor from South Carolina. Everyone likes Tom, but even more than that, we all respect him because he tells it just as it is.

I have heard many colleagues take an hour and say nothing. I know exactly where Tom stands in 10 seconds.

South Carolina has given this country many of its finest leaders. Tom GETTYS follows the great South Carolina tradition. It reflects honor on the South to have Tom in Washington. Considering the attitude that the general public has about Congress, it will be an enlightening experience when they have Tom back down in South Carolina. Folks can see for themselves that we have had some of the greatest citizens in America serving in Congress. TOM GETTYS is a good man here, in South Carolina, or wherever he hangs his hat.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, one of the most delightful individuals it has been my pleasure to work with in recent years has been the Honorable TOM GETTYS of South Carolina. Tom was always cooperative, always intelligent, always serving the people and his country.

Now he has decided to quit the field of politics, go home and enjoy life. The people are the losers; but we wish him well and hope for him more pleasant years.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleagues in this tribute to my friend, Congressman THOMAS GETTYS of South Carolina.

Tom will be retiring from the House at the end of this session, after serving more than 10 years. In those years he has earned the respect and warm affection of all those who have known him as a friend and colleague. He and I have worked together closely on many matters which came before us on the Banking and Currency Committee. He has also served ably on the House Administration Committee, where he has rightly earned the reputation as a watchdog against wasteful spending of our tax dollars.

We will miss Tom here, but he says he wants to go back to South Carolina to "fish and eat watermelon." It will be a well-deserved rest for one who has tirelessly served the needs and interests of his constituents. I know I speak for us all when I extend to Tom and MARY PHILLIPS my warmest wishes on his retirement.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the South Carolina delegation is losing one of its most popular members this year with the retirement of TOM GETTYS, who has befriended most of Capitol Hill—colleagues and staffers alike—with his ready wit and charm.

Tom has brought a rare combination of talents to the Congress—the wisdom and patience of a teacher, the tenacity of a coach, the administrative skills of principal, postmaster and congressional secretary, the prudence of a banker and the legal expertise of a lawyer. He is a man of many dimensions all of which will be missed as he leaves us for a well-earned rest from the demands of public office.

During my past 6 years in Congress, it has always been a pleasure and an honor to work together with such a cooperative, intelligent and gracious statesman. Tom is one of the few people I have met who possesses the unique quality to make each person feel special whether it be the elevator boy or the President of the United States. We are losing a loyal and effective Member of the House, one who always placed service above self, who represented the Fifth District of South Carolina with tenacity and honor, and one who put the best interest of his country above partisan or parochial interests. Now that he has decided to leave the House, and as we consider his going, we realize how much we will miss him and what a profound influence he has had upon us all.

I join my other colleagues in the House of Representatives in wishing him well and much luck for the future.

Mr. WAGGONER. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to pay tribute today to one of the House's most distinguished Members, my good friend, TOM GETTYS.

As a fellow countryman and southerner, Tom typifies the best America has to offer, both as an elected official and as a warm human being. He knows instinctively what his country needs, and has never been afraid to speak up for what is right in the midst of troubled times. He is truly a fair- and foul-weather friend to his country.

How does one follow up such a distinguished career? It just is not possible, as evidenced by his avowed desire to fish and eat watermelon. If anyone has ever deserved some leisure, Tom should take a double helping.

Tom, all my best to you and your fine family for the future. You have left a string of accomplishments to be mighty proud of, and I am sure our colleagues would agree that it just will not be the same around here without you. God bless you and may you have the best of everything.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the coming 94th Congress will be a distinguished one, but its Members will, in a sense, be among the underprivileged.

That is to say, they will not have the privilege of TOM GETTYS' company. To those of us who have served with this stalwart son of York County, S.C., for the past decade, that is indeed deprivation.

They say misery loves company, and that may be true. But misery cannot hold a candle to optimism and high good humor when it comes to attracting companions. THOMAS SMITHWICK GETTYS is living proof of that. Wherever he is, whether on the floor of the House or at some reception of state, or even in a small gathering, TOM GETTYS will always be found in the center of a clutch of friends—telling his stories and making the day a little brighter.

The friend we salute today is like the sundial—he counts but the sunny hours. I was truly sorry to learn earlier this year that TOM GETTYS had decided not to stand for reelection, but had opted instead to go home and "fish and eat watermelon."

Now that he is really going to do it, I can only say that all of the 434 House Members who belong to the TOM GETTYS fan club wish him well.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, no man leaving this Congress will ever leave behind him a greater well of friendship among the Members than the gentleman from South Carolina (TOM GETTYS). It is always a pleasure to be with him. He has the world in perspective. He never loses his cool and never loses his sense of brotherhood. Perhaps these are the reasons he has been such a fine legislator for his district and for the country. We will certainly miss him here next year and the years that follow.

Mr. CEDERBERG. Mr. Speaker, the departure of our dear friend and colleague TOM GETTYS, will end a truly colorful chapter in the annals of this legislative body. His familiar face has always been a welcomed addition to any gathering on either side of the aisle.

The mention of TOM GETTYS will forever spark recollections of a personality, unique, fascinating, and constantly exhibiting enjoyable, new facets. The TOM GETTYS stories are many—all a tribute to a man who in 10 short years has enriched the lives and enliven the conservations of many.

TOM GETTYS was around Capitol Hill long before most of us even thought about running for Congress. His tenure as the Secretary to the former Congressman James P. Richards from the district which he now represents, prepared him well for the job. His contributions while a member of the Banking and Currency Committee compare favorably with the achievements of Members many years his senior in service.

His assiduous attention to his job and to his position will be remembered by his constituents as well as his colleagues. Never one to shirk responsibility, TOM GETTYS was a whirlwind of activity. If you needed someone who you were confident would get the job done, you asked TOM GETTYS to shoulder the position. Willingly he took on a myriad of tasks, chairing and administering activities on a wide spectrum from the legislative arena to social philanthropy to religious service.

His impeccable character is reflected in the high standards by which he lived. TOM GETTYS is indeed a credit to his family, to this Congress, and most importantly, to himself.

I join with my colleagues in wishing TOM GETTYS many years of health and happiness to enjoy the famous southern hospitality of South Carolina.

Mrs. MINK. Mr. Speaker, I have not decided who shall miss TOM GETTYS more—us here in the House or constituents whom he has served so ably these past 10 years.

TOM GETTYS is a member of that distinguished class of freshmen who entered in the Johnson "coattail" election of 1964. As a classmate of the famous 89th, he will now have time to write his chapter covering his 10 years of service as the Congressman from the Fifth Congressional District of South Carolina in our book which I hope someday to edit. All 67 of us on the Democratic side who joined the 89th club will always remember TOM as one of the greatest. We wish him well and look forward to his presence at one of our gala reunions in the future.

Mr. MCCLORY. Mr. Speaker, it is with a sense of some personal emotion that I rise to pay final tribute to our colleague, Representative TOM GETTYS who has elected voluntarily to retire at the end of this Congress.

During my service here on Capitol Hill, I do not recall any Member whom I hold in greater respect or honor than TOM GETTYS. TOM and MARY GETTYS are a highly honored and honorable pair who have brought their warm personalities and outstanding talents and their high idealism to our Nation's Capital. Both have been active participants in their respective prayer breakfast groups. My wife, Doris, shares these warm feelings of affection and respect.

Mr. Speaker, we are pleased to join today in extending to Congressman TOM GETTYS and his wife, MARY GETTYS, our good wishes for a long and enjoyable and healthful life together.

TRIBUTE TO THE HON. WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, it will be difficult for those of us present at the convening of the 94th Congress to accept the fact that our colleague WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN will not be among those taking the oath again. He is an exceptional public servant, a fair, perceptive, decent, and humane man.

I have often envied his gift of eloquence, and I think it fair to say that he is one of the best half-dozen speakers to serve in the House in modern times.

Mr. Speaker, it was right and proper that his service in this Congress was capped by his being chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee of the House. His longtime expertise in affairs involving veterans, and his compassion for their problems will continue to benefit millions of his fellow Americans.

May I also express my strong personal regret that he was denied, by an unusual set of circumstances, the honor of serving as Governor of his beloved South Carolina. He would have been a great Governor.

Representative DORN's 26 years among us in this House have been years of achievement, distinction, honor, and warm friendships. We will all miss this exceptional colleague. I wish him and his family the very best.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, when WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN retires as a Member of the House at the end of the 93d Congress, it will not mark the close of a career of public service that he began at the age of 23 as the youngest member of the South Carolina Legislature. He leaves us to become Governor of his native State.

This is a man who has dedicated his life to the service of his State and his country. He served in both the House and the Senate in South Carolina, resigning from the latter body to volunteer for the Army Air Force in World War II. He was first elected to Congress immediately after the war and since 1950 has served consecutive terms in the House. He knows everybody here, and everybody here knows WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN as a friend, as an effective legislator, as chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee and hardworking member of the Public Works Committee.

He has made his mark in this body. All of us who know him have full confidence that he will continue to be an achiever as Governor of his home State. In leaving us, he takes with him the best wishes of all with whom he has served here.

Mr. YOUNG of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the dean of South Carolina's congressional delegation is leaving you, but he is leaving a proud record of service to the people of his State and the veterans of this Nation behind him.

CXX—2641—Part 31

It is hard to look back at a record as distinguished as BRYAN DORN's and pick out only one or two accomplishments from the many available.

I believe, however, that what I shall remember most about BRYAN is his eloquence. I recall being on the floor of the House and feeling a hush come over the Chamber when BRYAN DORN began to speak. The cloakrooms would empty. The press galleries would fill. And we would all listen.

BRYAN DORN has that rare faculty of eloquence. His words have deeply moved each of us on more than one occasion, and they have changed the course of events. This is BRYAN DORN's leadership. This is our loss.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, for over a quarter of a century the name of WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN has been associated with causes which were for the good of America. He has been one of the most outspoken champions of freedom and opportunity and the principles of America in the history of Congress. His voice probably has been heard in more cities and towns than that of any other Member now serving in the House. I have truly enjoyed my association with BRYAN DORN, and it is with great regret that I note his departure from the Halls of Congress.

Few who have served in Congress have established a more outstanding record than this sincere and dedicated Member of the House. He has been honest in his work, diligent in his efforts, and devoted to his constituents and his State. He has placed the interests of his Nation above all others. In these aspects of public life, anyone would be well advised to follow his lead and example. I have enjoyed BRYAN DORN's friendship. I first came to know him in 1947 when he became a Member of Congress. He left the House in 1948 to seek a Senate seat, but returned to the House in 1951. Since that time he has worked hard particularly in the area of veterans affairs, serving as chairman of the committee, and as a key member of the Public Works Committee. In both fields of interests, he has left his mark. Much of the progressive legislation which has gone to benefit veterans in our time bears the stamp of WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN. Numerous public works projects properly could be named in his honor.

But it was not honor which he has sought. Instead, he has striven to do only what is right and he has succeeded. As a result, he has gathered unto himself honors he did not seek, power which he did not abuse, and friends too numerous to count.

Those of us who have relied on him for guidance and help will miss the voice, the services, and the friendship of BRYAN DORN. We can proudly remember all that has been accomplished by this outstanding public servant and our prayers and good wishes go with him and his family to South Carolina.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN, our good friend and colleague will be retiring from Congress at the close of this session. I want to take just a few minutes to wish him well and to call to the attention of this body his outstanding accomplishments as a Member of Congress.

BRYAN has had a long and distinguished career in public service, one of which he can be justifiably proud. That career has touched the lives of many Americans and has made their world a little better because of his dedicated devotion to serving the country he so fiercely loves.

His 26-year contribution to the people of South Carolina began when he was elected in 1938 as the youngest member ever to serve in the South Carolina legislature. Two years later he expanded his service as the youngest man to be elected to the State Senate. After dedicated and demanding service with our armed services in World War II, BRYAN returned to public service as a Congressman, beginning what would become 26 years of unfailing dedication to the service of the people of his district.

I have had the pleasure to work with him as a member of the Committee on Public Works. I have come to respect his knowledge, thoroughness, and skill in working with the legislative process. His contributions to the effectiveness of the committee and his assistance in the drafting of major legislation has been invaluable.

Perhaps his greatest achievements have come through his service on the House Veterans' Affairs Committee. In the 93d Congress he has had the privilege to serve as chairman of that important committee. Through his work on this committee, he has helped to prepare legislation effecting this Nation's vast population of veterans. A decorated veteran himself, he has understood the problems faced by our veterans and has authored legislation designed to improve the benefits available to those men and women who have so honorably served their country.

He has capped his distinguished career in veterans affairs with two major pieces of legislation which came before the House during this session. I refer to the Veterans' Education and Rehabilitation Act amendments and the Veterans' Survivors Pension Adjustment Act.

I cannot conclude my praise for this salutary Representative without expressing my deep appreciation for his friendship and understanding throughout the years we have served together. I am confident that his leadership, his devotedness, and his oration will be sorely missed, for indeed they rank as highly as those of his namesake.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, all of us know that the House is about to lose many of its finest Members. One of the biggest losses will be the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. DORN). I have never experienced a Congress without BRYAN DORN and I have never wanted to. To say he will be missed seems too obvious and understated. He is a first-class Congressman and a first-class person, and his absence will be felt deeply.

As his parents must have sensed when selecting a name, WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN is a public servant. That is a simple way to describe him, but it is hardly a simple thing to be. For year after year BRYAN DORN has maintained his energy, his compassion, and his commitment to the highest principles of public service. Very few can make that claim.

December 20, 1974

BRYAN DORN's accomplishments as chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee are well known to this body. His ability and dedication have paid off in a much fairer shake for our Nation's veterans. Countless bills have been passed to update and expand benefits to every sort of veteran. Numerous inequities have been eliminated. Time and again Chairman DORN's bills have been honored with overwhelming majorities in the House and support from all parts of the American public. He has compiled a record that will shine for many years to come.

My very best wishes go with BRYAN as he returns to his beloved South Carolina to enjoy its many pleasures full time. He has never lost touch with the land and people of his native State, and it should be a very happy reunion indeed.

Mr. TEAGUE. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I had occasion to observe that the U.S. House of Representatives is a stern judge of character. It has been my observation that prolonged service in the House will reveal a man for what he is. My colleague, WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN, chairman of the House Veterans' Affairs Committee, came to the Congress when I did and is now retiring. He has spent all of his adult life in public service and most of it in the House of Representatives. It is here that he has stood the test and demonstrated the traits of character and personality that have endeared him to us. He is a true southern gentleman, unfailingly friendly and courteous and dedicated to the Congress and the Nation.

He supports and speaks of a strong national defense in plain unequivocal terms. He has been a champion of the veterans throughout his congressional career and has participated in scores of important bills which have been enacted. He has participated in all of the landmark legislation—the Korea G.I. bill, the war orphan scholarship program, the revised pension program, the Vietnam veterans' education bill, the National Cemetery Act, the Veterans' Health Care Expansion Act of 1973, and many, many more. His efforts have been recognized by every major veteran organization who have granted him their highest awards.

There are several kinds of Members. There are those that enjoy the technicalities of legislation. There are those that participate in the intrigues of leadership. And there are those who are tuned to their constituents, and BRYAN DORN is one of those. He draws his strength from his native State and its people. He thrives on contact with his constituents and is thoroughly human in his approach to the office. The new Veterans Administration Hospital being constructed in Columbia, S.C., and the new medical school which will operate in conjunction with it, will stand as tribute to his energy and devotion to his people.

He is the last of the great school of orators and there are none in the House that surpass him. We will miss him and his voice and his leadership.

Mr. WOLFF. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join with my colleague from South Carolina in paying tribute to Mr. DORN. I have had the pleasure of serving with Mr. DORN on the Veterans' Affairs Committee. I have great respect for Chairman DORN and I will always remember his patience and fairness in dealing with the members of his committee. Under his leadership the Veterans' Committee has worked on some of the most important veterans legislation that the Congress has ever conceived. It was my pleasure to work with the chairman on numerous constructive measures, including the GI bill of rights for Vietnam veterans and the veterans' pension improvements which he guided through the Congress so skillfully. His attention to the needs of the veteran in the fields of education, medicine, and other benefits will be long remembered by the veterans of this country. I have special and fond memories of working with Mr. DORN to convert St. Albans Naval Hospital to the new St. Albans Veterans Hospital which will service the needs of veterans in my district in New York.

Congressman DORN has not restricted his work to improving the lives of our veterans but has worked on a number of constructive programs in several fields. As the ranking member of the important Public Works Committee he has been involved with legislation which positively affected our highways, rivers, harbors, watersheds, public buildings, and environment. He has also been very concerned with our energy needs and the energy needs of this country in the future. He has been a leader in the drive to construct the Alaska Pipeline and to construct a series of deepwater ports which will be capable of handling the supertankers which will carry the oil which is being transported to this country for use in the years to come. Mr. DORN has been a leader in Congress for many years. I will always remember Mr. DORN for the sound advice he has given me on many issues of mutual concern and also for the guidance he has given the Congress on the pressing issues I have mentioned which were of special concern to him. I wish him the best of everything as he leaves Washington and returns to South Carolina.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, some of those who have served in the House with Congressman BRYAN DORN for a few years know what a wonderful fellow and outstanding legislator he is. Some of the new Members, however, have never seen WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN in the well of the House delivering one of his spirited orations. He can debate with the best of them, making forceful points, quoting from Scripture as well as the Muses, and, at the right moment, he can pierce his rapier finger upward at his target and drive home a point as clearly as a tarheel shipbuilder. He is our courtly gentleman.

Moreover, he has been the heir apparent to the King of the Cloakroom since the demise of our late and dear friend George Andrews.

Sometime people have been led to believe that BRYAN DORN is not always following the debate in detail. But ask him a question on any bill and he will amaze you with his accurate knowledge and timely diagnosis.

BRYAN DORN has been an outstanding Representative and a forerunner of the New South. He votes from facts, from his heart, and with compassion. He has shown courage on many votes. In the finest sense, he is a great American. It has been my deep privilege to serve with him for these past several years.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to participate in this farewell salute to our distinguished colleague from South Carolina, the Honorable WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN.

Although I have only been here for 4 of the 26 years he has served in the House of Representatives, I have come to know the gentleman well. We have labored on the House Public Works Committee together. I know him for his understanding of the legislative process and the role of the committee in this process. He is knowledgeable and competent and those of us with less experience learned from him in the day to day business of the House and the work of its committees.

As effective as Congressman DORN was on the Public Works Committee, he is better known for his leadership on the Committee on Veterans' Affairs. There are millions of veterans and their dependents who are more secure and more appreciated today because of the attention he has given their needs and their special problems.

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN will be long remembered for his years as a legislator in the House of Representatives but the heartfelt thanks of these veterans and their families for his monumental role in veterans legislation will echo down the corridors of time.

I wish the gentleman well in whatever manner he chooses to continue his career of public service. I hope our paths cross again. It is an honor to have known him and to have served with him. He is one of the chosen people.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to join with my colleagues in paying deserved tribute to our retiring friend from South Carolina, WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN.

During his career in this body which spans almost three decades he has been a diligent, conscientious and effective legislator. In particular he has been the friend and advocate of those Americans who have been called upon to offer the ultimate for America, our veterans. He is a true southern patriot in the finest and most honorable sense; a man for whom love of and service to country is instinctive, yet who demonstrates this trait as a gentleman, carrying his patriotism in his heart and not on his sleeve.

When I was first elected to this body BRYAN DORN was a man upon whom I looked with great respect. This respect has continued to grow. Certainly any man who carries a name as distinguished as WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN is immediately burdened with a responsibility. This is a name to live up to. And this he has done until there is no doubt today that the name is associated with the man, not the man with the name.

December 20, 1974

Mr. Speaker, there is much, much more that could and should be said of BRYAN DORN but if we are to get home by Christmas time will not permit. I would add only that he is a true son of the South and has been an outstanding member of this body. He will be missed and I wish him health, happiness, and success.

Mr. BURLINSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join my colleagues in honoring our friend WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN, who is retiring from the House of Representatives after 26 years of distinguished service.

Those of us who have served with BRYAN over the years will miss him a great deal and his great contributions, particularly in the area of veterans affairs, in his capacity of chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee.

BRYAN will have other pursuits, I know, but I hope he will also have a measure of quiet, calm retirement, which he so well deserves.

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in taking this opportunity to pay tribute to a good friend and a great legislator, WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN, who is retiring after 26 years of distinguished service in the House.

As his namesake, WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN has been a servant of the people, a public official who believes that the business of Government is to serve the people. The veterans of this country can attest to this statement. Because of his leadership as chairman of the House Veterans' Affairs Committee, the veterans have a new education bill and pension bill.

BRYAN DORN's service on the Public Works Committee has been of great benefit to the people of South Carolina and the Nation. Serving on the Subcommittee on Economic Development, the Subcommittee on Transportation and the Subcommittee on Water Resources, BRYAN DORN has developed legislative expertise in three vital policy areas which are important to this Nation's future. His departure is a loss to all of us who have counted on him for counsel and leadership.

It is my hope that BRYAN DORN will not retire from the political scene. While he and I have not agreed upon every issue which has been before the House, I can state that he has been a Member whose service in the House has made a difference. He has helped fashion into law many of the important measures which have benefitted the people of this Nation.

Mr. GIAIMO. Mr. Speaker, very few men have devoted their lives so completely to the service of their country as has WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN.

At the age of 23 he became the youngest member elected to the South Carolina State House of Representatives. At 24 he was the youngest State senator ever elected in South Carolina. In 1942 he resigned from his Senate seat to volunteer in the Army Air Force and join his six brothers who were serving in World War II. He was first elected to the House of Representatives in 1946. Two years later he was the runner-up in a field of five for the U.S. Senate. In 1950 he returned to the House where he has continuously served the people of the Third Congressional District, and the Nation, for nearly a quarter of a century.

As chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee he has skillfully managed legislation to benefit those Americans who, like BRYAN DORN himself, have unselfishly given so much to their country. I am pleased to join my colleagues in wishing him the very best in his retirement. Perhaps the finest tribute that can be paid to BRYAN DORN is to note that he is admired even by those who frequently disagree with him on philosophical or ideological grounds. As he takes our fondest well wishes with him, he leaves behind accomplishments that will be with us for generations.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, our esteemed colleague, BRYAN DORN, has served in this Chamber for 26 years. For 20 of those years it has been my privilege to know and to work with him. I have been given an opportunity to observe a man of unique ability.

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN has been an outstanding Member of Congress. He possesses qualities to which we all aspire; those of judgment, patience, and leadership. I have never known him to equivocate. It has been his mark to face every issue with a courage that could only come from an inner belief that what was to be done should only be done if it were in the best interests of our Nation and our people. BRYAN DORN has never failed in this respect and his record will so state.

A man who has given so much, a man who has served so well, will be missed in Washington. He leaves with us a standard not easily matched and I wish for him and for his family all the good things they deserve.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to join with my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives in paying the highest respects to Congressman WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN, who is retiring after 26 years of distinguished service. I know you all join me in extending good will to BRYAN and in expressing appreciation for the many contributions he has made in the U.S. Congress.

As chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, he has long been a dedicated worker and an eloquent spokesman for the veterans of America. BRYAN has distinguished himself not only as a Congressman, but as a loyal public servant contributing immeasurably to the well-being of the entire Nation.

A veteran with distinguished service in World War II, BRYAN has devoted his time and effort to making life better for our veterans. In this endeavor he has been most successful.

I wish to express to Congressman DORN my personal gratitude for his kindness and helpfulness. Each time I have sought his counsel and advice, he has extended to me every courtesy and consideration. No finer gentleman, no more courageous man has ever served in this body.

I know that BRYAN will be sorely missed because of his ability and because of the good work that he has done on behalf of America's veterans.

I wish for my colleague and good friend, BRYAN DORN, the very best of everything that life can bring.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, personifying his eminent namesake, WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN has become a legend in his own time.

A living tapestry of statesman, legislator, countryman, and patriot, BRYAN DORN brings nobility and true manhood into a new living enrichment.

Although knowing him but briefly, I soon knew that Congressman DORN was one of the rarest jewels in our Nation's Capitol. His southern charm, rich voice, prolific mind, and compassionate heart found true ennoblement in the sincerity of his dedication, and his caring for people.

The more than 29 million veterans esteem him as champion of their cause. Like Lincoln, he made it a work of labor, to remember those who had served, their loved ones, and their progeny.

Congress will be the poorer when this fine gentleman steps down and removes the mantle of office that he has magnified so well. His oratory will move to other halls, and his compelling messages will be directed to other ears. I personally hope he chooses to cross the country and share his golden words with a generation that hungers for this kind of truth and thrills for his kind of brilliance.

BRYAN DORN knows and believes what is right about our country. He adores its beauty, loves its people, and honors its legacies. He has been showered with honors, hailed with plaudits, and cited in verse and prose. Perhaps the rest of America may now be able to receive what he has so generously given us—counsel and wisdom, affection and compassion. May he live beyond measure and receive beyond treasure. We salute this Demosthenes with a tender heart.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to pay tribute to BRYAN DORN.

Not only has he distinguished himself by his service as a member of this body, but he has been a personal friend to me.

His wife, Mille, is a native of Harnett County, N.C. in my congressional district where some of her family still live; and BRYAN has made it his business to be personally helpful to me in many ways, not the least of which has been to speak in North Carolina on my behalf.

Bryan has a lot of good years ahead of him, and I hope they will be pleasant ones. If he gets tired of a life of ease in

December 20, 1974

South Carolina, Millie can always bring him back home to North Carolina. They will always find the latchstring out there.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to join with my colleagues in paying tribute to one of our most eminent members, WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN.

I deeply regret that BRYAN decided not to seek reelection because his presence in this Chamber will be sorely missed. We shall miss him not only as a friend but as a skilled legislator who has faithfully served his constituents and the Nation for 26 years.

BRYAN's accomplishments are numerous and far-reaching but I will remember him best for all that he has done in behalf of our Nation's veterans. Several years ago, I had the honor of jointly sponsoring with BRYAN the Disabled American Veterans Day here at the Capitol. I recall his sensitivity to the needs of our veterans and his determination to see that we in Congress responded to those needs. BRYAN was deeply committed to honoring our debt to the men and women who served our country. In turn, millions of Americans are indebted to BRYAN DORN.

Mr. Speaker, a long and distinguished congressional career is nearing an end. I join with BRYAN's many friends in wishing him well in the coming years.

Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Speaker, WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN got his name from one of the greatest orators of all time. That name has special significance for those of us serving in the House from Florida, for the daughter of WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN is the only woman to have served in the Congress from our great State.

I don't know when I first heard of BRYAN DORN, but I know it was before I was privileged to be elected to Congress. I remember that I had a high regard for him by his reputation and since I have had an opportunity to serve with him, that regard has continued to grow.

After 13 terms in the Congress, he is to leave our midst, but I predict that he will not be leaving public life. There is just too much ability and energy in this Carolinian for that to happen.

All of us who have known him and enjoyed his friendship are going to miss him in these Chambers.

It is fitting to recount what a distinguished record of public service he has amassed. He was elected to the South Carolina House at the age of 22 and seated by special vote in the State senate at 24. Little wonder that he would seek and be elected to Congress at 30.

Yet, if there were one aspect of service that sticks out in my mind about BRYAN DORN, it is the fact that he was one of seven brothers to serve this Nation in its armed services in World War II.

Everything that BRYAN DORN has attempted to do, he has done well. He is a master legislator, keen of mind and brilliant in his understanding of the intricacies of the House floor.

All of us who have been privileged to serve with him consider it a rare privilege.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, "Biennial elections," wrote Fisher Ames in 1788, are "a security that the sober, second thought of the people shall be law." So it has been for over two decades of service in this House by the Honorable WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN, chosen by the people of the Third District in his home State of South Carolina to represent them—a choice confirmed by the voters time and again. He has enjoyed the confidence and support of his constituents, and the trust and respect of his colleagues in the Congress.

Political life has been his chosen vocation from the beginning, as befits one who bears the proud name of one of America's great orators and political leaders. Born in Greenwood, S.C., in 1916, he was elected at 23 to the State house of representatives—1939–1940—and to the State senate in 1940—at 25. He answered his Nation's call in World War II, serving in the Army Air Force.

In 1946, at the age of 30, he was elected to Congress. Defeated in his Senate bid in 1948, he returned to the House in 1950, and has served with distinction ever since.

As chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, he has played a major role in providing vital services for millions of our fellow citizens whose rightful claims upon the Nation he has consistently championed. As a member of the Public Works Committee, he has been active in the subcommittees concerned with Economic Development, Energy, Transportation, and Water Resources: areas of crucial concern in these troubled times.

Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in paying tribute to a distinguished American, the chairman of the Veterans Affairs Committee, Honorable WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN. How fast my 10 years of service in the Congress have passed. I remember when I first came to Congress, WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN, in a special order, welcomed me to the Congress of the United States.

Those of us in the Congress know that there is no finer orator in the House than Chairman DORN. He has been a dedicated American, working long and hard in the best interests of our veterans, and as I have said, as chairman of the Veterans Affairs Committee, he has been a champion of all of those who have served in the armed forces at home and abroad. He has championed their cause, and because of his great stewardship on this committee, our veterans enjoy generous benefits—pensions, hospital care, education, VA mortgage-insured homes, and domiciliary care—that no other country is able to provide to its veterans.

I have had occasion to go to Chairman DORN on matters affecting my constituents, such as the situation confronting the men who fought in the armies of France and Britain on the side of the Allies—men of Polish and Czech extraction who were driven from their homelands by Hitler's armies and who joined in the cause of freedom.

Chairman DORN's encouragement, his suggestions, and his valuable advice were responsible for H.R. 13377, which passed the House of Representatives by a vote of 341–40. This legislation is now pending in the Senate Veterans Affairs Committee.

I know that thousands of these freedom fighters will always cherish and remember the spirit of WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN, who said in committee hearings that these great freedom fighters are not looking for a handout, but want to be recognized by the greatest free Nation in the world, America, for their contribution in the fight for freedom so that people can live as brothers with dignity in a free society.

All Americans owe a debt of gratitude to the patriotism and to the love of country that WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN has always displayed, has fought for, and has worked hard to preserve.

Mrs. Annunzio joins me in extending to his wife and to his five daughters our sincerest best wishes for an abundance of good health and happiness in the years ahead. We are sorry to see him go, but I also want to say to Chairman DORN—if you get too lonesome in retirement, come back to the People's House—the House of Representatives—where you will always be welcome.

Mr. DAN DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, very soon now we will say goodbye to WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN. No man with whom I have served will be any more missed by his colleagues.

BRYAN's parents displayed a degree of clairvoyance in selection of a name, for he rivals "The Great Commoner" in his powers of oratory. It was a high favor to me in an earlier campaign that he came to the fifth district to speak on my behalf, and gratifying that he allowed me to return the favor.

He has served the people of South Carolina's Third District for 26 years here in the Congress, but his record of public service is longer than that. He was the youngest man elected to South Carolina's house in 1939, and was seated in that State's senate by special vote at the age of 24. When the final bells are rung for the 93d Congress, WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN will have devoted half a Biblical life span to public service, and that service has been illustrious.

Our colleague has served on the Committee on Veterans Affairs during his entire congressional tenure, and has labored diligently and tirelessly in the best interests of those who are veterans of our Nation's wars.

His efforts did not stop there, for he has worked without ceasing on behalf of The American Legion's Boys' State.

It is our great good fortune that BRYAN has exerted his prodigious powers of persuasion in such worthwhile causes, and we are grateful, indeed.

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN's leaving is a great loss.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend my colleague and friend, JIM MANN, for arranging this Special Order to pay tribute to one of our most distinguished Members, the Honorable WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN

December 20, 1974

DORN, who is retiring from the Congress after 26 years of dedicated and effective service to the people in his State.

Each Member of the Congress in his own special way makes his contribution and in my time in public service I have never known a more able or a more eloquent, or a more persuasive Member. Congressman DORN is in many ways a chip off the old block for he inherited the ability of his illustrious namesake to speak effectively and forcefully and in such a persuasive and entertaining manner that on the rare occasions that he took the microphone the cloakrooms on both sides of the aisle emptied to hear what this distinguished South Carolinian had to say.

His service to the veterans of America is well known to those of us in this body and to the service organizations, and of course he most ably chaired the Veterans Affairs Committee of this Congress and it was through his untiring efforts that bill after bill benefiting the veterans of all wars was passed in the Congress.

As I sat next to him this morning at the Thursday morning Prayer Breakfast I thought of his deep devotion to his church, and I recalled his service to our prayer group and the very able manner in which he presided as the President of this group several years back.

We will miss this distinguished son from the Palmetto State and I shall especially miss his friendship and the many pleasant associations we had together in the House Chamber over the years. Certainly I would wish to join with my colleagues in wishing him every success as he and his lovely wife, Mildred, return to South Carolina, and I know whatever endeavor he elects to pursue in the years ahead that he will be equally successful in these pursuits as he has been in the U.S. Congress.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, although I have not had the privilege of serving with our departing friend, BRYAN DORN, as long as many Members of this body, I have had the pleasure of working very closely with him during the past 4 years. I have also been fortunate in knowing and working with my fellow South Carolinian for many years before that. BRYAN has done an outstanding job in representing the third congressional district for 26 years.

His record of public service began in the South Carolina House of Representatives in 1939. He was the youngest member of that body. Two years later he became our youngest state senator, being seated by special vote because he had not quite reached the required age of 25. He resigned his seat to enter the Army Air Corps, serving for 3½ years during World War II.

BRYAN DORN has demonstrated his patriotism both by eloquent words and affirmative deeds throughout his entire life. For this he has received honors and awards too numerous to mention from patriotic, civic, and service organizations and veterans groups. These have been richly deserved.

It is fitting that our colleague should have served on the Committee on Veterans Affairs and become its chairman. His service has been characterized by a deep concern for the welfare of those men and women who have worn the uniform of our country. In turn, our veterans have demonstrated their understanding and appreciation for his efforts by recognizing his accomplishments many times and in many ways.

This is an occasion of mixed emotions—pleasure that a friend will now have a well-deserved opportunity to take things easy for awhile and sadness that we will be losing one who has rendered long and outstanding service as a Member of this body. At the same time I am sure that we will still find BRYAN willing to give us the benefit of his counsel and advice and to share the wisdom which he has acquired during his years of public life.

We will all miss BRYAN DORN. We will miss his lovely wife, Millie, and their children. I know that my colleagues on both sides of the aisle join me in wishing them many years of happiness and good health.

Mr. ADDABBO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join my colleagues on both sides of the aisle in honoring our distinguished friend and colleague the Honorable WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN, the chairman of the Veterans Committee, upon his retirement from Congress. The record of service compiled by Congressman BRYAN DORN has been 26 years of distinguished service in the U.S. Congress.

I have always been a true admirer of his ability and his energetic approach to his legislative duties. It has been my privilege to serve with Congressman BRYAN DORN in this Chamber and we shall miss his participation in our daily deliberations following the close of this session of Congress. We lose a great statesman and dedicated public servant who has been of great aid to many.

I join with my colleagues in wishing him a healthy, enjoyable and long life in his retirement from Congress.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, it is my great pleasure to honor BRYAN DORN as he leaves the House of Representatives at the end of the 93d Congress.

For 26 years he has served his South Carolina constituents well, and their affection for him is matched by the affection of the Members in this Chamber. BRYAN's career is distinguished by his devotion to the people of South Carolina and his concern for people all across our great Nation.

I would like to focus on his contributions to our servicemen as chairman of the House Committee on Veterans Affairs. This committee has the task of insuring that veterans receive their fair share of America's resources, and BRYAN DORN has played an important role in the development of the effective legislation which has been reported by that committee. He has earned the respect of those who served in the Armed Services, their families, his colleagues in the House, and all Americans who realize the sacrifices made by veterans. I know that BRYAN has been most concerned about providing adequate health care in VA hospitals, and he has always been receptive to my suggestion in this regard.

Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Morgan and I extend our best wishes to BRYAN on his retirement. His hard work and dedicated service to America will remain an inspiration to all of us.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have this opportunity to publicly express my deep appreciation to the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. DORN, for his many contributions to the national welfare during more than a quarter of a century of public service.

As the ranking minority member of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, I have witnessed at first hand his outstanding leadership as chairman of this committee having legislative jurisdiction over benefits totalling more than $12 billion annually. BRYAN DORN has co-authored every important piece of veterans legislation that has been enacted into law in recent years. I am happy to say that the gentleman has always placed the welfare of the Nation's veterans above any partisan considerations.

It has also been my privilege to serve with the gentleman on the Committee on Public Works. As a member of the Economic Development Subcommittee, I observed the skillful manner in which he chaired the lengthy hearings on this subject.

I have travelled with my distinguished chairman and I have listened in awe to his brilliant oratory. No Member, I am sure my colleagues will agree, has a greater capacity for communicating than does the dear, old South Carolina congressional delegation, WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN. He is appropriately named after the Greater Orator of the Plains. On one occasion at a State veterans convention on the campus at Arkansas State University, the gentleman concluded his remarks not to a standing ovation, but to a "standing on their chairs" ovation.

A true gentleman of the Old South, BILLY DORN, as he is affectionately known by his colleagues, will be sorely missed. I have been enriched by my association with him. I am grateful for his friendship—for his nonpartisan leadership of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs—for his fair and considerate treatment of the minority side of the committee—in short, for wearing the mantle of authority with wisdom, dignity and good taste.

As BRYAN DORN nears the end of a distinguished career of public service which includes 26 years as a Member of this House of Representatives, I can only say, "Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for a job well done. Your leadership and wise counsel will be missed."

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, the departure of WILLIAM J. B. DORN represents one of the most significant overall losses to the House. He served in this body for more than a quarter century and was one of our most respected Members.

Congressman DORN has had a remarkable career in public service beginning with his being elected to the South Carolina house at the age of 24. He then became a member of the State Senate the youngest man to do so. In 1950 at the age of 34 he was first elected to the House of Representatives and was re-elected on 13 straight occasions.

His career in the House was an outstanding one highlighted by his chairmanship of the important Veterans Affairs Committee which under his leadership in the 93d Congress has enacted legislation to benefit virtually all veterans as well as their survivors. Included among these was the recently passed Veterans Education and Training Act of 1974 which provides some seven million Vietnam era veterans with a 23-percent increase in educational benefits.

The people of South Carolina have lost one of their finest public servants and we in the House have lost an outstanding public servant and good friend. I hope the Veterans Committee will continue to be as receptive to the needs of the veterans of this Nation as it was under the leadership of WILLIAM DORN. No finer tribute could be given to this man.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, as the 93d Congress ends, many Members of the House are retiring to private life and I wish all of them success and happiness in whatever they undertake.

Among them will be my personal friend, WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN of South Carolina. Because it is painful to sever the ties that bind colleagues and friends sharing years of fund association, as BRYAN and I do, I recommend that he follow his own example, set when he left us during the 81st Congress and returned in the 82d. There are certainly many citizens of his congressional district who would like to have him back here in the House in the 95th Congress, just as would we who know and admire him here.

Of course we deeply regret that in the 94th Congress this House will be without his ever-welcome presence, his brilliant and penetrating mind, his understanding of the problems facing the American people, his skill in analysis, and his gift of articulate, interesting and persuasive expression.

We came to the House together in the 80th Congress in those years just after the war, during which BRYAN had served in the Air Force for more than 3 years, 19 months of them in the ETO. He was one of seven brothers, all of them on active duty at the same time.

Before joining up to serve his country in wartime, he had served his State in both its house of representatives and senate, where he was the youngest senator, at the age of 24, in his State's history.

He thus brought to the Congress, in addition to his personal attributes of character, integrity, courage, and intelligence, the experience of an elected State legislative official and that of a veteran of extended active duty during the war.

He applied that experience to his work on the Veterans' Affairs Committee of which he now is chairman. During his long and distinguished service on that committee, he displayed utter dedication to its work and its purposes, and he has been effective and well-informed chairman who knows how to get his bills passed after assiduous preparatory work in committee.

He has adhered to the same tradition of excellence and given the same meticulous attention to detail in his efforts as a thoroughly productive member of the Public Works Committee.

He has led his delegation. He has led the fight for one-price cotton and rational limits on those imports that put American workers on the unemployment rolls. He has sought an adequate defense capability and has done this so effectively that he was called a No. 1 enemy of communism by the late Soviet Foreign Minister, Andrei Vishinsky.

He is a southern gentleman, deeply read in history, especially that of the War Between the States; he is a gifted orator; and he has long been an effective and devoted representative of his district, a patriot in the cause of his country, and an extraordinarily able national legislator. He will be greatly missed in this House which he served so long and so well.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join in honoring one of our most distinguished colleagues, WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN.

During the past 6 years, I have had the pleasure of serving with BRYAN on the Public Works Committee. His interest and expertise will be deeply missed by all of us.

BRYAN DORN will be best remembered, however, for the great time and effort he put into his job as chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee. Indeed, it has been more than just a job—it has been a deep personal commitment to provide equity and dignity for the millions of American veterans, and their dependents and survivors.

Mr. Speaker, I want to add my name to the long list of persons who thank WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN for his hard work and wish him the very best in the future.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have this opportunity to speak out in tribute to the long and distinguished career of our retiring colleague WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN. I might add that his list of achievements during his 26 years of service is as long as his name.

It has been my pleasure to serve with him on the Veterans' Affairs Committee and the last 2 years to have him as chairman. BRYAN knows the needs of our veterans and he always worked to improve the benefits of our former servicemen.

Mr. Speaker, BRYAN is a close, personal friend whom I shall miss very much when the 94th Congress convenes. I wish him and Mildred much happiness and relaxation in retirement and extend a very sincere invitation to BRYAN to come back and visit with us often. We shall continue to seek his wise advice and counsel.

Mr. ICHORD. Mr. Speaker, it is with a distinct feeling of regret that I note the retirement of Congressman WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN at the end of this session. BRYAN is not only a good personal friend but also for 26 years has endowed this body with outstanding leadership and wisdom which will be sorely missed. As a member and later chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee and as a long-time and devoted supporter of the veterans of this Nation, BRYAN DORN has left a lasting contribution to all veterans having played an instrumental role in enacting many of the benefits enjoyed by veterans today, including medical and educational benefits and veterans' compensation and pensions. Also an active legislator in other areas, BRYAN has long been known for introducing innovative and necessary legislation particularly related to rural development, water resources, and vitally needed public works projects. I know that all of us will miss the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina. Dressed in a white suit and armed with integrity and a profound sense of what was right for America, WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN became a respected leader in the House, esteemed by his colleagues, his Third Congressional District in South Carolina, and the American people. It was a great and distinct privilege to have had the opportunity to serve in the U.S. House of Representatives with BRYAN, and while I am pleased to be able to pay tribute to him today, I am truly sorry that this body will not benefit from his presence in the 94th Congress.

Mr. ICHORD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join today in this tribute to Congressman TOM GETTYS who has announced his retirement after six terms of distinguished service in this body. I know that I speak for many of my colleagues here in the House in expressing regret that Tom is not seeking another term from the Fifth Congressional District of South Carolina but can certainly understand his desire for some much deserved relaxation after many years of hard work. Nevertheless, his well-known compassion, goodwill and foresight will be sorely missed by all of us in Congress and by the fine people of his State of South Carolina.

As all of you know, Tom was a down-to-earth statesman, a plain-talking individual and a man of few pretenses who shunned the limelight for the less public but more effective and vital behind-the-scenes work which is so much the key to the legislative process. Both the Banking and Currency and the House Administration Committees will miss his skill and dedication. Tom was a knowledgeable and hard-working legislator and the combination of these qualities as well as his proven leadership and legislative talents made Tom a respected and effective member of this body. It was an honor to have had the opportunity to serve with Tom in Congress, Mr. Speaker, and while he is down in South Carolina "fishing and eating watermelon," his presence will be sorely missed during the 94th session of Congress.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, for a great many years, WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN has served the people of South Carolina in an outstanding manner; but always with the welfare of his Nation in the background.

BRYAN has been a statesman in the true sense. At the same time, he has been a good friend of the Members here. He will not be replaced and I trust the people of South Carolina will recognize that even that great State cannot have too many men of his caliber to serve them and that they will avail themselves of his great abilities in some other field in the near future.

I join with my colleagues in wishing for BRYAN, and his lovely wife, every happiness as they enter into a new phase of life.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it is with no small amount of regret that I rise today to bid farewell to one who has been more than a colleague to me. He has been a friend in every sense of that word. He, more than anyone else, made this House feel like home to me when I first arrived here 6 years ago. Through him, I have acquired an appreciation for the greatness of this institution—not only its traditions but its tremendous capacity for growth to meet the increasingly complex problems of modern-day society.

I refer, of course, to no other than WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN who is leaving us this year with the same humility and purity of spirit that he brought with him from South Carolina almost three decades ago.

During his lengthy career in the service of first his State and then his country, BRYAN has brought honor and integrity to the art of politics. It is always sad to lose a seasoned leader. It is especially so in BRYAN's case where his wisdom, skillfulness and effectiveness have contributed so much to our greatness as a legislative institution.

Mr. Speaker, to catalog the public service of BRYAN DORN would be a lengthy task indeed. To review his achievements in many areas of life would take more time than is available to us today. All of those within the sound of my voice have been exposed to his sincerity, his intelligence, his discernment, and people all across this country have been impressed and uplifted by the power of his oratory. He will be missed in this Chamber. He will be missed by the veterans of this Nation, who he has served so well. However, I am certain that the remainder of his life will be devoted to service to his fellow man, and with that certainty we bid him farewell, knowing that he will take up the torch in other places, and at other times, always seeking to make our country and our world a better place.

Mr. DRINAN. Mr. Speaker, there is not a single Member of the House of Representatives who will not miss a great deal during the next Congress the presence of WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN.

The unique and stentorian eloquence of Congressman DORN is not heard often in the House, but when it is, the entire Membership remembers it for a long time.

My one consolation in seeing Congressman DORN return to his beloved South Carolina is the fact that I know that he will continue to serve, in a capacity as yet unknown, all of those objectives for which he has struggled in the legislature of South Carolina and in the Congress of the United States.

BILL DORN was the youngest member ever elected to the South Carolina house. He was once again the youngest State senator in his native State when he was seated by a special vote at the age of 24 in the Senate in 1941. He resigned from the Senate to volunteer for the Army Air Force where he served for 3½ years, 18 months of which were in the European theater. He was, incidentally, one of the seven brothers who served during World War II.

BILL DORN came to Congress at the age of 30 in 1946. He resigned from the Congress to run for the U.S. Senate where he was the runner-up in a field of five in the primary. He returned to the House of Representatives in 1950 and has given devoted and dedicated service to the Public Works Committee and to the Veterans Committee since that time.

BILL's countless friends in the House were very anxious that he should become Governor of his native State in 1974. A combination of unique circumstances frustrated Congressman DORN's quest for this high office.

During the 13 terms which WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN has had in the House of Representatives, he has been beloved by every single Member of the House. He departs from the House with the admiration and affection of everyone.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join in this tribute to one of our ablest colleagues, Congressman WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN of South Carolina. BRYAN is retiring at the end of this session, after 28 years of distinguished service in the House.

BRYAN first came to Congress at the age of 30, and he has ably represented the needs and interests of his constituents in the Third District of South Carolina. In those years, he has risen to the position of chairman of the House Veterans' Affairs Committee, where he has fought hard for legislation to provide much-deserved benefits for those who have served to defend this Nation. He has also served with distinction on the Public Works Committee, where he has worked particularly hard on problems of water resources and economic development.

We will miss BRYAN here, but I know that we all join in extending our warmest wishes to him and his wife, Millie, for many more happy years.

Mr. BRINKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join my colleagues from throughout the Nation, and particularly the members of the South Carolina congressional delegation, in paying tribute to WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN, who has served with uncommon distinction for 26 years in this House.

Some 2 years ago, at the beginning of the 93d Congress, I saw fit to seek membership on the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs. I had always known the outstanding leadership which Congressman DORN provided that committee, as a member and ultimately as its chairman, but it was not until I actually became a member that I realized what a truly valuable service he performed to the veterans of this country.

Particularly impressive to me has been Congressman DORN's allegiance to the proposition that veterans deserve a special place in our society, and his fair-handedness in advocating programs to benefit this special group of citizens.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, I have observed the high esteem in which he is held by his colleagues from my neighbor State of South Carolina, and the frequency with which his guidance and counsel, enriched in a way which can be attained only through long and diligent service in the Congress, are sought by virtually all Members of this body from time to time.

In short, Congressman DORN has earned and gained the kind of reputation for service and leadership that will be missed when the 94th Congress convenes and he is no longer here. It is a high honor for me to join in paying tribute to him, and to wish him the very best that the future has to offer.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, for more than 20 years it has been a privilege and a pleasure to serve in this body with the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina, WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN.

The people of this district are deservedly proud of his many accomplishments. He has represented them in the South Carolina Legislature, in both the House and Senate. Since coming to the House, BRYAN DORN has been an eloquent and effective Representative of the citizens of his western South Carolina district.

He has been a diligent and dedicated member of the Public Works Committee, and as chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, he has earned the respect and admiration of all of us here in Congress.

I will greatly miss his presence in the Congress. He is a great American and I deeply value his warm friendship, his wise counsel, and his intense dedication to our Nation and its people.

Mrs. GRASSO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join my colleagues in paying tribute to a dear friend, WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN, upon his retirement from the Congress.

During the past 4 years, I have had the privilege of serving with BRYAN on the Veterans' Affairs Committee. First as ranking majority member and, during the 93d Congress, as chairman, BRYAN has shown his deep personal commitment to the welfare of all our veterans.

For instance, many of us remember an attempt in early 1973 to amend the disability rating schedule, an action which would have reduced disability payments to Vietnam veterans. BRYAN's leadership within the Congress and his reputation as the veterans' friend were instrumental in having the proposal rescinded.

December 20, 1974

On many other occasions, our chairman has guided vital legislation through the House. His efforts have led to updated education benefits, increased pensions, better medical care, and many more improvements in veterans' benefits.

America's veterans are losing a loyal and forceful advocate in the House, and the people of South Carolina's Third District are losing a fine Representative.

His presence will be missed in this Chamber and in the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join in a special salute to the gentleman from South Carolina, WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN, upon the occasion of his retirement from Congress. He is retiring from Congress, but he will not retire from service to his fellow man.

I have watched the career of this distinguished South Carolinian since he came to Congress. He has wrought well for the people of his State and for the Nation as a whole.

BRYAN DORN is one of the most eloquent men I have served with in the House of Representatives. He has been a pillar of strength for decency and good government. He has reflected credit upon the Congress.

We are going to miss him as a man, as a friend, and as chairman of the vitally important House Committee on Veterans' Affairs. Mrs. Mahon joins me in best wishes to BRYAN DORN and his lovely wife, Millie.

Mr. WAGGONER. Mr. Speaker, I am highly gratified to have the chance to rise in tribute today to my good friend, WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN, an uncommon patriot.

A veteran of 13 terms in this great body and chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, BRYAN has been a source of inspiration to his colleagues and an unselfish countryman to his constituency.

His legacy records an extraordinary career: youngest member of the South Carolina House and Senate; valiant service in the Army Air Force in World War II; election to the U.S. Congress at the age of 30, ad infinitum. And, it is mighty pleasing to me that a fellow southerner has "done his home proud."

BRYAN's record speaks for itself. After 26 years of public service in the highest tradition, I can only wish him continued happiness and success coupled with some well-deserved relaxation. Going on here without him will seem a little strange, but I am sure our colleagues all feel as I do: privileged to have known and worked with him.

Good luck, BRYAN, and may you always enjoy life's richest blessings.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, for a long time, it was my privilege to occupy a suite of offices immediately adjoining those of my friend, BRYAN DORN. But I really did not need proximity to tell me what everybody in this House knows: BRYAN DORN is a good neighbor.

He has been a good neighbor to the Nation's veterans, and his services as chairman of the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs, although brief, has stimulated even greater awareness of the problems of those who have fought America's wars and manned America's defenses.

He has been a good neighbor to those who view the conservation of our natural resources as one of the prime necessities of our time.

He has been a good neighbor to education. And I can tell you, as chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, that BRYAN DORN's untiring support and assistance has often made the difference in whether we got a bill passed or not. All of those on the Education and Labor Committee know of his tremendous support and influence in behalf of the country's young people, and we shall sorely miss him in coming Congresses.

Today, I think it is a safe prediction to say that our neighbor is not retiring in the usual sense of the word. He will not hibernate, and he will not rusticate.

He is going to be a very busy and productive man for many years to come, and I am sure that South Carolinians will feel his presence in their midst.

I certainly hope he does not get so involved in his many activities that he is unable to come back to Washington often to see us.

Good luck and good health to our neighbor, BRYAN DORN.

Mr. DANIELSON. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to join my colleagues in tribute to our distinguished friend and colleague, WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN.

It could have not been more appropriate that the chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee was himself a veteran and one of seven brothers all of whom served in World War II. Under his leadership during the past 2 years, the Veterans' Affairs Committee has passed major legislation providing much deserved benefits for the men and women who served our country.

It has been a pleasure serving with Chairman DORN, who has given 26 years of distinguished service in the U.S. Congress. He will be missed during the coming session of Congress. I wish him the best in his retirement.

Mr. ANDREWS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with our colleagues an experience I had several months ago with the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina, BRYAN DORN. It is, I think, typical of his unselfish attitude and conduct with respect to his colleagues.

Sometime in the late summer or early fall, BRYAN DORN accepted my invitation to speak at a rally in Durham, N.C., in my congressional district. He had just completed an arduous and unsuccessful campaign for the governorship of his great State. The outcome of that race was in doubt, because of the failure of the victor to meet the State's residency requirements.

BRYAN DORN was scheduled to speak at this rally at about 7 p.m. on September

23. At about 4 p.m. I heard on the radio that the South Carolina Supreme Court had determined that the Democratic nominee for Governor, Mr. Ravenel, was disqualified. The immediate speculation was that the State's Democratic Executive Committee would choose a successor nominee, and it was obvious that BRYAN DORN would receive most serious consideration for that appointment.

I proceeded on to the meeting in Durham assuming that surely the gentleman from South Carolina would have to cancel his appearance that night in order to answer the hundreds of inquiries of newsmen throughout South Carolina and the Nation and in furtherance of his candidacy to begin a campaign of contacting members of the Democratic Executive Committee who would be making the decision about a new nominee.

By the time that I arrived at the appointed place in Durham, many others were already there. They, too, had heard the news about the evening's keynote speaker, and all assumed that BRYAN DORN would not be able to appear.

We were considering what to do about a substitute speaker when BRYAN DORN walked into the auditorium with his lovely wife, Millie. He made an outstanding address that evening—and he never mentioned anything of his personal predicament or future. He stayed for the entire meeting and did not get back to the furtherance of his own welfare in South Carolina until the following day.

BRYAN DORN is not only a political friend but a generous compassionate, unselfish, and extremely able gentleman. Without him the House of Representatives will be the poorer.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Carolina, Congressman BRYAN DORN, leaves here with a host of friends behind him, and with no enemies. His chairmanships have always been handled with distinction; and his leadership always has been on a broad basis of concern, reflecting always a love for humankind and a never-failing courage in behalf of the underprivileged, and all others needing national legislative solutions. We will, all of us, greatly miss Congressman DORN; and we all wish for him every happiness in whatever pursuits he may now undertake. Certainly we know those pursuits will make him active in behalf of those who need his help. To have it otherwise would be contrary to his very nature.

Mr. CEDERBERG. Mr. Speaker, I salute a very special friend and colleague, WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN, on his departure from public service after a distinguished 26-year congressional career. A Southern gentleman in every sense of the word, he has added a distinctive sense of dignity to the proceedings of this Chamber.

Although he has remained a man of simple tastes, his accomplishments have been truly monumental. Ambitious and hard working, he has set some sort of record for early political recognition and rapid achievement in his esteemed State of South Carolina. Indeed "Guinness"

December 20, 1974

Book of Records" should be informed of this man's notable record.

His dedication to the betterment of his fellow man and his adamant stand against the insidious elements of our society have earned him the endorsement of his constituents who have consistently reelected him by overwhelming margins. WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN will be truly missed by his constituents and by this Congress.

I cannot begin to do justice to the contributions made by this man during his illustrious tenure on the Public Works Committee. His assiduous attention to detail, his informed questions, and his enlightened comments were instrumental in writing and enacting legislation which has benefited millions. I thank him, the Congress thanks him, and the rest of America thanks him for a job well done.

A stalwart advocate of unrepachable conduct and an unswerving man of integrity, he has earned the ultimate compliment—the total respect of his peers. A credit to himself and to this Congress, WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN deserves the years of health and happiness which I wish him.

Mr. McCLODY. Mr. Speaker, in the departure from our halls of Congress of WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN, the Congress is bidding farewell to one of our most colorful and distinguished Members. Congressman DORN, although still young in years, seems like a carryover from another era—an era of great orators and lawmakers who not only assume a prominent role in our society, but also provide the distinguished appearance and carriage of a Congressman.

Mr. Speaker, I know from my personal contacts with Congressman DORN of his love for our Nation, of his high ideals, and his underlying Christian faith. BRYAN DORN is a man of many talents, a man of great distinction in our times, and one whom I assume will find opportunities for future public service. I am pleased to join today with our other colleagues in extending to WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN every good wish for continued good health and happiness.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, earlier in the week you joined us in the ceremony in which we presented a portrait of our beloved chairman, the Honorable WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN, to be hung permanently in the Veterans' Affairs committee room. On that occasion, I said that the life of our chairman exemplifies public service. He was elected to the South Carolina House of Representatives at the tender age of 22 and became the youngest State senator at the age of 24. He resigned from the State senate to enter the Air Force and served 3½ years in the European theater. He was one of seven brothers who served during World War II. He was elected to Congress in 1946 and with the exception of one 2-year term, he has served until the present time. During that entire period of service, he has been a member of the Veterans' Affairs Committee.

Before becoming chairman, BRYAN DORN for many years was chairman of our most important subcommittee, the Subcommittee on Pension and Compensation. His subcommittee originated dozens of pieces of legislation which raised, expanded, and improved pensions and compensation for veterans and survivors. BRYAN DORN has been directly associated with almost every pension and compensation increase for veterans for the last 15 years. When he became chairman of the full committee, he had left over from the previous Congress two major bills which had been vetoed by President Nixon. One of these bills, the Veterans' Health Care Expansion Act of 1973, was the most important piece of medical legislation considered by the committee in many years. It expanded and improved outpatient service to veterans. It improved the nursing program in Veterans' Administration hospitals and contained dozens of other important provisions. For the first time, this piece of legislation made survivors of service-connected veterans eligible for medical care through a new program called CHAMPVA. Upon becoming chairman, BRYAN DORN immediately undertook negotiations with the administration and achieved an agreement without losing the major benefits of the legislation and was able to reenact the legislation and gain its approval by the President.

BRYAN DORN also inherited a vetoed national cemetery bill. He was able to negotiate the differences on that legislation and secured approval by the President. More recently he has made a significant contribution to the Vietnam veterans of this country by gaining passage and ultimately overriding a veto on the Vietnam veterans education bill. This bill will provide a 22-percent increase in allowances for Vietnam veterans in school, and there are more than 1,500,000. Mr. Speaker, these are not the only pieces of legislation with which our chairman has been associated. There are many others. We have an important housing bill at the White House now for signature. There is also a bill down there that will improve automobile allowances and special adaptive equipment for seriously disabled veterans. There is also before the President a bill which would raise nonservice-connected benefits and alleviate the impact of social security.

BRYAN DORN is known as one of the most eloquent spokesmen and advocates for a strong national defense. He has been a great chairman, a great Congressman, and he is a great American. We all will miss him.

Mr. ABONOR. Mr. Speaker, for the past 2 years it has been my privilege to serve on the House Veterans' Affairs Committee. One of the things that has impressed me most has been the complete impartiality and spirit of fairness in which its distinguished chairman, Honorable WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN, has directed the committee proceedings.

Most certainly the concerns of our veterans should know no political bounds, and it is to the distinct credit of Chairman DORN that this is the manner in which veterans legislation is handled in our committee. He has provided a fine example for all of us.

With his retirement from the Congress, Chairman DORN leaves behind a distinguished record of dedicated service both for his constituents and for the veterans of this Nation. I wish him well in all of his future endeavors.

POSTAL REFORM: A NEW YEAR'S RESOLUTION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. ALEXANDER) is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, for the last 6 months I have been actively engaged in a study of the U.S. Postal Service, concentrating particularly on the effects of its policies on nonmetropolitan areas. Since coming to Congress, no other subject has evoked a more steady flow of complaints or a larger volume than the postal service. Since the announcement of these investigations and hearings which were held jointly by my Subcommittee on Rural Development and the Subcommittee on Postal Service, these complaints have escalated and now come from all parts of the country.

As a result of my studies, hearings, in the First Congressional District of Arkansas and in Washington, and the recommendations from a citizens advisory committee on the Postal Service which I appointed in Arkansas, I am introducing legislation today aimed at making the Postal Service more responsible to the people whom it was designed to serve.

These hearings and the statements from people across the country have convinced me more than ever that the U.S. Postal Service is practicing gross discrimination against the people in rural areas in the formulation of policies at the national level. And it is these people in nonmetropolitan areas who depend more heavily on the mails as a form of communication and news than any other group of people. The daily operation of American free enterprise is dependent upon an efficient handling of mail.

The main thrust of the bill I introduce today is to return the power of the purse strings of the U.S. Postal Service to the Congress—the representatives of the people. The revenues of the Postal Service will go into the General Treasury and the U.S. Congress will have the responsibility of annual appropriations that it deems necessary for the operations of the Postal Service. This will, in effect, afford us control of postal policies without once again getting the Congress into the business of hiring and firing postmasters.

The bill also includes a section which I believe most important in that it requires that State and local agencies be consulted before new facilities are constructed and provides for a system of hearings to give other interested parties a chance to state their opinions.

Mr. Speaker, this section of the bill was included because of an experience which just came to light in one of my own communities and one which I understand also occurred in a Maine community which point to the need for consideration of citizen advice in such matters.

December 20, 1974

The city of Oxford, Ark., has under 300 residents, most of whom are elderly. For years they have been served by a post office which sits in the middle of town, within walking distance of most homes and other businesses. Without consulting the community, the Postal Service decided to build a brand new structure on a busy highway outside the town. Not only will many of the older citizens not be able to walk to the post office any more, but the location on the busy highway constitutes a severe hazard to those who do walk.

Mr. Speaker, I spent an afternoon with the citizens of Oxford, Ark. They do not oppose change. They are reasonable people. But they simply do not understand why they cannot have a say in how their tax dollars are being spent in their own community. I do not understand this either.

Several sections of the bill are devoted to changes in present employment practices. One of the most common complaints I heard from citizens, postal employees, and retired and present postmasters concerned personnel practices. I might add at this point, however, that most of the statements from present employees were made to me in confidence since these employees still feel bound by the old gag rule and are hesitant to talk even to their elected Representative about postal problems.

Some of these people told me that there is so much dead weight in their offices that they could actually do a better job by eliminating some employees. This is an incredible set of circumstances when small offices whose budgets have been severely cut back because of national policy dictates are crying for help while other offices say they have too much.

Others have complained of the system which encourages promotion solely on the basis of seniority, overlooking more qualified people. Most of the people with whom I talked also stated their belief that the civil service exam is irrelevant to a person's ability to carry or dispatch the mail.

The people also complain of the appointment of postmasters who live outside the area they serve. This is not only a slap in the face of people who live in the town, but it also overlooks the vast amount one who knows a town and cares about it can contribute to the efficiency of a post office.

In instances where the only employees are a postmaster and part-time clerk, it is often financially impossible for an otherwise qualified citizen to sacrifice a full-time job in order to take the position of part-time clerk merely to work his way up to postmaster.

Several sections of the bill offer possible remedies for each of these situations. However, perhaps one of the most important sections is that which grants more authority to the postmaster of each post office in the realm of hiring, firing, and disciplining employees. Since the postmaster is judged to a large extent on the work done by those serving under him, when charged with this responsibility, I believe he will be most discretionary in the use of these powers. He is the one who can best observe the actions of those who work under him, and the needs of his particular post office. The fact that the Postal Service has not made more use of the knowledge of the people at this level is a ridiculous waste of talent.

The final problem dealt with in this bill is that of routing and sorting of mail. This was also the most difficult problem to deal with since sensitivity and commonsense in postal officials cannot be legislated.

To cite an example from a statement presented in our field hearings in West Memphis, Ark.:

It makes no sense to those of us who live in eastern Arkansas that mail from Brinkley to Wheatley (a distance of five miles) has to go to Little Rock, a distance of 70 miles, from Little Rock back through Brinkley to Memphis, another 70 miles, and then to Wheatley from Memphis.

The above is fairly representative of the sorting system employed by our postal service. Mail from community to community in the First Congressional District either goes to Little Rock, Memphis, or both for sorting before delivery to its destination.

Such a system has caused the loss of a day or more in delivery time and has hurt some businesses. Newspaper editors have testified to the fact that many subscriptions have been lost since old news is valuable to no one.

My citizens advisory committee on the Postal Service has recommended that we return to the sectional center concept of mail delivery and routing that was in effect prior to USPS as a more logical and efficient method of operation than the regional concept being utilized at present. They recommend the reestablishment of a sectional center, preferably at the trade center, in each county for sorting and distribution of mail. That concept is incorporated in my legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I am a reasonable man. However, I have talked about this subject until I am blue in the face and am even getting tired of hearing my own words. Yet I see no improvement.

I realize the Postal Service has a little budget with which to work, that economy must be emphasized, and that the Postal Service like all Federal budgets will be subject to even more belt-tightening in the future. Yet it appears that when these cutbacks are ordered, they always begin in rural America and I question the budget priorities now employed by USPS.

I question budget priorities which one year will allocate thousands of dollars for use in advertising the airmail service, even though there are no competitors in the market, and the next year announce discontinuance of airmail completely, since first class gets there in the same length of time.

I question priorities which allocate almost $1 million for the creation of a coloring book for elementary students at the same time stamp prices are increased.

I question investments of millions of dollars in complex machinery and new buildings constructed at great cost overruns while eliminating postal jobs in rural America.

I do not argue that mechanization is unnecessary to efficient service. However, a recent General Accounting Office survey shows that at three offices tested, machine operators keyed 9.1 percent of the mail incorrectly, resulting of course in duplication of work when the mail had to be resorted and a delay of an average of 3 days per letter.

Thus, the value of reducing help in rural areas while putting in more machinery in urban areas has not been proven to me.

Neither do I object to Government subsidy of USPS if that is what it takes to provide service to the people. However, with such a subsidy must come the guarantee that the Postal Service is using their funds to the best advantage of all the people.

When we gave birth to this new quasi-independent agency 4 years ago, I, like many of the rest of you, was hopeful that we were solving a problem. Instead it appears that we created one. After 4 years, it is time for papa to start giving a little more guidance to his recalcitrant child.

We must assure that the citizens of our hinterlands do not once again become separated from the other parts of our Nation by the deterioration of our communications network to the extent that it is either too unreliable or expensive to use.

It is true that we are at the end of a session and some might question the introduction of such a piece of legislation on the last day. However, I want my colleagues to be familiar with the purpose and intent of this bill so that when January 14 comes and I reintroduce it, you will be ready to join me in this resolution for the new year.

TRIBUTE TO O. C. FISHER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GONZALEZ) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, my colleague O. C. FISHER retires at the end of this Congress. He has served in the House since the 78th Congress. CLARK was in Congress long before I ever gave any thought to entering politics, much less entertained any ambitions of coming to Washington myself.

CLARK FISHER has seen many changes in his time; he has been through any number of crises; and yet he has retained those same basic values that he always had—values that reflect his heritage as the son of a pioneering Texas family. For he was born in the big ranch country of Texas, and still is engaged in the ranching business; and he has never lost touch with his home country, its people, or its ways.

My colleague is one who has a rich understanding of his own past. He has researched carefully and written a good many excellent works about west Texas in general, and his own family in particular. His best known work is about King Fisher, and stands among the better books in that specialized field of Texana, which fortunately for all of us, is a field of literature that has a wider appeal than its name implies—and a wider meaning and deeper importance, too. CLARK FISHER knows himself better and appreciates the past, and for that reason I think he knows himself better than most of us. He has been a steady hand in the House, and a staunch, effective member of his committee.

December 20, 1974

CLARK's district historically has always been a big place, because the population in the Texas ranch country is not very heavy. In fact, nearly half his constituents today reside in that fraction of Bexar County which borders on my own 20th Congressional District. It is a tribute to CLARK's ability and appeal that he has been well recognized and accepted by his big-city constituents.

I came here as a freshman in January 1962. CLARK FISHER was a veteran then. I have often turned to him for guidance and assistance. He has never been anything other than gracious and generous to me. He has never hesitated to help when asked, and never failed to do his best for his constituents and colleagues alike.

I know that I will miss CLARK. All of us Texans will.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, CLARK FISHER came to Congress a few years after I did. We lived in the same apartment development. We rode to and from work together. We traveled abroad together. I think that I had the opportunity to know CLARK FISHER as I have known few Members and I have known him always as an able, honorable, conscientious, and helpful colleague. He has probably represented the 21st District of Texas better than any other man could represent it. He has always had the courage of his convictions and has served his Nation fairly and honorably.

CLARK FISHER saved this country billions of dollars and yet he has always supported an adequate defense. As a member of the Armed Services Committee, he has helped maintain that defense. He is one of the few Members who recognizes that the Government has no money except that which it takes from the people. He has always been willing to make provisions for the needy; but he has never agreed to waste the public resources.

We all regret to see CLARK go. We all realize he has made a wise choice from a personal standpoint and we wish him well; but we know that his place cannot be filled and that the country is the loser.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, it is my great pleasure to join my colleagues in honoring O. C. FISHER on his retirement from Congress. Throughout my 10 years as a Member of the House of Representatives, Mr. FISHER's district immediately adjoined mine. I therefore had the opportunity to talk to people who were his constituents on many occasions, and I know how highly they regard his integrity and his responsiveness to their viewpoints and interests. He has been an influential advocate of their needs and desires before the agencies of Government and in the Halls of Congress. When I attained a seat on the Armed Services Committee, I learned how knowledgeable he was in the intricate matters that came before the committee and how well he could cut through the maze of technology and organizational matters. He was a strong defender of some of the very vital programs that helped make this Nation strong in defense.

To leave his characterization at that alone would fail to describe his humanity, for he is a most interesting person to talk to and to be with as the committee has plied its duties of investigating matters in its jurisdiction. Only by talking at length with him would one discover that he is an author and has written several books of the West. He is presently engaged in writing a book on that great American, John Nance Garner, former Speaker of the House of Representatives and Vice President of the United States under Franklin D. Roosevelt. Now he tells us he is returning to his native area to do the things he likes best, and that of course includes ranching. So, he is not really retiring, but is only leaving Congress to follow a different full time line of activity.

We look for him to return many times to renew his staunch friendships here.

A TRIBUTE TO REPRESENTATIVE FRANK A. STUBBLEFIELD

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. PERKINS) is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, the late Irvin S. Cobb used to say that the map of Kentucky is the silhouette of a camel lying down.

Well, in that part where the camel's head nuzzles up against the waters of the Mississippi River is an area called the Jackson Purchase. It is also called, because of its staunch political leaning, "the Gibraltar of democracy."

Over the years, that district has developed a tradition of electing outstanding Members of the House of Representatives: the great Linn Boyd, who was Speaker of the House in the Andrew Jackson years; James Andrew "Quinine Jim" McKenzie; Ollie M. James; and Alben W. Barkley, the beloved Vice President of the United States during the Truman years.

Sixteen years ago, the Kentucky First District elected a worthy successor to these in our friend and colleague, FRANK ALBERT STUBBLEFIELD.

Unless there is an extraordinary session, today's session is FRANK's last as a Member, and I have taken this special order to pay tribute to his outstanding service.

FRANK and I come from different parts of Kentucky—I from the mountains, he from the rich, flat alluvial plains of the west. But it has been a pleasure to work with him on projects for the benefit of all of Kentucky—and for the Nation.

FRANK ALBERT STUBBLEFIELD has served with great distinction on the Committee on Agriculture, and most recently on the Tobacco Subcommittee. He is intimately acquainted with the problems that beset the farmers of the country, and has worked diligently over the years to help solve them.

I do not know of any Member who has been more dedicated to the interests of his people, and the First Kentucky District has been served well in this body during the past 16 years.

I know that all of my colleagues join me in wishing for him many, many more years of continued happiness, health, and prosperity.

It is a privilege to have served with this outstanding and useful Kentuckian.

Mr. SLACK. Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to join with the many Members of the House who have recognized the fine work of my good friend Congressman FRANK STUBBLEFIELD. We entered the House of Representatives together in January 1959, and I have had many occasions to work with him toward the accomplishment of desirable public objectives. I also count him to be my personal friend. He is well known for his highly effective work with the Committee on Agriculture but no less important is the fact he has earned a reputation for giving everyone, no matter what his point of view, a gentlemanly reception in all cases.

I have always enjoyed my association with him because of his willingness to share thoughts and to extend his pleasant and unfailing courtesy to include the viewpoints of all interested persons no matter how heated the controversy.

It is our loss that he must leave the House, and I wish him well in the future in all of his endeavors, secure in the knowledge that he leaves behind a vast pool of friendship well-earned.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, in my 4 years as a member of the Kentucky delegation representing a largely urban district, I have come to respect the judgment of my retiring colleague, Congressman FRANK ALBERT STUBBLEFIELD—particularly in matters involving agriculture.

FRANK ALBERT has been more than just a friend and a fellow Kentuckian. He has long been a quiet, unassuming—but highly effective—spokesman for the rural interests of our Commonwealth and our country.

His distinguished career on the House Committee on Agriculture has earned the respect of his colleagues, and of the staff, who honor him for his diligence and hard work over the years.

As FRANK ALBERT and Odessa Stubblefield return to Kentucky, they can take great pride in the satisfaction in a job well done. They have my warm best wishes for many more happy, healthy, and successful years.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, the retirement of FRANK STUBBLEFIELD from Congress represents a special personal loss to me. I have had the great privilege of serving with him on two committees, Agriculture and Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and I have seen close up how assiduously he applied himself to the work of those two important panels.

He has been constantly helpful to me from the time I entered the House as a Member in January 1965, when he already had been here 6 years. I appreciate the friendship of this true son of Kentucky, I admire his ability and steadfastness, and I respect his keen knowledge of the legislative process.

FRANK STUBBLEFIELD will be missed in this House. He will be missed by me, and I join all his other friends here in the wish that the future holds nothing but good for him.

Mr. CASEY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, tonight we share the final hours of the 93d Congress with FRANK A. STUBBLEFIELD, a Kentucky gentleman in every sense of the word.

Since we are of the same congressional vintage, FRANK STUBBLEFIELD and I have shared many memorable experiences over the past 16 years. He is a man of the highest integrity and dedication. It has been a personal pleasure to work with him and to call him my warm friend.

I join our colleagues tonight in expressing our sincere gratitude for sharing his talents and energy and I know that we all miss his presence among our ranks.

FRANK STUBBLEFIELD's efforts to improve the Nation's agricultural industry have made significant contributions to the efficiency of our farming and ranching interests, which are second to none in the world.

His service to his home Bluegrass State have certainly made him immortal on the pages of Kentucky history books.

I know that all our lives have been made brighter by the presence of FRANK STUBBLEFIELD and his lovely wife, Odessa, and we wish them continued success and happiness in the years ahead.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, for the past 16 years it has been a privilege and a pleasure to serve in this body with the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky, FRANK A. STUBBLEFIELD.

For over 30 years FRANK STUBBLEFIELD has served in public office. He was a member of the city council of Murray, Ky., and the Kentucky Railroad Commission. In the Congress, he has been a vigorous and dedicated member of both the Agriculture and Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committees. His efforts on both of these committees have earned him the respect and admiration of all of us here in Congress.

It is with sincere personal affection and professional respect that I join in honoring him today. I deeply value his friendship and his wise counsel. He has been an eloquent and effective spokesman for the citizens of his district. His presence here in Congress will be missed.

Mr. SHRIVER. Mr. Speaker, when I first came to the House in 1961 one of my good neighbors down the hall in the Longworth Building was FRANK STUBBLEFIELD of Kentucky. You learn a lot about your neighbors with whom you work in the House of Representatives. I found FRANK STUBBLEFIELD to be a hard-working Congressman, serious about serving his constituents in the First District of Kentucky. He took his responsibilities on the Committee on Agriculture seriously and was a respected voice for agriculture on that committee and in this House.

Now on what may be the final day of this 93d Congress we say farewell to FRANK as he ends his career of 16 years service in behalf of his district, State, and Nation. He has served faithfully and well, and we will miss him. I join with my other colleagues who know and respect FRANK STUBBLEFIELD in wishing for him good health, contentment, and happiness in the years ahead.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, in the 15 years since FRANK STUBBLEFIELD first came to Congress, he has compiled a record of service of which any Member could be proud.

Now that he is returning to his native Kentucky, FRANK's accomplishments appropriately are being mentioned here today in fitting tribute to this outstanding public servant.

I have come to know him well and I have appreciated his friendship through our years of service together. I have been particularly impressed with his contributions to the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee and the Committee on Agriculture, both of which are of vital interest to my constituents.

I have never known FRANK STUBBLEFIELD to turn a deaf ear on those who sought to consult with him on legislation. I have never known him to be anything but courteous and thoughtful. His positions on legislation were arrived at only after careful and thoughtful consideration of all factors and those of us who have leaned on him for leadership and guidance have known that FRANK's position on legislative programs were the result of careful and conscientious preparation.

I am sorry to see FRANK leave us. His warm humor, sound mind, eloquent voice, and unbounding energy have meant a great deal to the House. I wish him and his family the very best in the years ahead.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate our friend, CARL D. PERKINS, arranging this special order so that the many friends of FRANK STUBBLEFIELD may have the opportunity of saying some fine things about this very fine Kentuckian.

It was my good fortune to have the privilege of serving on the House Committee on Agriculture with FRANK STUBBLEFIELD during the first term I was in Congress. I watched this fine gentleman as he spoke up for his tobacco farmers and for farm people throughout the country. He will be sorely missed by his many friends and particularly those of us who were privileged to know him.

The back rail in the House Chamber will not be the same without his cheery smile and familiar greeting to his many friends.

Although we shall miss FRANK in the 94th Congress, I know that Kentucky will be better for his return, and I take this occasion to wish for FRANK and his lovely wife, Odessa, who was so helpful to him as a Congressman, all of the happiness to which he is certainly entitled as he returns to his native State of Kentucky.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, a longtime personal friend of mine, FRANK A. STUBBLEFIELD, will be retiring at the end of this Congress. His leadership and experience will be greatly missed. Albra and I want to wish both FRANK and his lovely wife, Odessa, the very best in the years ahead as they return home to the rolling, green Kentucky countryside.

FRANK and I came to Congress together in January 1959, and have remained close friends since that time. His Lincoln-esque stature and easy wit early singled him out as a leader in Congress. Although he is quiet spoken, FRANK has always been highly respected by his colleagues in the House of Representatives.

During his career in Washington, FRANK has always kept a careful eye on the needs of his constituents. Because tobacco is the principal crop of his Kentucky district, he has concentrated his legislative interests in this area. Through his service as a member of the House Agriculture Committee, he has had a special opportunity to work for the benefit of the American farmer. In recent years he has had the privilege of serving as chairman of the Subcommittee on Tobacco. Through this service he has been able to author and participate in the drafting of several pieces of legislation affecting production and marketing of this important crop. Among the most significant pieces were measures guaranteeing reasonable price supports for tobacco farmers.

Our colleague has also maintained a special interest in transportation issues which come before the Congress. This interest stems from his service as railroad commissioner for the State of Kentucky.

As the gentleman from the Bluegrass State concludes his distinguished and illustrious career, he can leave knowing that he has made a significant contribution to the House of Representatives and to his Nation. That career began several years ago when FRANK served as county manager for the campaign of his father's classmate, Alben Barkley. He has maintained an interest in politics ever since.

As he returns home to Murray to undertake some serious fishing with his three children and five grandchildren, and returns to the family drugstore, we salute his outstanding accomplishments and wish him every success for the future. FRANK has served his district, his State, and his Nation well.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, it has been a distinct honor for me to have served in the Congress with my friend FRANK ALBERT STUBBLEFIELD.

It has been Mr. STUBBLEFIELD's privilege to represent the First Congressional District of Kentucky and he has made an excellent Representative.

I have known FRANK ALBERT STUBBLEFIELD for many years. I have known him well and I hope, yet doubt, that I have let him know how much I admire and respect him. I am not alone in this regard for a man so imbued with his sense of responsibility cannot but command admiration and respect. Long before he was elected to the Congress, FRANK STUBBLEFIELD had an established record of public service. A veteran of World War II, a druggist by profession, he sat as a member of the city council in his home town, Murray, Ky., and on the State level as a member of the Kentucky Railroad Commission.

Elected to the 86th Congress he was sworn in on January 3, 1959, and in a short time FRANK A. STUBBLEFIELD was recognized by the leaders of the House as one of the more promising junior Members. Mr. STUBBLEFIELD fulfilled their expectations. He worked hard for his country, his district, and his people and by virtue of his ability and his grasp of the problems confronting the American farmer he became the ranking Democratic member on the Committee on Agriculture and chairman of its Subcommittee on Tobacco. To see FRANK A. STUBBLEFIELD as a Member of Congress was to see a man with but a single purpose in mind and that was to serve—and to serve well.

Mr. Speaker, he is a man who grows on you. He is a man who wears well. He is a man of good stripe. He is a man.

If I know FRANK A. STUBBLEFIELD, and I do, there is no doubt in my mind that he will continue to give of himself. For FRANK A. STUBBLEFIELD, the gentleman from Kentucky, there could be no other way of life. I wish for him and for the members of his family the best of everything in the future.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, for some 15 years, I was vice chairman of the Agriculture Committee under the chairmanship of my friend, Hon. Harold Cooley, who had inaugurated the practice of naming a vice chairman of the committee while Hon. Steve Pace was still a Member of Congress. Steve served only one more term and then I succeeded him as vice chairman. I invited Mr. Cooley to Fort Worth to speak to the cattle raisers. I introduced him in what I thought was a generous manner. He took the floor and said:

I am delighted to have my Vice Chairman introduce me. Bob is one of the most outstanding, one of the finest, one of the greatest Vice Chairmen our Committee ever had—it never had but two.

The committee has had a number of vice chairmen since that time; but I can still say that FRANK STUBBLEFIELD is one of the greatest we have ever had. He is not only one of the finest vice chairmen of our committee, he is one of the finest men who has ever served in this Congress. He has done a great deal for Kentucky and a great deal for his Nation. He has been a friend of all of his colleagues and, if he has an enemy in this House, I do not know him.

We are all going to lose when FRANK leaves us; but I am going to suffer an especial sense of loss when I realize that I no longer have this fine man working at my side.

His wife, Odessa, has been just as helpful as FRANK has and I want to join with their Kentucky friends in extending the very warmest good wishes to them both.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to join my colleagues in this tribute to an able colleague, Congressman FRANK STUBBLEFIELD of Kentucky, who will be leaving the House at the end of this session.

FRANK has served with distinction in Congress since 1959, and ably represented the needs and interests of his constituents in the First District of Kentucky. As vice chairman of the Agriculture Committee, and chairman of its Tobacco Subcommittee, he has worked tirelessly for legislation to meet the special needs of America's farmers. He has also distinguished himself on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, particularly in the development of legislation to promote the use of navigable waterways such as those for which the first district is noted.

We will miss FRANK here. I know that we all extend our best wishes to him and to his wife, Odessa, and their family on his retirement from the House.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor for me to join with my colleagues in paying tribute to one of our most distinguished Members, FRANK STUBBLEFIELD.

I deeply regret that FRANK will not be here with us in the next Congress. I value his friendship and I respect him as a fine legislator. Though we sat on different sides of the aisle, I always found FRANK to be both forceful and fair in his views. He has contributed much to the Congress and the Nation and we are losing one of our most valuable Members.

All of us will miss FRANK as a friend and colleague for whom we have the greatest admiration. His dedication and hard work have been an example for us all.

Mr. Speaker, it has been a privilege to serve with FRANK and I wish him well in the coming years.

Mr. GIALMO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join with so many of my colleagues in the Congress to pay tribute to FRANK STUBBLEFIELD of Kentucky who retires from the House of Representatives at the end of the 93d Congress.

FRANK and I were both elected to Congress in 1958. As I look back over these years I cannot help but admire his enthusiasm for his work, his energy in doing that work, and his dedication to what he believed.

As second ranking Democrat on the Agriculture Committee and as chairman of its Subcommittee on Tobacco, FRANK STUBBLEFIELD has devoted his life to the benefit of rural America. He has contributed much to the betterment of the farmer who, like FRANK himself, is both hardworking and industrious.

I will often recall the wonderful years we have shared together in public life. His dignity, his perseverance in the things he thought to be right, and his devotion to making this a better country for all of us to live in will long be remembered after he leaves this Chamber. I am pleased to join my colleagues to wish Congressman FRANK STUBBLEFIELD the very best in his retirement.

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, at the end of this Congress the House of Representatives will be losing many Members of long standing. One of these Members that will be leaving Capitol Hill is FRANK ALBERT STUBBLEFIELD who has represented Kentucky's First District for 16 years.

FRANK is Kentucky born, raised, and educated and has served his district with integrity and competence.

He has been a good friend to me since my election to Congress in 1969. FRANK has been a senior member on the House Agriculture Committee as well as being chairman of the Tobacco Subcommittee and a former chairman of the Dairy and Poultry Subcommittee.

FRANK's friendship and guidance have meant a great deal to me since my first days in the Congress and I will certainly miss him.

I am sure that all of you, as FRANK's colleagues, will join me in wishing FRANK and his lovely wife, Odessa, our very best for their future.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I feel genuine sadness at the departure from Congress of my esteemed friend and colleague from Kentucky, FRANK ALBERT STUBBLEFIELD.

It is certain that in the months ahead the people he faithfully represented so well for so long will begin to realize what the cost to them actually is when they no longer have him to call upon in Washington.

FRANK ALBERT STUBBLEFIELD served the entire Nation, not just his district in Kentucky, in an exemplary manner. As vice chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, he was perhaps best known to the farmers of America. As chairman of the Subcommittee on Tobacco he was able to render outstanding service to the growers of Kentucky's best known product, burley tobacco, as well as to the tobacco farmers in other States.

It has been a privilege to serve with FRANK STUBBLEFIELD on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, where he has been, among other things, a stalwart ally of mine in opposing the proposed giveaway of one of our Nation's greatest assets, the Panama Canal. The American people need more men like him here. He has had his feet on the ground always. He has never allowed himself to be misled by the rosy fantasies of too many so-called leaders whose feet as well as their heads are in the clouds.

We will miss FRANK STUBBLEFIELD and his lovely wife Odessa.

His district and the Nation will miss his service here. God be with him in all his future endeavors.

Mr. BURLISON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, we honor a man today who will live long in the minds and hearts of the people of Kentucky's First Congressional District. We have all felt his kindness and his friendship. It is rare to see these qualities possessed in such abundance by one who is also an able legislator. FRANK's district is a neighbor, looking across the Mississippi River from the upper boot-heel of Missouri's 10th Congressional District.

December 20, 1974

FRANK STUBBLEFIELD is the first incumbent Congressman that I had the pleasure of meeting after my first election. I shall always cherish the thoughtfulness and courtesies that he has extended to me during our 6 years of service together. We wish him well for the future as we express our appreciation for his great accomplishments of the past in serving his people of western Kentucky and this Nation.

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, our good friend FRANK STUBBLEFIELD of Kentucky retires after 16 years of dedicated service.

At this time I want to take the opportunity to express my appreciation to FRANK STUBBLEFIELD for having had the privilege of serving with him. FRANK STUBBLEFIELD as a Member of the House has worked quietly and diligently for his district and Nation.

FRANK STUBBLEFIELD has not sought the limelight. He has been a solid Congressman who has contributed a great deal to the betterment of the Nation.

A member of the House Committee on Agriculture, FRANK STUBBLEFIELD has been serving as chairman of the Subcommittee on Tobacco, an important assignment for the economy of his beloved State of Kentucky.

FRANK STUBBLEFIELD has also served on the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. A member of the Subcommittee on Merchant Marine, FRANK STUBBLEFIELD, although coming from an inland State, has recognized the importance of having an adequate merchant marine fleet to promote the American economy. FRANK STUBBLEFIELD's vision of a better America has not stopped at the water's edge.

I am proud to have served in the Congress with FRANK STUBBLEFIELD.

Mr. WAGGONER. I am honored today to pay tribute to one of my good friends, FRANK STUBBLEFIELD, a gentleman of the highest order.

FRANK has been around here for a long time, attesting to the wisdom of the people of Kentucky. He is a solid worker, as both his colleagues and constituents recognize. We are all going to miss his spirit of cooperation and zest for the job, as it has always made us feel a little better to be here.

While the country can ill afford a loss of such a dedicated patriot, I know that FRANK is most deserving of a rest from an outstanding public service career. And what a beautiful State he has to enjoy retirement in.

I am proud to have worked these past 13 years with a man like FRANK. He has exerted a great deal of positive influence on the affairs of this great Nation in a way that makes us fortunate indeed to have had his services for so long.

My highest personal regards and esteem for you, FRANK, are the best I have to offer. May you have the best there is in life always, for I know of no man more deserving.

Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Speaker, a distinguished record of public service will come to a close when Congressman FRANK STUBBLEFIELD leaves these Chambers.

This genial Kentuckian has served for 16 years from the Bluegrass State, and I might add that he has served well.

FRANK is best known for his work and interest in agriculture. Much of the legislation which has been reported out of that committee bears the imprint of his work. Particularly have I been appreciative of his work in behalf of tobacco, one of the largest crops grown in my district in Florida. Every time I have asked for his assistance, he has been more than willing to help.

It is interesting to note that he is a druggist by profession, a statesman by service.

We will miss his good works, but as he leaves, he can be proud that he has been able to serve so well and to leave such an imprint on the future.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, a few years ago I was privileged to make a trip to Fulton, Ky. This quaint, delightful community on the border between Kentucky and Tennessee was celebrating its annual banana festival.

I will agree that it is hard to believe there is a banana festival right in the heart of Appalachia. But Fulton is a railroad town and the terminal of the L&N—Louisville & Nashville—Railroad. More bananas are shipped into and out of Fulton probably than any other place in the world.

Congressman FRANK STUBBLEFIELD and our late beloved Congressman Robert "Fats" Everett of Tennessee were our hosts, and I learned that the people of that region loved them very much.

My own forebears came from this part of the country. Those who remained behind told me of the service FRANK STUBBLEFIELD had delivered over the years and of their respect for him.

He has helped me with agricultural matters here. FRANK STUBBLEFIELD is a quiet and unassuming man, but like Reelfoot Lake, near his home, FRANK STUBBLEFIELD runs deep. I consider him one of the most sincere and honorable and qualified men in this House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, many fine men and women achieve election to the Congress of the United States and serve with distinction. Such a person is FRANK STUBBLEFIELD.

We were all very disappointed and shocked when we learned that the Democratic voters of his district had chosen another person for their 1974 candidate. Often, the voters back home are not informed as to the excellent jobs their Congressman is doing for them. This certainly was true of Congressman STUBBLEFIELD. He was second-ranking member of the powerful Agriculture Committee, and was in a position to be of great assistance to the farmer. He could well have been the chairman of that committee in a few years, and he was a man who voted for measures that he felt were in the best interest of the Nation and his district, and fought those which were fiscally irresponsible and inflationary.

At this time in our history with the national debt rising astronomically and the welfare state coming closer all the time, we certainly must have men like FRANK in the Congress to keep an even balance. However, he is now leaving these Halls, and will return to private life. I want to extend to him and his dear wife much happiness in their retirement and continued good health.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, I have come to know and admire Congressman FRANK STUBBLEFIELD during my service with him here in the House. I have found him to be one of the most conscientious and one of the hardest working Members of Congress. I know that he will be missed as he leaves the House at the end of this Congress.

Congressman STUBBLEFIELD has served with distinction. He leaves to the Nation a legacy of outstanding accomplishments. The loss of his ability and leadership can only leave a void in this body.

I am proud to take this opportunity to publicly acknowledge the assistance FRANK has given me and to pay tribute to him for his work and dedication to programs which have helped our Nation prosper.

My most sincere good wishes go with Congressman STUBBLEFIELD in all his future endeavors.

Mr. BURLISON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, FRANK STUBBLEFIELD has left his mark in this Congress well visible to all of us who have so long observed his quiet and effective leadership.

As all of us know, he has served long and faithfully on the Committee on Agriculture and is considered an expert in all areas of agriculture. His concern for people and his dedication to the welfare of this Nation has been and will continue to be an inspiration to those of us who have the privilege of his association.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to join my colleagues in paying tribute to the distinguished service of FRANK STUBBLEFIELD.

FRANK has always maintained a deep desire and willingness to assist the citizens of his district and the Commonwealth of Kentucky. His efforts have resulted in much progress in our State during his years of service in this House, and he has been quite helpful to me in working for improvements in my own district. I know that his constituents and all of us who have worked closely with him will miss his fine example of dedication to duty and principle.

FRANK STUBBLEFIELD is my good friend, and I know that he will continue to contribute his knowledge and wisdom for the benefit of our people. He has my very best wishes always.

Mr. MCCLORY. Mr. Speaker, the departure of our distinguished colleague, FRANK STUBBLEFIELD, marks an event which should cause all of us to pause and reflect on his career of hard work and dedicated service. Mr. Speaker, I have had occasion to know FRANK STUBBLEFIELD both on a personal basis and by reason of joint legislative interests in which we have participated actively and effectively.

December 20, 1974

Mr. Speaker, I know of the devotion of FRANK STUBBLEFIELD to the people whom he served, as well as citizens throughout the Nation. I am confident that he is retiring to a life of honor and respect, which he has earned in these halls. I join my other colleagues in paying this tribute of farewell and affection to Congressman FRANK STUBBLEFIELD.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, my heartfelt best wishes are extended to FRANK STUBBLEFIELD as he returns to Kentucky after a distinguished congressional career of 16 years' able and dedicated House service.

As the Representative of the Kentucky First Congressional District, FRANK STUBBLEFIELD has devoted his great abilities to the concerns of his district, a largely agricultural one, and at the same time has been active in encouraging and promoting advances in American international trade and the spread of American technology.

As a member of the Committee on Agriculture, he was constantly at work on the American farmer's behalf; while, as a member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, he was vitally involved in seeking the improvement of American trade abroad. In both endeavors he excelled to a remarkable extent.

His primary interest in college and in the early years of his professional life was in the field of pharmacy, in which he was busily and successfully engaged for several years preceding his entry into politics and government.

He early had wide-ranging interests in everything about him and became thoroughly knowledgeable in the matter of rail transportation; in 1951 was appointed to the Kentucky Railroad Commission, of which he is still a member. It was in this capacity that he first attracted wide attention among the people of his district—enough so, that in 1958 he was persuaded to enter the Democratic primary against a popular and well-established incumbent, over whom he scored a stunning upset victory.

As a Member of the House, FRANK STUBBLEFIELD has always "called them as he saw them," issue by issue, one at a time, and with persuasive effect.

He has generally opposed legislative attempts to strengthen organized labor, which he believes to be strong enough already. Yet he never supported the enemies of organized labor in their periodic assaults upon it.

His has been a balanced viewpoint, sometimes sharing the positions taken by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and sometimes opposing them, by supporting economic reforms championed by the AFL-CIO and other friends of labor.

On civil rights and civil liberties, he has opposed those measures with which he disagreed on specific counts—the Civil Rights Act of 1964, for example—while agreeing to similar measures lacking the aspects he disagreed with—such as the voting rights of 1965.

As fifth-ranking majority member of the Committee on Agriculture, FRANK STUBBLEFIELD has well served his constituency and the farm community with a diligence that richly merited his 16 years in public office.

Having known him as a friend and colleague over that full span of time, I extend my congratulations to him on this occasion for a job well done, and I join his many friends here in wishing him well in endeavors yet to be undertaken.

Mr. EVINS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to associate myself with the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. PERKINS) and others in commending and congratulating our friend and colleague, the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. STUBBLEFIELD) for his outstanding record of service in the Congress.

FRANK STUBBLEFIELD has served in the Congress 16 years with distinction and effectiveness. He has been a champion of rural America and has contributed much to the legislative history of the Congress by promoting and developing legislative programs which have benefited the people of rural America. He has worked tirelessly on the Committee on Agriculture and is now the second ranking member.

FRANK is a fine, genial gentleman, a gallant gentleman and a skilled legislator—a true Kentucky colonel.

FRANK STUBBLEFIELD has served his district, State, and Nation faithfully and well, devoted to the public interest and to the best interests of the people of Kentucky and this Nation.

FRANK STUBBLEFIELD has been a diligent, hardworking Congressman, and he will be missed as he enters retirement, and his friends wish him the very best of good luck and success, good health and much happiness in the years ahead.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have permission to extend their remarks on the subject of my special order on FRANK STUBBLEFIELD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

GLENN JACOBS—A TRUE INFLATION-FIGHTER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. CONLAN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CONLAN. Mr. Speaker, I have here two uncashed U.S. Treasury checks for veterans benefits totaling $420. These checks were issued in November and December to my constituent Glenn Jacobs, a decorated Vietnam veteran currently teaching math to elementary school children in Eagar, Ariz.

Mr. Jacobs is one of the most unusual people I have encountered since my election to the Congress. He is 33 years old, the father of two children, and he tells me that his family can manage comfortably on his modest teaching salary.

Deeply concerned by our rampant inflation and economic trouble in our Nation, he wants to help reduce Government spending by giving up these two checks.

His battle injuries in Vietnam entitle him to these benefits, but he has asked me to help him return them to the Treasury.

Certainly this gesture comes from the heart of a genuinely sincere patriot. This is a man who selflessly gave of himself in the defense of freedom overseas, and who now wants to sacrifice again for the economic well-being of our Nation.

I wish that Mr. Jacobs' quite basic and straightforward view was shared by more officials in Government. He feels very strongly that Congress and the Federal Government are spending too much of the people's hard-earned money.

He says the bureaucracy is controlled by a "Pig Brother" mentality which believes that problems will go away if you throw enough money at them.

Mr. Jacobs charges that Government profligacy has caused the rampant inflation now destroying the earnings and savings of working Americans like himself, and he refuses to spend Government benefits he does not need to provide his family with a comfortable living.

I wish there were more Glenn Jacobses. This math teacher from a small Arizona community knows more about basic economics than most so-called experts and pundits advising our Government.

He realizes that for many decades the Federal Government has spent more than the people could afford, and through larger and larger deficits has spent more than they were willing to pay for.

He believes that some good old-fashioned belt-tightening is needed, and like all good citizens is pulling his own belt in first.

We have only to look at the history of the Federal budget over the past 20 years to know that what Mr. Jacobs says is true. The Federal budget doubled from $134 billion in 1966 to $268 billion in 1974. While the Federal budget was only $100 billion in 1961, this year it is over $300 billion.

From 1955 to 1965 when we had non-inflationary growth in our economy, Federal spending increased at the rate of about 6 percent a year. But when the Federal budget runs a deficit year after year, it becomes a major source of economic instability.

The huge Government deficits we experienced in the sixties and so far in the seventies have added enormously to artificial demand for goods and services. They have thus been directly responsible for upward price pressures.

Heavy borrowing by Government—now taking 62 percent of all available lendable money in the country—has also been a major factor in the persistent rise in interest rates and the enormous shortage of mortgage and construction money in our local banks and savings institutions, which could be used to create jobs and lower prices in the private sector.

Mr. Speaker, if Congress is the least bit serious about fighting inflation and avoiding another economic depression, it has to stop spending the people's money so irresponsibly. Like Glenn Jacobs, the Federal Government has to exert some leadership by tightening its own belt and displaying some fiscal sanity.

I am very proud of Glenn Jacobs, and I am pleased to hold him up as an example for others to emulate. By refusing to cash Government checks he does not need, even though he is legally entitled to them, he has exercised the best kind of citizenship and responsibility.

So long as we have men and women like him throughout America, there is hope left that our Nation will overcome the rampant inflation and economic troubles we now face with so many people trying to get their hands into the empty Federal trough.

AN ANACHRONISM IN THE PACIFIC

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. HOSMER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOSMER. Mr. Speaker, a referendum was held in American Samoa on June 18, 1974, on the issue of electing a Governor and Lieutenant Governor by popular vote. It failed. Although proposals such as this toward self-government are commendable, they fall far short of granting the American Samoans political freedom as envisaged by our Founding Fathers.

American Samoa has been a U.S. possession since 1900. U.S. administration of the islands has been paternalistic. The growth of democratic political institutions has languished, with power still largely resting in the hands of an appointed Governor.

Originally acquired as a U.S. naval coaling station, military interest in American Samoa rapidly waned with modern ship construction. With the termination of World War II, America found itself with a military anachronism in the South Pacific, resulting subsequently in the transfer of administrative authority over the American Samoa from the Department of the Navy to the Department of the Interior.

Tucked underneath the Equator 2,300 miles from Hawaii and lulled by somnolent trade winds, political reality of the 20th century, which has swept colonialism from the rest of the world, has gone unheeded in this tropical paradise. After all these years of American rule, Samoans are still classified as U.S. nationals, having not yet attained the status of full U.S. citizens.

Although this aberration in individual rights is attributable, many say, to the Samoans' own desires, it is odd that three generations, schooled in the American tradition of representative government, have not achieved greater political voice. Economically and socially, American Samoa has made great strides; the question remains, however, how long can progress continue without the development of corresponding political maturity.

About a year ago, I had the opportunity to visit both American Samoa and nearby Western Samoa, a politically independent state guided from U.N. trusteeship by New Zealand. Although the population of both groups of islands is ethnically the same, the contrast was remarkable. On the one hand, Western Samoa, a small, poor nation, is making its own way, proud of its accomplishment in creating a social milieu and political apparatus reflective of its cultural heritage. On the other hand, American Samoa, economically rich in comparison, lies politically dormant, stifled by a bureaucratic system spawned by an alien society 8,000 miles to the east.

Accordingly, I have come to the conclusion that it is now time for American Samoans to stand on their own political feet. It is now time for them to choose their political destiny, whether it be independence from, or through integration into, the American political family. I therefore urge the administration to study my proposal, to formulate alternatives paving the way either toward full citizenship or complete independence and let Congress place the issue squarely before the Samoan populace to decide.

LET'S CUT TAXES IN ORDER TO INCREASE CAPITAL INVESTMENT; CONGRESSMAN JACK KEMP SETS FORTH A FOUR-PART PROGRAM FOR ECONOMIC RECOVERY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York (Mr. KEMP) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, I am today setting forth a four-part program for an effective, and enduring economic recovery, one attacking both inflation and recession.

I am calling for a tax cut—in the area of 10 percent—in both corporate and personal income taxes as well as budget cuts and stable, restrained monetary policy.

I am calling for a reduction in expenditures, down to the level of revenue, and for establishing a maximum level of revenue—in relation to aggregate national income—for each fiscal year for the Federal Government.

I am calling for innovative capital formation measures, designed to produce a rapid amalgamation of the capital needed to aid industries to build and to expand, creating countless jobs in the process.

I am calling for the removal of those anticompetitive regulatory practices of the Federal Government which, in the name of increasing competition, actually lessen it, all the time adding to the price of goods and services to the tune of tens of billions of dollars.

WHY IS THIS PROGRAM NECESSARY?

It is almost with a sense of regret that I offer to the Congress and the Nation this program today.

I feel confident as to the viability of each of these measures, and I feel they ought to be enacted as soon as possible.

Yet, I feel this sense of regret because one would think that such a proposal would have come from the leadership in the Congress, or from the administration, or from the voices of business or labor. There have been some voices, but they have been few and far between.

This country needs and wants leadership on this economic crisis. The people know what the leadership of our country ought to be saying—return economic decisionmaking to free people.

It is indeed a world turned upside down in which we find ourselves today. And, just because we see confusion in the economic patterns manifesting themselves during the current crisis, it is no reason to answer with more of the same—confusion.

We need a consistent economic program which will get us out of this economic slowdown. We need one which will get people back to work; one which will provide industry with the capital it needs; one which will hold down inflation; one which will increase real earning power; one which will limit the growth of government; one which will restore the laws of supply and demand instead of the dictates of central planners.

I have no panacea, but I do have an answer, at least it can start a dialogue.

WHY ARE WE IN A RECESSION TODAY?

We are in a recession today. That cannot be debated. And, there were some of us who saw it coming, not by intuition and not by gazing into a crystal ball, but rather from comparing what the Federal Government has been doing in recent years to the prior experiences of our Nation and those of others.

While some of our economists seem to have trouble in doing it these days, any economic historian—one examining the prior experiences of other peoples and other times—could have forecast where we were going. When Government continually spends more than it takes in, when it inflates the money supply and thereby devalues the currency, when it tries to substitute centralized economic decisionmaking for the free choice of millions of consumers, and when it draws capital away from the productive capacity of the private sector, then economic chaos is virtually inevitable. Yet, these clear facts do not appear to be factors within the answers being weighed by the majority in Congress and by the White House for getting us out of this turmoil.

There is too little discussion about why we are in a recession. If we are not aware of why recessions occur, especially this one, how are we to really know if we are solving the problem or simply making it worse? Does it not seem, as a matter of logic, that we should know first what caused this recession before we try to devise solutions for recovery from it?

Knee-jerk economic recovery programs will not get us out of this recession. Only several years ago, we were told—almost arrogantly—by the Keynesian economists—in the colleges and in the Government—that there could never again be a severe depression, for Government action could and would preclude it. Those voices have been stilled by the turmoil of the past months, and for good reason. Historically, and our own Great Depression of the thirties is but one example, it is government which leads nations into recessions and depressions.

Lying at the core of this debate about economy recovery is the question as to which premise future action is to be based: Which is the best force on which to rely—government or the marketplace? The collectivists, the statist, the regulators—no matter under what party or what label—choose to side with government. They prefer government solutions. The individualists, the economic libertarians, the advocates of human initiative, choice, and ability choose to side with the marketplace. They prefer solutions arrived at, without coercion, through the laws of supply and demand as determined millions of times every day through the interaction of marketers, and producers.

THE FALLACY OF RELYING ON INCREASED FEDERAL SPENDING

Last week the House considered a so-called emergency jobs program. The price tag in the House bill was $2 billion. That's a lot of money, it is 2,000 times $1 million. Since no budget request had been made for this expenditure, we all knew that every dollar would be a deficit one. On that and other bases, some Members, including myself, voted against the bill, not because we were opposed to jobs. To the contrary, we voted against it because we felt jobs could be more quickly brought back by keeping that money in the private sector.

Federal spending has soared during recent years—at a rate unparalleled in our peacetime history. It has soared in relation to gross national product, aggregate national income, or any other index one wishes to use. It took this country 185 years to get to an annual Federal spending level of $100 billion, but it took only 9 more years to double that to the $200 billion level, and then only 4 more years to reach the $300 billion annual level.

Why are the questions about the effectiveness and level of Federal spending of such importance? First, because they are the premises on which massive, new Federal programs are being proposed; in other words, proponents of additional spending feel the way out of the recession is to spend more Federal dollars. Second, because it is argued by the same people that the more Federal dollars you spend, the more you drive down the unemployment rate? Third, because increased Federal spending forces the Nation into a decision as to how to pay for it—either by allowing deficits to accumulate which are then covered by additional borrowing of capital from the private markets or by increases in the money stock on one hand, or by increasing taxes on the other. One can see easily all the economic questions now facing us rolled up into this basic question of the role of Federal dollars in resolving our economic ills.

In the bipartisan spirit which ought to pervade the discussion on this matter, let me recount the words of the prominent Wisconsin Democrat, Senator WILLIAM PROXMIRE, on the fallacy of Federal spending, made during the Senate proceedings of August 22:

One of the most persistent myths held by almost everyone in and out of the Congress is that if we cut the mammoth increases in Federal spending, then automatically and without question unemployment will increase.

This myth—and it is just that, a myth; it is not true—has probably been as responsible as anything else for the skyrocketing growth of government over the past few years. The idea has been that every time the Federal Government spends another $10,000 or $20,000 it creates another job.

The fact that that is not true should be apparent to anyone who can add. In the past 5 years the Federal budget has exploded from $184 billion to more than $305 billion. That colossal increase in spending should have resulted in a corresponding expansion in jobs and a reduction in unemployment. Did it?

It is true the work force increased and employment in the economy grew. But far less than it should have. Unemployment grew much more in proportion than jobs did. Indeed after a break-neck expansion of Government spending we find unemployment which was 3.4 percent 5 years ago, now at 5.3 percent.

This year the Government will run a $10 billion deficit. It will borrow $10 billion and in doing so put more pressure on high interest rates to stay high or go higher.

If we cut spending by $10 billion and balance the budget, the Federal Government will not borrow that additional sum, and interest rates will begin to move down.

The Senator is absolutely right. Since the money with which we must pay for these programs must come directly from the people, then every dollar spent is one taken out of the economy. And, when you continue to divert massive sums out of the private sector and into Government, unemployment is the inevitable result.

When businesses cannot borrow sufficient funds to build or to expand because Government drained money out of the capital markets to cover deficits, no additional jobs are created.

When funds are not available to replace inventory or equipment, existing jobs are lost.

When demand is down because purchasing power has been cut by inflation, then inventories build up, and people are laid off work.

When wage and price controls create distortions in the laws of supply and demand, then shortages are created, and again jobs are lost.

When Government-mandated accessory equipment adds to the costs of vehicles, when Government-created inflation adds to those costs, and when fuel shortages created by misdirected Government policies force the price of oil and gasoline up and up, then jobs in the automobile and related industries are lost; and, one out of every five workers today is in one way or the other associated with those industries.

In summary, Government's involvement in—and interference with—our economy has contributed mightily to the unemployment rate we are now experiencing. More Government involvement, intervention, excessive spending, and draining of capital funds away from the private sector is not the answer. Those who are now without jobs ought to know that it is reliance upon government—and those who advocate continued reliance—which has brought about the decline in the job market.

WHAT IS NEEDED?

A consistent, articulated program of economic recovery is now called for.

First, we need to reduce the tax burden now upon the people—the tax burden upon our economy. We need a tax cut in the 10-percent range.

Second, we need a reduction in Federal expenditures at such an amount to assure no further deficits and a limitation on the level of revenue taken in the form of taxes by the Federal Government.

Third, we need innovative capital formation efforts, designed to produce the fastest cohesion of capital from which industry can expand and build, all the time creating jobs.

Fourth, we must remove the anticompetitive regulatory practices of the Federal Government—those policies which in the name of increasing competition actually lessen it—for these practices inevitably force up the prices of goods and services and often diminish their quality.

WE NEED A TAX REDUCTION

We need a tax reduction—both as to personal and corporate income taxes. And, I propose the consideration of that—in the area of a 10-percent reduction of both. If we are to effectively revitalize our economy, the economic activity which would result from a tax cut is an effective way to do it.

A tax cut will not only increase demand, but will also increase the incentive to produce. We must realize that productivity will increase most effectively through increased efficiency of production. Goods are sold faster through decreases in cost resulting from improved efficiency—production techniques—than by putting more dollars alone in the hands of the consumers. A tax cut would have the effect of stimulating such efficiency. In addition, recreating the incentive to produce—an incentive arising from an awareness that there are consumers for one's products and that government will take less of what one makes from those sales—reinforces this growth pattern.

A tax cut would produce sufficient additional business activity to attract foreign money, and the more foreign money which comes into the country, the more it helps to balance our trade deficit. This would lead to another beneficial change in the economy: the dollar would then appreciate against foreign currencies, meaning the United States would then be able to buy a greater share of the world's goods and services with the same number of dollars.

Prof. Robert Mundell, a Canadian economist now at Columbia University, recently summarized the need for a tax cut in the United States, one modeled after the recent Canadian cut. Arguing that unemployment and inflation are inseparable, Professor Mundell asserts that we can correct inflation through tight money, while fighting unemployment through a major tax cut.

What we could expect from these actions was recounted in a news article last week:

To deal with the immediate crisis of simultaneous inflation and recession, Professor Mundell departs from the traditional belief that monetary and fiscal policies should always be working in the same direction. He believes that inflation and unemployment are separable problems and that to combat them distinct policy instruments are required. He believes that tight money should be used to combat the inflation, while expansive fiscal policies—preferably through lower taxes—can be used to combat the recession in a way that also works against inflation.

December 20, 1974

He argues that monetary expansion no longer works as a means of stimulating production; it simply causes inflation. To some degree and for short periods it may have been a reasonably good anti-cyclical weapon during the best years of the Bretton Woods system. But now, in the regime of floating exchange rates, monetary stimulation by the Fed not only increases wage demands, but is immediately perceived by the foreign-exchange markets, causing depreciation of the dollar and an automatic increase in the price of imports. This raises costs and aggravates inflation directly. It also raises wages and thus quickly shows up in the Cost of Living Index.

To eliminate at least this cause of inflation, he says the Fed should temporarily halt open-market purchases of government securities, the traditional means through which it increases the basic money supply. The thrust of demand expansion must come from fiscal stimuli, and when the U.S. economy responds to that stimulus, growth in the real money supply can come about through a resumption in open-market purchases. At the same time, the reviving U.S. economy would draw money from Europe and the Middle East and thus protect the U.S. balance of payments. Something else would occur as the economy's growth responds to fiscal stimulus while monetary growth is checked. The dollar would appreciate against foreign currencies, which means the U.S. would then be able to buy a greater share of the world's goods and services with the same number of dollars.

Real economic growth would be stimulated by the big tax cut on both personal and corporate incomes. He would adjust income-tax brackets across the board and index them to correct for future inflation, as is now the practice in Canada, and he would get the corporate tax bite down closer to Canada's 40%.

"The level of U.S. taxes has become a drag on economic growth in the United States," he says. "The national economy is being choked by taxes—suffocated. Taxes have increased even while output has fallen, because of the inflation. The unemployment has created vast segments of excess capacity greater than the size of the entire Belgian economy. If you could put that sub-economy to work, you would not only eliminate the social and economic costs of unemployment, you would increase aggregate supply sufficiently to reduce inflation. It is simply absurd to argue that increasing unemployment will stop inflation. To stop inflation you need more goods, not less."

A tax cut not only increases demand, but increases the incentive to produce. "The government budget recycles tax dollars into the spending stream through expenditures, but in so doing it reduces the incentive to produce and lowers total production. After all, if total taxes and expenditures become confiscatory, all economic activity would cease and the government tax bite would be 100% of nothing." With lower taxes, it is more attractive to invest and more attractive to work; demand is increased but so is supply.

So too with the "crowding-out" effect, an argument against tax cuts that was popular in the 1920s. The government sale of bonds to finance a tax cut indeed crowds private borrowers out of the capital market. This is only one effect, he says. Four other things occur. Because capital and labor are the main recipients of the proceeds of the government bond sale that finances the tax cut, they are in effect receiving as a gift $30 billion they would otherwise have to borrow. In this sense, they are happily crowded out of the credit market.

Secondly, the finance required for the tax cut would be less than what would be needed if the recession is allowed to deepen. Third, Professor Mundell believes the size of the credit pool would automatically expand as the prospect of real economic growth engendered by the tax cut allows a recovery of real savings. That is, dollar holders will have a higher incentive to invest in capital goods the larger and more rapid is the recovery from the recession. The fourth effect is that the bond-sale method of financing the tax cut will draw money from abroad.

The international effects of a tax cut are particularly important, he asserts. With announcement of a major tax cut, the capital market would instantly perceive that it is more profitable to do business in the United States than the rest of the world. Capital that is now flowing out would remain; foreign capital going elsewhere would come in. The increased real economic growth would mean the U.S. would run a sizable trade deficit as the U.S. would keep more of what it produces and buy more goods from abroad. Offsetting this in the short run would be an inventory effect caused by tighter monetary conditions; the expectation of slower inflation would cause a reduction in optimal inventory levels.

There would be balance-of-payments equilibrium, he says, because the capital flows would cover any residual trade deficit until market opportunities were arbitrated worldwide. The U.S. tax cut would help to pull the whole industrial world out of its slump, he maintains.

In a real sense, he sees the $30 billion tax cut as a future public's investment in the current private, productive sector of the economy that is now unutilized. He argues that the unemployed sub-economy would respond not only by producing goods and services sufficient to repay the bonds, but would meanwhile sustain itself with output and would not have to be carried by the government dole. Six months from now, perhaps $30 billion of that potential output will have been irretrievably lost and the economy will be in much worse shape than it is right now.

As he sees it, there is not now any self-corrective economic force acting to pull the economy out of its inflationary nosedive. At present there is no control of international reserves and even the value of gold gets indexed with inflation. "Inflation itself breeds even more money which in turn breeds more inflation." There was self-correction to an economic slump during the days of the gold-exchange standard, when deflation raised the purchasing power of gold, and self-correction to inflation when inflation reduced gold's purchasing power. There is none of this today in a world of floating exchange rates, he says. The nation's economic problems feed on themselves.

"They feed on themselves through the effects of inflation on the progressive income-tax schedules and through the negative multiplier effects thus generated," says Professor Mundell. "They feed on themselves through the ever-increasing percentage increases in wages needed to maintain workers' purchasing power. And they feed on themselves through the international escalation of world money supplies that has taken place since the breakdown of the gold-exchange standard. The $30 billion tax cut is needed immediately to arrest the world slump, and if it is delayed by even one month, the figure required will be higher."

The importance of these observations and conclusions is that they are borne out by the facts associated with the recent Canadian experience.

CANADA HAS CUT ITS CORPORATE TAXES AND UNEMPLOYMENT IS WAY DOWN

Two years ago, Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau succeeded in obtaining a reduction in corporate income tax from 49 percent to 40 percent. This was no easy task. The Socialist-inclined Liberal Party strongly resisted the proposal at first, the New Democratic Party declared the proposal a "rip-off," and the Conservatives grumbled about its potentially-inflationary effects.

Advocating and pushing through the proposal required strong leadership.

What happened once the proposal was enacted?

Canada became a magnet for outside capital, even as it generated it internally. Successive surveys of capital spending plans showed jumps from 9 percent to 13 percent, then to 20 percent.

Unemployment is at 5.6 percent, notably less than ours.

The tax reduction was coupled with an innovation which allowed the progressive tax brackets, major deductions, and exemptions each year to be adjusted to hold down dollar-level increases in government revenue which would result solely from inflation. This is important, because here in the United States, if inflation amounts to 10 percent in a year and one gets a 10-percent wage increase to offset it, one's real purchasing power is still reduced because the taxpayer will through his wage increase move into a higher tax bracket solely because of inflation.

On January 1 of this year, because inflation averaged 6.6 percent in 1973, the Canadian tax brackets were adjusted upward by 6.6 percent, in effect denying the Government a $400 million inflation reward. This indexing device destroys one of the incentives for Government leaders to continue to allow inflation. On January 1, 1975, the brackets will move up to 10.1 percent, saving the taxpayers $750 million. If one believes—and I certainly do—that government's threat to individual liberty can be measured in terms of the growing percentage of the people's livelihood which is taken in the form of taxes, I think one can see the importance of restraining the growth of government in this manner.

I think this proposal ought also to be incorporated in a major tax revision.

Did all of this add up to a staggering deficit—because of reductions in revenues associated with the tax cuts? Not at all. This is one of the most remarkable aspects of the Canadian tax cut. A year ago, the Finance Minister projected a deficit of $450 million in the current years as a result of these tax cuts, but there has been so much real economic growth that revenue increases are adding up to a $250 million surplus. Those figures may be small to us, but remember their entire budget is much smaller than ours, too.

This is indeed an impressive record, and it answers many, if not most, of the questions—criticisms—which we might hear about the tax proposal which I have here today advocated for us.

December 20, 1974

COMMENSURATE REDUCTIONS IN EXPENDITURES

In that Government attempts to compensate for deficits through increases in the money stock is the principal factor in fueling inflation, we must have a reduction in expenditures, down to the level of income. Eliminating deficits takes the pressure off the Federal Reserve System to increase the money stock.

In my opinion, we must enact a means of holding expenditures to the level of revenue, and holding revenue to a predetermined level, one established in relation to aggregate national income. There is such a measure available to us. It is title I of the proposed Fiscal Integrity Act, which I first introduced on July 24, and which now has 43 House cosponsors.

Why is this necessary? Government spending—and the raising of revenue requisite to that spending—has a historical ceiling beyond which it invites either or both the collapse of the economic strength of a nation or the loss of freedom.

Government must realize that it cannot indefinitely tax the people at constantly increasing levels without destroying the people's ability to support themselves and their families.

The Congress has tried for nearly 200 years to control total spending by controlling the overall level of appropriations as each individual appropriations bill came to the floor. These efforts—commendable though they may be and successful though some may have been on occasion—simply have not worked sufficiently.

The reason these efforts have not worked is that the intentions which underlay them are not directed at the one point where more effective control really could be exercised: at the level of revenue, of income.

We have for too long tried to control spending only where the money flows from the Treasury. In other words, we are trying to plug holes in the Treasury's dike or to lighten that dike, when, instead, we should be trying to control the level of water behind it.

It is always easier to control a problem at its source. The source here is the level of revenue raised by the Government from which programs are then funded. To deal with the question of expenditures alone is to work only with the result of our problem, spending, instead of its cause—too much being taken from the taxpayers with which to do that spending.

When an institution knows that it will have a known amount of dollars with which to work, it typically devises means of spending those dollars. It is human nature. Parkinson's law, thus, states that spending rises to meet income. That is a truth demonstrated by our national experience as a government. There is a more modern corollary to Parkinson's law which, however, more accurately describes the tendencies of Congress: present spending rises to slightly exceed present income in expectation that future increases in income will cover that spending. When an institution operates from those premises—and the Congress has operated from those premises for years—it means an ever-increasing amount of dollars being taken from the taxpayers.

Federal, State, and local tax collections have risen markedly, as percentages of national income, during the past half century. In 1929, such tax collections constituted only 13 percent of total national income; by 1950, it had risen to 26 percent; and by 1972 it had risen to 34 percent. The increase is even more dramatic when compared to total national personal income: 1930, 15 percent; 1950, 30 percent; and 1972, 43 percent. If present trends continue, by 1985, total Government's share of national personal income will have increased to 54 percent—54 cents out of every $1—more than half the people's earnings.

We cannot, of course, as the legislative branch of the Federal Government—and without an elaborate amendment to the Constitution of the United States—establish revenue and budget outlays ceilings binding on all governments—Federal, State, and local.

We can, however, establish such ceilings with respect to the Federal Government. That is what title I of the Fiscal Integrity Act is all about.

It would establish for each fiscal year a revenue and budget outlays limit for the Government. No appropriation could be made for any fiscal year by the Congress in excess of the revenue and budget outlays limit for that fiscal year.

How would the limit work? The revenue and budget outlays limit for each fiscal year shall be the amount derived by multiplying the estimated aggregate national income for such fiscal year by a "Federal revenue factor."

Thus, from the first year of the operation of this provision, a ceiling in relation to national income is established on Government revenue and spending. As the economy grows, new dollars would be available for existing or new programs, but a greater percentage of the people's income would not be available.

One should note that a cut in outlays is accompanied by a cut in revenue—and vice versa—so that cutting revenue will not result in creating more of a deficit—as is now a danger—and cutting outlays should result in a cut in taxes.

The bill specifically requires that, if during any fiscal year the revenue of the Government exceeds the established limit for that year, the amount in excess shall be used for the payment of the public debt of the Government. It cannot be carried over to be spent on programs during a subsequent fiscal year.

What if an emergency arises—such as a large-scale war or severe economic crisis—which absolutely requires spending beyond the revenue level?

In that case—that emergency—a resolution passed by no less than two-thirds of each House of Congress may suspend the limitation, but only to the extent necessary to meet that particular emergency and only for that fiscal year within which the resolution was passed. If the suspension is to be continued beyond that fiscal year, the Congress must pass a new resolution allowing it. A vague, general, "times are tough" emergency resolution would not be allowable. The provisions of the bill guard against that happening.

It should also be made clear that the power of the House Committee on Ways and Means and the Senate Committee on Finance with respect to tax reform is not impaired by this bill. Within the overall revenue limitation, those committees can carry out any degree of tax reform—increasing certain taxes, reducing others—eliminating old taxes, imposing new ones—deemed necessary. The limitation is that the total revenue collection not exceed that percentage established in relation to aggregate national income for that period.

ADDITIONAL CAPITAL FORMATION ESSENTIAL
Inadequate funds for capital investment is one of the principal causes of our present economic problems.

When there are not enough funds available—after meeting expenses and paying taxes—with which to expand—or even maintain present levels of—production, jobs are jeopardized.

When families cannot borrow funds with which to build and purchase new homes—or have to pay too high an interest rate because the money market is too tight—then jobs in the building trades are jeopardized.

And, there is a multiplier effect which jeopardizes additional jobs, for when industrial production is down, there is less for shippers to transport and less for merchants to sell. When home construction is down, there is, for example, less work in related public utility and service industries—road and sewer construction, for example.

Prosperity rests—more than on any other determinant—on the amount of capital invested per person within an economy. In other words, the more capital invested per person, the greater the economic growth and the better the standard of living—in real, not inflated, dollars. Our laws have ignored this cardinal rule of economics, favoring instead those policies which have led to a decline in the rate of capital investment.

Our present Federal tax structure encourages over consumption and discourages investment, because the tax laws place a significantly heavier burden on savings and investment than on consumption. Taxwise, it is now preferable for the taxpayer to consume and spend instead of producing and saving. The tax policy which underlies this present tax structure has resulted in laws which have stifled needed capital formation and economic growth. It should be reversed.

We should adopt a tax policy—and enact legislation reflecting it—that will assist the economy in providing the goods necessary to meet domestic needs and, in so doing, combat inflation; in providing the additional jobs and equipment needed for an expanding work force; in providing wage increases based on increased productivity without inducing price increases; and, in meeting the competition for world markets so that we may resolve our balance-of-payments problem, a problem which contributes also to inflation through excessive illiquidity in the world's money markets.

December 20, 1974

That the economy of the United States needs vast increases in capital outlays is demonstrable.

In a recent editorial, entitled "Productivity: The Rest of the World Is Catching Up," The Washington Post depicted our situation this way:

America's position in the world has changed radically in the past several years: We are no longer the only extremely productive, extremely rich country. As a result, neither the nation's economy nor the world's is working the way it used to or the way that we expect it to.

Productivity is rising everywhere. But it is rising much more slowly in North America than in Europe or Japan. Economists used to brush these disparities aside by observing that, after all, wages in North America were still vastly higher than anywhere else. But, that too is less true today than several years ago.

Since 1960 productivity increases in this country have been the lowest of any of the major industrial countries, and our rate has hardly been better than the average for all the other industrial countries together.

The editorial concluded with a dim observation:

Sometimes profound changes come over countries silently, without making any news. Eventually it begins to dawn on people that something basic has changed, but only by slow gradations that nobody noticed at the time. There were no shots fired, no alarms run, no documents signed. News is made mainly by governments, but there are large areas of nation's lives that their governments don't pay much attention to. The long waves of history often pass without much public notice. Accustomed to great and unique national wealth, most Americans still have no idea how fast the rest of the world is drawing even with us in the accumulation of economic power.

This principal measure of prosperity—capital investment—gives much credence to the editorial. According to an extensive study of the Joint Economic Committee, gross private domestic investment in the United States last year was only 15.7 percent of gross national product. By contrast, Germany invested 26 percent, France 28 percent, and Japan 37 percent.

Minimally—to curb inflation and to maintain a "socially acceptable level of unemployment"—the United States should raise its investment rate to 18 to 20 percent. To stop inflation and to send unemployment back down to the lowest rate in the past 10 years, a much greater investment rate would be required.

Yet, even to maintain the 15.7, 1973 rate, the United States will have to invest over $4.5 trillion—$4,500 billions—in capital over the next 12 years. Under our present tax policy and laws, it will be difficult for this amount to be raised. To the degree that it is not raised, our prosperity will be further threatened.

Why does this huge capital need far exceed those of any previous decade?

Our industrial plants are relatively old while those of our overseas competitors are modern—with almost all the plants in western Europe and Japan dating from the period after the Second World War. If industry in the United States is to be competitive with foreign industry, it is important that outmoded, inefficient plants and equipments be replaced with the latest in design technology.

The inflated costs of construction and equipment purchases means American industry will have to pay more for that construction and equipment. Its ordinary operating expenses—purchases of inventory, labor costs, et cetera—have risen too. The funds needed for construction and equipment will have to come from additional capital investment.

And, unless there is an adequate expansion of capital investment, we will not have the new plants—creating new jobs—with which to absorb the estimated 1.6 million people coming into the workforce each and every year. That's how many new jobs we have to create, and it cannot be done without expansion of the businesses which provide those jobs.

I have introduced measures designed to stimulate this crucially needed capital formation, the principal one of which is the Savings and Investment Act, sponsored on the Senate side by Senator PAUL J. FANNIN of Arizona.

Considering the significant rises in employment—and drop in unemployment—which accompany capital formation, this is certainly a direction in which the Nation ought to be moving.

REMOVING GOVERNMENT REGULATIONS WHICH ARE IMPEDIMENTS TO COMPETITION

The fourth component of this legislative program is the removal of countless Federal regulations which—usually in the name of promoting and preserving competition—actually hamper or lessen it as well as costing consumers tens of billions of dollars a year.

There are many examples. There are the Interstate Commerce Commission regulations which require truckers to drive thousands of miles each and every year with empty trailers, returning after delivering a full load to a destination.

There are the agricultural support programs which ask the consumers to pay with their tax dollars—through subsidies—that which they do not want, cannot use, and would never eat.

There are the agricultural export programs which ask the consumer to pay the farmer to sell his product to some foreign buyer at a price lower than that at which the consumer himself can get it.

There are the FPC regulations which keep the price of natural gas at the well-heads so artificially low as to make it next to impossible for the companies to have the funds with which to explore, recover, and deliver new cases, thus creating shortages and driving up the ultimate cost.

There are the CAB controls over rates and routes which force airline to fly economically unfeasible routes, with those living along more heavily traveled areas having to subsidize those routes.

There are the laws which prohibit private carriers from competing with the postal service in the delivery of first class mail, an absolute absurdity when one compares the efficiency of the private carriers with the postal service.

As I indicated, there are many other examples. All ought to be made the subject of careful examination, with a view toward removing them and thereby freeing up competition.

SUPPORT FOR PROGRAM SOUGHT

Mr. Speaker, I believe very strongly in these measures—the four enumerated and those which emerge from them. I believe they are in the best interests of the country.

It is in this vein, that I serve notice that I intend to do everything within my power to work for their enactment and adoption during the 94th Congress. I intend to solicit the support of my colleagues, and take our case to the American people, to all their representatives in the Congress, and to the administration. In appearances, through addresses, in news articles, we—those of us who advocate these policies—intend to take our alternative economic program from the level of proposal to that of national policy. Nothing less can be tolerated for freedom is at stake.

TRIBUTE TO WENDELL WYATT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. RAILSBACK) is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. RAILSBACK. Mr. Speaker, the ending of another Congress is always bittersweet. It is especially so because many of our colleagues will not be returning the next year. Naturally, we are happy for what lies ahead for them, but we also will miss their friendships.

One of our colleagues whom I will especially miss is WENDELL WYATT. WENDELL has been one of my closest friends for many years. He is also one of the most well-liked and respected Members of the House.

His background is impressive. He served in the Marine Corps, practiced law, assisted in many political campaigns, and has served in the House of Representatives since he was first elected to the 88th Congress in November of 1964 to fill the unexpired term caused by the death of Walter Norblad. He has been an active member of the House Committee on Appropriations, and gained recognition for his realization that, while we need fiscal responsibility, we must also insure necessary funds for vital programs.

Mr. Speaker, words alone cannot describe the loss I am sure we will all feel when WENDELL does not return in January. However, I know all of us hope the future years bring much happiness to WENDELL and his lovely wife, Faye, in Oregon.

MERCY SHIPMENTS TO VIETNAM CURBED

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. STEIGER) is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, in this Christmas season, as we share the fellowship and good feeling that is so much a part of our holidays, it is easy to forget that others throughout the world are not as fortunate as we. Among those who are facing the most difficult circumstances are the hundreds of thousands of orphans in Vietnam, many of whom are illegitimate offspring of U.S. servicemen and nearly all of whom are badly in need of assistance.

December 20, 1974

As a result of congressional action a year ago, a program has been established, working through voluntary agencies, to help these children in need. Under the aegis of the Agency for International Development, it has been of immeasurable benefit to the orphans. U.S. funds have helped pay for personnel, supplies, training, and facilitation of adoptions, and we can be pleased with what has been accomplished.

We cannot, however, be pleased about the disturbing report of Columnist Jack Anderson in the December 16 Washington Post. He said that needed supplies are not getting to Vietnam, because Air Force planes are not permitted to haul them there. When children are dying because supplies, which are available, are not getting to them, we must feel deep sadness. I intend to prepare legislation which I hope will be taken up early in the 94th Congress to enable these shipments to be made on military planes.

All who are concerned for the welfare of these children will, I hope, read the Anderson column carefully:

MERCY SHIPMENTS TO VIETNAM CURBED
(By Jack Anderson)

Molra was a little orphan in Vietnam who died a month before Christmas. She died of the measles, because there was no vaccine. The vaccine that could have saved her young life never got out of the warehouse, where it is still stored in faraway America. An estimated 25,000 pounds of life-saving material is waiting in U.S. storehouses to be shipped.

Air Force planes, which have plenty of available space on their Vietnam flights, aren't permitted to haul the supplies. The national defense transportation policy restricts the government from competing with commercial airlines, except in specific emergencies.

Many orphans have died in Vietnam since the U.S. government stopped shipping vital food, clothing and medical supplies free.

The supplies have been donated by charitable Americans, but they haven't been able to raise enough additional money to pay the huge shipping charges.

Some airlines have helped. So has the Canadian Air Force, but the Pentagon has routinely denied almost every request for a Vietnam orphan airlift, citing the official policy.

This was imposed upon the Pentagon by a Congress which is more interested in boosting airline profits than in saving dying orphans. An Air Force official blamed the airline lobby.

No exceptions are made to the shipping ban. Explains a memo, meant for Pentagon eyes only, from Defense Secretary James R. Schlesinger's office: "We are then placed in an untenable position, particularly as far as some of our congressmen are concerned, of appearing to show favoritism when other requests are denied."

Air Force planes fly to Vietnam loaded with military equipment and economic aid for President Thieu. President Ford has requested a whopping amount of money to bolster the Thieu regime next year. But there isn't room in the planes for a few supplies to help the most innocent victims of the Vietnam war.

There are about 700,000 orphans in the ravaged little nation. Between 100,000 and 200,000 are half American, the illegitimate progeny of U.S. servicemen.

Yet Vietnam has only 113 orphanages, which house a total of no more than 20,000 children. The rest fend for themselves, or stay with relatives.

In the few orphan homes, the vital supplies are needed not to provide for the children's comfort but simply to keep them alive. The ratio between staff volunteers and children is an agonizing 100 to 1. Little more than the necessities of life are provided.

With inflation soaring out of control in Vietnam, these orphanages must rely on U.S. aid for the necessities.

Sen. James Abourezk (D-S.D.) is now searching for ways to loosen the insensitive regulations so food and medicine can be shipped to the orphans. The Air Force itself would like to see something done.

Meanwhile, many Vietnam war orphans may not live to see another Christmas.

Footnote: Until Dec. 1, packages for orphans could be sent to Vietnam with the military mail. Now even that has been discontinued.

The Agency for International Development gave one group, Friends of Children, $5,000 to defray shipping costs. But the money ran out before many children could be supplied.

Mrs. MINK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join my distinguished colleague from Wisconsin in his remarks on current deplorable restrictions on the use of military aircraft to transport directly needed humanitarian supplies to Vietnamese orphanages.

For over 3 years now I have been actively sponsoring and supporting legislation which would facilitate adoptions and provide greater American assistance to Vietnamese orphanages and child welfare programs.

I have been consistently impressed by the great compassion and generosity evidenced by the American people toward these children. Private humanitarian groups have worked extremely hard to collect funds and supplies for Vietnamese orphanages that are struggling to cope with tragically large numbers of orphaned and abandoned children.

It is unconscionable that these children continue to suffer while contributed goods stockpile here in the United States and military planes fly half-empty to Vietnam.

In those special instances where basic humanitarian supplies are desperately needed, where these goods have been collected by private, nonprofit groups and where space is available on military flights, provision should be made for their transport.

I intend to offer legislation in the next Congress to this effect. I know my colleague from Wisconsin (Mr. STEIGER) is similarly interested in such a bill. I look forward to working with him on this.

This proposal entails no additional expenditure of funds; it does, however, encourage a fuller, more compassionate utilization of our resources. I believe Congress and the American people, in their deep concern for the health and welfare of these children, will support this legislation.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have until the close of the 93d Congress to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of my special order for tonight.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

THE PROMISED LAND—A TRAGEDY IN TERRORISM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. ASHBROOK) is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, the biblically promised land of today, Israel, is thanks to man, a land which promises only an ever deepening bitter despair and disillusionment to those who cherish it. It has become a laboratory for terrorist experimentation. The small parcel of acreage by the beautifully blue Mediterranean, which embraces the Holy City held sacred by the world's major religions and which symbolizes love of fellowman, is polluted by a manmade, suffocating smog of hate and revenge that reaps an increasing carnage of flesh and fortune from terrorists—in the name of patriotic nationalism.

Never in the history of mankind has a geographical area of the globe, roughly the size of New Jersey, been so fought-over, for so long, or so viciously as has Israel, formerly Palestine, named after the ancient Philistines.

Following their exodus from Egypt about 1200 B.C. the Jews settled in Palestine where for some 1,300 years they enjoyed self-government or at least some autonomy. In 586 B.C., the Babylonians conquered Palestine and drove out the Jews, who would however, return in 50 years to reestablish their settlements.

Subsequently, ancient Palestine was ruled successfully by Persians, Greeks, Maccabees, Romans, Byzantines, Arabs—637-1071 A.D., Egyptians, Crusaders, Mongols, and the Mamelukes. From 1517 until World War I, Palestine was part of the Ottoman Turk empire which was destroyed by the allied forces.

To secure Jewish support in that war the Cabinet of Great Britain issued the Balfour Declaration in 1917 which supported the Zionist dream of creating a Jewish homeland in Palestine. Under the League of Nations Mandate for Palestine, administered by Britain beginning in 1921, about four-fifths of historic Palestine was detached in 1922, an action subsequently formalized in 1946, to form Trans-Jordan, now the Kingdom of Jordan.

As a result, the mix of population and land ownership in the remaining portion of Palestine shifted in favor of the Jews whose numbers were also increasing as the result of new Jewish immigrants. The Jews pursued a reclamation program on the sparsely populated and desolate land and they also introduced modern living and working conditions, the success of which attracted Arabs from Syria, Iraq, and Egypt.

December 20, 1974

But, as in other areas of the globe following World War II, Great Britain under its mandated responsibility had its hands full umpiring the thorny Palestinian problem. Arab guerrilla fought Jewish guerrilla and both fought the English who would, by 1947 be content to relinquish their policemen's role to the United Nations which, with the support of the Western powers, proposed the partition of Palestine into two independent states effective May 1948.

Israel as a nation state had finally fulfilled the dream for which the Zionist movement had striven since 1881. Prior to 1948, however, the Palestinian Jew and the Palestinian Arab both claimed Palestine as their rightful homeland—and theirs alone. In their frustration both struck at the authority close at hand, the English. In 1936, the Arabs concerned over the increasing influx of Jewish immigrants, broke out with a full-scale riot against the British. This was the formative period for the creation of the Mujahin, meaning "freedom fighters"—the forerunners of today's Fedayeen. Fedayeen is a general term for guerrilla and translated means "men of sacrifice."

Of the two militant Jewish guerrilla groups which operated in the 1930's and 1940's, who when they were not striking at the Palestinian Arabs were harassing the English, one was the Irgun Zvai Leumi, popularly called Irgun—National Military Organization—which was led by Menachem Begin. "Our enemies call us terrorist, our friends patriots" once wrote Begin, a statement which today could as aptly be attributed to Yasser Arafat, leader of the Palestine Liberation Organization—PLO—and also of the Al Fatah, the leading Palestinian terrorist group.

The second Jewish guerrilla group was the Lohamel Herut Israel—Fighters for the Freedom of Israel—commonly called the Stern Gang, after its first leader, Avraham Stern.

Irgun and the Stern Gang operated independently of the Jewish Agency, quasi-official form of government for the future Jewish state. The agency sanctioned the David Ben-Gurion-led Haganah; that is, Defense—a more conventional military body which would at independence, become the Israel Defense Force—IDF. On occasion it collaborated with the two Jewish guerrilla groups. Its function was to defend Jewish positions and to repulse Arab attacks on Jewish settlements. It would, following the later dissolution of the Irgun and the Stern Gang, absorb many of their guerrillas.

From a Westerner's viewpoint the vicious indiscriminate slaughter perpetrated by Arab terrorists met its match in similar groups fielded by the Jews. Neither side adhered to any Geneva code or Queensberry rule. The grim, no-holds-barred terrorist strikes by both sides within the territory of Palestine seemed more in keeping with the harsh retaliatory exhortation expressed in a passage of the Bible that is:

Thou shall give a life for a life, an eye for an eye, . . .

And the Koran:

Prescribed for you is retaliation touching the slain: freedom for freedom, slave for slave, female for female.

Both sides hit and hit hard. Both played for keeps, whether one called them terrorists and gangster, or freedom fighters and liberators.

Understandably the British wanted out. The Jewish guerrillas blasted the British with bombs and assassinated their officials. Lord Moyne, the English Administrator for the Middle East, was slain in Cairo by the Stern Gang in 1944. In July 1946, retaliating against the British for arresting some of their Jewish leaders, Irgun blew up a wing of the King David Hotel in Jerusalem, which was being used as headquarters for the British army. Ninety-one persons were killed and 45 wounded. In 1948, the Stern Gang assassinated the U.N. mediator in Palestine, Swiss Count Folke Bernadotte.

In the same year, the Irgun and the Stern Gang liquidated 250 Arabs in the village of Deir Yassin. Two leaders of the Irgun subsequently served in the Knesset, one as Deputy Speaker; and a leader of the Stern Gang won a seat in the Israeli Parliament shortly after Count Bernadotte's murder.

ARAB TERRORIST TRADITIONS

Arab guerrilla tactics developed historically after the seventh century A.D. from traditions created by the quick strikes of mounted raiding bands or what might be characterized today as the "hit and run" tactic. Islam converts used such tactics in their conquests in the Middle East, North Africa, parts of South Asia, and on occasion, in their raids into Europe.

Second, warfare in the Middle East, which was militarily innovative and adaptive concerning skills, weapons, and tactics, saw the coordinated and simultaneous use of blending orthodox warfare with the unorthodox. A case in point was Lawrence's Arab guerrillas who teamed with Allenby's British armies to fight against the German-modeled Turkish armies.

Today's conflicts in the Middle East reflect to some degree these past traditions. The Israeli, as did the Arabs, had guerrilla-type units fighting in conjunction with their military regulars in the first Arab-Israeli war of 1948-49 as they did, on a larger scale, in their subsequent clashes.

The 1948 war began only a few hours after Israel proclaimed her independence on May 14 when the armies of Egypt, Syria, Jordan, Lebanon, and Iraq, aided by military elements from Saudi Arabia crossed her frontiers but were defeated. Jordan, however, seized the west bank and subsequently annexed it. On occasion, the Israeli will use her conventional army in unconventional ways using guerrilla type raids against Arab guerrilla bases while at the same time conducting a conventional war against the regular Arab armies.

EARLY FEDAYEEN ACTIONS

Arab guerrilla developments prior to Israel's independence in 1948 were less well organized and more haphazard than that of the Jewish guerrilla. The Palestinian tribal chief or village elder usually called up the young men to defend the settlements but such efforts proved ineffective against the better led, organized, and disciplined Jewish forces. A second line of Arab irregulars created by the Arab League was the Arab Liberation Army composed of Palestinians and volunteers from Egypt and Syria. However, it was not until 1948 with the entry of regular Arab armies into the war that the Arabs were able to offer any serious challenge to Israel.

While Arab Palestinians were numerically superior to the Jews several factors worked against them: Failure to grasp the strength of Jewish resolve and motivation; the sapping divisiveness of constant bickering among and within Arab terrorist groups; and the lack, until recently, of genuine, quantitative assistance from Arab League member nations.

Although Israel's political goal was defense, pure and simple, and the maintenance of her geographical integrity and sovereignty, her military mission was offensive, that is, quick knockout punches directed at the Arabs' most vulnerable spots using her maximum military resources.

Following several swift victories whereby the Israelis gained momentum the cavalier attitude of the humiliated Arabs soon began to change. In 1955, Egypt decided to support Palestinian raider groups for hit and run strikes into Israel conducted from jump-off points along the Sinai—which was the Egyptian-Israeli armistice line created by the 1949 truce following their first war—and also from the Gaza Strip. Egyptian military intelligence units directed these incursions. Syria also conducted such sorties. Fedayeen elements were also employed by Egypt on occasion against other Arab governments including Jordan and Lebanon. Arab strikes into Israel were one of the major contributing factors leading to the second Arab-Israeli war of October 1956, the so-called Suez War, when Israel invaded Egypt's Sinai aided briefly by military contingents from Britain and France.

As a result of this war—as well as the two yet to be fought—Palestinian refugees fled from their homes and settlements in Israel swelling thereby the numbers of those living in the "shantytown" refugee camps who had previously left Israel following the creation of the state in 1948. As the refugees grew in number so also did their resentment and the urge for revenge.

A United Nations cease-fire became effective November 1956 and an uneasy truce—excepting for Arab terrorist raids—prevailed under military supervision until May 1967. It was during the interim period between the first and second conflict that Arab terrorist groups began to sprout.

In May 1967, Egypt's President Gamal Abdel Nasser requested that the United Nations withdraw its troops thus paving the way for the third Arab-Israeli war popularly called the Six-Day War. When the U.N. pulled its forces out Egypt rapidly reoccupied the Gaza Strip and closed the Gulf of Aqaba to Israeli shipping. On June 5, 1967, Israeli military forces struck quickly and decisively defeated the Arab armies and captured the Sinai Peninsula, Old Jerusalem, Syria's Golan Heights, Jordan's West Bank, and the Gaza Strip, areas still occupied by Israel today.

December 20, 1974

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—HOUSE

41913

THE ISSUE—PALESTINIAN ARAB NATIONALISM

The problem from the viewpoint of the Palestinian Arabs which, if solved to their satisfaction, would also settle the Middle East problem in general, is the creation of a new independent secular nation where Jew, Arab, and Christian would coexist. However, Israeli authorities and the extreme radical wing of the Palestinian movement reject this proposal, the latter opting for a Middle East Dunkirkian solution whereby the Jews would be driven into the Mediterranean waters. Palestinian paramilitary ambitions could not be realized however without the support, the serious support, from the entire Arab League, support of a political, military, and financial nature. The token Arab League support of past years it now appears is being reinforced by substantial financial commitments from League members today especially the oil-rich countries. As in the case of the tail wagging the dog it would appear that the Palestinians themselves have provided much of the spark which ignited Arab feelings throughout the entire Middle East resulting in a bitter hatred of Israel.

Compared to other Arabs the Palestinians are a very proud, ambitious, and industrial people. Scores of thousands hold university degrees. Considering themselves to be the elite among the Arabs, Palestinians may be found in high positions in business and professional circles throughout the Arab world. In Yemen, Saudi Arabia, and the Sheikdoms of the Persian Gulf they dominate the civil service, diplomatic corps, and educational systems. Their disbursement among the nations of the Middle East, particularly those states which border Israel is such as to have maximum influence on those governments whose territories contain the refugee camps which provide the ready-made recruiting pools for future terrorists. Of the over 3 million Palestinians, 470,000 live in Israel—which has a population of 3,400,000; 1½ million in Jordan including the West Bank; 200,000 in Syria; 320,000 in Lebanon; 400,000 in Egypt's Gaza Strip and Northern Sinai; and 250,000 in Saudi Arabia, the Arab Emirates, and Kuwait.

The largest number of Palestinians live under Israeli rule either in Israel proper or in the occupied areas of the West Bank or Gaza. The 470,000 Arabs in Israel are the most prosperous but reportedly the least content of all Palestinians. Israeli authorities, however, refute this contention. Arabs are routinely stopped and searched and they claim that they enjoy only second-class citizenship in Israel.

About 600,000 Palestinians refugees live in makeshift camps on a hand to mouth existence. Israel asserts that the pitiful refugee camp situation was of the Arab states own making because it was they who ordered the Palestinians to abandon, initially, their thriving farms, and settlements in Israel in order to facilitate the invasion by Arab armies in 1948.

Palestinians on the other hand respond that they were driven off their land by the Jews and by Jewish guerrillas. For this reason they claim, they want a Palestinian state which would protect their property and families from encroachment in the future.

In such a climate of bitter hatred, disillusionment, and despair piled upon centuries-old animosities, were the Palestinians terrorist groups conceived.

THE PALESTINIAN LIBERATION ORGANIZATION

The Palestinian Liberation Organization—(PLO)—was established in January 1964, at the first Arab summit meeting held in Cairo. Eventually it would become the coordinating parent body for six major Arab guerrilla groups—and and there minor "independents"—some of whom originally were, militarily speaking, a motley collection of unstable rivals who differed over both the ways and the means to do in Israel. Part of the erratic behaviour of the Arab terrorist groups is also attributable to the contrasting policies of certain Arab states, the personalities of their leaders, and the on-again-off-again support rendered to the Palestinians which, however, is not the subject of this review.

To understand Palestinian paramilitary operations it is crucial to grasp the political vacillation of the Arab states. In short, PLO became a vehicle of inter-Arab politics rivalries and influences. For example, following the first Arab meeting in Cairo when PLO was created in January, a second was held in September 1964 at which Egypt allocated 6 million Egyptian pounds for the establishment of a Palestinian Liberation Army—PLA. But Syria objected shortly thereafter to the predominant Egyptian influence over the PLO. Hence, Syria became the patron of a small hitherto unknown group called Al Fatah, which would later drift over to Egypt's orbit.

The creation of the PLO and the PLA were apparently attempts by the more moderate Arab governments to appease those Palestinians who felt that the Arab states were moving much too slowly toward the goal of an independent Palestinian state whose boundaries they hoped would conform to those of pre-1967 Israel. However, Yasser Arafat the current PLO spokesman and chairman of its executive committee, stated in 1970 that—

The goal of our struggle is the end of Israel, and there can be no compromise. . . .

And again in 1974 he boasted that—

I will push the revolution on to its land and that will determine the future of its boundaries.

Today such radical sentiments are played down in behalf of a tactically more moderate image concerning negotiations with Israel for a Palestinian state.

PLO'S MAJOR COMPONENTS

The sixth major terrorist organizations comprising PLO are:

First, Al Fatah—The Movement for the Liberation of Palestine.

Second, The Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine—PFLP.

Third, The Popular Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine—PDFLP.

Fourth, The Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-General Command—PFLP-GC.

Fifth, Al Saiqa.

Sixth, The Arab Liberation Front—ALF.

The PLO was headed by Ahmad Al-Shuquyri until December 1968 when he was replaced by Yahya Hammudi whom Yasser Arafat would relieve when the new Executive Committee was elected in January 1969. The Executive Committee which was recently expanded from 9 to 13 members is dominated by Fatah personnel including Arafat whose leadership was approved at the 51st session at the Arab League Council.

The PLO has a semiformal army called the Palestine Liberation Army. An estimate of the strength of PLA's commando-like units in 1970 was about 7,000 men of which 3,000 were stationed along the Suez front with the Egyptian army, another 3,000 with the Syrian forces, and the remainder with the Iraq. Other, current estimates, placed PLA strength at 12,000 to 17,000 full time combatants.

As PLO Chieftain, Arafat, a shrewd and clever manipulator of people and causes, was partially successful in disentangling PLA's problems which had resulted from the inactivity created by a parasitic, self-seeking officer clique. He was also successful in cleaning out PLO's top bureaucracy and also in bringing some degree of harmony to the PLO caused by its divisive elements.

That most of the leaders of the Arab world are satisfied with Arafat's leadership of PLO was confirmed recently at their meeting in Morocco when they endorsed Arafat as spokesman for all Palestinians including those living in Israel. Moreover, the 18 Kings, Presidents, Emirs, et cetera, present at the Rabat Summit meeting in Morocco agreed on an annual military subsidy for the "Arab confrontation countries" and the PLO. The funds would come from Saudi Arabia and other oil-rich nations. Syria and Egypt would reportedly receive $1 billion each year, Jordan $300 million, and the PLO $50 million. For Israel, of course, this spells serious trouble in upper case.

PLO leaders have shown a distinct partiality toward the heads of state of Communist countries. In 1965, PLO's first Chieftain, Al-Shuquyri, visited Peking where reportedly he arranged for a supply of small arms and for the training of PLA units by the Red Chinese and by the Vietcong. In 1970, Arafat also visited Peking as well as Hanoi. The head of PLO's Unified Information Council, Majid Abu Sharar, stated in May 1974 before PLO's Executive Council that PLO should establish very close and firm "daily relations" between the Soviet Union and the Palestinian Resistance Movement.

AL FATAH

Al Fatah, or the Movement for the Liberation of Palestine, is a nationalistic extremist organization founded in 1956 during the Suez war. Fatah, an Arabic word for conquest, is the oldest, the largest, and among the Arabs, the most popular of PLO's member groups. Initially, it sputtered along conducting sporadic raids here or there into Israel during the time of the United Nations enforced armistice but mainly it provided for re-establishing communication links disrupted when the Israeli invaded the Sinai. Fatah appealed to the embarrassed frustrated Palestinians and it filled the gap created by the defeat of the Arab armies during the Six-Day War.

As previously noted, Fatah's leader is Yasser Arafat, a civil engineer who was born in Jerusalem in 1929, moved to Gaza where he fought in the first Arab-Israeli war of 1948 and then later became a demolitions expert in the Egyptian army after graduating from officers school in 1955. The following year he fought against the French and the British in the Suez war.

Fatah's headquarters are located in Beirut, Lebanon, where it enjoys the status of a state within a state as the result of an agreement reached between the government and Arafat in Cairo in 1969. It maintains camps and bases in Lebanon as well as hospitals and schools and even employs its own tax collectors. It also has offices and training facilities within the other "confrontation Arab nations"; that is, those which border Israel.

Estimates of Fatah's military strength vary widely as do those of all covert Arab terrorist groups. Calculations run from 2,000 to 7,000 and up to a figure of 15,000 support and administrative personnel. Guerrilla training is conducted at refugee camps—which are administered by the United Nations and heavily funded through it by the United States where courses in firearms, urban warfare tactics, and political education are given. In spite of the latter, Fatah does not appear to have a very clearly defined ideological position. Some camps can handle up to 150 recruits at a time. Military instructors have been provided by former officers from Algeria, Syria, Egypt, Jordan, and Iraq.

Weapons are primarily of Soviet origin some of which are secreted through Syria, Egypt, and Iraq or directly bought from the Communist nations of Eastern Europe.

FATAH'S BLACK SEPTEMBER ORGANIZATION

While Fatah's paramilitary operations against Israel proper are conducted by its own regular units, its more brutal, spectacular terrorist assignments are reserved for the Middle East version of Murder, Inc., the infamous Black September Organization—BSO—which was created in 1971. This wantonly vicious organ of mayhem, founded by Munzer Salman Khalifah, adopted its name from the September 1970 beating given to the Fedayeen forces by King Hussein of Jordan who resented the encroachment made by the terrorist in his domain.

Black September was organized to avenge that defeat in which at least 2,000 Arab guerrillas and Palestinians civilians were slain by the King's military forces. As the result, there appears to be a standing death contract out on Hussein's life by the Fatah and, according to Abu Iyad, PLO's Executive Committee member:

There is a decision by (Al Fatah) revolutionary council to topple the Jordanian regime, and everyone in Al Fatah is bound by the decision.

Fatah/BSO chief exploits include the Munich massacre of 1972 in which eleven Israeli athletes attending the Olympic games were killed and it also engineered the killing of one Belgian and two American diplomats in March 1973 in the Sudan, at Khartoum.

Other activities of BSO, many of which are too numerous to mention, include the attempted assassination of the Jordanian Queen Mother in August 1971; the murder of the Jordanian Prime Minister, Wasfi Tal, in Cairo; and an unsuccessful attempt in Pakistan on the life of the Jordanian Crown Prince.

According to a recent staff study on terrorism prepared by the House Committee on Internal Security, the Libyan Government of Col. Muammar el-Qaddafi appears to have adopted the radical wing of Black September. The Libyan leader reportedly gave Arafat $5 million as a bonus for the BSO massacre of the Israeli athletes in Munich. When the PLO was founded in 1964 the oil-rich Qaddafi reportedly promised to contribute 25 percent of PLO's $40 million annual budget.

Cellular in structure, BSO's estimated strength runs from 100 to 600 members most of whom have lived abroad for many years. Because its terrorist activities are conducted in foreign countries BSO for operational purposes, is divided into four territorial regions: Europe, South America, the Middle East, and North America where it seeks recruits from among the 12,000 Arab students residing there.

THE POPULAR FRONT FOR THE LIBERATION OF PALESTINE

The Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine—PFLP—second largest of the Palestinian organizations, was founded by Dr. George Habash, a native of Lydda, now Lod, Israel. Born in 1925, PFLP's leader, a Greek Orthodox is a graduate of the American University of Beirut and a licensed medical doctor. In 1948, he organized a group called "Vengeance" which fought as guerrillas against Israel in 1948. Because of his Marxist outlook and his uncompromising attitude toward both Israel and those Arab governments which were inclined to negotiate on the Palestinian problem, Habash was forced to operate underground for some 20 years.

PFLP was created in November 1967 by the merger of several small groups. Heroes of the Return; the Youth for Revenge; the Palestine Liberation Front; and the Arab Nationalist Movement led by Habash, which was a Pan-Arab Marxist-Leninist Revolutionary Group, banned at various times by most of the Arab governments.

The Marxist maverick, PFLP, despises the "reactionaries," Hussein of Jordan and Faisal of Saudi Arabia, almost as much as it hates Israel and "Western Imperialism"—meaning the U.S.A. in particular.

Habash's violent factionalism, which has led to his alienation by other terrorist groups, has reportedly rejected cash offers from Kuwait and Saudi Arabia on ideological grounds. Habash, who heads PFLP's five-man politburo, has received his main support in weapons and training from Syria, Iraq, Algeria, and the People's Republic of Yemen. PFLP has also received aid from Moscow and Peking.

PFLP, Al Fatah's major rival for Palestinian support—Habash contending that Arafat is going soft on Zionism—reportedly has between 3,500 to 7,000 members. It has had relationships or associations with almost every major extremist or revolutionary organization on the globe, including: The Japanese United Red Army, the Tupamaros of Uruguay, the Irish Republican Army, West Germany's Baader-Meinhof Gang, the Turkish People's Liberation Front, the Red Brigade of Italy, and the Ethiopian Eritrean Liberation Front. It also asserts to have trained members of the U.S. Black Panther Party.

Clearly rivaling BSO in spectacular and wanton mass murder, PFLP was the first Arab terrorist group to successfully hijack an aircraft in 1969, although some suspect that PFLP was responsible for the July 1968 hijack of an Israeli El Al plane in Rome.

In December 1968 two PFLP teams attacked an El Al jet in Athens, enroute to New York, killing one passenger and wounding two. In February 1969, PFLP attacked another El Al airliner in Zurich, killing the pilot and wounding the copilot. The first non-Israeli plane to be hijacked, a TWA airliner, by Palestinians was in August 1969 and resulted in an exchange of passengers for Palestinian prisoners.

In a hijacking bonanza on September 6, 1970, PFLP diverted simultaneously two American airliners—TWA, Pan Am—and a Swissair plane to Egypt and Jordan, eventually blowing up all of them.

PFLP diverted a Lufthansa aircraft in February 1972 from Athens to Yemen where the terrorist received $5,000,000 in ransom from West Germany for the release of its crew and passengers.

Among the numerous hijackings, or aircraft-related incidents, by PFLP, perhaps the most notorious was that at Tel Aviv's Lod Airport. Three PFLP recruits from the Japanese United Red Army who had flown in from Rome opened fire indiscriminately with machine guns and grenades on innocent passengers, killing 25 and wounding 76.

During 1973, PFLP and covert Israeli operatives engaged in a grisly private war across Europe.

Habash has apparently pulled out of PLO's executive committee, which he had previously threatened to do, if the Arabs capitulated to Israel and to the United States on the Palestinian issue. Iraq supports Marxist Habash's hard no-compromise line, and it is likely that Libya does also, although Colonel Qaddafi despises Marxism and has often arrested homegrown Libyan Communists.

POPULAR DEMOCRATIC FRONT FOR THE LIBERATION OF PALESTINE

The Popular Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine—PDFLP—is an independent, pro-Mao, Marxist-Leninist group, which spun off from the PFLP in 1969 on the grounds that the latter was not vigorous enough in combating conservative Arab governments like Jordan on the question of Israel. Habash, on the other hand, a Marxist who opposed Soviet policies in the Middle East and Communist liberation movements in general, supposedly welcomed the defection of his former lieutenant, Nayif Hawatmeh, leader of dissident PDFLP faction, because of the latter's fondness for the Asian Communist brand of revolutionary methods. Hawatmeh is pro-Peking, pro-Hanoi, and also pro-Havana. He presses for a protracted "people's war" in the Middle East, hopefully one which would become another Vietnam.

Hawatmeh, 40, an avid Marxist-Leninist of Arab-Christian descent, was born in the town of Salt on the East bank of the Jordan, and like his former Chief Habash, attended the American University in Beirut and then joined the revolutionary Marxist-Leninist Arab National Movement.

PDFLP whose members number between 500 and 1,000 terrorists operates in Lebanon, Syria, and Jordan and like PFLP considers any Israeli or Israeli-related enterprise fair game for attack. In practice, however, PDFLP participated in no significant terrorist action for several years following its inception. Generally speaking, PDFLP engages in grenade-tossing, and hit and run raids on Israeli markets and buses.

As the result of smarting criticism from fellow Palestinians that his bark was worse than his bite, Hawatmeh engineered a brutal PDFLP kamikaze-like attack on the village of Maalet where a school was seized in May 1974. Twenty-five Israeli civilians were killed and at least 60 were wounded, most of them teenage schoolchildren. According to Hawatmeh, the purpose of the slaughter of these youngsters and villagers was, ironically, to assure a role for the Arab terrorists at the forthcoming peace talks in Geneva.

POPULAR FRONT FOR THE LIBERATION OF PALESTINE—GENERAL COMMAND

The Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine—General Command—(PFLP-GC)—was another dissident group to defect from PFLP, in 1968, after the latter lost its fight with Fatah over who would dominate the Palestinian guerrilla movement.

The General Command is a small ultra-militant organization said to be less ideological but more action-orientated than either PFLP or PDFLP.

With a paramilitary strength estimated between 200 and 1,000 men the General Command is considered extremely dangerous because of its leader's reputation for violence. Major Ahmad Jabril, 45, former Syrian Army demolitions officer, who has reportedly received training in the U.S.S.R. was, at the time, considered too pro-Nasser to suit Habash.

Jabril maintains close association with the Syrian High Command and launches numerous raids into Israel from Syria. As a former faction of PFLP the General Command reportedly refused to abide with the 1970 agreement between the PLO and the Lebanese Government to cease launching raids from Lebanese territory.

CXX—2642—Part 31

The General Command specializes in letter and package-bomb attacks. It claimed credit—and then retracted—for the midair bomb explosion in February 1970 of a Swissair flight enroute to Israel in which all 47 passengers and crew were killed.

In May 1970, the General Command attacked an Israeli school bus near the Lebanese border killing 12 persons, including 8 children, and wounding 20.

In another major suicide attack, the Command stormed an apartment building the village of Qiryat Shemona killing 18 persons, mostly women and children. The attack was made in order to secure the release of a member of the Japanese Red Army. In characteristic fashion Israel quickly retaliated by hitting the Palestinian raid-launching bases in southern Lebanon.

Abu Abbas, a spokesman for the General Command, stated at a press conference on June 13, 1974, immediately following the killing of three women at the Shamir kibbutz, that PFLP-GC rejected U.N. Security Council resolutions on the basis of the General Command's belief that Palestine—from the sea to the River—Jordan—was Arab territory.

AL SAJQA

Al Sajqa, or "Thunderbolt" as it is called, is the commando organization spawned by the Syrian Baath Party, and controlled as an "unofficial auxiliary" by the Syrian Army. Reportedly its officers are drawn from regular Syrian Army units. Established in 1967 it represents Syria's voice in the PLO.

Largely funded by Damascus, it is led by Zuheir Mohsen, 45, and consists of about 2,000 to 3,000 men, including 1,000 guerrillas most of whom are Palestinian refugees. Operating out of Syria and Jordan, its strikes are directed, on occasion in unison with Fatah, against installations in northern Israel.

Reportedly Sajqa has fought against both the Lebanese and the Jordanian armed forces.

THE ARAB LIBERATION FRONT

The Arab Liberation Front—ALF—was founded in 1969 to accommodate Palestinians sympathetic to the radical Iraqi Baath Party, and to coordinate its guerrilla activities against Israel which are relatively infrequent compared with the other major PLO members. ALF, led by Abdel Wahab Kayyali, 37, is in effect Iraq's mouthpiece in the PLO.

ALF guerrillas which number from about 100 to 500, operated from bases in Iraq, Jordan, and Syria until the latter split with Iraq, because of political differences. Iraqi military units train, arm, and fund the ALF.

PALESTINIAN FACTIONALISM

The six major groups which compose PLO, according to the HISC staff study on terrorism previously mentioned, are divided basically into two factions of three each regarding their respective end-objectives vis-a-vis Israel.

The minority faction, composed of the Marxist-Leninist PFLP, the well-armed extremist PFLP-GC, and Iraq's ALF believe that Israeli's annihilation is the first priority of all Palestinians; that negotiations for the creation of a Palestine nation composed of the West Bank and Gaza is ill-advised, because it assumes the continuance of Israel as a nation; and finally that a new Palestine nation should be founded where Israel now exists.

The majority faction in PLO led by Arafat's Fatah, the Syrian-controlled Sajqa, and the Maoist PDFLP support, at least at this time, the creation of a PLO-controlled nation in those areas which Israel captured from Jordan during the 1967 "Six-Day War."

Soviet policy also supports this view which may appear ironical to some in light of her long, avowed goal of world domination—détente and coexistence tactics notwithstanding. It behooves the U.S.S.R. to support the more moderate of the options—at this time. Soviet policy has always been founded fundamentally on tension and plenty of it. If it does not exist in its natural state, create it. Pit person against person—especially leaders—group against group, country against country—and then stand by to pick up the pieces resulting from what essentially is a "let's you and him fight" philosophy.

Were Israel to be destroyed the Kremlin would lose the tension-creating issue in the Middle East and thus pave the way for the eventual smoothing over of the current estrangement existing between Washington and certain pro-United States, Mideast countries. For Moscow this would never do, because two of her immediate strategies would, therefore, be seriously jeopardized: the waning of Soviet subversion and influence in that crucial area; and equally important, the aborting of her policy of denying raw materials and waterways to the United States, and to her NATO allies.

To the Politburo in Moscow, Israel as a live issue is vastly more important, strategically, than Israel would be as a dead state, tactically.

In my extension of remarks on October 15, 1974, I stated:

I agree that the greatest threat to the freedom of all mankind continues to be the Soviet Union, and this is not an issue of being conservative or liberal . . . but a fact of international life.

I then concluded in those remarks on the Middle East situation that—

Most of all, it is in the interest of the free world that the differences between Israel and the Arab world be settled on the principles of genuine freedom and mutual understanding which, of course, requires the survival of Israel as well as the security of the Arab nations.

THE HONORABLE H. R. GROSS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. CLEVELAND), is recognized for 10 minutes.

December 20, 1974

Mr. CLEVELAND. Mr. Speaker, as we wrap up the 93d Congress, I can think of no more fitting subject for a final comment from this Member than a word of fond farewell to our departing colleague, H. R. Gross.

For 26 years in this body, H. R. has become a legend for his meticulous and painstaking scrutiny of the doings of the executive agencies downtown as well as some of the follies perpetrated by the legislative process here on the Hill.

If he has been unique in his war on waste over the years, it is to his credit and to the discredit of others to the extent that they have left it to his one-man operation.

In my view, H. R. has been truly representative of far more than his own Iowa constituents in championing economy in government. Take inflation. The public at large recognizes that much of the blame rests with government. Or this business of responsiveness of government. H. R. has struck a responsive chord with vast numbers of Americans in exposing the cavalier attitude with which the Congress and administrative agencies throw around the public's money while the taxpayer is driven to the wall—or up the wall.

No member has fulfilled his obligation to know what he is voting on more than H. R., who has taken the time and effort to scrutinize the bills coming to the floor and the performance of the agencies of the Federal Government under those which we enact. When one Member undertakes to do this, it comes off too frequently as nitpicking, negative, obstructionist. But when a committee does it, it is called legislative oversight.

Since this happens to be one of the greatest failings of this body, I think that we have to say that H. R. Gross has not only done his job and done it well, but he has been doing our job for us. For this, he will be missed by the country and his colleagues.

In the Washington Star-News for December 16 there appeared a Rambler column devoted to H. R.'s career. I insert it in the RECORD at this point:

PLEASE MR. GROSS, DON'T LEAVE US NOW!
(By John McKelway)

At extraordinary cost to the American taxpayer, pouring money for heat, electricity and printing costs down the drain, the House spent its time the other evening honoring an obscure congressman named H. R. Gross. The oratory filled some 17 pages of the Congressional Record.

The man is completely negative. He has tried to stop government spending.

He has failed in 26 long years, serving as a Republican representative from Iowa. Today, as we face a recession or depression, the one he's warned of for all these years, what does he do but decide, at 75, to cop out.

And even in these last days of the 93rd Congress, Gross fumbled what could have been his finest hour: He failed miserably to use his bag of parliamentary tricks to shut off needless discussion of his House career. He was ruled out of order by the speaker.

So they talked about H.R. . . . Few taxpayers, one congressman said, realize how many millions of dollars this one man has saved them. His mere presence in the House has forced many a committee chairman to study a bill closely to make sure he can answer the knotty questions that he knows the gentleman from Iowa will raise. And it is not unusual for an item to be dropped from a bill merely because of him, before it ever reaches the floor.

In this session alone, Gross has attended all but six of the 482 votes held and all but one of 171 quorum calls.

Gross has two signs in his office. One reads: "Nothing is easier than the expenditure of public money. It does not appear to belong to anybody. The temptation is overwhelming to bestow it on somebody." The other: "There is always free cheese in a mouse trap."

From time to time, Gross has been called: A pillar of parsimony. The abominable noman of the House. The watchdog of the Treasury. A principled loner. The conscience of the House. The scourge of the spender. A reactionary nitpicker. The antidote for boondoggling.

Gross does not own a tuxedo.

Gross is a soft-hearted tiger. He is not churchy. He has no vendettas. He is not pompous.

He once described a bill introduced to reimburse owners of eucalyptus trees that had suffered damage during aubfreezing weather in California as the "U-Clipped-Us Bill." It was defeated.

Gross is a man of American Gothic virtues: thriftiness, attention to detail and orneriness. He has never admired the foreign aid program. "I swear," he once said, "I think that what we ought to do is pass a bill to remove the torch from the hand of the Statue of Liberty and insert a tin cup."

Gross never took a junket.

What his colleagues were saying, I gather, is that Gross will be missed and remembered. Goodbye, Mr. Gross.

THE PRICE TAG FOR REJECTION OF RHODESIAN CHROME OVER $300 MILLION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BLACKBURN) is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, despite the agonizing effects of the oil embargo which the United States suffered in the past year, we will shortly be considering in this body a proposal to impose a similarly costly embargo against ourselves. A recent study indicates that the reimposition of a chrome embargo could cost American consumers of stainless steel products over $300 million per year.

The effort being made to repeal the Byrd amendment, which allows us to purchase chrome, and more importantly ferrochrome, from Rhodesia would essentially create for the Soviet Union a price monopoly on chromite ore just as OPEC now has on oil. Although the United States currently purchases substantial quantities of chromite ore from the Soviet Union, the price has remained reasonable only because of the existing competition provided by the alternative source available in Rhodesia. Once before, in the 3-year period when we granted the Soviets a monopoly on chrome sales, we found that the price of chromite ore dramatically increased from $39.87 per short ton in 1968 to $68.49 per short ton in 1970. When the embargo ended with the passage of the Byrd amendment the price subsequently fell to $51.73.

The effect of a renewal of economic sanctions against Rhodesia has been analyzed in a study released this month by the Center for Advanced International Studies at the University of Miami. Dr. Roger LeRoy Miller, who is a professor of economics at the University of Miami, has carefully calculated that:

The estimated cost of new sanctions would lead to a price rise of $250 per ton of finished stainless steel products; hence, conceivably consumers of stainless steel products would face higher costs in the neighborhood of 1.242 million tons times $250, or $310,500,000.

Moreover, Professor Miller notes that due to our limited production capacity we would only be able to satisfy about 60 percent of our present needs for ferrochrome production. Currently we import 45.4 percent of our high carbon ferrochrome from Rhodesia and none from the Soviet Union. Miller figures that at current use levels our stockpile of strategically vital ferrochrome would be exhausted in about 18 months. Thus stainless steel production, for which ferrochrome is essential, would suffer dramatically with a renewal of sanctions.

Professor Miller also deals with other aspects of the proposed chrome embargo, such as employment effects in our stainless steel industry and changes in effects due to various elasticities of demand.

In order to bring to the attention of my colleagues the costly consequences of renewing the embargo against Rhodesia, I include the final section of Professor Miller's excellent study to be placed in the RECORD at this point.

THE FINAL SECTION OF THE STUDY FOLLOWS: IV. THE ECONOMIC IMPACT OF RENEWED TRADE RESTRICTIONS WITH RHODESIA

While at this time it will be impossible to indicate firm predictions on the economic impact of renewed trade restrictions with Rhodesia, we can indicate the direction of change that would occur and figures on prices and employment that will be accurate within an order of magnitude. Before any discussion of the possible economic impact is feasible, it will be necessary to discuss the use and availability of U.S. strategic stockpiles of chromite and ferrochrome.

U.S. Strategic Stockpiles

In 1939 the U.S. government declared chrome to be a critical material. It was the first of four such critical materials that were to be stockpiled by the government as we entered into World War II. Presumably, it was the first critical material because it had the least number of substitutes. As of June 3, 1974, the United States stockpile of metallurgical grade chromite and ferrochrome was:

Metallurgical grade chromite—3.405 million net tons.
Ferrochrome, high carbon—403 million net tons.

Ferrochrome, low carbon—319 million net tons.
These figures, however, are misleading. Concerning metallurgical grade chromite, first of all the government has declared that it will require 400,000 net tons in its stockpile at all times for strategic purposes. Secondly, there have been approximately 900,000 to 1,000,000 net tons of metallurgical chromite available for sale out of the government stockpile in Nye, Montana, for the past fifteen years. However, none of it has been sold because it is economically infeasible to use it, unless heavy subsidization from the government is provided. This leaves approximately two million net tons of metallurgical grade chromite for sale out of the government stockpile. However, these two million tons could not be readily converted into ferrochrome for the specialty steel industry, given the current and possible short-run capacity of the U.S. ferrochrome industry.

December 20, 1974

What might happen, if in fact sanctions against Rhodesia were reinstated, would be that Airco would continue to receive Soviet metallurgical grade chromite in sufficient quantities to continue production of ferrochrome at current rates (130,000 net tons per year). Globe would continue to receive sufficient metallurgical grade chromite to continue producing 35,000 tons of ferrochrome per year. Union Carbide has indicated it will cease producing ferrochrome if the sanctions are imposed. That leaves essentially Chromium Mining, which has been dependent on Rhodesian metallurgical grade chromite. Chromium Mining produces around 35,000 tons of ferrochrome per year. Given the ratio of 3:1 for chromite to ferrochrome production, that would mean that Chromium Mining would require, to continue its present production rates, 100,000 tons of metallurgical grade chromite per year out of the world market. If available, or from the U.S. stockpile. That, indeed, would allow what would be left of U.S. ferrochrome industry to continue production at reduced rates for, say, twenty years. However, this is an inappropriate datum to cite, for the U.S. ferrochrome industry does not provide 100% of the ferrochrome used in stainless steel at current world prices; rather it would allow for the continuation of ferrochrome production that would satisfy less than 60% of U.S. consumption.

The government could also open up its stockpile of high- and low-carbon ferrochrome. It is generally believed that only about one-third of the low-carbon ferrochrome in the government stockpile is usable, but that all of the high-carbon ferrochrome is indeed a possible source for the specialty steel industry. Looking at the preceding table, we see that that would give us about 500,000 net tons of high- and low-carbon ferrochrome available for the specialty steel industry. At current rates of ferrochrome consumption, which are determined by current relative prices, production processes, etc., this stockpile would make up the deficit between demand and domestic supply, plus supplies from other countries, but only for a period of about eighteen months or perhaps slightly longer.

Note that this prediction is based on the following assumptions and facts: the relative prices of all goods in question do not change; the demand for none of the goods in question shifts abruptly; and the supply of everything except Rhodesian chrome products does not change. Additionally, the calculation is based on the prediction that the existing U.S. ferrochrome companies, with the exception of Union Carbide, continue to produce at current rates because Soviet and Turkish metallurgical grade chromite will continue to flow into this country, and Chromium Mining will obtain sufficient metallurgical grade chromite from the U.S. stockpile of that ore. This would mean, then, that the U.S. ferrochrome production rate would be 200,000 tons per year. Further, it would be predicted that consumption demand at current relative prices of low- and high-carbon ferrochrome in the U.S. would be between 500,000 and 550,000 net tons in 1975. (In particular, this figure includes the demand for 12% chromium stainless steel used for emission control catalytic converters.) Moreover, given that ferrochrome which contains Rhodesian chromite cannot be imported into the U.S., then at least 50% of the imports from South Africa must be curtailed as well as imports from any country producing ferrochrome using Rhodesian ore. That means imports in the U.S.

would suffer a 50% reduction equal to a decrease of 65,000 tons based on the current situation. That leaves a deficit to be made up by the U.S. stockpile of ferrochrome of some 200,000 to 300,000 net tons per year. Given that the stockpile available for use measures some 500,000 net tons, this gives us a flow that would last as stated before for eighteen months or perhaps slightly longer.

In what follows, we will first make the assumption that a bill is passed in the Congress to allow the U.S. stockpile of both metallurgical grade chromite and high- and low-carbon ferrochrome to be released at market prices to specialty steel companies. Hence, we will be engaged in a relatively short-run impact study of reinstated sanctions against Rhodesian imports and, for the basis of discussion, we will assume that, if this occurs, it will occur on January 1, 1975.

Economic Impact of New Sanctions, Assuming U.S. Stockpiles Are Released for Sale

Without going into full econometric model of the chrome and stainless steel industry in the United States, we cannot readily project price and employment changes except for direction and order of magnitude. However, in this preliminary study that is what we will consider our goal.

As an exercise to get some order of magnitude change in the cost to the consumer of stainless steel products if the U.S. chrome industry were to experience the same kind of relative price change during the second period of sanctions as during the first, we calculate a prospective price change of ferrochrome in the following manner. First, the data on low-carbon ferrochrome prices from the U.S. Department of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics, is examined. The price rise from a period before to a period during the sanctions of low-carbon ferrochrome was slightly in excess of 50%. Using a 50% price rise as our basis in this calculation, we first must pass through the increase in ferrochrome prices that are occurring in the United States during 1974 as domestic prices move in line with world prices. As an example, we look at stainless sheet 304 and stainless strip 430—the most important tonnage items. The July 25, 1974, issue of American Metal Market indicates that the average selling prices of these items are $1,305 and $1,120 per ton, respectively. The projected price for January 1, 1975 is calculated by first computing what the pounds of chrome consumed on a weight-contained basis per ton is of finished steel. This was computed to be 515 pounds on average.¹

The projected price increase in stainless due to the U.S. price of ferrochrome rising to world price by January 1, 1975 will then be 515 pounds times approximately 60 cents per pound for both 304 and 430, or a price increase of $258 per ton. The projection, then, is that a price per ton of 304 will be $1,563 and a price of 430 will be $1,378, or price increases of 20% and 23% respectively.

1. Effect of the Embargo

Assuming now a further 50% increase in the price of both low-carbon and high-carbon ferrochrome, we would get an average price increase of 49.0 cents per pound of chrome contained in the production of 304 and 430. Given that there is an average of 515 pounds of chrome required per ton of finished product, this would lead to a $252 increase in 304 and 430, raising their prices to $1,815 per ton and $1,630 per ton, respectively. This, in effect, would be an average per ton price increase of 17%.²

2. Cost of Stainless to the Consumer

In order to determine the cost of stainless steel to the consumer, it is necessary to project the shipments of stainless in 1975. The way this was accomplished was by estimating the average compound rate of growth from 1963 to 1973 in U.S. shipments of stainless steel. This compound rate of growth was 2.9%. The predicted shipments in 1975, from this equation, are 1.092 million tons. To this we add an estimated 150,000 tons of stainless steel for emission control equipment.³

Footnotes at end of article.

An average price rise, based on the assumptions of the previous chapter, might be in the neighborhood of $250 per ton of finished steel product; hence, conceivably consumers of stainless steel products would face higher costs in the neighborhood of 1.242 million tons times $250, or $310,500,000.

Note that this computation is based on the following assumptions:

- A price rise of 50% in ferrochrome occurs immediately on January 1, 1975.
- The elasticity of demand for stainless steel is essentially zero, and therefore consumers would buy the same quantities at the higher relative price than they would at the lower relative price, without the embargo, with a consequent price rise in ferrochrome and hence in stainless.

3. Employment Effects

Still assuming that the U.S. stockpile would be available to ferrochrome and stainless producers, the price rise in ferrochrome that might occur with a resumption of sanctions against Rhodesia will elicit an employment effect in the stainless or specialty steel industry, depending on the elasticity of demand for the product in question. We can assume that there will be little, if any, alteration in employment in the ferrochrome industry (as opposed to the specialty steel industry) because their sources of chromite ore will be continued.

However, the higher price of specialty steel products, based on the pass-through of higher ferrochrome costs, might reduce the quantity demanded of stainless steel and hence reduce the amount of employment in that industry. It is difficult to obtain an accurate estimate of the number of workers involved in the specialty steel industry, since some employers produce both specialty and other types of steel. However, the maximum figure is probably 70,000 employees directly involved with stainless steels. Without having to involve ourselves in the number of workers, we can directly calculate the maximum number of manhours used in the production of stainless steel in the United States.

A survey, compiled by Price Waterhouse and presented by the American Iron and Steel Institute on July 16, 1969, entitled "Institute 26-Company Survey on 1967 Output in Manhours," yields the following information: Total tonnage of stainless steel mill products was 416,596, and total manhours were 25,084,384, or a 1967 manhour per ton of stainless steel was 60.2127.

Now, to make an estimate of what the total number of manhours to be required in 1975 might be, we calculate the annual productivity changes in the steel industry from the Bureau of Labor Statistics over the last decade, which is 2.8% per year. Projected manhour requirements per ton of stainless steel produced in 1975 is therefore 48 manhours. Hence, to produce the projected 1.242 million tons of stainless in 1975 would require 59.616 million manhours in that industry.

Now, if the short-run price elasticity of demand for stainless steel is as great as —.2 for example, this would imply, based on our assumptions, that the average projected 17.0% increase in the price of stainless would elicit a drop in the quantity demanded of 3.4%, or a reduction in total output of 42,228 tons of stainless, thus eliciting a reduction in manhours work of 2,027,000 manhours. The average work week that can be used is 38.5 hours (from the American Iron and Steel Institute data); thus indicating that a reduction of 52,648 manweeks in the stainless steel industry would occur.

Note that the above calculations are purely demonstrative. One could plug in any assumption of price responsiveness (price elasticity) for stainless steel and come out with a different set of answers. At one extreme, the short-run elasticity of demand for stainless steel is zero (an unlikely assumption), and therefore the employment effect of any price rise would be zero. On the other extreme would be higher price elasticities of demand and consequently higher employment reduction effects.

Since it is almost certain that price elasticity of demand for stainless steel products is not zero, we can predict some unemployment effects due to a price rise in stainless steel products based on a price rise in ferrochrome products, based on price rises of chromite and imported ferrochrome, due to the renewed sanctions against Rhodesia. Hence, from a public policy point of view, the unemployment created by such sanctions could, in the short run, make any particular Administration anti-inflation policy more costly from a social point of view, and we note that these costs would become higher after 18 months when the ferrochrome stockpile would be depleted.

Economic Impact of Renewed Sanctions Against Rhodesia, Assuming No Stockpile Is Available

Here the analysis remains essentially the same as the preceding analysis; however, in the immediate run, there would presumably be relatively larger price rises in the chrome industry due to the reduction in supplies of chromite and ferrochrome, both high- and low-carbon. The ferrochrome industry would continue to produce, except that Chromium Mining would have to buy in a restricted world market. And as stated before, Union Carbide would probably cease production. Hence, output would fall from, say, 240,000 tons per year to 200,000 tons or lower. The deficit would be met partially by imports, but as outlined in the previous section those imports would be restricted due to the sanctions. Thus, all Rhodesian ferrochrome, one-half or more of South African ferrochrome, and other ferrochrome based on Rhodesian ore would be prohibited from entering the U.S. Given no access to U.S. stockpiles of ferrochrome (and chromite for Chromium Mining Company), the specialty steel industry companies would be out on a now restricted world market, competing against each other for ferrochrome. If we assume a relatively small elasticity of supply of ferrochrome in the short run from the remaining sources of ferrochrome, both domestic and international, the production of specialty steels would have to be curtailed dramatically. For how long this curtailment would last is a moot point. It would depend on the responsiveness of supply to what would definitely be a rising price in the ferrochrome market. In this particular situation, there would be a reduction of employment in the ferrochrome industry (but not of a significant nature, since only Chromium Mining would be forced to shut down), and also a reduction in the specialty steel industry because of an unavailability of ferrochrome supplies at current relative prices. It is impossible to estimate, or even project, what the reduction in employment in specialty steel industry might be. If you assume that it would be equal to, in percentage terms, the reduction in ferrochrome available, then our estimate would be 28 percent, or a total of 16,700.00 man-hours or 434,000 man-weeks.

Possible Substitutes That Industry Would Turn To if the Relative Price of Stainless Steel Rose and/or the Quantity Available Diminished.

Machinery, industrial equipment and tool industries could turn to substitute material such as titanium, copper and nickel-based alloys, as well as fibre glass reinforced plastics. However, it is clear that some substitution would increase the relative cost of industrial finished products.

The automotive industry could look to aluminum, coated carbon steels or alloy steels. It is possible, though, that durability might decrease and maintenance costs could rise.

The construction and contractors' products industry could turn to aluminum, plastics, carbon and alloy steel, but with a loss in strength and long-term durability.

Other domestic and commercial equipment manufacturers would have a difficult time finding any material that could be directly substituted for stainless. If disposables were used in place of stainless in such application as institutional food service, a waste treatment problem would arise.

In the appliances, utensils and cutlery industry, aluminum and plastics could be substituted with a reduction in durability.

In other markets, such as industrial fasteners, aircraft, forgings, etc., aluminum might be a usable substitute, as well as some titanium and nickel-based alloys. However, when assessing the short-run impact of an increase in the price of stainless steel and/or a reduction in supply, it is not clear how fast these industries could effect such a substitution.

It would be a major undertaking to try to estimate the impact on substitute industries of a change in the relative price of chrome and chrome-related products, as well as a change in the availability of those products. Suffice it to say at this time that it appears that immediate substitutes for stainless steel would not exist in large quantities; however, with a sufficiently high economic incentive, in the long run substitutes would be found, albeit at relatively higher costs to consumers.

Economic Impact of A Renewed Embargo on Rhodesian Chrome As well as An Embargo on All Products Using Rhodesian Chrome

What happened during the first embargo on Rhodesian products was quite obvious. Only the U.S. and, to a lesser extent, Great Britain actually abided by the U.N. declaration of economic sanctions. Other countries did not abide by that declaration and, in fact, produced stainless steel products using chrome that was from Rhodesian mines. If, in fact, the sanctions against Rhodesia by the U.N. were reinstituted in the U.S. as well as an effective program requiring foreign governments to certify that stainless steel and other products using chromium produced in their country for sale in the U.S. contained no Rhodesian ore or ferrochrome in such products, then we would effectively eliminate a large portion of stainless steel imports as well as the chromite ore and ferrochrome from Rhodesia. The projected economic impact on the United States would in fact be, relatively speaking, great. We estimate that the availability of stainless steel would decrease by approximately two thirds as compared to what is available today. If such a program were indeed instituted, a reduction of two-thirds in the supply of stainless steel for use in industry and consumer products would have, to be sure, dramatic effects on prices of products using stainless steel, employment in the stainless steel industry, employment in industries making products using stainless steel, and so on. It goes without saying that, since relative prices of stainless steel products would rise dramatically, so too would world prices and so too would the incentive for foreign governments to certify stainless steel products, even though such products did indeed contain Rhodesian chrome or ferrochrome. Nonetheless, in the interim, the economic impact would be substantial on the United States in myriad ways, too myriad in fact for enumeration.

V. TENTATIVE CONCLUSIONS

In this preliminary study, we have outlined the nature of the metallurgical grade chrome and chrome-related industries in the United States and the world. We have then attempted to discuss the economic impact on the U.S. due to economic sanctions during the period 1967 through 1971 which prevented the United States from engaging in economic activities with Rhodesia. A discussion of what might happen if those economic sanctions were again imposed was presented, starting off with an initial examination of the U.S. strategic stockpile of chromite and ferrochrome. It was estimated that the stockpile of metallurgical grade chromite ore could indeed last twenty years, only because the U.S. ferrochrome industry could not be expanded in any appreciable way in the short run to use the chromite ore made available. Additionally, the consumption of ferrochrome out of domestic production and imports, plus the available reserves from the U.S. strategic stockpile could last, without interruption, at current rates for approximately eighteen months, or perhaps slightly longer.

In order to estimate some of the economic impacts of a resumption of the embargo on Rhodesian chrome products, we first assumed that the stockpile would be opened up. Later it was assumed that the stockpile was not opened up. In the first case, projections of price increases of ferrochrome similar to those that were experienced during the sanction period from 1967 to 1971 yielded an estimate of finished stainless steel price increases of over 17%. This would translate into about a three hundred million dollar increase to the consumers of stainless steel, on a yearly basis, in 1975. However, that calculation was based on the assumption that the price elasticity of demand for stainless was effectively zero. If we do not continue with that assumption, then we must talk about a reduction in the quantity of stainless demanded as the relative price rises. Then we must talk about a reduction of employment in the stainless steel industry. Making an assumption, for example, of a price elasticity of demand of -.2 in the short run, this would lead to a reduction of manhours worked in the stainless steel industry in 1975 of some 2.0 million manhours. The point to be made here, in terms of public policy-making, is that for any given anti-inflation policy, this increased unemployment would make that anti-inflation policy more costly.

If we go to a situation in which the U.S. stockpile is not opened up by Congressional law, then the economic impact of a renewed ban on Rhodesian chrome products would be much greater, of course. No numerical examples were given, but the orders of magnitude would certainly be larger than in the previous case, and additionally, there would be decreased employment in a small sector of the ferrochrome industry, namely at Chromium Mining Company. Of course, if we truly eliminated imports of all steel products produced elsewhere with Rhodesian chromite or ferrochrome, the economic impact would be much more substantial.

A complete study of the economic impact of trade restrictions with Rhodesia would require econometric studies attempting to estimate the price elasticity of demand for metallurgical grade chromite, ferrochrome and stainless steel. Moreover, the elasticities of substitution between stainless and other metals would have to be estimated, as well as the extent to which displaced workers in the specialty steel industry could be absorbed in other capacities within the steel community.

FOOTNOTES

¹² See Appendix VI.
¹³ See Appendix VIII for this computation.
¹⁴ This calculation merely represents a 100% pass-through on a 50% increase in the price of ferrochrome on a weight-contained basis in the production of stainless.

¹⁵ Note that the 1.092 is definitely an underestimate given that shipments in 1973 were 1.163 million tons of stainless steel products.

A TIME FOR DECISION: CONGRESS AT THE CROSSROADS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Idaho (Mr. HANSEN) is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. HANSEN of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, since the dawn of man, the survival of our species has depended upon man's ability to outwit natural enemies, adapt to a changing and often hostile environment, and to construct techniques and tools that facilitated his progress from the cave to the computer age.

Today, our natural enemies are few, and vanishing rapidly before the scythe of "progress."

We have learned to manipulate the environment to suit our needs and wants—and in doing so have reaped the bitter-sweet fruits of ecological domination—progress and peril.

We have become, for better or for worse, the architects of our own destiny. And yet, despite our progress, three age-old adversaries continue to confront and confound mankind—disease, famine and war. The threat of a potential ecological disaster has now joined the cruel triad in a treacherous union that threatens the continued survival of our species. These hydra-like challenges are overlaid with additional problems of economic upheaval, resource and food shortages, energy gaps, explosive population growth and a growing political divisiveness between the "haves" and "have nots" of this troubled world—divisiveness that could be explosively lethal in the era of nuclear weapons.

Will man, as we know him today, survive? Will we make it to the twenty-first century—and beyond?

The apocalyptic school of thought has serious doubts that man can surmount these difficulties through collective foresight and self-denying adjustments to new realities that would lead to an improved world order.

On the other hand, disciples of technology argue that all of these problems, complicated though they be, are inherently solvable—given world enough and time.

However, there is little contention of the realization that unless this formidable array of challenges is successfully resolved by enlightened action, Nature will intervene in a cruelly efficient counter-assault. In all likelihood, before nature itself revolts against man's overload of fragile ecosystems and limited carrying capacities, seething nationalistic passions, aroused by increasing competition for finite resources and food, will ignite, spreading the flames of war throughout the world.

Will the ascent of man end in a dismal scenario of starvation, confrontation and annihilation?

Will a decimated world be the final monument to man's inherent folly?

The answer to these somber questions lies veiled in the mists of the future. But that final answer will be wrought by the political and economic actions taken by the world community in the next few years.

My esteemed colleagues, those of you who will be returning to the Congress next year, and those new Members who will be joining you in your efforts, will bear heavy burdens of responsibility. You and your contemporaries in legislative bodies around the world will be charged with trying to resolve frustrating domestic problems, and at the same time, trying to develop a cohesive strategy to confront international problems that threaten to undermine world economic and political stability.

The steps that you will take to face these enormous challenges will set us on the path of the future. Your collective wisdom and judgment will chart the trajectory of this Nation's future course. There are two paths that can be taken—and you are standing at the junction in the road. One path appears to be wide and smooth; it is paved with layers of expedient political promises designed to placate the American people. What you cannot see from here is that over the next hill, it becomes narrow and rocky and leads only to a dead end—perhaps for all mankind.

The other path appears much rougher at the outset. There are hard choices blocking the way; these will have to be resolved before we can progress any further. But this path becomes smoother just over the edge of the horizon, and it leads to the very summit of human achievement—triumph over narrow vision and self-interest for the common good of all mankind.

I am sure that in the months and years ahead you will be lulled by the siren song of neosolationism. Beset by our own pressing domestic problems in the economy, struggling to develop a system of social and economic priorities, and offended by the assaults on our national ego by the developing world, it would be easy to succumb to protectionist temptations. After all, do we really owe the world a living? Must we not first look to the needs of our own people? Again, these are complex questions not to be asked lightly. But we can learn much from the lessons of history. That siren song of the isolationists has twice before lured us upon the shoals of international conflagration. By evading our responsibilities and trying to erect walls to keep out the rest of the world, we automatically forfeit our opportunities to shape the future course of our country. Choices that we do not make ourselves will be made for us by others—and we will have no one to blame but ourselves and no recourse but to follow the path that has been charted by destiny.

We do have an important stake in what happens to the rest of the world. We cannot isolate or insulate ourselves from the upheaval that will accompany a breakdown in the world order. To be sure, we might survive longer than most, but that survival would depend upon a diminution of our quality of life and a drastic reduction of the personal freedoms we now take so much for granted. And, human nature being what it is, there is every likelihood that these adjustments in the American lifestyle will result in widespread public disenchantment with our existing political system. The atomization of American society into self-interest groups clamoring for "power to our crowd" and special privileges would render democracy impotent. In the ensuing power vacuum, those charged with the preservation of political and economic order in our society would be compelled to institute measures bordering on authoritarianism.

Political myopia that encourages neglect—benign or otherwise—of our international responsibilities can thus lead to a breakdown in our own political system. Self-interest motivated by political ambition can have no place in this Congress; it is a luxury we can no longer afford, and we indulge it only at our own peril. This statement springs not from any political naivete on my part—for I know as well as you the frailty of human nature. Instead, it is prompted by my profound belief that the fate of this Nation—and indeed, that of the world as we know it today—may well hinge upon the actions you will take in the coming months and years.

In the history of mankind, there has never been a more compelling need for statesmanship. This Nation and the world must have leadership of an unparalleled dimension to overcome the torrent of complex problems that threaten to engulf humanity.

Must we wait until some international catastrophe welds our collective energy and intellect into a single determination—a will to survive?

Is it not possible to come to terms with the hard choices that must be made, regardless of the personal political consequences?

Is it so difficult to talk frankly to the American people—and indeed, people all over the world—explaining what the problems are in simple language that can be understood by the common man? After all, they also have a stake in the survival of civilization.

Can we not rise above the sinkhole of political expediency to make the choices that must be made in the area of population control, technology transfer, resource sharing, food production and distribution, energy consumption, industrial adjustment, and nuclear arms control?

The answer to these questions, and so many others, lies within each of you.

I do not pretend to know what the answers will be, or what course of action will be charted by the 94th Congress. But I do know that each and every one of you will have a key part to play in shaping the future direction of our country.

If you decide to take the path less traveled by—the rougher road of truth and hard choices—one of your first tasks will be to restore the confidence of the American people in their system of government. Of course, making the decision to walk on that path from the outset will do much to convince the public that Congress does not intend to shirk its responsibilities or evade its obligations to the future. The American people need and deserve nothing less than the highest standards of leadership in their elected officials. If you can stand united in your resolve to meet the challenges facing American society and the world in a spirit of honest inquiry, adherence to the truth, and a concern for equity, you will have taken the quantum leap from politics to statesmanship.

December 20, 1974

We cannot expect you to resolve all the problems and develop all the right answers. This is beyond the realm of human possibility and political reality. However, it is important to try, as honestly, as fairly and as courageously as you can, to face up to these problems and take the first, faltering steps toward their resolution. You will make mistakes, and you will stumble and fall on occasion. We are, after all, an imperfect species prone to occasional errors in political judgment. But as long as you are guided by the principles of truth and honesty, and a higher concern for the common human interest, you cannot be faulted, and history will reserve a special place for you in her chronicle of honors.

It is with a sense of sadness that I leave my colleagues just as they are about to embark on this important mission. While I am not able to share the burdens that I know will descend upon the shoulders of Congress I will do what I can—in whatever way I can—to encourage a greater public understanding and appreciation for the special responsibilities that you face and a respect for the decisions that you will have to make in the public interest. Those colleagues who leave this body with me must be similarly charged to support you when those hard choices must be made. Their wealth of experience and wisdom nurtured in their public service must continue to be applied for the common good.

These challenging times are filled with both promise and peril. The future destiny of mankind hangs in a tenuous balance, and political wisdom is the fulcrum that will determine whether the scale swings toward oblivion or toward the achievement of a stable world order.

Mr. friends and colleagues, America looks to you for the courage and the leadership to swing that balance in favor of mankind.

UNCOVERING NURSING HOME ABUSES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York (Mr. Koch) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. KOCH. Mr. Speaker, in recent weeks I have made a number of statements in the House on the nursing home scandal in which nursing home operators are drawing millions of dollars from Medicaid and Medicare through fraudulent practices. It is appropriate in this special order, Mr. Speaker, to acknowledge that this scandal would not have been uncovered had not John Hess of the New York Times undertaken enormous investigatory work required to ascertain the facts now laid bare. Over the past several months John Hess has relentlessly pursued the tiring and often frustrating ground work that is fundamental to effective investigative reporting. He now has uncovered a sufficient portion of the "iceberg" so that various levels of governmental bodies have been prompted to act.

On the basis of information secured to date, 17 members of the New York delegation joined me in requesting our colleague, Governor-elect HUGH CAREY, to set up a Moreland Commission to investigate the Medicaid/Medicare scandal. In response, Governor-elect CAREY has asked Mario Cuomo, a close adviser, to make a preliminary investigation of alleged fraud for review when he takes office on January 1.

I know Mario Cuomo. He is not only a superbly talented individual but one whose orientation is such as to require him to pursue this matter wherever it leads. I say that because there is a growing acceptance of the fact that there is too cosy a relationship among the nursing home proprietors, the directors, State public officeholders, and the State law enforcement agencies. I do believe that his report to Governor-elect CAREY should be expeditiously prepared. The report of Mario Cuomo or anyone else not having the power of subpoena or the power to initiate proceedings before a grand jury cannot suffice for a full-scale investigation leading to criminal indictments where the facts warrant it. The Cuomo report can only be an interim one between now and the time Governor-elect CAREY takes office when he will have the power to appoint a Moreland Commission.

Furthermore, I have been advised that Senator FRANK MOSS, chairman of the Long Term Care Subcommittee of the Special Committee on Aging is going to commence a nationwide investigation of nursing home abuses linked with the Medicaid/Medicare program. The first hearing will take place in New York City on January 21. In preparation for this hearing he has issued 40 subpoenas and requested that the Internal Revenue Service and General Accounting Office commence their investigation into these areas as well.

I hope Mr. Speaker, that our own Government Operations Committee under the direction of its new chairman, JACK BROOKS—when he is elected, as I am sure he will be to that position in the next Congress—will undertake to exercise the House's responsibility to pursue this matter relentlessly.

I am also pleased to report that at long last, the attorney general of New York, Louis Lefkowitz, has entered the matter with an announcement that he will undertake an investigation and convene a grand jury for that purpose.

I want to reiterate, Mr. Speaker, that this is not simply a New York scandal, it is one which undoubtedly can be duplicated in the other States as well and involves Federal funds running into the billions of dollars. We have waited too long to examine into these fraudulent practices which are not only costly in dollars but even more costly in the impact that they have on the lives of the elderly citizens in this country. In some cases effectively condemned to die in squalid nursing homes, friendless with a feeling that their Government has deserted them.

Mr. Hess has served the public and Congress interests by giving attention to the investigations conducted over the past 3½ years by the State Welfare Inspector General's office of the State Department of administration of the Medicaid program and the operation of proprietary nursing homes receiving large portions of Federal and State funds.

And, the Temporary State Commission on Living Costs, chaired by Assemblyman Andrew Stein, has been aided by the material uncovered by Times reporter Hess in its investigation of the scandal.

The story of the nursing home scandal will continue to develop. At this point, I think it would be helpful to reprint in chronological order several of the major stories written by John Hess on this subject. I hope this compilation will give our colleagues a comprehensive view of what has happened to date so that we might better prepare for the congressional investigation next year.

The articles follow:

[From the New York Times, Sept. 6, 1974]

STATE AUDIT FINDS WIDE OVERBILLING BY NURSING HOMES

(By John L. Hess)

State auditors going over a sampling of nursing-home accounts have reported $4,623,288 in unwarranted claims to Medicaid. These ran the gamut from the debatable to the apparently fraudulent, and from the petty to the exorbitant.

Medicaid had been billed for, among other things, a yacht, personal servants, family cars, vacation trips, jewelry, department store charge accounts and tuition for owners' children at college and even in nursery school.

Responding to nationwide complaints about abuses in the Medicaid and Medicare programs, the United States Department of Health, Education and Welfare announced yesterday the establishment of a new unit to enforce standards in the metropolitan area.

The state audits covered only the 1969 and 1970 billings of 58 nursing homes, about one out of 10 in the state. This was all that a small staff of auditors in the State Department of Health had time for over the last year.

WHAT INSPECTIONS SHOWED

The effort cost the state $168,000 and recovered almost 25 times that. Assemblyman Andrew Stein, Manhattan Democrat who is chairman of the State Commission on Living Costs and the Economy, said last week that Medicaid would recover $24-million if the state expanded its auditing force.

Federal and private authorities on medical care for the aged agree that New York State's system of standards and controls are among the best in the country. But the same authorities find here the same abuses that have dogged the nursing-home industry everywhere: neglect of patients and padding of costs to the taxpayer.

Operators reply that they perform a necessary function at minimal cost and little profit—even at a loss, sometimes—and in return are the targets of malevolent propaganda. Social workers, agency investigators and government inspectors view these claims with varying degrees of skepticism.

Late last year, a crash program of inspection of 104 proprietary nursing homes in the city by the State Department of Health found "serious operating deficiencies"—meaning neglect of care ranging to utter abandon—in nearly two-thirds of the homes and structural deficiencies—mainly fire hazards—in three-quarters.

Under the Medicaid program for aid to the elderly poor, New York State paid $560-million last year to 600 nursing homes, nearly two-thirds of them privately owned. (The Federal Government puts up half the money and the states and localities each pay one-quarter.) Homes in the city get nearly half the total.

December 20, 1974

30,000 PATIENTS IN CITY

Medicaid this year is paying from $22.19 to $69.80 a day for the nearly 30,000 nursing-home patients in the city. The average is $37.84. The cost is far lower in privately owned homes ($33.83) than in nonprofit ones ($48.19), but state inspectors and social workers say that nonprofit homes tend to accept sicker patients, to give better care and to offer better facilities.

The rates given above are subject to substantial retroactive increases for rising food, fuel and labor costs.

"The state is bleeding," an economist in Albany said.

The wide range in rates reflects a policy decision. When Medicaid began in 1967, most states—but not New York—paid a flat per diem to all nursing homes. Industry leaders here insist that this is the most fair and economical system. But scandals in many areas led authorities to conclude that this method of payment encouraged operators to economize at the expense of patients. So many switched to the system used here.

New York sets a minimum standard of care and pays all an operator's costs, including debt interest, taxes and depreciation, plus a return on investment that is based on market interest rates. The allowable yield now is about 10 per cent. But operators acknowledge that, at least in the past, they have earned more, from salaries paid themselves, from rate incentives for holding down costs, from depreciation and from real-estate transactions.

40 PERCENT ESTIMATED

No reliable figures on profits exist, but the building and stock-market boom inspired by Medicaid a few years ago has lent credibility to published estimates of annual returns of 40 per cent and higher.

As for the level of care, a recent study in the Bulletin of the New York Academy of Medicine referred to it as a "melancholy situation." Another, by the American Jewish Congress here, found "shameful neglect." Its investigators said many old people who entered nursing homes in relatively good health—many of the residents are put in the homes only because means of support are not available—begin to decline and turn senile in the absence of attention and activity.

That was the picture that met the eye recently in a random tour of half a dozen homes along West End Avenue by a reporter who said he was seeking a place for his mother-in-law. Medicaid inspectors, as a matter of policy, never always give nursing homes a month's notice before their annual visit. Other investigators have not been generally welcome, although an industry spokesman said this policy would be changed.

Owners are "gun-shy" because of bad publicity, it was explained by Stanley Lowell, former Deputy Mayor and chairman of the city's Human Rights Commission, who is lawyer for the Metropolitan New York Nursing Homes Association. He estimated that 90 per cent of members' income came from Medicaid.

A VISIT TO HOMES

The West Side homes visited were former hotels and apartment houses, all with narrow halls and doorways and creaky elevators—one too small for a wheel chair. None seemed to comply with the Federal safety code for nursing homes and hospitals.

Several had remarkably similar bulletin boards showing programs of activity, but no social life was visible on the weekend—no conversation among patients, no games, no reading, only television. In one large home, a therapy room seemed unused, and the bathroom plumbing leaked.

In the lobby, half of the patients sat and waited silently for visitors who never seemed to come. Nobody talked, nobody read. In a crowded corridor above, impregnated with the stale smell of cooked food, the wheel chair patients sat in clumps facing the television screen. A tennis match was on. Nobody seemed interested. Nobody moved to change the channel.

Many of these old-style homes have been condemned for years, but continue to operate pending their replacement by new ones, at Medicaid's expense. A total of 27 have staved off closure by court appeals.

59 PERCENT FAIL TO MEET CODES

In announcing the establishment of a new unit to enforce Federal standards in nursing homes here, Mrs. Bernice L. Bernstein, regional director of H. E. W., said 59 per cent of Medicare and Medicaid facilities "did not fully comply with the Life Safety Code, the fire and safety standards that all nursing homes must meet."

Alan J. Saperstein, a 34-year-old Social Security aide, was named manager of the new unit. Under his supervision, a team of eight specialists has begun a series of unannounced inspections of nursing homes as part of a nationwide program. The homes will not be identified, however, but the results of the inspections will be used to check the enforcement of Federal standards.

[From the New York Times, Oct. 7, 1974]

CARE OF AGED POOR A GROWING SCANDAL

(By John L. Hess)

Since Medicaid opened the Treasury spigot in 1967, growing numbers of Americans have placed their aged parents in nursing homes. The result has been a national scandal.

The British writer Anthony West has recounted that on a recent visit to a home near Kansas City, he had remarked that there were only spoons on the tables. The director replied, "You wouldn't want them fighting, would you?" Mr. West asked also about an iron grill dividing the women's quarters from the men's. The reply: "You wouldn't want them breeding, would you?"

Other writers have described the American system as "Out of sight, out of mind" and "No deposit, no return."

Over the years, such criticism has resulted in adoption of high legal standards for care, at a huge increase in cost. This has improved physical facilities visibly for many patients. But a two-month investigation of nursing homes here by the New York Times turned up many complaints of bad food, inadequate staffing, kickbacks and a wide variety of cheating.

Medicaid is now spending about $10-billion a year for the care of the elderly poor. More than a million of them are now in nursing homes, and their number is expected to double by the end of the century. The states administer the program, the Federal Government paying half the bill and the states and localities splitting the rest.

The average cost to Medicaid for the care of a nursing-home patient in New York State, which has nearly 70,000 of them, is approaching $10,000 a year. New York also is reputed to have the best regulatory standards in the country. Yet many investigators believe that here, as elsewhere, fraud and neglect are built into the system.

Before 1967, the New York City Welfare Department paid nursing homes flat per diem rates, and scandals were rife. Under Medicaid, New York adopted a cost-plus system. And scandals have been rife.

In either system, purveyors of medical care find that the less they do for the patient, the more they earn for themselves. Under the flat rate preferred by most operators of nursing homes, this is straight forward, subject to an occasional admonishment for failure to meet standards. Under cost-plus, which legally allows only about 10 percent on investment, the techniques for maximizing profit are more complicated.

Actual profits are generally conceded to be far higher than the legal rate. During the recent Medicaid building boom, Wall Street analysts talked of Government-backed earnings up to 40 percent.

Over the years, city, state and Federal investigators have detected scores of methods used by nursing-home operators to achieve such results. The investigation by The Times confirmed that these techniques are still in vogue here.

The inquiry centered on the private sector, whose 111 homes and 19,000 beds account for two-thirds of the city's capacity—more than 90 percent financed by Medicaid. Most of the people interviewed asked not to be identified for fear of reprisals, but their accounts corresponded to earlier citations from official dossiers.

KICKBACK OFFERED

The owner of one of the most highly regarded nursing homes in the city says he was approached recently by a housekeeping company, which offered to take over that chore at his present cost or more, and kick back to him whatever portion of that he chose—"in cash or check."

The owner, a maverick in the industry, refused. But many operators do contract for housekeeping, nursing and food services from companies often owned by themselves, their relatives and friends.

How this affects patients was described by a dietitian recently employed at a modern nursing home in Brooklyn, which obtains food from its own purchasing company. She presented to the owner what she called a "nice" program of menus, but never saw it again.

As for the food actually served, she said, "a cat could not eat it"—no fresh vegetables, hardly any fruit, servings of ground meat no larger than a tablespoonful, 10 pounds of cheese in the macaroni-and-cheese for 500 meals, powdered milk reconstituted, at less than a pint a day.

"The patients were starved," she said. "They grabbed things. Disposable plastic spoons and forks were reused. Forty patients got diarrhea one day."

Soon after she protested a delivery of dented canned goods, she said, she was dismissed. Her next job, she went on, lasted just one week—long enough for the nursing home to meet the state's staffing requirement. Another dietitian would presumably be hired before the next annual inspection.

STAFF PROBLEMS

The failure to maintain adequate staff is one of the commonest deficiencies reported by state inspectors. Two years ago, a registered nurse was found to be listed as working at two homes at the same time. The operators received a warning.

American Red Cross here has a free training program for nurses and aides in nursing homes. Most of the private operators have declined to participate, apparently because they do not want to pay their employees for time outside the home.

As a result of shortages in staff and of low morale—labor relations in the industry have been stormy—the level of care has suffered. A "crash survey" by the state late last year found that two-thirds of nursing homes here had serious operating deficiencies.

This applies not only to old and overcrowded buildings but also to new, expensive ones. The daughter of a patient who died in one of the latter, operated by a leading spokesman for the industry, said her father had been in a coma for hours before his physician was summoned. She confessed that she had paid a bribe to get her father admitted to the place.

The daughter of a patient in another highly regarded home said she had had to hire a private nurse for special care. She had complained about the shortage of help, she said, and had been told, "If you don't like it here, take him out."

FICTITIOUS CHARGES

In most privately operated nursing homes, drugs and medical services are provided from outside and billed separately for Medicaid patients. In January, 1972, a New York County grand jury reported that this was administered "in an incredibly chaotic manner" and just two years later, the then State Welfare Inspector General, George F. Berlinger, charged that more than $1-billion had been paid to such purveyors with virtually no verification. He estimated that 30 percent of such bills were overcharges or fictitious charges for services not rendered.

Many inspectors say that some of the loot filters back to operators of nursing homes. Two medical technicians who asked not to be identified said they had been told by one Brooklyn owner that they did not actually have to perform the tests for which they would bill Medicaid. A kickback was implied.

A state inspector reported that one lot of X-rays taken in a nursing home by a thriving radiology firm turned out to be illegible. Another recalled such phenomena as 244 bills for foot treatments at a home with 245 patients.

Complaints to the authorities frequently allege that patients do not receive the $28.50 a month of personal spending money allowed them by Social Security.

Especially with the senile, it is common for nursing-home administrators to cash Social Security checks for patients.

The Liberty House Nursing Home in Brooklyn, which was closed last year after being described as "a shocking horror," was alleged to have withheld $46,750 in such funds.

Illegal extra charges for laundry and other services paid for by Medicaid are reported to be common, and in many homes the patients are expected to tip for help in the bath.

Nepotism is a traditional and often legal way of improving earnings. Families are employed throughout the business, often in one another's homes, and the salaries add up. An official cited one home on Staten Island, where one partner gets $26,000 as administrator and another $32,000 as purchasing agent, with no visible qualification for the job.

The maverick operator said administrators sometimes bought their jobs, and recovered the purchase price from illegal charges for services, tips from concerned relatives of patients, and moonlighting.

A problem for inspectors is that administrators and other key employees are often not around when they call. This is in fact given as an explanation for the long-standing policy of giving operators several weeks' notice of inspections.

A employee active in a union of nursing-home workers said a clean-up usually was ordered the day before inspection. A state official agreed and added that often staff would be expanded then to meet requirements. But he added that the inspections nevertheless did improve conditions, at least for the time being.

LENGTHY LITIGATION

"We go on the assumption that nursing homes have rights, as well as individuals," said Alan Saperstein, a Federal overseer for Medicaid in this region. "We give the institutions a fair chance to correct their deficiencies. Further, nursing homes have very good counsel."

A state official said it would take three to five of litigation to close down a home that was a flagrant violator. This has seldom happened, even where criminal fraud was alleged, as in the King Manor chain still operating in Western New York.

One reason, officials say, is that until recently there was no place to send the patients. Following the Medicaid building boom, there are now some empty beds, and the state is no longer granting licenses for new projects in this area. But it has been blocked for two years by court injunctions in its effort to close some of the scores of nonconforming homes.

The courts have ruled that a license to run a nursing home, once granted, is a property right that may not be removed without due process. Due process sometimes seems interminable in nursing home cases.

In most legal proceedings, each side must pay its own costs, although the winner may, in certain cases, recover from the loser. It does not work that way for the nursing-home industry.

Medicaid pays the legal and auditing expenses of nursing homes, and while no overall figures were available, a state auditor said that it would be reasonable to estimate that the industry here paid its lawyers and accounts $1-million a year.

STATE HAS FEW AUDITORS

Officials last year proposed to post a ceiling on such expenditures and argued that when a nursing home was found at fault, the operator should pay his own legal bills. But counsel for the State Department of Health held that this would be found a denial of due process.

By contrast, the department's staff is limited by a budget set by legislators, some of whom double as lay lawyers for the nursing-home industry. Like other trade associations and labor unions, the industry also contributes to political campaign funds through political action committees and private donations.

In a spot check of 58 nursing homes, state auditors recently found $4.6-million in overcharges, ranging from phony bills to family cars, tuition fees, vacation travel and even a yacht. But there are only 16 auditors and one full-time lawyer to cover reimbursement claims of 1,600 medical facilities in the staff.

Their problem is aggravated by the incredible complexity of ownership patterns in the industry. According to a state official who has been studying the problem, the most sophisticated real-estate transactions and subcontracting deals are used to increase depreciation, conceal profits and avoid taxes. An effort to narrow these loopholes may be made at the next session of Legislature.

PLACEMENT OF PATIENTS

A patient and acknowledged inequity in the cost-plus system is the wide range of care provided. Theoretically, all Medicaid patients are equal. They are paupers, defined as having no more than $1,600 in savings. But some go to $26-a-day hovels and some to relatively grand quarters at up to $75 a day.

Operators said candidly that welfare officials send the dispossessed to the cheapest homes available. Costlier homes have waiting lists of more fortunate clients. In some cases, children, who are no longer legally obliged to support their parents, pay bribes to get them in. Often, such clients enter as private patients at premium rates and switch to Medicaid when their savings are exhausted.

In the city, blacks occupy only 15 per cent of the beds, although they represent a much larger proportion of the poor. Among homes visited during this investigation, it appeared that the proportion of blacks declined as conditions improved, and two of the best-equipped places seemed to have only one or two blacks each.

But even the new and costly nursing homes arouse complaints of neglect. At one $46-a-day home in Manhattan, a nurse said, "They come in a little sick, and they go down, down."

Neighborhood volunteers have brightened life for many patients, with handicraft and social programs. Under state regulation, most have therapy programs. Television and tranquilizers, however, appear to be the most used forms of care.

A Queens physician, defending the quality of nursing homes, said that many patients are senile and not at all subjects for social programs. Many, however, are alert when they enter the homes and do respond to the climate of the institution, according to other observers.

"Nursing homes are not primarily a place for rehabilitation," the physician said, "but rather storage bins for our old and infirm. The patients are not there because unscrupulous nursing homes are out soliciting, but because we as people are only too willing to relieve ourselves of any burden, be they mother, father or uncle."

[From the New York Times, Oct. 8, 1974]

NURSING HOMES USE A VARIETY OF FISCAL RUSES TO LIFT PROFITS ABOVE THE 10 PERCENT ALLOWED BY LAW

(By John L. Hess)

For more than 20 years, local, state and Federal authorities have sought to limit the profits of nursing homes and to keep them in the hands of small and presumably dedicated owners. Government agencies have had no more success in this than in eliminating the perennial scandals of neglect and fraud that the authorities say have stained the industry.

New York State bars corporations from operating nursing homes, but nearly all are owned by corporations and leased to operators, at least nominally—which makes the arrangement technically legal. More than 90 per cent of their income comes from Medicaid, which, under law, allows them only about 10 per cent return on investment.

According to officials who monitor the operation of the homes, blue-chip stocks go begging at earnings of 20 per cent and more, but a lively buyers' market exists in ownerships of nursing homes. This market, and other data, tend to confirm published estimates that the true earnings may run from 20 to 40 per cent.

INVESTORS EAGER

The administrator of an independent nursing home in suburban New Jersey says he gets half a dozen letters a week from New York specialist brokers, importuning him to sell the place to one of their investors. But shares may also be marketed in small partnerships, denoted in beds.

During a two-month investigation by The New York Times, interviews with scores of witnesses and the records of a dozen government agencies revealed how the extra profits are made: by sales, leases and subleases to obtain higher rents and depreciation; by nepotism and payroll padding; by kickbacks from suppliers; by falsification of costs, and by the withholding from patients of services paid for by Medicaid.

None of this is new. Only the numbers have changed, as support for the indigent aged patient passed in 1967 from local welfare departments to Medicaid. It paid $559-million to nursing homes in New York State alone last year.

Two-thirds of this went to proprietary, or privately operated, homes and most of the rest to voluntary, or philanthropic institutions. The Federal government pays half the bill, and the state and localities each pay one-quarter.

A perusal of files going back 20 years produces a dreary litany of scandals, denunciations and allegations, nearly all of which eventually faded with little result.

ONE MAJOR INQUIRY

In the late nineteen-fifties, for example, night raids by the City Department of Investigations revealed that a number of homes had left their patients virtually abandoned:

their staff records had been falsified to meet code requirements.

An audit found that the Welfare Department had thereby been overcharged $3.7-million for the fiscal years 1957 and 1958. The industry, which had tried to block the audit by a suit, eventually settled for about $600,000. The loss, which was then offset by an increase in rates, was the chief result of the investigation.

A decade later, audits of 58 homes—about half the proprietary homes here—found $4.6-million in overcharges to Medicaid for 1968 and 1969. And in 1972, State Controller Arthur Levitt reported that $475,646 in Medicaid had been paid to nine nursing homes here after they had closed. Little had apparently changed.

An inquiry in 1958 and 1959 by City Investigation Commissioner Louis I. Kaplan was the only thorough study of the industry here ever made. He reported to Mayor Wagner in 1960 that "proprietary nursing homes in New York City have been inadequately staffed and are not qualified to carry out their responsibilities; that the bulk of the industry has been dominated by investors, syndicates and undisclosed promoters . . . that neither the Department of Hospitals nor the Department of Welfare has satisfactorily carried out their respective responsibilities."

ONE RECOMMENDATION ADOPTED

Mr. Kaplan declared that most of the 88 homes then receiving welfare patients had "admitted failure to comply with the Hospital Code" and had "admitted understaffing of nursing personnel and submitting attendance records that were deliberately falsified to show compliance."

"I am against the practice of rewarding homes for violating the law," Mr. Kaplan said.

He recommended that the rates then paid for three levels of nursing care be scrapped in favor of a single, much higher rate of $250 a month. (Present rates average about five times that.)

This recommendation was eventually approved; others were not. A bill to give the Hospitals Department stronger controls was defeated by opposition led by the then president of the Metropolitan New York Nursing Home Association, Eugene Hollander, and its counsel, former Federal Judge Simon H. Rifkin and former Deputy Mayor Stanley Lowell who is still the leading lawyer for the industry.

Two Hollander nursing homes on the Lower East Side, the Gramercy Park and the Riverview, had long been and remain special targets of official concern. They accounted for $237,000 of the overcharges alleged in the 1957-58 audit, and many violations had been reported there by Mr. Kaplan's raiders.

A similar investigation by the Investigations Department in 1967 reported "substandard and hazardous conditions" and "a long history of complaints" to a Department of Hospitals hearing, which gave Mr. Hollander a warning and a conditional extension of his license.

The city's enforcement, diluted among four agencies, was generally recognized as slack. One former investigator recalled, "We had four old lady inspectors, just strong enough to go to the office, get their $20 and leave." The Legislature finally assigned the chore to the State Department of Health last year.

This reporter and a photographer were barred from the Gramercy Park and the Riverview recently, but city as well as state inspections since 1967 have reported serious deficiencies there. Audits of their Medicaid accounts for 1968 and 1969 found $179,463 in alleged overcharges.

In a recent interview, Mr. Hollander said the two homes, structurally incapable of meeting the Federal Life Safety Code, would be closed and replaced by new homes early next year. He added that since his nursing homes provide basic custodial care and leave medical care to outside hospitals and physicians, any deficiencies were the fault of those providers and the administration. For the rest, he said, his four homes were "the cleanest operation in town."

CXX—2643—Part 31

His rates are lower than average, Mr. Hollander added, and he held that this saved taxpayers millions of dollars a year. His operation nevertheless appears to have been profitable.

In a lawsuit by the widow of a former partner, it was alleged that the two homes in which the partner held an interest, the Riverview and the Park Lane, were clearing $400,000 a year at the time of his death in 1961.

CASE HISTORY OF PROFIT

Another clue to the profitability of the industry is provided by a contract signed by Mr. and Mrs. Hollander, as sole owners, transferring the four homes to Touro College at the end of 1972. Mr. Hollander is chairman of the board of trustees of Touro, a new institution occupying a building at 30 West 44th Street, which was donated by the Federal Government in 1971.

Under the contract, the four homes were sold to Touro at a tentative price of $29,255,254, subject to audit, and were leased back to the Hollanders at initial rentals totaling $1,411,390 a year, with an escalator provision pegged to the cost-of-living index.

Since Touro had virtually no capital funds, the Hollanders accepted 20-year notes for two-thirds of the price, with the remainder left for adjustment. The notes bore 6.6 per cent interest. Mr. Hollander estimated that this would leave Touro with a net income of a bit more than $100,000 a year, free and clear.

After the closing, Mr. Hollander applied for a substantial increase in his Medicaid rates, to meet his rent payments to Touro. But the State Department of Health ruled that while the sale and leaseback was perfectly legal, there was no reason why Medicaid should contribute to Mr. Hollander's favorite charity.

In an interview in early September, Mr. Hollander recalled the sale price as having been $16-million and said the deal had been dropped because it had been disapproved by the state. When state officials were asked about this, they voiced surprise and said their books still showed Touro as the owner of the properties.

Last week, Mr. Hollander insisted, after consulting his lawyers, that the deal was inoperative. A spokesman for Touro said he knew of no business properties owned by the college, although Dr. Bernard Lander, its president, had signed the contract.

Inoperative or not, the deal casts light on the regulation of nursing homes. Although, under the law, owners and licensees of Medicaid establishments are supposed to be registered, Federal and state officials acknowledge that they have only the sketchiest data on their true ownership. (Licensees must be "of good character," but the burden of proof to the contrary rests on the state.)

Similarly honored in the breach is the requirement that a nursing home that is presented with a list of deficiencies—failure to meet basic Federal standards of care—reply in 10 days with a plan of correction. There is no penalty for delay; months often go by before a plan is approved, and the same deficiencies turn up in the next annual inspection.

A crash survey of the city's 111 proprietary homes late last year found serious deficiencies at two out of three. All continued to receive Medicaid payments.

The value of $29,255,254 set on four nursing homes with a total of 1,055 beds is instructive. It suggests that, at the end of 1972, a single bed in New York City was worth nearly $29,000 to an investor, and the city's 19,000 privately owned beds were worth roughly $550-million.

$20,000-A-BED COST

Since new nursing homes are being built here today at a state-approved cost of $20,000 a bed—reflecting sharp cost increases over the last two years—the market price clearly reflects an added value for Medicaid certification. In fact, it guarantees income—and profit—from the government in perpetuity.

Court rulings have held that certification is a property right, not to be infringed without due process of law. The industry's skilled lawyers and accountants, their fees included in Medicaid's cost-plus payments, have defended this right with remarkable success.

[From the New York Times, Dec. 18, 1974]
EIGHTEEN STATE CONGRESSMEN ASK CAREY TO START A NURSING-HOME INQUIRY

(By John L. Hess)

Eighteen New York Representatives and Representatives-elect yesterday called on Governor-elect Hugh L. Carey to name a special commission to investigate the nursing-home industry. In response, Mr. Carey named Mario M. Cuomo, a close adviser, as a fact-finder to study the situation immediately and report after the inauguration on Jan. 1.

Meanwhile, Bernard Bergman and his wife failed to respond to a subpoena to testify at a public hearing of the Temporary State Commission on Living Costs, where witnesses told of abuses alleged to have occurred at two Bergman nursing homes.

In an angry exchange, a lawyer for the Bergmans said the hearings violated his clients' civil rights and questioned the intelligence and character of the commission chairman, Assemblyman Andrew Stein, East Side Democrat. The commission promptly began proceedings aimed at compelling the Bergmans, under penalty of contempt, to appear.

Representative Edward I. Koch, East Side Democrat who announced in Washington the appeal to Mr. Carey, said it came in response to recent disclosures by the press and to "allegations that the nursing-home industry has been infiltrated by organized crime for purposes of washing illegally obtained money."

"Furthermore," he said, "a limited audit by the New York State Inspector General's office indicates that the State Department of Health's supervision of nursing home expenditures and Medicaid and Medicare receipts has been inadequate."

Signing the letter with Mr. Koch were Representatives Bella S. Abzug, Joseph P. Addabbo, Herman Badillo, Mario Biaggi, Jonathan B. Bingham, Shirley Chisholm, Elizabeth Holtzman, Charles B. Rangel, Benjamin S. Rosenthal and Lester L. Wolff, all Democrats, and Benjamin A. Gilman, Jack F. Kemp and Peter A. Peyser, Republicans. Also signing were four newly elected Democrats: Thomas J. Downey, Edward W. Pattison, James H. Scheuer and Stephen J. Solarz.

Calling also for House and Senate investigations, Mr. Koch cited findings of financial irregularities involving millions of dollars at the Towers Nursing Home, one of more than 100 linked to the Bergman syndicate.

Anastasia Hopper, a retired supervisor of inspectors in the City Health Department, told the Stein Commission of a visit to the Towers in February 1971. She said a boiler had broken down a week earlier, leaving part of the building without heat and the kitchen without hot water.

Rather than move some of the 347 patients to another home during repairs, she said, the administrator, Mark Loren, had shifted many to corridors of partly heated wings, three deep. "You could hardly walk," she said. She recounted that there was dirt on the floors, filth in the toilets and kitchen, and "the floor was too wet to walk across."

"It was the worst I've seen," she said.

December 20, 1974

"What concerned me was the indifference of the administration and staff to the welfare of the patients," Miss Hopper said in a soft, trembling voice.

Some of the patients were partly dressed, each under a thin blanket, she said. At her demand, she went on, Mr. Loren provided a few more blankets and Mr. Bergman promised to send 100 more, but they never arrived. Mr. Loren also promised, she recalled, to use paper dishes because dishes were being washed in cold water. But the evening meal—a cold one—was served on cold-rinsed plates, Miss Hopper reported.

She said in reply to a question that she had reported the situation to her superiors but nothing had been done and when she returned to the Towers, five days later, "the heat was on." At this point, she was interrupted by a loud laugh from Irving P. Seidman, lawyer for the Bergmans.

Miss Hopper, who said "I can think of 14 Bergman homes without trying," recalled a long career of encounters with the group. "Years ago," she said, "we found that they were putting down [on staff charts] nurses who weren't there. They would get equipment in to meet the annual license, and then it would disappear."

She was asked whether she had recommended action to her superiors.

"No," she replied. "The person in charge was not interested. . . . They would say, 'We've got to get along with them.' I recommended closings, and she said she would not."

Miss Hopper said she thought Mrs. Anne Weiss Bergman, nominal operator of the Towers, was "just a figurehead," never seen at the nursing homes. Mrs. Bergman has drawn an average salary of $50,000 a year from three homes in New York State, and is nominal operator or owner of others in New Jersey.

STORY OF 88-YEAR-OLD TOLD

Another witness, Mrs. Betty Forman, described the brief stay of her mother at the Bergmans' Park Crescent Nursing Home. She said her mother, 88 years old but in good health, walked into the home last Oct. 13 and a week later mysteriously fell out of a bed with sidebars.

Mrs. Forman said her mother began to fall, was kept heavily tranquilized for four days "to keep her quiet," got little attention and suffered diarrhea without change of linen or even a rubber bed sheet. A house doctor asked Mrs. Forman to administer fluids all day because the patient was dehydrated, but refused to transfer her to a hospital, the witness said. Her mother died five days later, in a hospital.

"Our next witness," Assemblyman Stein said, "is Mr. Bergman."

Mr. Seidman, a red-haired young man in spectacles, advanced with a lawbook under his arm and asked to make a statement. Advised that he could not do so except as a sworn witness, he declared: "If this hearing were conducted in a proper manner within the civil-rights law, Dr. Bergman and his family are ready to cooperate."

"I am not a lawyer," Assemblyman Stein began.

"You may not have either the ability or the character to become one," Mr. Seidman interrupted. "You are violating Section 8 of the Civil Rights Law."

The chairman, after conferring with other members, announced that a court order would be sought to force Dr. Bergman to testify. He then called Mrs. Bergman, who also did not appear.

A show-cause order was signed later by New York Supreme Court Justice Harold Baer, returnable next Monday.

The final witness, Dr. Martin Hochbaum of the American Jewish Congress, read from a 1960 study of the industry by Commissioner of Investigations Louis I. Kaplan, describing massive frauds and declaring that Mr. Bergman held a "stranglehold" on the city's nursing homes through interlocking investments.

In an impromptu news conference in the corridor, Mr. Seidman said Mr. Bergman operated only one nursing home in the state and his wife only two. Asked where his clients were, he retorted, alluding to a recent series in The New York Times on nursing homes: "Why don't you get The Times to send you to Europe?" Then he added that they might be there, or in Israel or in the United States.

Telephone calls to the Bergman residence on Riverside Drive were not answered. An acquaintance of the Bergmans who asked not to be identified said that they were in Vienna.

THE OPPRESSION OF A UKRAINIAN HISTORIAN IN THE SOVIET UNION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York (Mr. HOLTZMAN) is recognized for 20 minutes.

Ms. HOLTZMAN. Mr. Speaker, on the eve of the passage of the trade bill we should remember that basic human rights are denied in the Soviet Union, not only to Jews, but to others as well.

I would like to bring to your attention the case of Valentin Moroz, who at 29, is an internationally known and respected Ukrainian historian. For the "crimes" of caring about and trying to preserve the history and culture of his people, he was sentenced in 1970 to a 14-year term—6 years in prison, 4 in a labor camp, and 4 in exile. In prison he has been beaten, tortured, and held in solitary confinement. His life is now in jeopardy as the result of a 20-week hunger strike which he undertook out of despair over the conditions of his imprisonment.

It is important to understand what exactly Valentin Moroz did to merit this treatment. According to press reports, his crime was writing history books and essays on Ukrainian nationhood and KGB secret police methods. The reports note that the Soviet authorities were particularly incensed by evidence Moroz had collected which showed the mysterious destruction, by fire, of historic treasures and national libraries in the Ukraine. Thus, for showing his concern about Ukrainian culture and criticizing Soviet efforts to suppress that culture, Valentin Moroz was imprisoned under concentration camp conditions.

The case of Valentin Moroz is not yet well known to the American people, but I hope that it will become so, so the public will see that, even in the era of détente, the iron fist of repression rests heavily on all dissenters—Ukrainians, Jews, and others alike—in the Soviet Union. I, therefore, strongly recommend that you read the following excerpts, from the New York Times of November 9, 1974 and the New York Review of Books of December 12, 1974, which describe the unjust reasons for and inhuman conditions of Moroz's imprisonment.

[From the New York Times, Nov. 7, 1974] THE "WIRE SKELETON" OF VLADIMIR PRISON (By Jeri Laber)

A former Soviet political prisoner recently emigrated to Israel. He brought this message: "Tell them only this—I am kept with the insane. They are creating a constant hell for me. They are trying to drive me to the insanity of those with whom they locked me up. I cannot breathe!"

These are the words of Valentin Moroz, a young Ukrainian nationalist and historian who is near death in prison in Vladimir, near Moscow.

The man who carried Mr. Moroz's message gave this description:

"I, who had been witness to a great deal in my ten years in prison, found it difficult to imagine that a person could be brought to such a state. This was Valentin Moroz. Every Ukrainian is surely familiar with his name. No doubt Ukrainians abroad have seen his portrait. But do not believe those portraits now. Russian gendarmes have seen it to it that this person with the thin face and intelligent eyes will never again resemble his former self."

"The gaunt figure in the striped uniform of a repeater, sick and ghastly, reminded one of the frightful photographs of the surviving victims of Auschwitz. The prison rags hung on him as if on a wire skeleton. Short, stubby hair on his dried scalp, and greenish, parchment-like skin, terrifying as that of a mummy, covered his high forehead and prominent cheekbones. And the eyes—no, I cannot convey what I saw in his eyes during this short encounter."

Mr. Moroz is in the fourth year of a fourteen-year term, his second prison sentence since 1965 when, at the age of 29, he was first arrested on charges of anti-Soviet propaganda. His "crime" was that he criticized the Soviet state.

His punishment has been years of unending nightmare: He was attacked and stabbed by criminal inmates, starved and beaten by guards, confined with the insane, isolated for two years in solitary confinement.

He is suffering from blood and liver disorders and has been given drugs that he fears are damaging his brain. On July 1, he began a hunger strike, declaring that he preferred death to insanity.

Mr. Moroz's message was delivered to a world he has never known—a world beyond the reach of the secret police where people are free to believe in their own humanity and to express outrage at the torture to which Mr. Moroz and thousands like him, not only in the Soviet Union but in many countries, are being subjected for questioning their governments' policies.

Publicity is a major weapon in their fight for survival. Governments, even totalitarian ones, do respond, often if not always, to concerted protests from the outside world.

"We have survived," said the exiled Pavel Litvinov when he arrived in the West, "because the West exists and in it a Western press. I ask of you: Write more about us, think about us, and remember that we suffer for ideals we share with you—ideals of freedom and civil rights."

Mr. Moroz's situation is desperate. Articles and editorials throughout the world might generate a deluge of telephone calls, telegrams and letters—to Moscow, to Washington, to Vladimir Prison. The press has the power to promote, reveal, destroy. It might be able to save the life of Mr. Moroz, who symbolizes the agonies of countless others—and then save those others as well.

[From the New York Review of Books, Dec. 12, 1974]

THE RESISTANCE IN RUSSIA

(By Peter Reddaway)

Jewish nationalism is a different creature from Ukrainian nationalism, but the passions and intelligence which fuel the latter can be equally formidable. Most formidable, beyond doubt, of the articulate Ukrainians is Valentin Moroz, whose writings have been collected in two volumes (the one edited by Yaroslav Bihun being somewhat fuller) which have now appeared in English.

December 20, 1974

In his combination of elegance, precision, and power of thought Moroz surpasses all other Soviet dissenters. His defiant views are roughly summed up in what he told the authorities at his trial in 1970:

"The awakening of national consciousness is the deepest of all spiritual processes. . . . Your dams are strong, but now they stand on dry land, by-passed by the spring streams, which have found other channels. Your draw-gates are closed, but they stop no one. . . . You stubbornly insist that all those you place behind bars are dangerous criminals. . . . You can pursue this absurd policy for, let us say, ten more years. But then what? These movements in the Ukraine and in the whole country are only beginning."

His trial—for circulating his essays on Ukrainian nationhood and KGB methods—was closed, and took place as if in an occupied country. Extraordinary KGB measures in various cities prevented many of his friends from gathering outside the cordoned-off courthouse, and those who overcame these obstacles and got there were closely watched by some 200 troops and KGB agents. He was sentenced to fourteen years of imprisonment and exile.

One reason for this severity was probably that Moroz collected evidence of what can only be called cultural genocide. He noted in an essay, for example, the mysterious destruction, by fire, of national libraries and other national treasures in the Ukraine and elsewhere, and analyzed the activities in the Ukraine of the Society for the Preservation of Historic and Cultural Monuments. He wrote: "What a strange Society. . . . It is not clear whether it protects historic treasures from pyromaniacs, or pyromaniacs from public wrath. . . . [Its leaders] are not concerned about drawing up lists of national monuments, yet lists of the people interested in these cultural monuments were drawn up long ago."

In 1972 the poet Anstoly Radygin, now in the United States, had a chance meeting with Moroz in Vladimir Prison, where Moroz is still imprisoned, reportedly near death. Radygin's account appears in both collections of Moroz's writings. "He brought to mind . . ." he writes, "photographs of the not-yet-dead victims of Auschwitz. His prisoner's garb hung loosely on the body of this tall man as if on a thin wire skeleton. His hair stood in sparse tufts of bristle on his dry, sawed skin, and the skin itself, horribly greenish like a mummy's, was drawn over his high forehead and raw-boned jaws."

SUMMARY OF MAJOR ACTIVITIES OF 93D CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. SMITH) is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I summarized some of the major activities of the 93d Congress. Today, I wish to include some additional material on the same subject.

Public Law 93-373 provides assistance to the International Development Association and also repeals the law banning private ownership of gold.

Public Law 93-288 includes additional provisions for Federal assistance to States in dealing with natural disasters.

VETOED BILLS

Major bills which failed to become law because of a veto by former President Nixon are:

S. 7 would have continued and expanded Federal programs for the handicapped.

H.R. 3298 would have restored the rural water and sewer program. This program was terminated by the Nixon administration, but later restored administratively.

S. 518 would have required the Senate confirmation of present—as well as future—Directors of the Office of Management and Budget.

H.R. 7447 included a provision for an immediate end to U.S. military action in Cambodia.

S. 504 would have set up emergency health care service programs and kept open Public Health Service hospitals.

H.R. 7935 would have increased the minimum wage for most nonfarmer-workers to $2 an hour effective November, 1973. Another minimum wage bill passed later.

S. 1672 would have provided increased Federal aid to small business firms in cases of natural disasters.

S. 1317 included a provision requiring the U.S. Information Agency to provide information to Congress when requested.

H.R. 10511 would have provided for the purchase of buses by public transportation agencies with Federal funds and allowed the buses to be used for charter service.

S. 2589 would have given the President emergency powers to deal with the energy crisis and would have rolled back prices on domestically produced crude oil.

H.R. 15472 would have appropriated about $38.5 million more than requested by the administration for agriculture, consumer protection and environmental protection.

TRADE REFORM

H.R. 10710, cleared by Congress shortly before adjournment, provides the President with authority to enter into new world tariff and trade negotiations. The talks are expected to start in 1975.

The bill includes the so-called Jackson amendment, which stipulates that the Soviet Union shall not receive most-favored-nation—or tariff equality—treatment and credits unless it does not discriminate against Soviet citizens who want to leave for another country such as Israel.

Earlier, it had appeared that the Soviet Union had agreed to the principle of the Jackson amendment. However, just as Congress was completing final action on the bill, the Soviet Union rejected this amendment as interference in its internal affairs. So this aspect of the bill remains clouded.

EMERGENCY JOBS

H.R. 16596 an antirecession measure sent to the White House just before adjournment, would provide 330,000 public service jobs in target areas of high unemployment, and also contains provisions for expanded unemployment compensation benefits.

From all indications, just before adjournment, President Ford does not plan to veto the bill.

OTHER

Other bills have passed Congress, or are in the final stages of passage, and these are listed below.

S. 3481 would amend the Federal Aviation Act in an effort to correct discriminatory and unfair competitive practices in international air transportation.

Senate Joint Resolution 133 would set up an American Indian Policy Review Commission.

S. 3934 would authorize appropriations for certain highway projects, including emphasis on improving transportation in rural areas; would continue Federal assistance for demonstration programs on car pooling; and would permit States to allow heavier—but not longer—trucks on the Interstate Highway System.

H.R. 15173 would extend the authority of the National Commission for the Review and Study of Federal and State Laws on Wiretapping and Electronic Surveillance.

S. 3418 would provide protection to individuals in the Federal Government's gathering, use, and disclosure of information, much of it stored in computers, and also would set up a Privacy Protection Study Commission to determine whether new legislation might be needed.

H.R. 16982 would authorize U.S. payments to the United Nations to help maintain the U.N. peacekeeping force in the Middle East.

H.R. 14600 would increase the borrowing authority from the U.S. Treasury of the Panama Canal Company.

S. 1296 would enlarge the Grand Canyon National Park, which includes the Grand Canyon itself.

H.R. 5463 would establish new rules of evidence for proceedings in Federal courts. This is the result of 13 years of study by distinguished jurists.

H.R. 15223 would require new precautions in the shipment of hazardous substances, including a ban on shipping radioactive materials by air—unless for research or medical purposes—and would set up an independent National Transportation Safety Board.

S. 425 would establish Federal standards and provide Federal assistance in restoring land used for strip mining for coal.

S. 3394 would authorize about $555 million less than the administration requested for foreign aid, and includes a provision allowing resumption of military aid to Turkey until February 5, 1975, at which time it would be cut off again if no progress is reported on the Greek-Turkish talks over Cyprus.

H.R. 15912 would increase Federal Government home loan guarantees for veterans from $15,000 to $17,500 and would remove the limit of one loan per veteran, provided the previous loans have been paid off.

S. 1283 would provide the new Energy Research and Development Administration with the authority needed for research and development in all types of nonnuclear energy and includes provisions for close congressional oversight on the program.

TREASURY OFFICIAL'S "NEGATIVE INCOME SURCHARGE" A DISASTER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. REUSS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, we have heard a lot of misguided tax policy suggestions from the Ford administration.

December 20, 1974

First, there was the 5-percent income tax surcharge, coupled with tax breaks for rich investors. Congress rightly threw that idea out the window, and although Treasury Secretary William Simon assures us that the administration is still considering the surcharge, there is little chance that that ill-advised proposal will be advanced formally again.

But we may get something just as bad.

Most economists are agreed that we desperately need a tax cut for low- and middle-income taxpayers, both out of fairness to these citizens and to revive a flagging economy. There are several excellent ways to do this. One is the time-honored method of increasing the low-income allowance and the standard deduction. Another is reducing payroll taxes on moderate-income workers. A third is converting the $750 personal income tax exemption into a $225 tax credit. Each of these methods gives a tax relief where it is most needed, with minimal waste of Treasury revenues and maximum stimulus to demand.

So what does Treasury official Sidney L. Jones suggest? A "negative income surcharge"—as he formulated it yesterday to the Exchequer Club. It is about the most regressive measure you could dream up.

Here is how it works: Everyone would have his or her tax bill reduced by a fixed percent. If the reduction were 10 percent, for instance, an average taxpayer, with $1,500 due, would get a tax cut of $150. A wealthier taxpayer, with a liability of $15,000, would get the much princelier benefit of $1,500. In other words, the tax relief provided is in directly inverse proportion to need.

This negative income surcharge was proposed earlier by Mr. Maurice Mann, formerly Assistant Budget Director under Mr. Nixon, and now president of the San Francisco Home Loan Bank Board.

As the suggestion of a private citizen, the concept could receive the neglect it so richly deserves. As the suggestion of a high Treasury official, it becomes a matter of grave concern.

I hope that we will hear no more of this shameless proposal. If the Treasury Department should come to the new Congress with such a proposal, they might well be thrown out on their ears, with briefcases flying after.

NATIONAL DEFENSE DEMANDS WAGE, PROFIT, INTEREST, AND PROFIT CONTROLS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. LEGGETT) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LEGGETT. Mr. Speaker, I have spoken frequently on the grave economic problems that our Nation faces. The fact that we have been experiencing a disastrously high, 12-percent level of inflation is all too well known. What may be less well known is the deleterious effects that the "savage bite of inflation," as Time magazine called it in a recent article, is having on Government purchases.

Defense procurement has been particularly hard hit. Many companies are turning down military contracts in favor of sales to other companies, because commercial orders bring less paperwork and more profit.

Some defense contractors are even backing out of existing commitments, because their profits on fixed-price contracts have been wiped out by inflation, although they risk being sued for default. According to Adm. Isaac Kidd, Chief of the Naval Material Command, "subcontractors tell us that it is simply cheaper for them to renege on the order with the prime contractor. Litigation for default will cost them $3 to $5 million, but at least they will keep the company," which might go broke if they sell at the originally agreed price. Moreover, some defense contractors increasingly concerned about inflation will accept only cost-plus contracts which establish the price when the item is actually delivered.

Inflation is having crippling effects on our naval shipbuilding program, according to Secretary of the Navy, J. William Middendorf. In a recent speech in San Francisco, Secretary Middendorf said that the price of scrap steel had nearly doubled in less than a year, and overall cost escalation will probably reach 20 percent. Moreover, he says the shipbuilding program is now $2 billion in debt, primarily as a result of inflation. And when we look at the results, we see that the Soviets have built almost 100 more major surface combatants than we have in the 1962-73 period.

I must admit that I take a somewhat different view of the current United States-Soviet naval balance than Secretary Middendorf. I still believe we have the finest Navy in the world. Despite the decline in the size of the fleet, I believe it is more than a match for any other, including the Soviet Navy. Secretary Middendorf is, however, certainly right to be concerned about the effects of inflation, and we ought to be doing something about it.

The impact of inflation on Government procurement, and its broader effects throughout the economy, can only be alleviated, in my judgment, if we recognize that the normal free-market forces are no longer working and a comprehensive program of controls is needed. We need fuel rationing and a reduction in domestic oil prices. We need wage and price controls now to halt their continuous upward slides. And we also need controls on interest rates and profits. In sum, I don't believe we will really get a handle on inflation, whether it be in defense procurement or other sectors, until we abandon the administration's reliance on voluntarism and laissez faire, interest, and profit controls now. I would like to include excerpts from Secretary Middendorf's remarks that relate to the problem in the RECORD at this point:

EXCERPTS FROM SECRETARY MIDDENDORF'S REMARKS

In the last six years although we were forced to reduce the numbers of aging ships in the active fleet, the Navy received authority to build 13 ships per year. This rate of shipbuilding—13 ships per year means that the U.S. Navy will never recover the strength of 900 ships but also will not even be able to sustain a fleet of 500 ships unless increases are made in the number of ships being built each year.

We have, in effect, undertaken a course of action which if allowed to go uncorrected would amount to an unilateral naval disarmament.

There are a number of solutions to this critical problem.

In our 1975 shipbuilding program, we initiated two programs which will contribute to the fleet's numerical strength because we are buying and building in numbers.

The first ship is the Missile Patrol Hydrofoil (PHM). Capable of operating at high speeds in heavy sea conditions, the PHM will provide the Navy a potent punch in many different operational environments. And ships of this class can readily assume the patrol and surveillance functions formerly assigned to our larger ships, thereby relieving our SPRUANCE and KNOX class combatants for other duties such as carrier task force operations and anti-submarine warfare. We hope to build 30 missile patrol hydrofoils.

The second ship is the Patrol Frigate (PF). We envision this ship to be a low-cost workhorse for the fleet, designed to carry out the very important escort mission. We hope to build 50 of these ships.

Additionally we are continuing to build SPRUANCE class destroyers, LOS ANGELES class nuclear-powered attack submarines, and three nuclear-powered aircraft carriers.

An even more advanced concept is the Surface Effect Ship, which is capable of speeds in excess of 80 knots. Once the research and development is completed, we could build and deploy these ships over the oceans of the world. Their high speed capability and sophisticated weapons systems would make them a potent and nearly invulnerable ship of the future.

Congress is very much aware of the Navy's need for more ships and the problems in our shipbuilding programs. Congress approved the construction of 22 ships in the budget for this year.

However, this ghastly inflation, with which you and I are struggling, is crippling our shipbuilding effort.

For example, the price of scrap steel has nearly doubled in less than a year. And overall cost escalations will probably reach 20%. Therefore, due principally to inflation, our Navy shipbuilding programs are now $2 billion in debt.

I can assure you that people in all levels of government, are aware of these critical problems and are working to resolve them. I feel everyone in the Executive and Legislative Branches recognizes the need. It is ultimately a question of accomplishing the task of rebuilding the fleet in the context of the greater issues facing us.

A TRIBUTE TO EDITH GREEN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. ULLMAN) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. ULLMAN. Mr. Speaker, among the many men and women who have dedicated their lives to the public service of this nation, only a select few have served with the diligence and distinction of my colleague from Oregon, EDITH GREEN. This is the last Congress in which Mrs. GREEN will be a Member. She will be sorely missed, not only by those she has so patiently served in Oregon, but by all of us in the Congress.

Yet she is leaving behind her a legacy of accomplishment and purpose that will endure through the years. On Christopher Wren's tomb in England there is a simple saying: "If you require a monument, simply look around you." For those who might seek to know the greatness of EDITH GREEN's accomplishments, they need only look around them at the small schools and great universities of America. Education has been both the common denominator and principal pillar of our democracy. And it is in American education that Mrs. GREEN's accomplishments are so evident.

December 20, 1974

When Mrs. GREEN came to the Congress in 1955, she brought with her the conviction that the Federal Government must begin to make a major commitment to the quality and the equality of education. She very quickly set to work to achieve the force of her convictions.

In the early 1960's, she authored and led to congressional approval the first major piece of legislation concerned with higher education. It was the Education Facilities Act, and through it colleges and universities were able to undertake the expansion they needed in order to meet the growing tide of young Americans seeking a higher education.

She followed that in short order by authoring the Higher Education Act of 1965. The underlying principle was that Federal student aid for those pursuing a higher education would be an investment with national dividends for years into the future. Her foresight and knowledge in this area were without equal in the Congress. Literally thousands upon thousands of students, who would otherwise have never had the opportunity have been able to gain college training and degrees as a result of Mrs. GREEN's determination.

In the years since then, Congresswoman GREEN turned her considerable expertise on the problems of elementary and secondary education, and has continued to assist and promote strong vocational education as a basic and necessary element in our society.

The United Nations has declared 1975 the "year of woman," and I hope Mrs. GREEN is given the credit due her in this area. More than 10 years ago she wrote and promoted the concept of "equal pay for equal work," now embodied in Federal law. About that same time, she sponsored the Juvenile Delinquency Act, a creative piece of legislation that broke new ground and set standards in an area of the law that had become a wilderness of conflicting and confusing practice.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, this is but a brief sketch of Mrs. GREEN's accomplishments. Her concern for the elderly, her political courage in matters of mental health, her original sponsorship of medicare—all these would be for most people significant in themselves. They are for Mrs. GREEN only a small part of the record. Those of us who have come to know EDITH well are still constantly amazed at the breadth of her knowledge and interests. I will miss her in the Congress. But I am confident she will continue her record of public service, and I wish her the very best.

Mr. CASEY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the retirement from Congress of EDITH GREEN will leave a void in Congress and to me personally will mean a personal loss.

Having shared two subcommittee assignments with her on the Appropriations Committee, I can personally vouch not only for her integrity and dedication, but for her ability and effectiveness.

Her early years as a teacher have served her well in the Congress and she has certainly more than earned her title as "Mrs. Education of America."

While always seeking progressive improvements in our system of education, she has been a stabilizing force during trying times of rapid change.

EDITH GREEN probably has more honorary degrees from colleges and universities than any member in the history of Congress. And she has earned every one of them.

I would also like to note that having worked closely with her on the Legislative Appropriations Subcommittee, she can be equally effective as an ally or an adversary. Fortunately we have found ourselves allies in most cases. The other times, I have usually lost.

I know that not only her colleagues, but her fellow Oregonians she has served so well, and all Americans join us today in expressing our gratitude to EDITH GREEN for her 20 years of unselfish services in Congress, and wishing her a fulfilling and rewarding future.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I have never known a more competent legislator than the lady from Oregon, Mrs. GREEN. We are all going to miss her able leadership in the next Congress; but as she leaves here she can do so with the knowledge that she has left behind her some of the most thoughtful and constructive legislation now on our statute books. We wish for her every happiness in her retirement from this body and we know that wherever she may be, she will be busy doing good. She does not know how to do otherwise.

Mr. DAN DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, today Congresswoman EDITH GREEN will answer her last rollcall in this body. I wish it were not so.

In the 20 years she has represented Oregon's Third District, she has served a far, far broader constituency. Mrs. GREEN is, beyond question, brilliant. This, coupled with mental organization and facility few can claim, and a knowledge especially in the entire field of education which most of us can only aspire to, has enabled her to serve the best interests of every school child now in America and those to come for decades. She has done a magnificent job.

Mrs. GREEN is that happy combination of inspiring leader and persuasive speaker. Yet she is one of the most practical of people. Aside from the special talents and capabilities which have made her such a positive force on the floor of the House, she is one of the most charming and delightful people it has ever been my privilege to know. Even those who are her opponents in this Hall are quick to tell of their admiration and respect for her, and to comment on her likeableness.

Of all those who are retiring today, none will be more missed.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, for the past 20 years I have had the very great and distinct pleasure of serving in this body with the distinguished Congresswoman from Oregon, EDITH GREEN.

She has been an eloquent and effective spokesman for the citizens of her northern Oregon district. She has been a dedicated and diligent member of the Appropriations Committee, and her efforts on the Education and Labor Committee, where she served for 18 years, has won her the respect and admiration of all of us here in Congress.

I can understand why, after such distinguished service, she has decided to take a little time for her family and herself. She has earned it.

It is with sincere personal affection and professional respect that I join in honoring her today. I deeply value her friendship and her wise counsel. Her presence here in the Congress will be missed.

Mr. VEYSEY. Mr. Speaker, the exodus of retiring Members from the House at the end of this session is going to deprive the next Congress of a number of outstanding leaders. One of the greatest of these is the gentlewoman from Oregon, Representative EDITH GREEN.

I have had the distinct privilege of serving with EDITH on both the Education and Labor Committee and the Appropriations Committee, and I must say the dedicated and enthusiastic way that she approaches her duties identify her as one of the distinguished leaders of the House of Representatives. As a spokeswoman for education she has no peer. Her enthusiasm for Federal improvement of education has not been diminished by the mediocre success of many federally funded programs. On the contrary, she has spoken out to challenge the myths of Federal funding and stressed the improved performance that we all desire from our public school system.

Her concern and compassionate nature are reflected in the range of legislation that she has authored in recent years. These include five major education bills, vocational rehabilitation and manpower training acts, higher education legislation and other bills that affect retirement income, social security, equal employment opportunity, sex discrimination, juvenile delinquency, and the environment and conservation.

During the 20 years that she has represented the Third District of Oregon, she has won the respect and admiration of her constituents as well as her colleagues in the Congress. We are saddened to see her depart Capitol Hill, but we know she longs to return to the green hills of Oregon. We know that anyone with her talent and determination will not long remain idle. So as you depart, EDITH, we extend our heartiest wishes for continued success in whatever endeavors you may choose.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, EDITH GREEN comes from a distant part of the country. Most of her service here has been on a committee where my section has not been represented. I would normally have had little occasion to pass upon the services of such a Representative but Mrs. GREEN has been concerned with some of the most vital problems affecting our people; particularly the education of our children.

She has felt that the Federal Government should play a larger part in education than seemed wise to me. I still think that education should be the responsibility of the States. I have felt that there was too much willingness to make educational programs and welfare programs mere political payoffs. It has seemed to me that too many of our people have assumed that there was no limit to the ability of the Federal Government to provide money—generally without any controls or supervision—for any program where we could print the name "education" or "welfare." I have feared this irresponsible attitude and I still fear it.

Over the years, I have learned that Mrs. GREEN has had a firm grasp on all of our education and welfare involvements. She, probably more than any Member of this House, understood what was happening and sought to meet the needs of education and welfare in a responsible and enduring manner.

Because she demanded responsibility and because she sought stability, she has been bitterly criticized; but it has been my observation that she was always willing to analyze new programs and to give the House a sound and thoughtful appraisal. I have not always agreed with her conclusions, but I have always been compelled to recognize the logic of her analyses.

EDITH GREEN is a person of great ability and great dedication. She has rendered a great service to the whole Nation. We are not only going to miss her, we are going to find our work to be less productive because of her absence.

I join with the host of friends and admirers who wish for her many years of pleasant retirement.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, on this, the final day of the 93d Congress, we are witnessing the end of the congressional careers of many of our leaders. Much has been said during the past week of all that these distinguished individuals have contributed. Unfortunately, in the midst of these eloquent salutations, there is a tendency to lose one's sense of perspective.

This will hardly be the case today as we gather to pay tribute to the gentle lady from Oregon. Of the record number of Members who have chosen to retire, none will be missed more than EDITH GREEN.

Behind that often stern exterior, stood a brilliant mind and a heart that was generous and warm. Her record of legislative achievement has been well documented by my colleagues here today. In my mind, her most important contributions to this House are not contained in any one bill or act. The strength of her personality, the willingness to say what many felt and the conviction to do the tough things that had to be done—these are her qualities that will be forever gone from the House of Representatives.

Representing a district which knew her well and appreciated her talents, she could have—and would have—been returned to the House of Representatives for as many terms as she chose to serve. Her decision not to do so is not only the loss of the Third District of Oregon, it is a loss for the country she served so well.

Without continuing further, a type of tribute that I am sure she herself is finding uncomfortable, I would just like to say that I will miss her—we all shall miss her—and we all wish her well.

Mr. GLAIMO. Mr. Speaker, I am extremely proud to have Congresswoman EDITH GREEN as a friend.

It has been my good fortune to serve with her on the Education and Labor Committee and the Appropriations Committee, to work with her in the House of Representatives, and to witness her steady and remarkable stature as a skilled and dynamic legislative leader.

A hard-working, intelligent, and independent woman, EDITH GREEN has established a national reputation in many areas but especially in the field of education. As author of the Higher Education Act, 1963, the Vocational Rehabilitation Act, 1965, the Higher Education Act, 1965 and 1968, and the Omnibus Higher Education Act, 1972, EDITH has led the way in fighting for large-scale Federal aid to education.

When she fought for Federal aid to education, she fought for it not as a matter of right but of need, and opposed channeling Federal money into the "educational-industrial complex" at the expense of needy schools and academically motivated students.

When she fought waste in Government she attacked both worthless projects and those seemingly worthwhile programs which never proved their worth.

When she fought against sex discrimination, she spoke for all of us who believe that all Americans deserve an equal voice in Government and an equal chance in society.

Her legislative record is a monument to constructive thinking, farsightedness, and legislative acumen. When EDITH GREEN spoke, the House of Representatives was so attentive you could hear a pin drop. This is the true measure of respect for a Member of Congress by her colleagues.

Since 1954 EDITH has represented Oregon's Third Congressional District in the House of Representatives. After 20 years in service to her constituents and her country, she is retiring.

I will miss her. The House of Representatives will miss her. Her experience, her wisdom, and her humor will be missed by all who have been fortunate enough to have her as a friend. I salute EDITH GREEN and wish her the very best in the years ahead.

Mr. SHRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to join in paying tribute to our distinguished colleague, EDITH GREEN of Oregon, who is retiring after a brilliant legislative career in this House. It has been my privilege to serve with her during this 93d Congress on the Appropriations Committee. It was her decision 2 years ago to leave her senior position on the authorizing committee of Education and Labor in favor of the appropriating subcommittee for the Departments of Health, Education, and Welfare and Labor. She has made an important contribution to the work of our subcommittee because of her vast knowledge of the legislative history of the major education bills. EDITH GREEN has made a lasting mark on education legislation during her 20 years of service in the Congress.

We are proud to salute her on this occasion and to extend best wishes to her for good health and happiness in the years ahead.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, there are a million things one could say about EDITH GREEN and still not cover all her accomplishments. I mention only one. The children and young people of the United States of America and the educational institutions are the beneficiaries of her greatest endeavor—quality education.

God bless EDITH GREEN.

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, it has been a privilege to serve with EDITH GREEN in the House of Representatives for the past 20 years. Her retirement means the loss of a colleague of great conviction and dedication.

The people of the Third District of Oregon are losing an able legislator who has distinguished herself because she has understood the problems of the people and at all times represented their interests.

Her counsel and leadership in the House Committee on Education and Labor has been valuable in the formation of important legislation affecting our education community and its students, showing deep concern for our schools at all levels. I sincerely wish Mrs. GREEN all the best in her well-deserved retirement.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, like many others in this body I am sincerely sorry to see our distinguished and honored colleague from Portland, Ore. retire.

Her service in the Congress for the past 20 years has been truly outstanding. She has been a member of the HEW-Labor Subcommittee on Appropriations of which I have the honor of serving as chairman. Her contributions on that subcommittee have been great and she has always been of great assistance to me and the others on that subcommittee.

She was always a very hard worker and a doer. She did not duck controversial issues and she fought with courage on the issues of our times in which she fervently believed.

She is without doubt one of our most honored Members having received during the course of her career some 29 honorary doctorate degrees including doctor of humanities, doctor of humane letters, doctor of public affairs, doctor of public administration, and doctor of laws. As a teacher, she was, of course, greatly interested and tremendously active in the field of education and her input and influence on education bills before the Congress was great. She will always be remembered with admiration and gratitude for her accomplishments in the vital field of education.

It is always a good and satisfying feeling to leave any field of endeavor with the highest respect of your colleagues and EDITH GREEN is certainly experiencing that feeling at this time and in the days that lie ahead.

I join with all my colleagues in wishing her and her family the very best in the years before us.

I am sorry that she will not be here when the next Congress gets underway in January and we shall remember her with kindness and affection for a job very well done.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, today EDITH GREEN closes out a career in Congress which began 20 years ago. It has truly been one of the distinguished careers in public service of current history.

I do not know what her thought might have been on her first day here and certainly I cannot imagine her thoughts on her last day here.

But I know what my thoughts of her are today. They are of a gentle and outstandingly capable lady who probably has done more for education than any other Member of Congress. Her contributions have not been restricted to the field of education. She has been outstanding in many fields of congressional endeavor. My thoughts are of a hard-working, remarkable lady who I sincerely believe, has never had a selfish thought during her career in her public life. They are of the countless meetings in which we both have participated and of the insight she brought to each of them.

Those of us who have been fortunate enough to have served with EDITH over these years have come to know, respect, and admire her for her work here. She has served the Congress, her State and constituents, and the Nation, with dignity, honor, and grace. Her record of accomplishments will long stand high in the annals of Congress, and her record as a public servant is unblemished.

EDITH GREEN's place in Congress is a big one. There are many, many members on both sides of the political aisle who have come to rely on her for guidance and leadership. Legislation bearing her name or influence will have an impact on the youth of America for generations to come. I am happy that the fine hand of EDITH GREEN will continue to help shape the future of educational processes and that tomorrow's leaders will be better qualified because EDITH GREEN served so capably in Congress.

No member of this body can fail to recognize the importance of the work done by the gentle lady from Oregon. No Member can fail to admire her as a human being, as a woman, as a legislator, and as a public servant of the people.

To say that EDITH GREEN will be missed is to understate the case. To say she is irreplaceable is to come closer to the facts. To say that I, personally, will miss her wise counsel and sage advice is the truth. I am proud to have been her friend through the years we have served together.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, it is with sincere regret that I join in bidding farewell to our retiring colleague Representative EDITH GREEN. Her abilities, hard work, and many accomplishments have been so great a gift to the House that she will be missed by all.

I have enjoyed knowing and working with EDITH since the day we entered Congress together in 1955. Her good work on the Appropriations Committee, and her authorship of laws such as the Higher Education Acts of 1965, 1967, and 1972, made her one of the leading Democratic legislators in the House.

Now, after her long years of public service, I wish her and her family rest, peace, and happiness.

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, as we wind down toward the end of the 93d Congress it is with a great deal of regret and sorrow that we must partake in the bi-annual ritual of bidding farewell to good friends and distinguished colleagues who will not be returning for the opening gavel of the next Congress. I wish to take this opportunity to pay tribute to a person who fits both categories, the Honorable EDITH GREEN, Representative of the Third Congressional District of the State of Oregon.

EDITH GREEN in her 20 years of service in the House is perhaps the most remarkable woman ever to grace the Halls of Congress. During these two decades of service, she emerged as one of the real powers of both the House and the Nation largely as a result of her work on the House Education and Labor Committee.

It is difficult to choose one single accomplishment of EDITH GREEN which rates above the many others, so I will cite the one accomplishment for which she is personally the most proud, her authorship of the famous Equal Pay for Equal Work Act of 1963, which represented one of the most significant pieces of legislation to emerge from this Congress in the past quarter century. This bill represented the fulfillment of a lifelong commitment which EDITH had to promote equality among the sexes in the fields of work and education. She has been a leader in the cause for women's rights in its early formative years, and her accomplishments have translated a concept into a viable force on the American scene. Her most recent achievement in this area was her authorship of title VIII of the Higher Education Act of 1972 which outlaws discrimination in education by virtue of sex.

There are numerous other major accomplishments which this remarkable woman has to her credit including her authorship of the Higher Education Acts of 1965 and 1967 which gave her reason to be considered the foremost legislative architect for improving the quality of higher education in this Nation.

Her commitments and causes were numerous but were always marked by her intense and total involvement in them. Examples are her efforts in establishing meaningful manpower training and vocational rehabilitation programs, two areas of prime concern to many Americans.

EDITH GREEN was not only a recognized power in the House but on the national scene as well. Her national career was highlighted by her outstanding seconding speeches for Adlai Stevenson and John Kennedy in their quests for the Presidency.

EDITH GREEN's illustrious two decades in the House have earned her numerous high honors and awards. The most significant of these came earlier this year when she received the highest honor bestowed by the President's Commission on the Handicapped. She is also the proud holder of 29 honorary doctorate degrees as well as doctorate of law degrees from such renowned institutions of higher learning as Yale and Georgetown Universities. She was the recipient of the E. B. McNaughton Award from the American Civil Liberties Union and in 1967 she was awarded the prestigious Distinguished Service Award from the Council of State School Officers. Her list of honors and awards could fill many pages of the Record, and all one has to do is have a small understanding of the tremendous work which EDITH GREEN has done on behalf of education to know why these awards came so easily and in such quantity to her.

My personal remembrances of EDITH GREEN are only the fondest. She is a woman of immense charm and intelligence tastefully blended to make her one of the finest people I have had the pleasure to know. I have had the unique privilege of working with her on the Education and Labor Committee and I remain in awe over her knowledge of the education process and her unyielding commitment for its improvement and its expansion of opportunity so that all who wish to can pursue an education. Her achievements on behalf of education will likely rewrite the history of the Education and Labor Committee. The effect of her absence on the committee will be impossible to calculate, but I assure you that it will be a sizable loss, felt deeply by each of my colleagues on the committee.

We are closing out a historic session of Congress, one which has passed legislation benefiting virtually every American. We must now look to the future and the 94th Congress, but not before we pay proper respect to those who have contributed so much to the successes of the past.

EDITH GREEN leaves this body as a giant, but an unassuming one. She has endeared herself to the hearts of all of us who have worked with her over the years. She has gained the respect and perhaps even the envy of many women in this Nation who realize that they owe a great deal of their recent advancements in education and labor to the efforts of EDITH GREEN.

Of course we cannot forget the people of the Third Congressional District. They were provided with the highest caliber of representation in the U.S. Congress, and the fact that they returned EDITH GREEN on 10 different occasions makes it apparent that they too recognized the value of this woman.

The tributes and accolades for EDITH GREEN will come from many sources. I am pleased to add my voice to the effort for I feel the 93d Congress would not have been complete for me without taking time to pay tribute to EDITH GREEN and her extraordinary career. I mourn her departure but solace myself in the fact that she leaves with the deep respect and affection of not only myself, but the entire House of Representatives. I extend my best wishes to her and hope that the coming years are happy and productive.

Mr. HELSTOSKI. Mr. Speaker, when Congresswoman EDITH GREEN retires at the end of this session, the House will lose one of its most valuable and dedicated Members. Elected to the 84th Congress in 1954, Congresswoman GREEN has served her constituency with dignity and dedication for 20 years.

During her congressional career, Mrs. GREEN was one of the most active and most well-respected Members of the Committee on Education and Labor. She worked endlessly to improve the American education system and played a vital role in upgrading the quality of schools throughout the Nation.

Though she moved to the Appropriations Committee at the beginning of the 93d Congress, Congresswoman GREEN continued her fine work in the area of education. As one of the most knowledgeable Members of the Appropriations Committee, she provided her colleagues with additional insight into legislation dealing with education which came before the committee.

Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to thank Mrs. GREEN for the many fine contributions she made to education in America. Though she no longer will represent the people of Oregon's Third District, I am confident that her constituency will continue to benefit from her leadership and experience.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, with the close of the 93d Congress, the House of Representatives loses one of its greatest leaders in the fields of education, government, and economy. Mr. Speaker, I am referring to the gentlewoman from Oregon, my good friend and colleague, EDITH GREEN.

Her charm and graciousness have been exceeded only by her extreme competence and knowledge. She has been an exemplary Member of this House, and Albra and I wish her the best in her new endeavors. The House of Representatives will miss her presence and leadership.

Mrs. GREEN came to Congress as a teacher. This was prophetic, for her assignment to the Education and Labor Committee allowed her to use her experience to benefit several generations of American schoolchildren. Through her personal guidance, major reforms have been accomplished in the field of education. Her interests and energies have been channeled into all aspects of education—from pre-school to post-graduate, from the highest levels of academic training to the wide variety of vocational training, and from the gifted students to the mentally handicapped.

Education is one of our most important programs, for it serves to train the people of this Nation for the future. EDITH GREEN has worked diligently to insure that the Federal participation in this most important task is not only adequate for our future needs, but also capable of the flexibility that might be required.

For many years Mrs. GREEN worked with her colleagues on the House Education and Labor Committee to help formulate effective programs. Such milestones as the Elementary and Secondary Education Act and the Higher Education Act are outstanding examples. There are countless others, too many to name.

In the 93d Congress, our dear colleague accepted membership on the Appropriations Committee where she easily used her long experience in the field of education to assure adequate funding for the Nation's educational programs, many of which she had helped to author earlier in her illustrious career.

Mr. Speaker, our praise for Mrs. GREEN should not be limited to the field of education, although enough praise could never be given. She has also served in a leadership capacity in a variety of other ways.

There will be a noticeable absence when the 94th Congress convenes in January, but we will all know that the House of Representatives, the State of Oregon, and the Nation as a whole will be significantly better for EDITH GREEN's service to this country.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in a Special Order arranged by our colleague, Congressman AL ULLMAN, in order that the many friends of our retiring Member, Mrs. EDITH GREEN, might have the opportunity to extend our best wishes to her on her retirement.

In my years in the Congress I have never known a finer Member of this body than EDITH GREEN. I have marveled at the very able way in which she explains her position on a given piece of legislation and her expertise in the field of education in my judgment is without equal.

Time after time I have seen the cloak-rooms empty when EDITH GREEN took the microphone, and I have joined in the standing ovations given this pleasant Congresswoman from the State of Oregon by both opponents and proponents of a given piece of legislation.

Most of all I suppose I appreciate the frankness with which EDITH expressed her views. I have heard it said time and time again that few votes are ever changed on the floor of Congress, but the reverse is true when EDITH GREEN took the microphone. In the busiest controversy I have seen this outstanding Congresswoman portray the evils of busing school children from one community to another for the sake of creating numerical quotas and I have seen votes change time after time by this most capable and dedicated and surely one of the most effective speakers in the Congress.

But there is another side to EDITH GREEN and those of us who attended the Thursday morning Prayer Breakfast yesterday morning were privileged to share some of the deep convictions that this dedicated lady holds in relation to her religion. I shall miss EDITH GREEN. She is the epitome of sincerity, integrity, decency, and honesty on the floor of this Congress, and I know that the Congress will be the poorer because of her retirement. EDITH shared with the prayer group yesterday some of the endeavors which she expects to pursue on her return to Oregon, and I take this occasion to wish for her all of the success and joy to which she is so deserving of finding in her retirement as she goes back home to her native State of Oregon.

Mr. QUIE. Mr. Speaker, it has been my good fortune to have served with Mrs. GREEN for the entire 17 years I have been in Congress and 14 of the 16 years I have been a member of the Education and Labor Committee.

The next Congress is going to miss her input. All of my colleagues have well noted the thoroughness with which she champions a cause. Who else has been more effective in debate? To have been involved in controversy means that she has been willing to take a stand and whether one voted with her or against her on any particular measure, the respect and admiration was always there.

I would like to add my thanks for her diligent service to her district, State, and Nation and to wish Mrs. GREEN the best for all she undertakes in the years to come.

Mrs. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, during 20 years in the House of Representatives, EDITH GREEN of Oregon has provided us with practical wisdom on many matters, but she has earned a national reputation for her expertise and great good sense in the field of education.

In an age in which the education establishment increasingly devotes itself to the practice of an esoteric cultism, EDITH GREEN has been a demanding voice reminding it of its mission.

She has had the courage to insist that the schools must return to the business of producing students who can read, write and do arithmetic, and she has often challenged the bureaucratic foolishness of HEW.

Mr. Speaker, I have the highest admiration for EDITH GREEN, and I hope that her talents will not be lost to government when this session of Congress ends today. She is retiring from the Congress, to be sure, but there are those of us who hope to see her in Washington in the months ahead. She still has much to contribute, and I hope the administration will recognize the talents of this truly great Member of Congress.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, EDITH GREEN is not so much a conservative or a liberal as she is a sound and strong proponent of commonsense. As such she has embodied in herself a cross-section of this House.

She gained a reputation over the years as a tough debater, and whether one agreed with her every time or not, the House always felt compelled to listen to her point of view. She is independent, outspoken, and has always done her homework and then some. She has led and the House has followed.

EDITH GREEN will be missed in many ways. Her strong purpose and close attention to detail have made her a formidable and respected power among her colleagues. Her fearless debates have clarified many issues placed before us to decide. Her free thinking has interjected a refreshing or new point of view time and again.

It has been my privilege to serve in the Congress with her and I join my colleagues in wishing her our very best.

Mr. BRINKLEY. Mr. Speaker, slightly more than 2 years ago, the media in my home State of Georgia carried a news account of my filing as a delegate to the Democratic National Convention. May I quote from some of those accounts as part of the RECORD:

Rep. BRINKLEY has given his personal endorsement for the vice presidential nomination to U.S. Congresswoman EDITH GREEN of Oregon, who is Chairman of the Special Subcommittee on Education of the House Education and Labor Committee.

Rep. BRINKLEY pointed out that Mrs. GREEN, now serving her ninth term in the U.S. House, is the acknowledged authority in the field of education and is one of the leading congressional opponents of forced school-busing. The Columbus lawmaker emphasized:

"Congresswoman GREEN has such a national perspective—she sees this as one undivided Nation. I think it offends her deeply to see sectional abuse, whether it be in education, voting rights, housing or taxation. In my opinion, Mrs. GREEN is one of the finest legislators to ever serve in the United States Congress."

Mr. Speaker, needless to say, I still hold those thoughts about this courageous and wise Member of this House, and will always believe that she would have been a worthy addition to anyone's national ticket.

During my tenure as a Member of the House, Congresswoman GREEN has been a frequent source of inspiration and strength. To me, she embodies the full purpose our predecessors had in mind when they wisely made it possible for women to vote, participate in government and be elected to high public office. Their thesis, of course, was that the nation would benefit best by looking to all quarters for leadership.

I join my colleagues in wishing Congresswoman GREEN well as she takes leave of this Chamber for the last time but I also have strong doubts that we have seen or heard the last of her wise counsel.

Mrs. BURKE of California. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to join with many of my colleagues in paying tribute to the leadership of Congresswoman EDITH GREEN on the occasion of her retirement from this House.

While I am sorry that I only had the opportunity of serving one term with Mrs. GREEN I am grateful for the privilege of witnessing first hand her diligent efforts. Our continued efforts in the Congress will insure that her efforts were not in vain. Though her physical presence will be sorely missed we may all take comfort in the knowledge that her spirit will remain in the House in the form of her many contributions and legislative achievements.

Mr. McCLODY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to a woman who has compiled a record of achievement during her congressional career which is second to none—the gentlelady from Oregon (Mrs. GREEN).

During my time in the Congress, I have known very few speakers who could rivet the attention of this House with the respect that Mrs. GREEN commanded every time she went to the well to eloquently express her concerns. It has been obvious to every observer of this body that Mrs. GREEN has ranked among the brightest and most influential of our number, and her well-earned retirement will indeed be a mightily felt loss as we convene the 94th Congress next month.

Mr. Speaker, the 89th Congress has gone down in history as the "Education Congress." Tremendous strides were made in almost all areas of educational endeavor—and the intellectual environment has been enriched in this country for all Americans as a result. The legislation which was passed during that time will greatly enhance the American heritage during the rest of this century—and I want my colleagues and the American people to know that Mrs. GREEN deserves a lion's share of the credit for the renaissance in the Federal educational effort which took place during her tenure on the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. Speaker, EDITH GREEN will also be fondly remembered as one of the most effective advocates of equal rights for women. Through her own responsible example as well as her eloquent appeals, this body came to realize the harm which sex discrimination causes to our entire society, and the result was much good legislation in this regard culminating in congressional passage of the 27th amendment to the Constitution, the so-called Equal Rights Amendment.

Mr. Speaker, nothing bespeaks more prominently Mrs. GREEN's wise influence on this House's deliberations than the looks of disaster which would cross floor managers' faces when they learned that she would speak in opposition to their bill, and conversely, the looks of delight which illuminated their faces when they found out that she was prepared to speak in their favor. The gentlelady's legislative brilliance both in committee and on the floor has been a wonder to behold during my 12 years here. Her colleagues no less than her constituents in Portland will miss her valuable contributions in attempting to deal with the difficult and persistent problems that confront our society.

My wife, Doris, joins me in wishing EDITH our fondest adieu as she prepares to leave our midst.

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this Congress loses one of its most talented members when the Honorable EDITH GREEN of Oregon retires this year after 20 years of distinguished service.

EDITH GREEN's name is synonymous with education. No member has contributed more to the development of the American educational system than EDITH GREEN.

EDITH GREEN has authored the most important legislation on higher education to come out of the Congress during the last decade. The Higher Education Acts of 1965, 1967 and 1972 were products of her work. Among numerous other legislative efforts, she has formulated the Higher Education Facilities Act, the National Quality Education Act of 1972, and amendments to end sex discrimination in education.

My colleague has received 30 honorary degrees and numerous awards, including distinguished service awards from the National Education Association, the National Association of Trade and Technical Schools, and many other associations and universities—all of which are well deserved.

As a member of the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Health, Education, and Welfare, this distinguished Congresswoman has guided the Nation's higher education policy on a path which has given it unprecedented vitality and made equal opportunity in education a reality.

We can be grateful that a person of integrity and dedication has been available to perform this role. I know of no one who has contributed more to higher education than the Honorable EDITH GREEN. The Nation, the Congress, and the citizens of this country will be the less when she retires at the end of this year. But she has bequeathed to all of us a rich legacy that we must nurture. We are deeply indebted to her.

I am particularly grateful to EDITH GREEN. Earlier this year she was kind enough to deliver the McKendree College commencement address. Located in Lebanon, Ill., EDITH GREEN's visit to the campus brought the school national prominence.

Mr. ADDABBO. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to join in this well-deserved salute to EDITH GREEN of Oregon, on her retirement from Congress.

Without question, Mrs. GREEN is one of the hardest working and highly respected Members of Congress. Her contributions in the legislative field as a member of the Committee on Education and Labor are many. For 18 years she served on that committee and Mrs. GREEN authored many bills which have had a tremendous impact on the educational system of this country.

Mrs. GREEN authored the Higher Education Act of 1965 and 1967; the Higher Education Facilities Act; the Equal Pay Act of 1963; title 9 of the Education Amendments of 1972; and amendments to end sex discrimination in the Manpower Training Act. These are just a few of her accomplishments as a member of that committee.

For the past 2 years, I have had the privilege of serving with Mrs. GREEN on the Appropriations Committee. Her expertise in the field of education was of great benefit to the Labor-Health, Education and Welfare and the Legislative Subcommittees on which she served.

The lady from Oregon has served her constituency and her Nation well for the past 20 years. She will be missed in this great Chamber.

I regret to see her leave and hope she will enjoy her retirement in good health. God bless.

Mr. WAGGONER. Mr. Speaker, this body has not known a more distinguished Member, an abler legislator, or a finer person than the gentlewoman we are paying tribute to today, Mrs. EDITH GREEN. She is a lady in the truest sense of the word.

The accomplishments of this dear friend of mine are too many to enumerate here, but her impact in the field of education particularly has affected more people in the public school system than perhaps any other person I know of.

There is no one who can replace this wonderful and warm human being; you cannot replace this kind of person. Her untiring efforts on behalf of her district, her people, and her country mark her as an outstanding and dedicated public servant. She is without question, in my mind, an unequalled and exceptional individual. It is my firm conviction that if the Congress were made up of a majority of EDITH GREENS we would not have many of the problems that we are faced with today.

It was my fervent hope that Mrs.

December 20, 1974

GREEN, whom I consider to be one of my dearest friends, could have been dissuaded from retiring from the Hill. Unquestionably, we in the Congress and the Nation as a whole can ill afford to lose the abilities, the wisdom, and the example of this gracious lady at this crisis time in our Nation's history. Inasmuch as she has chosen to retire from the Hill, I pray that whatever she chooses to do will bring her the pleasure and happiness which she so rightly deserves.

This House and this Nation owe this good and great American a debt of gratitude that can never be repaid. Personally, though mere words are not adequate, let me thank you, honorable lady, for your untiring efforts in behalf of our beloved country. You will certainly be missed.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, there is only one word to describe EDITH GREEN—outstanding. No one in this Congress has received more citations and accolades than our colleague from Oregon—and she deserved every one of them, and more.

It has been my privilege to serve with EDITH throughout her entire 20 years in the Congress, and my admiration for her integrity and ability has continued to grow. Certainly her name will long be remembered in the field of education. Her work as a member of the Committee on Education and Labor has benefited millions of Americans. No one can match her record. She is one of the outstanding authorities in the Nation. No one can take her place. I know that her sound advice and wise counsel will continue to be sought even in retirement.

Not being of the same party, there have been times when EDITH and I have been on opposing sides of an issue. In such situations, no adversary could be more effective, yet more gracious. There have been many times, too, when we have joined together in the same legislative effort—and like most of my colleagues, I was always glad to have EDITH GREEN as an ally.

I join with all my colleagues on both sides of the aisle in saying, "Thank you, EDITH, for the dedicated service you have given to the Congress, your country, and your State. It has been a pleasure to work with you in these Halls, and I wish you good health and abundant happiness in your well-deserved retirement."

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, one of the privileges I most appreciate is the privilege given me to serve with EDITH GREEN, the very able Congresswoman from Oregon. One of my greatest sources of pride is the fact that this lovely lady considers me her friend.

Over the years there have been those who are recognized immediately as persons of exceptional ability. From the moment EDITH GREEN was sworn in as a freshman Member her potential was apparent to all. EDITH GREEN's record of achievement is so well known that it needs no retelling. My purpose today, Mr. Speaker, is simply to thank this fine lady for the many, many kindnesses she has shown me. It has been a distinct honor for me to serve with her in the Congress.

In her retirement, I wish for her good times, good health, and good fortune.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, these last hectic days of the 93d Congress have indeed been exciting and historic, but they are also sad as we bid farewell to some of our friends and colleagues upon their retirement from Congress. One such person is the gentle lady from Oregon, EDITH GREEN, to whom I now rise to pay tribute for her many years of distinguished public service.

EDITH GREEN's 20-year tenure in the House of Representatives has earned her respect and admiration from her colleagues which allow this small-statured woman to be regarded as one of the truly great giants of Congress.

She has achieved a reputation for her diligence and leadership in having numerous landmark legislative efforts enacted into law. These include equal rights for women, assisting minorities, and increasing benefits for workers. But, especially, I am confident that her efforts to help improve the quality of our Nation's education will remain her legacy.

Mr. Speaker, there is little I can add in praise of this remarkable lady for she has already earned countless honors throughout the years in recognition of her outstanding service to her State and to her Nation.

My wife, Lee, joins me in wishing her and her family the very best in their retirement and future undertakings. She shall greatly be missed by all for her warmth, her leadership, and her dedication to help assist the people of our Nation.

Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Speaker, two decades of distinguished service will come to a close with the conclusion of this Congress when EDITH GREEN makes her final roll call. But what a record it has been.

While many people talk a great deal about equal rights for women, Mrs. GREEN has for 20 years proven that she was more than equal to any person or challenge. In that, she has done more for this just cause than anyone I know.

Her lasting imprint has been made in the field of education. It would be impossible to denote all of her contributions. Suffice it to say that she is recognized by her colleagues and this Nation as one of the prime leaders of all time in our search for quality education for all our children.

I had the privilege of serving with Mrs. GREEN for 12 of her 20 years in the Congress. I respect and admire her for her ability, her fairness and, above all, her dedication to principle.

This Nation is richer because of her service.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, Congress will miss the gentlewoman from Oregon, the Honorable EDITH GREEN.

I have had the privilege of serving in this body with Mrs. GREEN since I was first elected to Congress in 1960. I know that her efforts in the Education and Labor Committee have helped to bring responsibility to the proceedings there. I am sure that the same can be said for her later service in the Appropriations Committee.

Mrs. GREEN has done highly commendable work in her critique of Federal aid to education and her constant investigation of irregularities in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

I wish Mrs. GREEN a fruitful and happy retirement and know that her counsel and efforts will be missed in the House.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, "Education," wrote Henry Brougham, "makes a people easy to lead, but difficult to drive; easy to govern, but impossible to enslave." No finer sentiment could be found to describe the ideals which have been championed by Congresswoman EDITH GREEN, whose retirement after some two decades of public service in this House takes from our ranks one of our ablest and most dedicated colleagues. It has been my privilege to count Mrs. GREEN as a friend as well as a fellow Member of Congress, and I can speak from personal experience regarding the character of her life and the quality of the representation she has provided.

Her concern for education and its betterment in American life is legendary, and she has always understood the ties which exist between the educational process and a democratic society. Born in South Dakota some 64 years ago, her early years were spent in Oregon, where she was raised in an atmosphere deeply influenced by her two great and lifelong concerns: Politics and education. She herself taught school for a dozen years, learning at firsthand the problems and challenges of public education.

She was first elected to Congress in 1954, and has won reelection nine times since—a tribute to the confidence she has inspired in her constituents, the people of the Third District of Oregon, which includes a good part of the city of Portland. Her decision to retire reflects a personal commitment to step down at what she felt would be the right time, and while it is accepted and respected by all it also leaves an ineradicable sense of loss.

It has been a genuine pleasure to have served with Mrs. GREEN for the past 10 years in the Congress. She has won the gratitude of countless students and teachers, indeed—of all Americans, by her distinguished leadership in the cause of educational progress. To her and to her family, Mrs. Annunzio and I extend every good wish for abundant good health and continuing achievement in the years ahead.

Mrs. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, the retirement of Congresswoman EDITH GREEN of Oregon deprives the House of Representatives, and the people of the United States, of one of our best minds and most effective legislators. Since coming to the House in 1955, she has demonstrated a grasp of educational issues which has made her, in my opinion—and in the opinions, too, of many, many other Members—our foremost authority in this field, and one to whom we quickly learned to listen with attention and respect.

She has an eloquence which all of us envy, and a clarity of presentation which tends to make most of us sound wordy in comparison. I do not recall a single instance when EDITH GREEN took the floor to debate a bill that she did not sway votes—and that is perhaps the highest compliment one can pay a Member of this House.

December 20, 1974

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—HOUSE

41933

Mrs. GREEN's decision to retire is one which we can understand and sympathize with, because we know how hard and diligently she has worked for 20 years as an extremely conscientious Member of Congress. Only those who have served in the House can fully appreciate the dedication and energy which EDITH GREEN has devoted to her responsibilities.

The people of the Third District of Oregon have been served so well and so faithfully for these past 20 years that Mrs. GREEN's successor in the 94th Congress is going to have to work harder than any other new Member of the House to provide the residents of that district with the kind of service they have become used to.

It has been a pleasure to serve with EDITH GREEN these past two decades. I sincerely hope that when the new Congress convenes, she will find ways and time to keep us informed of her ideas on legislation, for EDITH GREEN's sharp mind is one of America's great human resources.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, it is a real personal honor for me to join with my colleagues today in saluting Congresswoman EDITH GREEN, who will be retiring at the end of this session of the 93d Congress.

Her contributions to education as chairman of the Special Subcommittee on Education of the Education and Labor Committee are well documented. EDITH has consistently and eloquently spoken out for legislative programs which will assure excellence in the country's educational pursuits. No person, in my memory, has done so much to insure that America's young people will have every opportunity for a quality education.

Unlike many successful people, Congresswoman GREEN has refused to be satisfied with past accomplishments, though for her these were many, but has insisted on looking to the future and planning for future challenges.

To list the accomplishments of EDITH GREEN now would take far more time than is available to me. However, these accomplishments have been noted publicly on numerous occasions and I want to take this opportunity to express my appreciation for all that she has done.

Since becoming a Member of Congress, I have admired EDITH GREEN's ability to get things done. Her sound judgment and effectiveness in communicating important proposals have long been the trademark of Congresswoman GREEN. In my judgment, she is one of the most valuable Members of this body and will be greatly missed.

I have often benefited from the counsel and advice of EDITH and it has been a real personal privilege to serve with her in the U.S. House of Representatives.

It is my hope that the coming years of retirement for EDITH will be filled with good fortune and happiness.

Mr. BURLESON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, our colleague, Congresswoman EDITH GREEN, leaves a real legacy as she retires from this House of Representatives. No one has shaped more fundamental legislation, and especially in the field of education, than has EDITH GREEN. Her keen mind, her energy, her dedication, are examples for all of us and her leadership and quiet influence in this body will long be remembered by all of us.

I hope that her retirement to quieter pursuits will bring her deep satisfaction and I am sure she shall continue to have the deep concern for the welfare of our Nation and people that she has so long exhibited in Congress.

Mr. COLLINS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join in with my colleagues in expressing our appreciation to EDITH GREEN for her many years of constructive service. In my first two terms in Congress, I had the opportunity of serving with EDITH on the Education and Labor Committee. It was always refreshing to hear her discuss education. As many witnesses would go into theory, EDITH would always stay with common sense and reality. She believes in the fundamentals of a good sound education and in the priorities of America. There are very few things that could be considered more important than education.

I will never forget the day 3 years ago when I was standing in the back of the House floor next to Alvin O'Konski of Wisconsin. Al had been here 15 terms but in all of that time he had hardly ever said a word. That particular day EDITH GREEN was engaged in a strong floor debate. When she finished her statement, Al turned to me and said:

I have heard many people in my day talk on this House floor; some of them have little to say, some have nothing to add, but that good lady from Oregon has the best mind and speaks with more clarity than anyone I have ever heard in the Halls of Congress.

Al O'Konski never said much in his 15 terms, but I think he summed up EDITH GREEN very well in that one sentence.

I always enjoyed hearing the message from EDITH GREEN. She spoke from experience. She spoke from a strong well read, depth of knowledge. She spoke from many years of intensive committee and congressional work. But always when she spoke she took a sound position and put her message on the line in plain language.

When I think of busing in the schools today, I am always discouraged. But I am more discouraged when I realize that EDITH GREEN will not be with us next year to lead the fight. She has done more than any Member on the floor of Congress to try to stop busing.

EDITH GREEN is a nice person. She is delightful, polite, highly intelligent, and has a most pleasant smile. She is a wonderful friend. It will be our loss in Washington when she leaves Congress.

Mr. PIKE. Mr. Speaker, through the years, this House has been graced with a number of truly distinguished women Members but none with more superlative qualities than the gentle lady from Oregon, EDITH GREEN. I will leave it to others to enumerate her astonishing legislative triumphs and pioneering breakthroughs, especially in the field of education. There will be others capable of picking up the formidable array of legislative tasks which she shouldered, often quite alone. Unfortunately there will be none who can lend her unique style and grace which, for all the years I have been here, have been one of the true glories of this House.

Her special presence, her very special voice, will be sorely missed in this Chamber and perhaps sometimes, when the debate is tedious and dull, we can all look with envious eyes westward to her beloved Oregon, from whence came the gift that proved beyond any further shadow of a doubt that the best things in life often come in small packages.

Mr. DOMINICK V. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, at the end of this 93d Congress one of the most useful, tenacious, and informed Members of this House will be calling it quits. The Congress and the Nation will be the worse for it.

I have known EDITH GREEN for 16 years and in that period I learned to respect her for her keen mind, the knowledge of legislative intricacies, and her courage under fire. There is no Member of this House whom I respect more and whose friendship I esteem more than that of EDITH GREEN. A great legislator, a great human being, EDITH in a very literal sense is one in a million.

Just recently I was in Portland, Ore. Surely there is no part of the Nation more beautiful than the great Northwest. Thus, for many reasons I envy EDITH and I wish her well as she returns to her beloved Oregon. I am sure next summer when you can fry eggs on the sidewalks of the Nation's Capital that everyone in this House will realize that EDITH GREEN made the right decision. Like all who served with her I wish her good health, long life, and the best of everything. Speaking personally I shall miss EDITH. I shall miss her good sense, her willingness to be helpful and her sense of loyalty to her friends. I hope she will come back often to the Chambers.

THE PRESENT SITUATION IN THE MIDDLE EAST

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. HAMILTON) is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, the last negotiated agreement in the Middle East was in May of this year when Israel and Syria signed a disengagement agreement. Since then, a great deal has happened both in the Middle East and abroad.

In the Middle East, one of the more encouraging signs of the last several months has been the relative absence of gunfire and bloodshed. The zones patrolled by the UNEF and UNOF forces along the Israeli-Syrian fronts have remained calm and violations of the terms of the disengagement accords have been few and minor in nature. Since the horrifying terrorist episodes of Qiryat Shemona and Maalot and the hostilities engendered by those attacks, there has been a diminution of the cycle of violence that has in the recent past and can again threaten the whole fabric of relationships we have sought so hard to develop over the last year.

THE RABAT DECISION

Perhaps the most significant new development occurred at the recent Arab summit conference in Rabat, Morocco, where the Arab States recognized the Palestine Liberation Organization—PLO—as the legitimate representative of the Palestinian people living in the Occupied Territories of the West Bank and of Gaza. This Rabat decision and the subsequent public appearance at the United Nations of the PLO Chairman, Yasir Arafat, have added an important, new factor to the Middle East equation.

The relevance of this Rabat decision, however, to the present diplomatic situation in the Middle East is less clear. At this time, it would appear that the PLO decision is crucial less for the substantive issue involved than for the timing problem it creates for the immediate future of any peace negotiations.

The negotiating process and the step-by-step approach being pursued by Secretary of State Kissinger has not yet reached a point where the Palestinian issue is a focal point of peace talks.

However, if peace talks in the near-term future produce further agreements between Israel and Egypt and between Israel and Syria, the West Bank and Gaza issues and the format available for Palestinians living in these areas to express their self-determination cannot be far behind.

The substantive issue involved here is not the PLO per se. It is the right of Palestinians to be involved directly in negotiations. No reasonable position on the part of any party to the conflict can deny that right. Any settlement to the Arab-Israeli conflict must focus on the Palestinian issue.

WHO REPRESENTS PALESTINIANS

The question is: Who represents the Palestinians? On that issue, only the Palestinians can decide. And no matter which individual or group we may wish or not wish to have negotiate for the Palestinians in areas subject to negotiations, we cannot decide that issue for them.

The Palestinians in many of the refugee camps in Lebanon and Syria and many Palestinians living outside camps in various parts of the Arab world and Europe and the Americas have spoken in support of the Palestinian Liberation Organization. Some leaders in the occupied territories of the West Bank and Gaza have done likewise.

But many Palestinian voices on the West Bank, in Gaza and elsewhere have not been heard. These voices may have reservations about King Hussein of Jordan representing them but they may also feel similarly about the PLO.

Finally, there is a large group of Palestinians living in Jordan who may prefer to have the Jordanian Government represent their interests in any negotiations.

It is difficult, in short, to determine who speaks for the majority of the Palestinians. But two facts seem clear at this point. First, the PLO speaks for many Palestinians and second, what the PLO might have gained through the barrel of a gun gives that organization some political power, though not necessarily political rights.

Mr. Speaker, the time is long overdue for an internationally sponsored plebiscite to be held in the occupied territories to determine the wishes of Palestinians living there. The Near East and South Asia Subcommittee first made such a recommendation in 1971. In the absence of a referendum to decide who speaks for the Palestinians on the West Bank and in Gaza, the world is faced with the undesirable choice of dealing with the Palestine Liberation Organization or not dealing with any Palestinians. Israel and the United States cannot, on the one hand, refuse to deal with the PLO, and, on the other hand, discourage serious political debate and try to prevent voices of self-determination in the occupied territories from articulating their views.

SITUATION TODAY

The issue of how the Palestinians are brought into future negotiations in the Middle East must be addressed in the near future, not necessarily immediately. We must now press on with further Israel-Egyptian and Israel-Syrian talks. We owe that much to the three parties involved: They want further talks now and they want to preserve the limited gains of the initial disengagement talks.

In this present situation, I am most worried about the prevailing mood in the region. Positions of parties seem to be hardening at the very time flexibility is so necessary.

The Arabs, with their new-found power, in terms of their improved military performance in the 1973 war and the oil weapon, appear confident and, at time, cocky and uncompromising. As of today, most of their leaders have failed to give Israel adequate and convincing evidence that if Israel were to withdraw from a vast majority of the territories occupied in 1967 they would recognize Israel as a state in the Middle East and publicly acknowledge its permanence in the region.

Israel, well armed but clearly troubled by its smallness in a large area, its international isolation and the large and sophisticated Soviet arms deliveries to its neighbors, appears to remain convinced that territory is an important form of security and that holding on to occupied territories by force promotes a more secure environment for Israel in the region. Many Israelis fail to perceive just how unstable and insecure the present situation is: I seriously doubt the Middle East will ever revert to the pre-October 1973 situation which offered many Israelis a greater sense of security.

This same lack of flexibility appears lacking on the Palestinian issue. Israel states that it will never negotiate with the PLO, because it is nothing more than a band of terrorists, which lives by incidents similar to the Maalot, Qiryat Shemona and Beit Shean horrors and because that organization is dedicated to the destruction of Israel.

The PLO, for its part, retains the uncompromising and inflexible position that a democratic secular state in Palestine, presumably run by the PLO, remains and will continue to be its goal and that nothing, ultimately, can stand in the way of that goal. The PLO also stubbornly insists that terrorism is an acceptable form of political warfare and within the stated principles of the United Nations Charter.

U.S. POLICY AND HOPES FOR THE FUTURE

Mr. Speaker, it should be the policy of the United States and this Congress to encourage flexibility and compromise on the part of all parties to the Arab-Israel conflict in the important weeks and months ahead. We should be looking for and seeking out that flexibility. We should be refraining from "do's", "don'ts", "musts", "nevers".

From the Arabs, we might hope for an agreement to a phased implementation of any general agreement and for a clearer and unequivocal demonstration of its recognition of the existence of the state of Israel and Israel's right to remain in the Middle East and live in peace.

From the Palestinians, we might hope for a public and explicit denunciation of all terrorist activities for now and in the future and an explicit recognition of the right of Israelis to self-determination and statehood in the Middle East.

From Israel, we might hope for a willingness to permit greater political self-expression in the occupied territories, to negotiate with elected representatives of the Palestinians and to recognize that its future in the Middle East depends, in part, on its ability to demonstrate to its neighbors that it seeks, not military domination, but political accommodation, not territory but true peace.

And from the United States and the Soviet Union, we might hope for restraint in arms deliveries and a better dialog on peace talks. There are indications that the Soviet Union is considerably uptight about the manner in which it has been excluded by the United States from most diplomacy in the Middle East.

Soviet actions, arms deliveries, and seeming refusal to want the Middle East to become part of the widening areas of East-West détente may be good reasons for worrying about what the Soviet Union might do to frustrate negotiations.

But the United States should persist and insist on arms limitation talks with the Soviet Union on the Middle East and on bringing genuine big power responsibility to the Middle East. We should consult more often and in franker and more substantive ways with the Soviet Union on any peace talks to be held outside Geneva. We need Soviet cooperation and help to achieve peace in the Middle East.

CONCLUSION

These hopes may be tall orders, but I believe that with statesmanship and a will on all sides, such changes in attitude are possible.

The drive for peace in the Middle East will face serious challenges in the weeks ahead. In fact, we have arrived at an important juncture. New momentum can be given to peace talks by the successful completion of further talks among the parties. Or what impetus the peace drive now has may dissipate and we may be headed for a detour on the long road toward peace. If such a detour were to include hostilities, the losses for the United States and for all parties in the region could be enormous.

I think we would all agree that such a prospect should be avoided. To do so, however, will involve more flexibility on all sides, including our own, than has been shown in recent weeks.

A TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE WAYNE OWENS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. MEZVINSKY) is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. MEZVINSKY. Mr. Speaker, as the 93d Congress draws to a close, I would like to say a few words about my good friend WAYNE OWENS.

WAYNE and I have shared many experiences during the past 2 years, probably the most notable of which was serving on the Judiciary Committee during the impeachment inquiry. As with all of his responsibilities, WAYNE approached that trying task with the time-demanding dedication to do it thoroughly and well.

In the Judiciary Committee, the Interior Committee, the Democratic Steering and Policy Committee and here on the floor of the House, WAYNE proved himself an intelligent and able legislator. He speaks with forthrightness and conviction and his activities as a Member of the House have been marked with the sensitivity and decency so essential to great leadership.

The Congress as a whole, and myself personally, will miss WAYNE next year. I want to wish him well in all that he does and hope that he continues to serve the public in the future as well as he has during the last 2 years. I am confident that he will.

Mrs. BURKE of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join my colleagues in paying special tribute to our colleague from Utah the Honorable WAYNE OWENS. While I am saddened that he will not be returning to serve in the 94th Congress, I am grateful for the opportunity to have served with him during the past 2 years.

As a member of the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, WAYNE consistently demonstrated his commitment to improving the quality of the environment in which we live. His leadership and direction contributed greatly to both the dignity and speedy conclusion of the Judiciary Committee impeachment inquiry. But, I will not here recount WAYNE's many contributions for they will seem minuscule, I am sure, when measured against the great achievements which lie before him.

Ms. HOLTZMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to my good friend and able colleague, WAYNE OWENS.

WAYNE has been one of the most active and effective members of the freshman class. In the Democratic Policy and Steering Committee, in the caucus and on the House floor he has been a persistent advocate of congressional reform. He has made significant contributions to efforts to control strip mining, develop new energy sources and establish standards for land use. He has played a major part in stopping Department of Defense research into nerve gas and in securing congressional adoption of the Geneva Protocol of 1925 banning the use of nerve gas.

It was through his persistent efforts that the impeachment proceedings were before the Judiciary Committee were televised. The country as a whole owes him an enormous debt for this achievement.

As a member of the House Judiciary Committee during a period of unprecedented historical significance, Wayne Owens demonstrated his courage, thoughtfulness and dedication. At the beginning of the 93d Congress, we worked together to open committee meetings to the public. Later on I found it a privilege and a pleasure to serve the many long and difficult months of impeachment and Vice-Presidential confirmation hearings with him.

I shall miss WAYNE's thoughtful and able contributions to Judiciary Committee deliberations. I am hopeful that he will remain active in public affairs and will continue to contribute significantly to social reform efforts.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I have never served with a more honest and decent man than WAYNE OWENS. His retirement from this House and from public service is a great loss to his State and his country. I trust his absence from participation in Government will be short-lived.

In his short service here, WAYNE demonstrated that he combines the best of the practical and the idealistic impulses in all of us. He was diligent, unyielding on basic principles, but always ready with the sensible compromise which made progress possible.

Beyond this, he is a gentle, likable human being. In a time when Americans, especially the young, are cynical about many of our leaders, WAYNE was such a genuine, concerned human being, that he energized young people and old both in his own State and in Washington.

I shall miss him and I wish him and his family all the very best.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE POST-ELECTION SESSION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. McFALL) is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. McFALL. Mr. Speaker, the session of 22 legislative days that began November 18 and concluded today has been one of the most active and productive post-election sessions since the adoption of the 20th amendment. The post-election session capped a 2-year legislative record that the Speaker alluded to today as marking the 93d as a "historic Congress."

House confirmation of NELSON A. ROCKEFELLER yesterday made him the second Vice President ever to be appointed under the 25th amendment. The 93d Congress confirmed both.

The House adjourns today sine die after sending to the President a Trade Reform Act, proving for general trade negotiating authority and expanded trade with the Soviet Union contingent upon that nation's emigration policy.

Perhaps the most important congressional initiative of the post-election session was the Democratic economic recovery effort contemplated by the emergency jobs and unemployment benefits bills. The legislation would establish a $2.5-billion emergency public employment program, would provide special unemployment benefits for persons not covered by the program, and would extend the unemployment benefits of covered workers who have exhausted their benefits. Emergency appropriations were voted to fund these programs.

Energy actions included final passage of the deepwater ports bill to license the construction of off-shore ports that could receive the largest oil tankers, the extension of the Emergency Petroleum Allocation Act and a bill establishing policy and guidance for nonnuclear energy research.

Mass transit was given a major boost by a new law providing $11.8 billion for construction and operating assistance, including aid to rural areas.

A strip mining bill providing for the environmentally acceptable mining of coal and for reclamation of mined-out areas was cleared for the President—but a veto is expected.

Health legislation approved by the post-election session included a Safe Drinking Water Act and a $1 billion health planning bill.

A $2.69 billion foreign aid bill, cleared for the President, would set ceilings on aid to Vietnam, South Korea, and Chile, and cut off aid to Turkey but would provide that the President may delay the Turkish aid cutoff until February 5, 1975, if he determines that it would further efforts toward a peaceful solution on Cyprus.

Two important consumer bills were cleared for the President: A consumer product warranties and Federal Trade Commission improvements act, and a bill regulating real estate settlement practices.

The Congress overrode vetoes of three important bills: A 23-percent increase in veterans education benefits, Freedom of Information Act Amendments, and vocational rehabilitation amendments.

Other important legislation of the post-election session includes a Community Services Act to extend many Office of Economic Opportunity programs, a speedy trials bill, a State lotteries bill, preservation of the Nixon tapes, antitrust penalties and procedures, a privacy act, improvements in the social welfare program and some tax revisions.

LEGISLATIVE CHECKLIST OF THE POST-ELECTION SESSION

The post-election session was a productive and rewarding one for the American people. Following is a checklist of major House actions:

VICE PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATION

The House by a vote of 287-128-1 on December 19 confirmed Nelson A. Rockefeller to be Vice President. He was sworn in in the Senate Chamber where he had been approved 90-7 on December 10.

THE ECONOMY

Emergency jobs and unemployment assistance.—Authorizes $2.5 billion for 330,000 public service jobs; provides special unemployment compensation—estimated to cost $2.5 billion—for those not covered by the program; authorizes $500 million more for labor-intensive public works programs as approved by the Secretaries of Commerce and Labor.

Emergency unemployment compensation.—Up to 13 additional weeks of benefits for covered workers who have exhausted regular or extended benefits.

Supplemental.—Appropriates $1 billion for the jobs program (including $125 million for public works in depressed areas), $2.75 billion for unemployment compensation and $812 million for increased veterans education benefits.

Trade Reform Act.—Provides for general trade negotiating authority and expanded trade with the Soviet Union contingent upon its emigration policies.

Tax bill.—Increases from six to nine percent the interest charged on federal tax deficiencies, provides for tax treatment of political parties and committees; doubles tax credit on deduction for small contributors.

Social services amendments.—Continues the $2.5 billion ceiling; requires that federal funds supplement and not replace state funds; provides new child support rules. This program provides such services as day care for children, feeding of indigent elderly, and family planning guidance.

ENERGY AND ENVIRONMENT

Deepwater ports.—Establishes procedures for licensing and regulating deepwater ports off the coasts of the United States.

Strip mining.—Sets mining and reclamation standards; provides for reclamation of abandoned mines. (Expected to be vetoed.)

Non-nuclear energy.—Provides Congressional policy guidance in non-nuclear energy research by the new Energy Research and Development Administration.

HEALTH, CONSUMER, CONSTITUTIONAL/JUDICIAL, INTERNATIONAL

Health measures include the Safe Drinking Water Act, now law, that provides for state primary enforcement of national drinking water standards; a Health Planning and Policy bill that establishes a health planning system, extends Hill-Burton, and authorizes $1.2 billion over three years; Nurse Training Bill, authorizing $639 million over three years; and a Health Services Bill extending five existing health programs for two years at $1.8 billion. Consumer bills include Consumer Product Warranties/FTC Improvements that would enforce claims made in warranties and otherwise improve FTC consumer protection; and a Real Estate Settlement bill that provides for disclosure of closing costs and prohibits kickbacks and provides other protection for homebuyers. Constitutional/Judicial measures include Antitrust Penalties and Procedures bill which increases penalties. Preservation of the Nixon tapes and other presidential material, Privacy Act strengthening rights of citizens in regard to federal records; and Rules of Evidence revision for federal courts. International measures include a $2.7-billion foreign aid bill that permits the President to suspend the Turkish aid cutoff until February 5, 1975, and sets ceilings for aid to Vietnam, North Korea and Chile.

RETIREMENT OF MEMBERS

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, when JOHN BLATNIK announced his retirement from Congress, he said:

I want to express my heartfelt gratitude to the wonderful people of the Eighth District for this privilege of serving in the United States Congress.

What an unselfish statement. But that clearly typifies JOHN. Even though his steady, conscientious, and dependable service is reflected in the political, economic, social, and personal well-being of his constituents and our country, he does not wish to accept any credit for his 28 years in the House of Representatives but pays tribute to the people of his district.

I personally believe it is a two way street and I want to express the gratitude of the people of our country, if I may be so bold, to JOHN BLATNIK for 35 years of public service.

Mr. Speaker, JOHN BLATNIK's accomplishments have been many and great—he has been called "Mr. Water Quality" for his efforts to clean up water pollution. President Johnson called him the "Fighting General" in the war on pollution. I nominate him as the man of our generation.

In this generation of ours, he holds a solid record of achievement. As chairman of the Committee on Public Works, he has been an action oriented individual, orchestrating with a fine hand the meetings of the committee which authorizes projects of over $20 billion every year.

I know him best for his gentleness, his kindness, and the many courtesies he has extended to all of us, whether Congressman, constituent or friend. He never says no and this desire to please has taken its toll—forcing his retirement.

His record of constituent and others seeking assistance files are great to behold. If we called them all together we would need the RFK stadium to contain them. But JOHN would be petrified if I even mentioned the idea. He is a very humble man which only God will be able to reward.

We shall miss him immensely and with him go our best wishes for a more leisureable world and to paraphrase our colleague BOB JONES of Alabama, we thank JOHN for allowing us to be his friend.

Mr. VEYSEY. Mr. Speaker, it is with a great sense of awe and admiration that I join my colleagues in paying respects to LESLIE ARENDS as he voluntarily retires from the House of Representatives. It is a rare occasion when we pay tribute to a man who has dedicated more than 40 years in service to the people of his State and Nation.

Personally, I have had the privilege of knowing and serving with LES ARENDS only in the twilight of his career. During this time he has been both an inspiration and a guide. The effectiveness of his leadership is demonstrated by the strong positions he has maintained on partisan and controversial issues while continuing to enjoy a harmonious working relationship with the majority party. For example, even though the Pentagon has been a favored target for many, LES ARENDS, as the ranking Republican on the House Armed Services Committee, has consistently supported expenditures to insure a strong and competitive military posture for the United States.

His position as minority whip was a potential source of friction, but masterfully, he performed his duties, lining up votes and organizing support or opposition for major bills without alienating the friendship of his Republican colleagues.

The friendship that LES ARENDS has developed on the golf course and in the Halls of Congress will continue, and we hope and trust that his retirement will bring many years of peace and fulfillment.

Mr. TEAGUE. Mr. Speaker, it is with a note of sadness that I rise to speak a few words in behalf of our colleague, CLARK FISHER. I remember well when I came to the Congress in 1946 and established my first acquaintanceship with him. His knowledge of the Congress and the legislative system and his willingness to help will always be remembered by me.

There are few people in the Congress who will ever know of the contributions of CLARK FISHER to not only the Congress, but the State of Texas and to the Nation. His long years of service on the Armed Services Committee which spanned a world wide conflict that pitted the United States and her allies against the Axis powers; the subsequent Korean War and more recently our operations in Southeast Asia; placed him in a position of tremendous import to our country. He met this challenge well, and has been a pillar of strength within that committee and in the Congress.

I know that whatever CLARK FISHER elects to do in his retirement will be fulfilling to him and for sure the people of Texas have benefited from the long years of public service rendered by this man.

Mr. COLLINS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is a real loss to Texas when we see CLARK FISHER finishing his last term in the Congress. For 16 consecutive terms, CLARK FISHER represented the broad west Texas area. This great conservative has always spoken out with the friendly voice of the ranch people that he represented.

CLARK FISHER believes in a government of the people and by the people. You could always count on CLARK for voting with the Constitution, for States rights, for less taxes, and for more individual freedom back home.

In all of Texas, CLARK FISHER is an institution. When he tells you where he stands, you can depend on it. When there was a tough issue that involved Texas, you could always count on CLARK to be in there fighting hard for the progress of our great State.

Although CLARK was a Democrat, those of us on the Republican side had the strongest of admiration for him. He was a hard worker. He was a man that knew government. He was a man with courage on all of the tough votes.

After 31 years in Congress, Texas is going to miss the representation of CLARK FISHER. But he has a record of achievement of which all of Texas will be proud of in all the years to come.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, the 94th Congress will be without many familiar faces, and I suppose the biennial departures are part of a pattern that we should all learn to live with. Still it always effects me to see old friends and fine public servants retire. JULIA BUTLER HANSEN is completing a truly remarkable 35-year career in politics. It is hard to imagine all that she has done during that long period of service in Olympia and the Nation's Capitol. She has pioneered in many areas long considered off limits to women, and she has consistently won the highest respect for her ability and dedication. The one thing JULIA has not experienced is mediocrity.

JULIA HANSEN's 7-term tenure in the House has been a model of the very best of our profession. She has been known for her thorough and productive committee work, especially on the vital Appropriations Committee. She has never put herself above those she serves, and she has never given the people of her district less than the best.

Mr. Speaker, it is always inspiring to look back over a career such as JULIA HANSEN's. It is a reminder of what we are all here for, which is service. Mr. Speaker, I shall always consider myself fortunate to have spent 14 years working with JULIA, and my very best wishes go with her for a long and happy retirement. The people tell me that on the average American women live 7 years longer than American men, and I can only say that knowing JULIA she will make good use of those extra 7 years. The rest of us will certainly miss her.

Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to bid farewell to a most distinguished colleague who has befriended me since my first day in Congress. Although I am saddened by the thought that she will not be returning in January, I am pleased to have this opportunity to sing praises to her for the superb job she has done over these past 20 years.

As a member of the Ways and Means Committee and the Joint Economic Committee, MARTHA has made many valuable contributions to our country; and she will be especially missed on these important committees that face the task of solving our serious economic problems.

I sincerely hope that 1975 will bring with it the adoption of the equal rights amendment which will be a fitting tribute to her leadership quality and legislative ability—for it was she, MARTHA GRIFITHS, who was a staunch proponent of this amendment.

I wish her and her family happiness and good health over the coming years.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a dear friend and colleague of mine from California, the Honorable VICTOR V. VEYSEY, for his many years of distinguished public service to his State and Nation.

For it has indeed been my pleasure to have worked with this "gentleman farmer" for many years since our early days in California when he served in the State assembly at a time when I was Lieutenant Governor.

During these years Vic quickly earned respect not only for his concern and leadership to improve the quality of education and to assist the farmer, but also for the willingness and friendliness by which he performed his tasks.

His rich background in the field of education as a university professor, and as an administrator on State and local levels, made him well suited to serve on the Education and Labor Committee when he was first elected to the 92d Congress.

I am confident that he will best be remembered not only for his efforts to improve education, an effort which earlier earned him the Phi Delta Kappa "Man of the Year in Education" award; but also his efforts to bring about more fiscal responsibility without Federal budget, and for his efforts to help alleviate some of our energy shortages through the development of geothermal and solar energy.

My wife, Lee, joins me in extending to Vic and his lovely wife, Janet, our sincere best wishes on their future endeavors.

Mr. WOLFF. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join in this special order to pay tribute to our distinguished colleague, the Honorable HUGH CAREY.

I have known HUGH for a good many years, and I can say without reservation that the House of Representatives is losing a most valuable and respected Member. I have worked with Mr. CAREY on several major pieces of legislation, most notably the first Federal aid to education bill and the innovative Federal revenue sharing program. These major legislative accomplishments attest to HUGH's ability to get the job done in a way that benefits, not only his own constituency, but the Nation as a whole.

HUGH has also thrown his energies and talents into securing needed improvements on behalf of our elderly and the handicapped, insuring that the rights of these individuals are not forgotten by the Congress. It has been my privilege, too, to work with HUGH in exploring means to alleviate the tragic situation in Northern Ireland and the denial of rights to Soviet Jews. The honors which HUGH CAREY has received for his work on Northern Ireland and Soviet Jewry support the reputation he has earned as one who cares deeply about the quality of life among all peoples.

The 15th Congressional District, and indeed all of New York, has been well served by HUGH CAREY. Often, he has led the New York congressional delegation in pursuing better housing, more school aid, and job opportunities for our constituency.

HUGH CAREY is now preparing to assume the awesome responsibilities of Governor of the State of New York. I know that the list of accomplishments in Mr. CAREY's career in public service will continue to grow in the years ahead. I look forward to continuing to work with him.

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, during his 11 terms of office, our distinguished colleague from New Jersey, PETER H. B. FRELINGHUYSEN, has lent stature to the House of Representatives. His accomplishments have been lasting ones, and he has set a standard of service for all of us to attempt to attain.

PETER FRELINGHUYSEN has displayed a level of expertise in the field of foreign affairs that has enabled his stamp to be clearly reflected in legislative initiatives in that area. Beyond that, he has shown himself to be an individual committed to making the House function more responsibly and effectively. This was shown by his selection to the Bolling Committee and by the input he made as a member of that committee. He can take pride in what he has done and in the impact he has had on junior Members over the years.

Mr. Speaker, of all the departures from Congress at the close of this session, there is one about which I am sure many of us feel the strongest and the saddest. In his nine terms in the House of Representatives, HOWARD ROBISON has gained universal respect. He is one of the most sensitive, perceptive, patient, understanding and thoughtful individuals I have ever met, in Congress or anywhere else.

HOWARD ROBISON has typified the quality of service and the commitment to the public's good that our forefathers envisioned when they created the House of Representatives. He will be sorely missed by all who care about the House as an institution and all who care about this country.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, we all know that uncertainty is in the nature of politics, but the biennial changes in the House membership are always difficult to adjust to. One of the real losses for the 94th Congress will be my good friend from Rhode Island, ROBERT TIERNAN.

BOB is completing 8 years of outstanding service in the House. During that time he has built a reputation as a first-class public servant. He has always chosen the path of solid achievement over that of flashy publicity. His many contributions include his work on the Appropriations Committee, where some of the most vital congressional decisions are made. It is an assignment that BOB earned from the people who know him best.

Those of us who are familiar with BOB's career are looking forward to his bright future. Few people have the determination and ability of BOB TIERNAN, and he has never been known to let them be wasted. My very best wishes go with BOB; he will be badly missed.

December 20, 1974

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to RICHARD T. HANNA, a dedicated and hard-working colleague and a fellow southern Californian.

DICK HANNA and I have been working together for almost 20 years for the good of our constituents, for the State of California, and for the Nation. Dick served in the California State Assembly from 1957 to 1962—while I was Lieutenant Governor—prior to his election to the 88th Congress. Our congressional districts are very close geographically, and share many common needs and problems, such as employment, air pollution, and transportation.

During his 12 years in the House DICK HANNA has developed an expertise in international affairs which will be missed. He presently serves as chairman of the Science and Astronautics Subcommittee on International Cooperation in Science and Space. In addition, he is on both the International Finance and International Trade Subcommittees of Banking and Currency. His advice on these important, but often highly technical issues has been of real assistance.

Dick will be putting this expertise to good use as he begins a new career—which sounds very exciting—as an international trade consultant. I understand he will have offices in Washington and California, but will be spending much of his time traveling abroad.

Mrs. Anderson joins me in wishing Dick, his lovely wife Doris, and their family a happy and rewarding future.

Mr. WYDLER. Mr. Speaker, as this session of Congress draws to a close, my good friend, JAMES R. GROVER, JR., will be ending his service of 12 years in the Congress of the United States. He is such a close and good friend that it is hard for me to pay him tribute in the fashion he deserves.

We were both elected to the Congress in 1962 and, since we both commuted back to our districts each weekend, we lived together during those 12 years while in Washington. This close association has let me see, firsthand, a first-class legislator of sterling character and an outstanding Member of the Congress. JIM GROVER is well liked by all his colleagues, both Democrats and Republicans. He was chosen to serve as president of our Congressional Class, and rose in the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee to become ranking member of the committee. In the Public Works Committee he became the second ranking member of that committee. In both capacities, he worked hard for the people of his district, Long Island, and the country, and performed for them outstanding services which will make his district a better place in which to live for years to come. He is the kind of legislator our country really needs—that is, level-headed, thoughtful, and effective.

It is obvious that I will miss JIM here in Congress, but it is clear to me that his district and country will miss him as well. I wish him every good thing in the years ahead and know his invaluable abilities will continue to contribute much to the future well-being of our Nation. Mr. Speaker, I just hate to see him leave.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, Congressman O. C. FISHER has cast his ballots in this House for 32 years, and each one of them has been his own individual conviction and represented what he believed was the best thought in his own district. Not once in all these years could anyone question the sincerity of the man.

My family was privileged to know CLARK FISHER when he represented our county in the Texas State Legislature. Our contacts have covered many years and every one of them has always been pleasant.

Some of us would not always cast the same votes as he, and vice versa, but O. C. FISHER never disagreed with you or engaged in personalities. He simply voted his convictions and his district. Many of us describe CLARK's voting record with this summation: He votes on every bill just like he was not going to run again. The people of his district must have liked his independence and sincerity as they sent him back over a dozen times to represent them.

CLARK FISHER is my friend, and I hate to see him go. With him goes all our love and respect and very warmest good wishes.

Mr. BURLESON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is with regret we see THAD DULSKI leave the House of Representatives and we will miss his leadership here in the House, particularly in his capacity as chairman of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee.

Having held this post since 1967, THAD has become one of the most knowledgeable people in the country on matters dealing with the structure of the Federal Government involving civil service and postal matters.

I join his many friends and colleagues in wishing him a most enjoyable retirement, which he richly deserves.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I note with regret the impending departure of my friend and colleague from Connecticut, ELLA GRASSO. ELLA has contributed much during her all-too-brief tenure here, and she will be badly missed. Her particular expertise and commitment in the field of education will be as hard to replace as her youthful energy and optimistic attitude. The House and the country are both better off for ELLA's 4 years here.

To those who know ELLA, her decision to return to full-time service in Connecticut comes as no surprise. For two decades she has known and loved Connecticut politics. The Connecticut voters have repeatedly shown their overwhelming support of Ms. GRASSO. After 20 years they know what they are getting and they certainly will not be disappointed.

It is exciting to see the enthusiasm and anticipation ELLA has for the job that lies ahead. I am confident that she will continue her love affair with the people of Connecticut and will prove one of the Nation's truly outstanding Governors. My very best wishes go with her.

Mr. SHRIVER. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to comprehend the U.S. House of Representatives without our able colleague, H. R. GROSS of Iowa, sitting in this Chamber as the "watchdog for the American taxpayer." I have known and respected H. R. during the 14 years I have served in the House. I really do not know how he has managed to keep up with every bill, every report, and be prepared to articulate his views so effectively. He has been the conscience of this body, and served all of us well. He has saved the taxpayers of this Nation countless dollars. H. R. GROSS has worked for what he believed to be right for America.

We shall miss him very much when the first quorum is called in the 94th Congress. However, it is time to wish him well and to congratulate him on his 24 years of loyal service to the people of Iowa and to the Nation. I personally extend best wishes to you, H. R., and hope you enjoy good health, happiness, and contentment in the years ahead.

Mr. CORMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to pay tribute to my good friend and colleague, KEN GRAY, from the 24th District of Illinois.

KEN is retiring from the House with adjournment of this Congress, having served here since the beginning of the 84th Congress. In the 20 years he has spent here, KEN has worked very hard, serving his Nation, his home State and his constituents ably and with distinction.

As a member of the House Administration Committee, KEN served with a keen sense of responsibility that membership there demanded. He has been an able and energetic member of the Public Works Committee, with a deep awareness of that committee's particular responsibilities. The people of my own congressional district and of the entire Los Angeles area are indeed grateful to him for his enthusiastic support and endeavor in the Public Works Committee to give us a much-needed new Federal building, which is now nearing completion. I am personally grateful to him for this effort, for it will mean that I can better serve my constituents.

Mr. Speaker, KEN GRAY's retirement will create a void in the House. This fine gentleman will be missed by all of us for many years to come. But, since retirement is his wish, we can only accept it, and I join with his many friends in this Chamber to wish him many years of happiness, good health, and contentment.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to say that I share with my colleagues the feeling that the distinguished gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ARENDS) will be greatly missed when this House convenes in January for the 94th Congress.

LES ARENDS has served his people with distinction, and he has always had the interests of our Nation at heart. His fine record of service will long be remembered by those of us who have had the privilege of serving with him.

I am grateful for his counsel over the years, and I wish for him the very best. I know that he will always be welcome in this Chamber.

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to pay tribute to my good friend and distinguished colleagues from Connecticut, Hon. ELLA GRASSO who will be retiring in January to inherit the Governorship of the State of Connecticut.

Reading ELLA GRASSO's biography is a unique experience. It reads like some book of records. First in her class at Mount Holyoke College, graduating magna cum laude; first woman to serve as floor leader of the Connecticut House of Representatives; first woman chairman of the Democratic State platform committee, and now the first woman Governor to be elected in her own right. In 22 years, she has never lost an election.

December 20, 1974

But there is much more to the woman than that which can be printed in a biography. There is the genuine, intelligent, warm person whom I have had the pleasure of associating with on the Education and Labor Committee and in the Congress for the past 4 years. I do not think that I am alone in my high esteem of the kind of person ELLA GRASSO is. She has offered to the people of Connecticut, the people of the country and to all of us here in the House her knowledge and the benefit of her vast experience.

Connecticut has known about ELLA's abilities for a long while. That is why they sent her to the State house of representatives, they sent her to Washington, and that is why they now want her back to do a job that needs doing. I know that she will be a success as Governor. The record will allow no other estimation.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, one of the real pleasures of serving in the Congress has been the privilege of working with JOHN BLATNIK, a gentleman, an idealist, a visionary, and a statesman.

After 28 years of dedicated service, my friend, JOHN BLATNIK is retiring from the Congress and the void that he will leave cannot be filled.

As a member of the Public Works Committee, of which he is the chairman, I had the honor and the good fortune to learn and to observe a master at formulating policy, guiding progressive programs through the legislative process, and developing cures for the Nation's ills. JOHN has a degree of expertise, perhaps unsurpassed by any Member of Congress, in the Nation's highway program, which he helped formulate in 1956; in the clean water program, which he began; and in the economic development program, which he started.

But, in addition to his foresight and his progressive legislative measures, JOHN BLATNIK is a gentleman who conducts his committee business in a thoroughly open, fair method, in which each member is given an opportunity to contribute. Because of the great admiration and respect that he commands, JOHN's advice and wise counsel are sought by members of both parties. And his advocacy of a position is usually tantamount to success for that position.

As an example of his kindness and willingness to help junior Members, I will recall his generous consent to my offer to visit the area of California that I represent. JOHN took time out of his busy schedule and came to California to speak in San Pedro, an area with a large number of Americans of Yugoslav descent. Being of Slavic extraction, JOHN had an instant rapport with the people of my area and they thoroughly enjoyed the evening spent with JOHN BLATNIK.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—HOUSE

41939

Mr. Speaker, JOHN BLATNIK will be missed by all who knew him and all who knew of him. His lifetime of good works will stand as monuments to his years of dedicated service in this body.

Mrs. Anderson joins me in wishing JOHN and his wife Gisela the very best in their future years.

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, one of the most important House committees in these past years of rising environmental consciousness in America has been the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. We have thus been fortunate that the committee has had as one of its senior members our distinguished colleague from California, CRAIG HOSMER. His knowledge of the issues, his grasp of our environmental needs and his deep concern for establishing policies that gave full consideration to both short- and long-term national needs have distinguished his performance and that of the committee.

His conscientiousness and his thoughtfulness have brought him wide respect both in Congress and among those on all sides of the energy issue. He has made a sizable contribution in his 11 terms and will be remembered for it for a long time.

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to pay tribute to a good friend and colleague, JOHN DELLENBACK who unfortunately will not be returning for the opening gavel of the 94th Congress.

JOHN has ably served the people of the Fourth Congressional District in Oregon for the past 8 years. He came to Congress after a successful local career in politics and law highlighted by his years as a professor of business law and a highly respected 6-year career in the Oregon State Legislature where he was selected "Most Promising Freshmen Legislator."

The people who gave JOHN that award indeed were prophets for once JOHN was elected to Congress he demonstrated the same competence and excellence which earned him the award. Most of my dealings with JOHN have come from our serving together on the House Education and Labor Committee, and although we were on opposite sides of the aisle, I gained an enormous respect for JOHN and his knowledge of the education system. His opinions were highly valued by the committee and his absence will most certainly be felt.

As JOHN prepares to leave the Congress I hope he can look back on these past 8 years with pleasure. I have enjoyed my association with him and I extend to him and his wife Mary Jane success in all future endeavors.

Mr. QUIE. Mr. Speaker, as we conclude the business of this long and difficult 93d Congress, I would like to take just a moment to express a personal word of thanks and deep appreciation to one of my colleagues from Minnesota who is retiring this year, Congressman ANCHER NELSEN of the Second District.

ANCHER is surely one of the best liked Members of this body on both sides of the political aisle. His great friendliness and cooperative spirit have enabled him to engineer many a compromise on legislation where others had thought compromise impossible. His works on the Rural Electrification Administration financing program legislation over a year ago is one good example of his talents in this regard.

But certainly, as ranking Republican on the Health and Environment Subcommittee and as ranking Republican on the House District of Columbia Committee, ANCHER has made other particularly important contributions to our country. He authored or coauthored measures establishing the National Attack on Cancer, for example, and others to improve our health manpower and delivery systems. He played a role in the establishment of health maintenance organizations, and helped encourage the creation of emergency medical services around the country.

On the District Committee, his goal has always been to make our Nation's Capital a model city for the United States and for the people of the world. He authored bills that led to the creation of a locally elected school board for the residents of Washington, D.C., as well as to the position of District delegate in the House of Representatives. He has played an important part in extending full self-government to the people of Washington.

ANCHER led the move to create a Little Hoover Commission to study the District of Columbia and later was appointed to chair its studies and hearings that have paved the way for the adoption of many modernizations and governmental improvements in the District. It is a great credit to ANCHER that the Commission quickly and properly came to be known as the Nelsen Commission.

Of course, ANCHER's pride and joy in the legislative arena may well be the bill he authored that established the Washington Technical Institute, a vocational-technical school that is teaching useful skills to many disadvantaged young people living in the District of Columbia.

ANCHER's career in public service extends back about 40 years over a long and productive period in our history. The son of Danish immigrant parents, ANCHER began with local service on school and township boards and by helping to establish his local REA unit. For nearly a decade and a half, he served as State senator from McLeod County in our Minnesota Legislature. He was elected Lieutenant Governor of Minnesota in 1952, a position he later resigned to take President Eisenhower's appointment as administrator of the National Rural Electrification Administration. ANCHER served very capably for about 3 years in that job before returning to Minnesota to run as the Republican candidate for the Governorship of our State.

He has faithfully served his beloved Second District in Congress since 1959, and is this year completing his 16th straight year of congressional service.

I know that I speak for the other Members of our Minnesota delegation and for many others as well in wishing ANCHER, and his good wife, Elvern, much joy and happiness as they return to their farm home near Hutchinson. They will be missed by their many, many friends here.

December 20, 1974

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, the Iowa congressional delegation will be losing three of her finest representatives at the close of this session of Congress. I wish to take this time to pay tributes to these outstanding public servants.

For JOHN CULVER the occasion of his retirement from the House is anything but a sad occasion for on January 1 he will become the junior Senator from the State of Iowa. JOHN CULVER amassed an outstanding record of service to the people of the Second District in Iowa during the past 10 years. He was an active legislator serving with distinction on the Foreign Affairs, Select Committee on Committees, and Government Operations Committees of the House. I have had the pleasure of knowing JOHN during my 6 years in Congress and am confident that the people of Iowa have made a wise choice in selecting JOHN CULVER as their next Senator. I wish him only the best for the coming 6 years.

BILL SCHERLE has served with distinction as the Congressman from the Fifth Congressional District in Iowa. During his 8 years in the House he was noted for his aversion and resistance to excessive Federal spending. This commitment earned him the coveted Watchdog of the Treasury Award from the National Association Businessman.

I extend to BILL and his wife Jane my sincerest wishes for the best in the years to come. We in the House have benefited from BILL SCHERLE, and he will be missed by his colleagues.

WILEY MAYNE leaves the House after 8 years in service to the Sixth Congressional District in Iowa. During this time he too served as a member of the Judiciary Committee during this past summer impeachment inquiry. He gained the respect of his colleagues for his objectivity during the hearings. He like so many of my other colleagues came to Congress after a distinguished legal career in his home State. He served as the President of the Iowa State Bar Association, and has been the recipient of numerous awards and honors from legal associations, and once in the House he was chosen to serve as a congressional representative for several key international conferences on food and European migration. The State of Iowa has lost one of her finest public servants and the House one of our finest friends and colleagues. I extend to him my best wishes for success in any future endeavor.

Mr. KAZEN. Mr. Speaker, we who are his colleagues and his friends say farewell to CLARK FISHER today as he completes 32 distinguished years of service in this House. Some of the terms we use by habit have special meaning here—terms such as "my colleagues in the Texas delegation," "the gentleman from Texas," and certainly "The Honorable O. C. FISHER."

He was no stranger to public service when he came to the Congress. He had been county attorney, State representative, and district attorney. He served in the Texas House of Representatives long before I did but in my years in the State legislature, I learned that he had left his mark in Austin. I do not need to remind Members of his tremendous contribution here, both in the interests of his district adjoining the one I represent, but his diligence and competence on our Armed Services Committee. As third-ranking majority member and subcommittee chairman, the effort he invested in military matters produced rich returns for the Nation.

He has maintained his interests in ranching, but he has also had a high regard for the history of his kin and the land he loves. He carried on in the service tradition of John Nance Garner, whose home county he represented for many years until redistricting gave that welcome responsibility to me.

We say "farewell" to CLARK and Marian, his wife, because we hope that his retirement can be enjoyed with pride and satisfaction. To use a military phrase, I say, "Well done." But we do not say "Good-bye" because all of us who know him hope we can continue to benefit from his mind, his integrity and his spirit.

Mr. BIAGGI. I am pleased to have this opportunity to pay tribute to my distinguished colleague from Indiana, DAVID DENNIS who will be retiring from the House at the close of this session.

DAVID DENNIS has ably served the people of the 10th District in Indiana for the past 6 years. He will perhaps be best remembered for his service on the Judiciary Committee which considered and drew up the bill of impeachment against former President Richard Nixon. DENNIS distinguished himself in the eyes of the Nation for his incisiveness questioning of witnesses displaying a scholarly objectivity which gained him the respect of many Americans.

DAVID DENNIS before being elected to Congress had distinguished himself in the legal profession as a graduate of the renowned Harvard Law School and later as a prosecuting attorney in Wayne County, Ind. His legal expertise was often utilized by the Judiciary Committee in their many complex hearings of complicated legal issues.

As DAVID DENNIS prepares to return to private life, I wish to extend to him and his wife Tresa my best wishes for a happy and prosperous future.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct honor and privilege to have served in the House of Representatives with my friend, HAROLD D. DONOHUE of Massachusetts.

HAROLD D. DONOHUE is a fine gentleman in every sense of the word and during his tenure as a Member of Congress adopted a code, early in his service, of plain, direct expression and the courage to face every issue placed before him with assurance and confidence.

The House of Representatives, the Nation and the people of Massachusetts will surely miss HAROLD DONOHUE. He has established a record that will go down in history.

As a Member of Congress, he has never lost the common touch.

It has been a pleasure knowing and working with HAROLD DONOHUE and I want to wish for him and his family the best of everything.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker. I take this occasion to pay tribute to my colleague from Indiana, BILL HUDNUT, who has earned great affection, admiration, and respect of Members on both sides of the aisle.

As a freshman member, BILL HUDNUT achieved a solid reputation as one of the hardest working and most effective legislators in the House. When he first came here 2 years ago, Members of the Indiana delegation were proud that he was the first Member from our State in many years to be appointed to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. In that committee he has been particularly active in legislation covering transportation, health care, and energy. The National Association of Mental Health recently recognized him for his leadership on the Public Health and Environment Subcommittee. BILL HUDNUT's name appears on 15 bills which are now public law. He fulfilled his promise made in his first campaign to keep in close contact with his constituents by returning to his district almost every weekend, making himself accessible by holding neighborhood office hours, and by reporting his votes and activities through the usual means of newsletters, questionnaires, and press conferences. At the same time he has maintained an attendance record of over 90 percent. In other areas, BILL HUDNUT, who served for 10 years as the senior minister of the Second Presbyterian Church in Indianapolis, has worked hard to bring a high integrity to the House of Representatives and to restore public confidence in Government. Those of us who heard his talks at the prayer breakfast or his sermon at the White House worship service came away with a new and great inspiration.

BILL HUDNUT's presence will be missed greatly in the 94th Congress, but his strength and courage will be remembered by those of us who have benefited by his leadership and wisdom. My heartfelt personal regards go out to him and Mrs. Hudnut and I wish him great success in all his future endeavors.

BILL has accepted a position as assistant director of continuing education at Indiana Central College in Indianapolis.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret that I say goodbye to one of the most outstanding members of the House of Representatives, MARTHA W. GRIFFITHS.

She will be remembered by all who believe firmly in equality for all American citizens for her many years of hard work for passage of the equal rights amendment.

But MARTHA GRIFFITHS was certainly not a "one-issue" legislator. She drew one of the toughest assignments in the Congress, the Ways and Means Committee, where she has served with great distinction. She was in the forefront of the development of national health insurance legislation, and I was honored to join the many cosponsors of her National Health Security Act.

As chairman of the Fiscal Policy Subcommittee of the Joint Economic Committee, Mrs. GRIFFITHS has produced an extensive and well-documented study of our welfare system, culminating in specific recommendations for improving the way we deal with welfare problems. As a lasting tribute to MARTHA GRIFFITHS, we should make a commitment to consider effective welfare reform early in the 94th Congress.

December 20, 1974

Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in thanking MARTHA GRIFFITHS for her outstanding contributions to the Congress and the Nation, and in wishing her the very best in the future.

Mr. MAYNE. Mr. Speaker, it was my pleasure and privilege to serve on the House Agriculture Committee with my good friend and neighbor, Congressman JOHN ZWACH, "Mr. Parity," to all who knew him.

JOHN ZWACH's voice was loud and clear in seeking fair economic returns for the producers of our food.

"Our farmers are our least appreciated people," he liked to say. "They supply us with the highest quality and lowest priced food in the world."

JOHN ZWACH was an outstanding member of the Committee on Agriculture for 8 years, during which time he earned the highest respect from his colleagues for his honesty, integrity, fairness, and ability.

He has contributed immeasurably to the well-being of American agriculture and other national interests during his many years of public service.

But he did not devote his efforts exclusively to Agriculture. He was a valued and respected leader on the Committee on Veterans' Affairs where his special interests were veterans' education and pension benefits.

The fact that he was named a watch dog of the Treasury attests to his constant fight for economy in Government spending.

For 40 years JOHN ZWACH has been serving the people of his State as a valued and respected public servant. Now as he leaves for a well deserved retirement in Minnesota, I join my colleagues in wishing him and his wife, Agnes, all peace and comfort.

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, when the Congress reconvenes next month, our distinguished colleagues and friend, HENRY P. SMITH III, will not be with us. I believe I speak not only for my colleagues in western New York who have had the privilege of working closely with HENRY over the years but for most of us on both sides of the aisle, when I say we have been honored and well-served by his presence and the example of his integrity.

His distinguished service for his district and on the Judiciary Committee, his able leadership as the ranking minority member of the Criminal Justice Subcommittee, his contributions as an active member of the United States-Canadian Interparliamentary Group and his effective work as an environmentalist, which won him the coveted Great Lakes Commission Conservation Award, are enduring legacies.

During his four terms as the Representative of New York State's 36th Congressional District, his hard and skillful work have served the people of western New York and his country well.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—HOUSE

41941

Such outstanding performance was to be expected from this native of North Tonawanda, N.Y.

Schooled at Dartmouth and Cornell, where he won his law degree in 1936, Henry had acquired impressive credentials as a practicing attorney, as a mayor and a county judge before taking his seat in this Chamber at the beginning of the 89th Congress.

In 1964—when President Johnson carried every county in the State of New York—HENRY SMITH survived a seven-man primary to go on and win the general election, one of only 140 Republicans elected to the House of Representatives in the 89th Congress.

Thus, as a tough fighter, he began his second career, that as a U.S. legislator. As he came to this Congress, he leaves us, a man of high and noble ideals, of outstanding moral fiber and an uncommon devotion to the people of our country whom he served so unselfishly.

With his "retirement" from our midst, HENRY embarks on his third career. I wish him and his wonderful wife, Helen, his lovely daughters and his grandchildren the very best.

HENRY, we shall miss you in this Chamber. Personally, I am thankful for your warm friendship, indebted for your unfailing assistance and looking forward to your continuing counsel.

Mr. CASEY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it can only be with a certain amount of sadness that today we pay a farewell tribute to a man such as O. CLARK FISHER, who is not only an esteemed fellow Texan, but a dear personal friend.

CLARK FISHER, during 32 years of service in the Congress, has made more contributions to our Nation and to his native State than we have time to enumerate here today.

Probably no Member of the Congress has been a stronger voice for a strong national defense as the best means to preserve world peace. Besides his untiring work on the Armed Services Committee, CLARK FISHER has been the architect of many laws to conserve our water resources and to prevent flood disasters.

Outside his career in public service, CLARK has found the time to become an expert on Western lore, and especially that which pertains to Texas. He is the author of a number of books on the subject and is unparalleled in his ability as a spinner of Western yarns.

I would like to express before this body my personal gratitude for the help and guidance that CLARK FISHER has given me on many occasions over the last 16 years. His presence in Washington will be sorely missed, although I know his retirement has been earned many times over.

I join our colleagues today in wishing CLARK FISHER a rewarding and prosperous retirement in his beloved hill country of Texas.

Mr. QUIE. Mr. Speaker, all of us in the Minnesota delegation regret the retirement of JOHN ZWACH—Mr. Parity to all who know him—of our Sixth Congressional District.

It was a pleasure for me to have served with JOHN not only for 8 years in Congress, but in the Minnesota legislature where he served another 32 years.

There is no man in Minnesota history who can equal JOHN ZWACH's record of 40 years in political office without ever once suffering a defeat.

As he enters into a well-deserved retirement, he can look back on a job well done. He has always been the champion of those people who provide food so cheaply for our tables and for the hungry peoples of the world. He likes to point out that the producers are not the recipients of high food prices, but rather the victims whose income lags 25 percent behind that of the rest of our economy.

But JOHN ZWACH has not devoted his efforts solely to agriculture where he has such expertise. He has been an effective and highly respected member of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs where his main concerns have been veterans' education and pension reforms.

I will miss my good friend, JOHN ZWACH, as I am sure all of you will miss him, but you can be sure that where ever he is, his voice still will be raised on behalf of 100 percent parity for our food producers.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker, another of our colleagues from Indiana who will be retiring with this Congress is EARL LANDGREBE, Representative of the Second District in northwest Indiana. EARL is a relative newcomer to Congress, having been here only 6 years, but he is not now, nor ever has been, in my opinion, green. He understands very well the course this Nation is taking, and he has been articulate and dedicated in his efforts to change that course.

His work here in Congress has earned him the respect of his colleagues and his constituents. He has consistently voted his principles, not his party's line. He does not hunger nor thirst after power, as so many modern politicians seem to do, for his goal has been the dissipation of governmental power, and the enhancement of personal freedom. Nor is the obsequiousness characteristic of so many officials a part of EARL's character. If EARL disagrees with you, he will tell you so. He is frank, open, and honest. He does not try to please everybody, for he well knows that that is an impossible and unrewarding task. His adherence to principles has led him to cast many solitary negative votes on the floor of this House, votes against measures that EARL knew would probably pass by an overwhelming margin, votes that he could easily have avoided, but chose not to.

He voted that way simply because he sincerely believes in freedom. Everyone knows, I am sure, that EARL is a self-made man. Through his own hard work, his own intelligence and his own stamina, he has risen from poverty in the depression to the positions of being a prosperous businessman, an elected State Senator, and now a Member of the U.S. Congress. It was the opportunities afforded him to use his own talents that he wants to preserve for his children and ours. His energies in Congress have been directed solely toward the preservation of personal freedom and against the ominous growth of Government.

I have enjoyed working with EARL here in Congress, though we have often found ourselves on opposing sides of an issue. I will miss him—so will we all. No longer will the Indiana gadfly be around to sting us into action.

What we have lost here in Congress, the people of Indiana have gained. EARL may be retiring soon, but he is the type of man who never quits work. I am sure that the coming years will be active ones for EARL, even though he may not be here in Congress.

His voice is one that deserves to be heard and will be heard in Indiana in the coming years.

Mr. CONABLE. Mr. Speaker, the institution we all love, the House of Representatives, is going to be diminished by the untimely departure of another institution we love, LESLIE ARENDS, of Illinois. No matter how long he stayed here, LES' departure would be untimely. A much admired and respected part of the traditions of the House, this fine man has served us longer than any other contemporary Republican, but his friends are measured without regard to the location of the aisle, just as his vitality has been measured without regard to the length of his service. We wish him joy, we wish him prosperity, we wish him a happy retirement in the bosom of his family, friendships as good as his memories and as intense as that we all feel for him. LES, we salute you, and thank you for your many services to our country.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, these normally happy days of Christmas are marred somewhat by the necessity of saying goodbye to many old friends. Retirements from the House this year have bitten deeply into old acquaintances and long associations.

For the past several days, the Record has fairly bloomed with the going-away tributes to departing Members. When one is pushing on toward three decades of service in this Chamber, retirements are always occasions for nostalgia and fond recollection. The one we mark today has special significance for me.

So, now it is time to say an official bon voyage to the gentlelady from Oregon.

For 18 years we served together on the Committee on Education and Labor, and I believe our chairs were adjacent to each other most of the time.

I feel good about the fact that EDITH GREEN and I were allies during most of those years—I would say about 90 percent of the time. I have been proud to fight many a legislative battle, side by side with her.

But there comes a time when the best of friends must disagree—and the gentlelady and I have had our share of those moments, too. And as every Member of this House knows, when you must do battle with the gentlelady from Oregon, you know you have been in a fight. For a long time thereafter, you have to keep checking to see if you are structurally intact. You do not have any doubt that you are up against an opponent of towering stature and sweeping ability.

Fortunately, these occasions have not been frequent in my experience. And when the time comes to look back and remember her, I shall think of her as a friend and an ally.

Mr. Speaker, EDITH GREEN epitomizes for me the word "legislator." She has been a legislator in the truest sense since she arrived and took her oath on January 3, 1955.

She came here with a commitment to education. She brought her experience as a teacher and a mother, and a legislative representative. She was seeking improvement and change in the educational systems of the country. She believed, as I do, that the Federal Government had to assume its rightful share in financing the education of the young—the cost of which was strangling the States and local governments.

In those critical days of the late 1950's and early 1960's, the presence of EDITH GREEN in this House made a difference. And she must be given credit for major strides that have been taken in the subsequent decade.

She became chairman of the Higher Education Subcommittee at a time when our colleges were reeling and buckling under heavy enrollments and aging plant facilities. She recognized that without some Federal support our colleges and universities could not possibly accommodate the greatly increasing enrollments. And, she was determined that a whole generation of college students not be sacrificed while society tried to build up again from the ground up. It was a time, also, when there was limited congressional interest in addressing higher education problems, particularly the financial problems of students from low and middle income families, through Federal legislation.

In 1962, with great determination and legislative skill, Mrs. GREEN moved a higher education bill providing grants to colleges and universities for classrooms and aid for students almost to the point of enactment. But even though the final bill called for a "nonreimbursable loan," a term invented to save the philosophies of those who did not want any Federal student grants, it failed in the rush of the closing days of the session.

1963 brought a new Congress and a new day. Mrs. GREEN was not deterred by her 1962 defeat, nor by the feeling of so many—including the administration—that only a loan program for colleges was politically feasible. To the contrary, she was instrumental in having the Congress face up to its responsibility in higher education, and she was determined that grants, as well as loans, be authorized.

With yeoman service from EDITH GREEN, we passed the Higher Education Facilities Act of 1963, containing both a grant and loan program.

After that we could turn more of our attention to the students in those colleges and to the many, many young men and women who were unable to go to college because of financial reasons.

Some would have skirted the issue and some would have done nothing. But I remember EDITH GREEN's hardheaded and absolutely correct insistence that the issue be faced squarely. We simply could not rely on student loans alone if we were to realistically reach the objective of eliminating financial barriers to higher education.

In 1964 we approved the college work-study program and we finally approved—after so many years of trying—a student grant program in 1965. Thousands upon thousands of Americans who have benefited from these programs have EDITH GREEN to thank.

Members frequently ask me about the Green amendment. And I always have to respond—"Which Green amendment?"

The gentlelady from Oregon has had so many interests, and has been so extraordinarily creative in her approach to educational and social problems, that she has literally left her marks upon them. I venture to say that few indeed are the major pieces of social legislation during the past 20 years that have not been the subject of a Green amendment.

In the departure of Mrs. GREEN from our daily midst, we lose an unusually constructive Member and a gallant and able person. Mr. Speaker, may I become partisan for a moment, for we are losing also a great Democrat. We are a party of the people and there are few who I can think of who have been more in tune with what the people are thinking than Mrs. GREEN.

Mr. Speaker, before closing I wish to add a very personal note. As I have indicated, it was always much more comfortable to have Mrs. GREEN in your corner than to have her in the opposing one. When I recall my first 2 years as chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, there were a number of important legislative battles which we faced.

Those battles might very easily have been lost but for the great and untiring efforts of the gentlelady. This period was a particularly important time for me and I want to take this opportunity to say that I shall never forget the help that she gave me.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, my friend, WILLIAM B. WIDNALL of New Jersey is a fine gentleman in every sense of the word and will certainly be missed by the House of Representatives.

It has been a distinct honor for me to serve in the Congress with my distinguished colleague from New Jersey. He has exhibited the courage and wisdom required to make our country great. In every issue placed before him, he has shown assurance and confidence.

My friend, WILLIAM WIDNALL, has established a record that will long be remembered in the history of our Nation.

I have considered it a privilege to work with and to know WILLIAM WIDNALL and want to wish for him and for the members of his fine family, the very best of everything.

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, the departure of BERT PODELL signifies more than the loss of a colleague, it also represents the loss of a good and loyal friend. I am honored to take this time to pay tribute to the outstanding career of BERT PODELL in the House of Representatives.

Since coming to Congress in 1968 BERT has established himself as one of the finest service oriented Congressmen in the Nation. His constituents rewarded him by returning him to the Congress on three different occasions after he was elected in a special election in 1963.

BERT PODELL served with distinction on the powerful House Administration and Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee which in recent years has reported out numerous important bills dealing with energy and health, two of this Nation's most important priority concerns.

It has been a privilege for me to have worked with BERT PODELL. I found him to be a warm, oftentimes humorous man, who was steadfast in his loyalty to his friends. His departure is a personal loss to me and to the people of Brooklyn.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, few men in any walk of life have attained such honored distinction and attracted so large a share of public attention as my good friend, CHARLES E. CHAMBERLAIN of Michigan.

As a Member of Congress, he has never lost the common touch.

My friend, CHUCK CHAMBERLAIN has established an outstanding record and one that will go down in history.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan adopted a code early in his tenure of direct expression and had the intelligence and the courage to face every issue placed before him with assurance and confidence.

The Nation, the House of Representatives and the people of Michigan will surely miss CHUCK CHAMBERLAIN.

It has been my pleasure to know and to work with my distinguished colleague and I want to wish for him and for the members of his family, the very best of everything.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker, I take a few minutes of this body's time today to pay tribute to one of our colleagues who will soon be leaving us.

While I am sorry that we are losing five fellow Hoosiers from the Indiana delegation, all having lost their reelection bids, I think it is appropriate to ponder, for a moment, the loss of my friend, Mr. DENNIS. I have known DAVE for 6 years, and at all times during those years I have found him to be a man of the highest moral and ethical caliber, a high-minded man whose most important objective was not to be a charismatic or a hard-nosed politician, but to be a hard-working and conscientious representative of his people in Indiana's 10th District.

He has followed his philosophy consistently and without apology. He believes in our Republic and in its foundation document—the U.S. Constitution. And he is, among all of us in the House, undoubtedly one of the best students of that document. He believes that its protections are meant for all citizens—rich and poor. Before coming to Congress, he has given of himself as an attorney to represent the poor and the working people of his community. Here in the Congress he has insisted that the constitutional protections be preserved for all—from criminal suspects not yet tried, to a President whose culpability, Mr. DENNIS insisted, must not simply be alleged but must be proven.

I feel a personal loss, Mr. Speaker, because I have been very proud to serve with my friend, DAVE DENNIS. As a fellow Hoosier, and as a colleague in this historic Chamber, he has honored the best traditions of representative government by exercising fairness and reason, coupled with the self-restraint necessary if we are to survive as a self-governing people.

Back in Richmond, Ind., Mr. Speaker, I understand that Mr. DENNIS' fellow attorneys have mixed emotions about his return to the law practice there. They will have to be a little better prepared with their cases with him on the other side of the courtroom, for it will make no difference there—nor did it here—how big or little the stakes, DAVE DENNIS has been and always will be ready to slug it out for a principle in which he believes. Attorneys in Richmond, Ind., have known that for many years, and while they may dread the preparation required when going up against him, they have a deep and abiding respect and affection for a man they know to be honest, straightforward, and intelligent.

Mr. Speaker, I share this respect and affection for DAVE DENNIS and I regret, more than I can easily express, the fact that we are losing this gentleman from the U.S. Congress.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, JOHN ZWACH, Minnesota's indomitable voice of the countryside, today terminates a career in public service that spans more than four decades.

JOHN was honored by his peers in the Minnesota State Senate by election as majority leader. His long and distinguished career in the Minnesota Senate was preceded by service in local government, and crowned by 8 years here in the Congress.

JOHN ZWACH was a teacher and a legislator, but above all, he was a man of the soil. Few people could have been more suited to represent the rural Sixth District of Minnesota. He knew agriculture. He knew rural America. He never ceased to speak and effectively to promote, preserve and enhance the countryside.

During his time in Congress, JOHN worked tirelessly on agricultural legislation. Farm bills passed while he was here always carried his imprint. But his major achievement was in convincing his urban and suburban colleagues of the needs, values, and strengths of rural America.

I will miss JOHN, as will the Congress and his constituents. I met him first in the Minnesota Legislature, where no man was more helpful or fatherly to me than JOHN.

He and his lovely wife Agnes will retire to their home in Lucan, Minn., a short distance from the family farm in Walnut Grove. They have earned their rest. I wish them a long and happy retirement.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, JULIA BUTLER HANSEN, the Congresswoman from the western State of Washington, has served with distinction since 1960.

It has been a singular honor to serve with JULIA HANSEN. Her charm is matched only by her intellect and she has inspired those who have had the privilege of working with her to greater efforts, to correct the problems that have troubled the people of our Nation.

The esteem I hold for my friend, JULIA BUTLER, will not diminish and I wish for her and for her family every good thing in life.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to GEORGE A. GOODLING of Pennsylvania, a distinguished American, who has chosen to retire from the Congress after a lifetime of service to his country. GEORGE GOODLING is more than a distinguished Congressman; GEORGE GOODLING is a symbol of the basic values upon which our Republic was founded and sustained. Integrity, responsibility, loyalty, decency, character, honor, duty, patriotism, wisdom, faith, dedication, and freedom. These are the values which GEORGE GOODLING symbolizes, indeed epitomizes.

We would not enjoy that blessing called America but for the GEORGE GOODLINGS who have labored to make the dream a reality.

In this "peoples House" today, I express not only my gratitude, but the gratitude of my children and American children yet unborn, for the contributions GEORGE GOODLING has made in their behalf.

Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not inform this House that GEORGE GOODLING possesses one serious character flaw. When I came to Congress a few years ago, I was pleased to discover the paddle-ball courts in the House gymnasium. Being accustomed to the "more difficult" game of handball, I rather condescendingly agreed to a paddle-ball match with GEORGE GOODLING, silently resolving to go slow on a man old enough to be my father. Midway through the match, I gashed his ear with my paddle; the match was delayed until the bleeding was stopped and the blood was mopped from the floor. At GEORGE GOODLING's insistence, over the objections of the attendant who felt stitches were immediately required, the game was resumed and I was promptly and decisively defeated.

Mr. Speaker, I consider it a great character flaw in any man who would, in cold premeditation, inflict such a humiliating defeat upon an unknowing freshman.

I am further saddened to report that my experience was not an aberration. I have since learned that there are several Members of Congress who can attest to this flaw in the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, for he has humiliated many Members on the paddle-ball court. Together, we hope that the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania will have many happy retirement years and in the process will soften, so when he visits his former colleagues we may be able to successfully seek our revenge.

GEORGE GOODLING, Godspeed.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that in the rush to return home for Christmas, Members on both sides of the aisle will not lose sight of the fact that a number of distinguished congressional careers will be concluded upon adjournment of this session.

One such career which I would like to bring to the attention of the House today is that of New Jersey's great Congressman, PETER H. B. FRELINGHUYSEN, a man who has given this institution and our Nation more than two decades of dedicated service.

PETER FRELINGHUYSEN is a member of one of the Nation's most distinguished families, one which has a history of outstanding military and governmental service that began with the founding of the Original Thirteen Colonies. Frelinghuysens have served in the Continental Congress, in the minutemen militia, as decorated generals in the Revolutionary War, and in the Cabinet. Four members of the family have served in the U.S. Senate, and one, Theodore, was Henry Clay's Vice-Presidential running mate on the Whig ticket in the Presidential election of 1844.

Since he was first sworn in as a Member of this body by Speaker Joe Martin in January 1953, PETER FRELINGHUYSEN has lived up to the noble tradition of governmental service which his family has come to symbolize.

For many years he served as the ranking Republican on the House Education and Labor Committee and is the man responsible for bringing minority staffing to that important committee.

PETER FRELINGHUYSEN has also made his mark in the arena of international affairs. Members of the House are familiar with the expertise and dedication he has brought to the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, on which he now serves as the ranking minority member. His profound insight into the intricacies of international politics and his broad knowledge of both the potential and the limitations of American foreign policy will be sorely missed by Members of Congress, regardless of political affiliation.

Congressman FRELINGHUYSEN's diplomatic skills, however, have extended far beyond the foreign policy decisionmaking of the House. During his tenure as a member of the American delegation to the United Nations, he singlehandedly persuaded that body to provide badly needed assistance to refugees from Palestine. And, as anyone who has traveled to foreign capitals will know, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN commands the highest respect from heads of state all across the globe.

Secretary of State Henry Kissinger has expressed his own high regard for Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN's brand of diplomacy, most recently following the Congressman's trip to the Middle East earlier this year. During this trip, he managed to do what few others have accomplished: win the confidence of both the Arabs and the Israelis. Many nations of the world have had a good friend in PETER FRELINGHUYSEN.

There are, of course, many other accomplishments that have marked this career of 22 years in the House. I shall always recall his remarkable ability for bringing about political compromise on controversial issues facing several Republican national conventions, at which he has chaired important subcommittees of the Committee on Resolutions. New Jersey, the most urban State in the Union, will be eternally grateful to him for personally insuring the preservation of the Great Swamp, which is one of the last and largest spans of totally undisturbed terrains in the Nation.

However, the most important work performed by Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN may well prove to be his efforts to bring about reform of the House of Representatives. His last year in this body largely was devoted to working tirelessly and diligently as a member of the Select Committee on Committees. Many of the internal reforms which have already been adopted and those which this body will hopefully have the courage to institute in the future bear the mark of PETER FRELINGHUYSEN.

Although he is still a relatively young man, PETER FRELINGHUYSEN's decision to retire after 22 years of service in the House is wholly consistent with his desire to revitalize the U.S. Congress.

One would hope that the "new blood" which Congress will receive next year will have as much courage of conviction and spirit of true reform as Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN.

PETER FRELINGHUYSEN is a good friend and a valued colleague. I am confident that neither the Nation nor New Jersey will lose his ability in the future. One large segment of his career may now be at an end. But the avenues for continued participation—in his party, in government, and in foreign affairs—will remain open to him for many years to come. We all should be hopeful that this dedicated and capable public servant maintain the spirit of service and participation that has been the hallmark of his family.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, my friend, WILLIAM R. ROY of Kansas, is a fine gentleman in every sense of the word. As a Member of Congress, he adopted a code, early in his tenure, of simple unpretentious demeanor, plain direct expression and the courage to face every issue placed before him with confidence. He has shown generous understanding and sympathetic consideration.

The Congress of the United States, the Nation and the people of Kansas will miss BILL ROY. He has established a record that will go down in history.

As a member of Congress, he has never lost the common touch. Few men have attained such honored distinction and attracted so large a share of public attention.

It has been my privilege to work with BILL ROY and I want to wish for him and for the members of his family, the best of everything in the future.

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that O. C. FISHER of Texas has decided to retire after 32 years of dedicated service to the American people.

A man of strong conviction, high principles and intense loyalty, CLARK FISHER has left an indelible mark on the annals of legislative history. No man has been a more responsible voice for national preparedness than CLARK FISHER. His strong advocacy of a well equipped military force has been his hallmark.

As chairman of Subcommittee No. 2 which has been responsible for military personnel policy, CLARK FISHER has made it his business to see that our military have the necessary wherewithal to do their job and do it well. The men and women in the uniformed services owe CLARK FISHER a debt of gratitude for his efforts.

CLARK FISHER has fought doggedly against rapid demobilization. His efforts to maintain adequate manpower levels has been one of the valiant struggles in recent legislative times. CLARK FISHER has earned his spurs, but I am sorry to see him leave. I have no doubt, however, that CLARK FISHER will not go out to pasture. He will remain a vital force in our national defense efforts.

Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Speaker, when I came to the U.S. House of Representatives 12 years ago one of the first Members I met was JOHN DAVIS of Georgia. I immediately liked him and that friendship has been magnified with the passing years.

He was serving on the Science and Astronautics Committee, and when I was named to that committee, our association grew, particularly when he chaired my subcommittee. I can attest to the fact that there are few members who have served who are as knowledgeable about the impact and importance of our space program as is this great and good Georgian.

A native of Rome, Ga., he was unable to attend college and so enrolled in the University of Georgia from which he received an LL.B. degree. He served in the U.S. Army in the Counter Intelligence Corps in World War II and after the war returned to practice law.

He served as solicitor general of the Rome Circuit from 1950 to 1953 and was judge to the Lookout Mountain Judicial Circuit for 6 years.

First elected to Congress in 1960, he has made his mark in the legislative process, but even more important he has made his mark in the hearts of those with whom he has served. No man who ever had the privilege of serving here leaves with more real friends and he is going to be missed, particularly by me.

He and his lovely wife deserve all the time and happiness they will receive with their family and I know that wherever the Davises go, the world is just a little brighter in that corner.

Any man who can look back on even 1 year of service in this body and know that he made a contribution to the future of this Nation and to his fellow man can feel justifiable pride. Any person who can walk away knowing that he leaves real friends and not just acquaintances has reason to feel proud.

JOHN DAVIS served more than just 1 year, but all the rest describes him perfectly.

Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity, on the last day of the 93d Congress, to pay tribute to the distinguished Congressman from the Sixth District of Oklahoma, the Honorable HAPPY CAMP.

I have been privileged to serve with HAPPY CAMP on the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, and I have appreciated his careful, reasoned approach to the difficult legislation before that committee.

HAPPY CAMP is responsible for the Foss Reservoir in western Oklahoma, for many bills benefiting the Indian tribes of western Oklahoma, and for substantive legislation coming out of both the Interior Committee and the Science and Astronautics Committee to accelerate research and development of our domestic energy resources.

During the 91st, 92d, and 93d Congresses, HAPPY CAMP has served his constituents well. His fiscal responsibility and his watchdog efforts over the Federal budget have consistently earned HAPPY CAMP an "Outstanding Member of Congress" award from the Independent Federation of Businessmen. Always striving to lessen the citizens' tax burdens and to increase Government responsiveness, HAPPY CAMP served the sprawling sixth district energetically and effectively.

HAPPY CAMP brought a strong spirit of bipartisanship to the working of the Oklahoma delegation. Through his continued cooperation, the Oklahoma delegation could work as a united team for the benefit of all the people of Oklahoma.

HAPPY CAMP, fiscal conservative and dedicated public servant, will leave the Congress of the United States knowing that he has in fact made many positive contributions to this great Republic. All of Oklahoma wishes HAPPY CAMP well, and expresses appreciation for his tireless efforts.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives, the Nation and the people of Louisiana will sorely miss my good friend, JOHN R. RARICK.

As a Member of Congress, he has never lost the common touch.

JOHN RARICK is a fine man in every sense of the word and has shown understanding, consideration, courage, and intelligence in the face of every issue placed before him.

Few men have attained such honored distinction and attracted so great a share of public attention as JOHN RARICK.

It has been my distinct honor and privilege to know and to work with JOHN RARICK and I want to wish for him and for the members of his family, the very best of everything.

Mr. JONES of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the Congress of the United States has been deeply privileged to have had the services of CLEM McSPADDEN, a very special Representative.

CLEM McSPADDEN represents the Second District of Oklahoma, including my boyhood hometown, Muskogee. Having served 18 years in the Oklahoma State Senate, including services on the appropriations committee and as president pro tempore, CLEM brought a strong legislative background to Washington. These years of public service enabled CLEM to assume his assignment as the only freshman appointed to the Rules Committee with ease and expertise. His service on the Rules Committee has been exemplary, indicating a balanced approach to complex issues.

Having come to Congress as a rancher and farmer, CLEM McSPADDEN remembered his heritage. He founded the Rural Caucus, and worked diligently and effectively for rural development. The interests of rural Oklahoma and rural America have seldom seen such commitment and dedication.

Never forgetting the small farmer or the small businessman, CLEM McSPADDEN worked to ease their burdens, to improve their economic opportunities, and bring due recognition for their role in the American way of life.

As a strong champion of fiscal responsibility and restoring the Federal Government to its proper role, CLEM brought to congressional deliberations a responsible conservative approach that always looked out for the individual and his family.

I am proud to have served with CLEM McSPADDEN, and his goodhearted efforts have contributed to a close-knit, hard-working Oklahoma delegation. The residents of the Second District have been well-served by this man of the people.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, the Congress loss is Connecticut's gain, when ELLA GRASSO leaves this body to become Governor of her home State at the end of this month.

In the Congress, Mrs. GRASSO made her most significant contributions in the field of education, and with her leadership in programs designed to help the mentally ill, retarded, and blind. In addition to her service on the Education and Labor Committee, ELLA was an active member of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, helping to draft measures to aid disabled veterans and to increase job and educational opportunities for those who served this Nation in the armed services.

ELLA GRASSO's eloquent and articulate speeches on behalf of programs were always recognized for their logic and their expertise on the subject matter.

It has been a great privilege working with her in the Congress and the entire House of Representatives will surely miss her.

Mrs. Anderson joins me in wishing her the very best in her future position as Governor of Connecticut.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, it has been my good fortune to serve in the House of Representatives with my friend from the State of New York, HOWARD W. ROBISON.

This distinguished member of the Committee on Appropriations has exhibited down through the years the understanding, consideration, courage and intelligence required to be an outstanding Member of the House of Representatives. He has established a record that will surely be recorded in the history of our great Nation. He has faced each issue placed before him with confidence and assurance.

The House of Representatives, the Nation and the people of New York will surely miss HOWARD ROBISON.

Mr. Speaker, in paying tribute to HOWARD ROBISON, I want to wish for him and for the members of his fine family, the very best of everything in the future.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join in paying tribute to my friend and colleague from upstate New York, who is retiring at the end of this year, Representative THADDEUS J. DULSKI.

Ted and I came to Congress together from upstate New York back in January 1959. Since that time, he has won the affection and respect of every Member of this body with his steadfast devotion to duty; and he achieved the distinction of being the first Member of the 86th Congress group to become the chairman of a Standing Committee of the House.

As chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Civil Service TED DULSKI presided over the transition of the Postal Service from a Government Department to a semi-public corporation. In all frankness TED DULSKI foresaw, as many other House Members at the time were unable to see, that the new status of the Postal Service could lead, as indeed it has led, to many new problems. For that reason he proposed a more modest change than what had been recommended by the administration.

Unfortunately Congress did not heed Mr. DULSKI's warning. Today, as we continue to be inundated by complaints from our constituents about the inadequacy of the present postal service, many Members must wish we had heeded TED DULSKI's warning at that time.

Mr. Speaker, TED DULSKI, once a Federal Civil Service employee himself before he came to Congress, has been the strongest and wisest friend that the Federal Civil Service employees have ever had. He will be greatly missed in this Chamber, but we are all proud of the fine accomplishments which have been his, and we wish him and Mrs. Dulski a happy and productive retirement in the years ahead.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania, the Honorable JOHN H. WARE.

The public record is clear that JOHN WARE served his State and Nation with distinction. JOHN WARE accumulated an impressive record during three terms in the Pennsylvania State Senate before being sent to the U.S. Congress by his constituents. In this House he has been a persuasive voice for fiscal responsibility and individual freedom. His tireless efforts on the Interstate and Foreign Commerce and House Administration Committees have ensured to the benefit of all Americans. His quiet humor and quick intellect have been a source of satisfaction and strength to all of us.

Perhaps less well known are the personal efforts of JOHN WARE, far beyond any definition of his duties, to work tirelessly to ameliorate the energy crisis. In my own congressional district, we were threatened with massive layoffs due to the natural gas shortage and we turned to JOHN WARE in desperation. He gave us much more than a sympathetic ear.

JOHN WARE went to work. Using his experience and the resources of his own firm, he scoured the world in search of energy supplies. He worked with our local firms to help them in seeking relief. He succeeded in easing the crunch, and today, hundreds of men and women in my district are working and looking forward to a brighter Christmas because of JOHN WARE. His commitment to continued energy efforts is a source of comfort to us all.

My distinguished colleague is one of those uncommon men, who applies his energy, talent and resources to the public interest. His life stands as a hallmark in the highest traditions of public service by private men. His ranging capacity in public and private affairs, dedicated always to the public good, makes him kindred to that earlier Pennsylvanian—Benjamin Franklin. My wish for my colleague is that he may continue to enjoy his Franklin-like wit and intellect; coupled with his Franklin-like capacity for public service, for a lifetime as long for even longer than that enjoyed by Ben Franklin.

December 20, 1974

Although Congress will be made poorer by the retirement of JOHN WARE, his return to Pennsylvania shall enrich that Keystone State for many years to come.

JOHN WARE—you are a great American and I salute you.

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to pay tribute to CRAIG HOSMER of California, with whom I have had the privilege of serving on the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy for 16 years.

During this time CRAIG HOSMER has demonstrated a capacity for hard work, diligence and leadership in shaping nuclear power policy. He has been instrumental in making certain that our atomic power program has been maintained at a level consistent with our national purpose. As chairman of the committee, I have counted upon CRAIG HOSMER as the ranking minority member to help guide important legislation through the Congress. He has not failed in his responsibilities.

As a member of the Joint Committee, CRAIG HOSMER has served on the Subcommittee on Communities, the Subcommittee on Raw Materials, the Subcommittee on Legislation, the Subcommittee on Energy and the Special Subcommittee on Radiation. In addition, CRAIG HOSMER has served on the Subcommittee on Research, Development and Radiation. In that capacity it has been my privilege to work with him closely as chairman of the subcommittee.

CRAIG HOSMER also serves as ranking member of the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee. His grasp of the interrelated problems of energy and environmental protection is equaled by few men in the Congress. CRAIG HOSMER has been a forceful and well-informed advocate of balanced growth.

This Congress will be the less for CRAIG HOSMER's departure. His efforts to build a better America should not go unappreciated. He has fought valiantly for what he believes. CRAIG HOSMER always lets you know where he stands. He is a man of his word. The term "honorable" is a most appropriate appellation for CRAIG HOSMER.

Mrs. Price joins me in extending best wishes and happiness to CRAIG and his lovely wife, Marion. We hope we will have the pleasure of keeping in close contact with them.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, it has been a privilege and a distinct honor to serve in the Congress and on the Committee on Appropriations with my good friend, WILLIAM J. SCHERLE of Iowa.

As a Member of Congress, he has never lost the common touch.

Few men in any walk of life have attracted so large a share of public attention and attained such honored distinction.

The House of Representatives and the Nation will miss WILLIAM SCHERLE. He has established a record that will go down in history.

My friend, WILLIAM SCHERLE, is a fine gentleman in every sense of the word. As a Member of Congress, he has shown generous understanding and sympathetic consideration.

It has been my privilege to know and to work with WILLIAM SCHERLE and I want to wish for him and for the members of his family the best of everything in the future.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to pay tribute to JULIA BUTLER HANSEN who, after 14 years service, is leaving the House of Representatives.

As the chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Interior, Mrs. HANSEN has been a strong and effective advocate of the conservation and preservation of our environment. Her articulate statements on behalf of a cause were well-respected due to her logical, consistent, and persuasive presentation of the facts.

In addition to her able leadership of the Interior Subcommittee, Mrs. HANSEN has been selected by her colleagues to recommend actions which would reform and reorganize the House of Representatives in order to become a more effective and efficient body. She was honored with this position because of her intelligence, her fairness, and her great experience as a legislator. The products of the Hansen Committee on Reform have always led to a more representative and competent House of Representatives.

Mr. Speaker, JULIA BUTLER HANSEN has been a great asset to this Nation and to her State. Her dedicated service on behalf of the people cannot be replaced and should not be forgotten.

I join with my colleagues in the House and with a grateful Nation in wishing her the very best in the years ahead and in thanking her for her many contributions to our society.

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, today marks the close of a distinguished congressional career—that of one of the hardest working and most able Members of this body.

During the past 8 years I have had the privilege of representing the district adjoining that of the Honorable GLENN R. DAVIS. He has set an exemplary pace, he has helped me a great deal, and I miss him already.

The voters of Wisconsin's Second District elected GLENN to Congress in 1947, when I was 9 years old. In the intervening years, whether as a Member of Congress or as private citizen, GLENN has served his country, his constituents, and his party in as selfless a fashion as I have ever seen in public life.

He leaves a proud work record, with years of service on the Appropriations Committee. That this Nation has been unable to live within its budget will never have been the fault of this most conscientious and energetic Member.

Mr. Speaker, I salute an indefatigable legislator, a man who for 20 years in this body set for himself and rigorously maintained to the end the highest of personal standards, a good friend and counselor, and one who has earned the respect of colleagues on both sides of the aisle. Like many others in this Chamber and in my State of Wisconsin, I feel deeply grateful for his example and service.

Farewell, friend GLENN. We will miss you.

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Speaker, those of us who have been drawn together by a common interest in the well being of the average citizens of this great Nation find it most distressing when one of our number decides to leave our ranks and transfer his enormous talents to other fields of activity.

We know KEN GRAY as an intensely practical man, schooled in the affairs of everyday life. He knows how things work, and he unfailingly finds the key point in any proposed action. We can count on his complete integrity and his fine judgment. In these days of indecision we need his counsel and his experience. It is with the greatest reluctance that we see him leaving this body in the years when he has still much to contribute to effective legislation.

He has been my cherished friend through many years, and I have learned to appreciate his fine qualities. I have been associated with him in a number of projects, and I want all our friends to know how much I have appreciated his advice and his timely assistance. May all good things come to him in his return to private life, and to his most charming and attractive wife. Life is ennobled by even a casual contact with such fine people.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I will miss my good friend, JOHN A. BLATNIK from the great State of Minnesota.

As a distinguished Member of the House of Representatives, he has established a record that will surely go down in the history of this country.

In every issue placed before him, my outstanding colleague has exhibited courage, intelligence, confidence, and generous understanding. He has never lost the common touch.

It has been a great privilege and an honor for me to work with and to know JOHN BLATNIK. I wish for him and for those he loves, the very best of everything in the future.

Mr. CONABLE. Mr. Speaker, HOWARD ROBISON of New York, casting his last votes in the House today, is one of the finest human beings I have ever known. I do not know what more I can say except that he will be missed by his friends, and the people of this country will be diminished because his judgment will no longer be influencing our votes here in the House. We wish him nothing but the best, because he is the best.

Mr. GAIAMO. Mr. Speaker, since KEN GRAY first came to Congress in 1955 he has dedicated himself to his constituents and his country.

There are few, indeed, who are so intimately involved with the needs of his constituents. He has always walked the extra mile to serve the people of the 24th District of Illinois.

December 20, 1974

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—HOUSE

41947

As fifth ranking Democrat on the Public Works Committee, as chairman of its Public Buildings and Grounds Subcommittee, and as a member of its Water Resources, Transportation, and Investigations and Review Subcommittees, KEN GRAY has been a prime mover in developing southern Illinois and obtaining funds for highways, rivers and harbors, flood control, and health facilities in his district.

It is KEN GRAY who has given the people of Washington, D.C., and the country as a whole a National Visitor Center at Union Station to be completed in time for the Bicentennial celebration in 1976. This monumental project not only will give tourists a much-needed reception and orientation center, but also give the people of Washington, D.C., a new rail passenger facility to meet the demands of future train operations.

He has cheerfully and generously given his auctioneering skills at charitable functions in the Capital, and his legislative skills to benefit the people of Illinois and the Nation. It is a pleasure to join my colleagues in tribute to him as he retires from 20 years of distinguished service in the House of Representatives.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, for more than 30 years the people of southwest Texas have been represented in this body by a distinguished gentleman, O. CLARK FISHER.

He has been an eloquent and effective spokesman for them, and it has been a privilege and a pleasure to serve with him.

Since first being elected to the House during World War II, he has been steadfast in his efforts to maintain and improve our national defense. His work on the Armed Services Committee has contributed greatly to our military preparedness.

I can certainly understand why, after more than 40 years of public service, beginning as Tom Green County attorney, he has decided to take a little time for his family and himself. He has earned it.

It is with sincere personal affection and professional respect that I join in honoring CLARK FISHER today. I deeply value his friendship and his wise counsel. His presence in the Congress and in the Texas delegation will be greatly missed.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives and the Nation will miss KENNETH J. GRAY. He has established a record that will go down in history.

It has been a distinct honor and privilege to serve in the Congress with my friend KENNETH J. GRAY. He is a fine gentleman in every sense of the word and during his tenure as a Member of Congress tenaciously adopted a code early in his tenure of simple, unpretentious demeanor, plain direct expression, and the courage and intelligence to face every issue placed before him with assurance and confidence. As a Member of Congress, he has shown generous understanding and sympathetic consideration.

As a Member of Congress, he has never lost the common touch.

CXX—2644—Part 31

It has been a privilege for me to know and to work with KEN GRAY and I want to wish for him and for the members of his family the best of everything in the future.

Mr. YOUNG of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with my colleagues in paying tribute to Congressman HAROLD COLLIER. I have personally been acquainted with HAROLD since 1952 and, during this 22-year period, I have always received courteous, thoughtful, and genuinely helpful treatment. Congressman COLLIER is one of the friendliest and ablest Congressmen I know.

Congressman COLLIER has served on the Ways and Means Committee, which requires a great deal of dedication and time-consuming attention to detail.

In recognition of Congressman COLLIER's outstanding legislative ability and his great personal attributes, he has consistently won reelection with increasing majorities.

The House of Representatives will, indeed, miss the services of HAROLD COLLIER. I wish HAROLD a continued long and happy career.

Mr. MCCLORY. Mr. Speaker I join in paying tribute to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. DONOHUE) who is voluntarily retiring at the end of this Congress.

Mr. Speaker, our colleague Mr. DONOHUE has been a most valuable member of the Judiciary Committee and of this House. His contributions to this Nation have been manifold. His qualities of statesmanship, his credentials as a lawyer, and his personal attributes all add to a man of stature and a distinguished Member of the Congress.

These brief remarks are wholly inadequate to describe Congressman HAROLD DONOHUE. Nevertheless, they come from the heart—as we debate H.R. 6668—a measure managed in this Chamber today by this gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. DONOHUE).

I wish our colleague well in his future endeavors and in his personal enjoyment of an active life and good health.

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should be pleased that there will not be two PRICES in the 94th Congress, at least from the standpoint of less confusion over telephone calls and correspondence. But I regret that BOB PRICE of Texas will not be with us next year.

BOB PRICE has been in the Congress for 8 years. During this time he has been an active Member who has pursued his legislative goals and representational obligations in diligent fashion. It has been my pleasure to serve with BOB PRICE on the House Armed Services Subcommittee No. 1. He has been an avid student and quick learner. His grasp of issues involving research and development problems has been impressive. He has contributed a great deal to the subcommittee.

BOB PRICE also serves on the House Agriculture Committee. While I am not as familiar with his work on that committee, I am certain he has worked as hard on agricultural policy as he has on defense policy.

I wish BOB PRICE well in his future endeavors. I am certain we have not heard the last of him. The best wishes of myself and Mrs. Price go with BOB and his lovely wife.

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, Wisconsinites are proud to be from a State which has produced some of the finest, most respected men and women to enter the field of politics since our Nation was founded. The accomplishments of the LaFollettes and of the impact of that family in the realm of national politics are well known.

As a youth, I was also very much aware of the role that a young lawyer from Richland Center was playing in the shaping of legislation in the Wisconsin State Assembly. The career of our distinguished colleague, VERN THOMSON, is one of the fullest, most notable in the history of the State of Wisconsin. An accomplished and inspiring orator, VERN THOMSON was elected speaker of the assembly for the first time in 1939. In 1950, he was elected Wisconsin's attorney general, and he was reelected twice before his election as Governor in 1956. VERN was elected to Congress in 1960, and for the past 14 years, he has served with distinction as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Wisconsin politics without VERN THOMSON will not seem the same. The deep sense of loss I feel is shared by many. Few individuals have left as much of a mark as VERN THOMSON has. He has contributed so much in all that he has done. I know he will continue to do so.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, the House will lose a distinguished Member when we adjourn this 93d Congress. GLENN R. DAVIS, my respected friend from across the aisle, will return to his home State of Wisconsin and with him will go the good wishes of all of us who have had the privilege of serving with him.

As members of the Committee on Appropriations, GLENN and I have on many occasions worked together when the welfare of the people required our mutual efforts. I have seen at close range his great ability. I have seen first hand his dedication to principle.

GLENN DAVIS has never been one to shirk responsibility, rather, he sought it, accepted it, and acted according to his conscience. No matter what field he now will enter I have no doubt that my friend from Wisconsin will comport himself as he has during his tenure in our midst—as a man of honor and as a gentleman.

Mr. STUBBLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join my many colleagues in paying tribute to JOHN DAVIS as he prepares to return to his native Georgia after having contributed so greatly to the welfare of his country as a Member of this body.

I feel fortunate to have served with JOHN DAVIS and to be able to number him among the many good friends I have made during my own tenure of service—which is also ending with this Congress. We are all aware of the dedicated efforts of this man on behalf of the people of his district, State, and Nation. As he returns to Georgia, I am confident that he will continue to be alert to the needs of his people and will find many avenues of service to our country.

December 20, 1974

My best wishes for his success and happiness in all his future endeavors.

Mr. BURLISON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, our friend and colleague, O. C. FISHER, comes as near as anyone in this body of exemplifying a statesman. His courage, his industry, his dedication, have been examples for all of us and his services in the Congress have contributed greatly to our Nation, our State of Texas, and the people he represents.

CLARK FISHER has never practiced pretense, any unfairness, nor has he been one to take advantage of any given situation. I continue to believe that one of the greatest virtues of any man is that his word is as good as his bond, and this describes this man who leaves a void in this House of Representatives as he retires after 32 years of dedicated service.

I join with all of you in wishing for him health and happiness as he goes into a quieter life and one which he richly deserves.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, my distinguished colleague, CHARLES W. SANDMAN, JR., of New Jersey, will be missed by the House of Representatives and the Nation. He has established a record that will go down in the history of this country.

Few men in any walk of life have attained such honored distinction and have attracted so large a share of public attention.

CHARLES SANDMAN has, through his service, shown great devotion to the House of Representatives and to his country. He has never lost the common touch.

It has been a distinct honor and a privilege to serve in the Congress of the United States with Congressman SANDMAN and I want to wish for him and for the members of his family, the best of everything in the future.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, today the dean of Minnesota's congressional delegation, JOHN BLATNIK, terminates his long and distinguished career of public service. The people of Minnesota will miss the excellence of his representation.

JOHN BLATNIK chaired the important Public Works Committee through some of its landmark legislation. He was a strong advocate of the Interstate Highway System from its inception, and perhaps no man has had more effect on the successful development of that system. Under his chairmanship, the Clean Water Act was also passed.

As dean of our delegation, JOHN was regularly asked for help and for counsel which was unflinching and helpfully provided.

JOHN BLATNIK, like most Minnesota Congressmen, served with distinction on his State legislature. In addition, for years he served as his party's national committeeman.

JOHN and his lovely wife Gisela will remain in Washington, but as usual, they will be frequent visitors to their friends in the 8th District of Minnesota. An Iron Range boy never leaves home permanently.

I wish JOHN and Gee a long and happy retirement. It has been well earned by solid, successful service.

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am especially saddened by the fact that the gentleman from Indiana, the Honorable WILLIAM BRAY will not be returning to the 94th Congress.

BILL BRAY is a man who is not afraid to show his love for this great country. To him patriotism is not an obsolete or unfashionable word or feeling. The ranking member of the House Armed Services Committee, BILL BRAY has been a stalwart defender of our national security. As a battalion tank commander in World War II and possessor of the Silver Star, BILL BRAY knows first hand the horrors of war. This experience has guided him in his efforts to make certain that America is always strong enough to thwart the threat of war and if need be to defend herself in the face of war.

BILL BRAY is one of the experts in the House on the Reserve Forces. At a time when all of us are concerned about increasing costs, it is apparent that our Reserve Forces must play a larger role in meeting our manpower requirements. BILL BRAY's leadership on how best to achieve this objective is going to be missed.

As ranking member of the House Armed Services Committee, BILL BRAY has distinguished himself as a legislator who knows how to get things done. The committee will not be the same without BILL BRAY.

I hope that we will be able to continue to count upon him for advice and counsel.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, one of Minnesota's most distinguished and beloved citizens, ANCHER NELSEN terminates a long and successful career of public service today. ANCHER's service to the people of Minnesota spans four decades.

Besides service in local government, ANCHER served in the Minnesota State Senate, presided over that senate as the State Lieutenant Governor, was his party's candidate for Governor, and also served in the Federal executive department as Administrator of the REA.

Because of his effective work on the District of Columbia Committee, ANCHER NELSEN was known as one of the first citizens of Washington, D.C. One of his favorite and most satisfying projects was the Washington Technological School.

He was well known in Congress as a man who could reconcile opposing points of view. Because he was held in respect and high regard by all Members, he was sought after as a mediator whenever difficult bills were jammed in controversy.

ANCHER was proud of his Danish heritage and few people could tell more or better, Scandinavian stories. He proudly represented the President at the 1972 funeral of the King of Denmark, and was able to present his statements in Danish.

Congress, and the people of Minnesota's Second District will miss ANCHER NELSEN. I will especially miss his advice, counsel, and warm friendship, but I will be comforted by the fact that his new home in Hutchinson, Minn., will only be an hour's drive from my district.

I wish a long, happy, and successful retirement to ANCHER and his lovely wife Elvern. They have surely earned it.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, GEORGE A. GOODLING has served for 14 years as a Member of the House of Representatives and it is an honor for me to have had the opportunity to know and to work with him.

My friend, the distinguished Mr. GOODLING, has been the third ranking minority member of the House Committee on Agriculture, and the ranking member of its Subcommittee on Forests. He has fulfilled his duties in these capacities and in all the duties required of him as a Member of Congress. GEORGE GOODLING has performed well in every assignment he undertook and willingly offered his experience and expertise to those who asked.

Well liked by his colleagues, I join with them in wishing for him success and happiness in the years ahead.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to comment on the retirement of my close friend and colleague, LES ARENDS.

There is very little about LES that has not been said by the countless Members who have risen to express their friendship, warmth, and profound respect for the gentleman from Illinois. All of us feel a sense of loss that we know will be with us for a long time. Personally, I feel a frustration at the difficulty of finding words to convey my deep feelings.

LES ARENDS has devoted over 40 years of his life to public service in this body. In that time he has established an unquestioned reputation for integrity, fairness, ability and conviction. His many talents have proved uniquely suited to his position as whip, and LES' performance during his 30 years in that position is unparalleled. To complete that kind of tenure with such universal popularity and respect is extraordinary.

It is somehow inadequate to say that LES' retirement is well earned. It was well earned many, many years ago. He and Betty have many things they want to do and long hours they want to spend together. But the main consolation for the rest of us is the thought that LES will still be spending a great deal of his time in Washington. We have not seen the last of him by a long shot, and for that I am grateful.

Mr. Speaker, I shall always count it both a pleasure and an honor to have served in the same body with LES. My very best wishes go to Betty and him for a long and happy retirement.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, for the past 16 years it has been a privilege and a pleasure to serve in this body with the distinguished gentleman from New York, THADDEUS J. DULSKI.

Since coming to the House, Congressman DULSKI has been an eloquent and effective Representative of the citizens in his western New York district.

He has been a diligent and dedicated member of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, and as chairman of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee since 1967, he has earned the respect and admiration of all of us here in Congress.

I can certainly understand why after this long and honorable service he has decided to take a little time for his family and himself. He has earned it.

December 20, 1974

It is with sincere personal affection and professional respect that I join in honoring him today. I deeply value his friendship and his wise counsel. His presence in the Congress will be greatly missed.

Mr. DULSKI. Mr. Speaker, since those early days nearly 16 years ago when I first came to Congress, I have had the distinct honor and pleasure to be associated with my genial good friend, the Honorable H. R. GROSS from the State of Iowa.

He had been a member of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service for several years before I was named in my first term.

For the past 3½ years, we have sat side by side, he as the ranking minority member of the committee and me as chairman.

We have differed on many issues, but we each have respected each other's views. Indeed some of those differences often have resulted in a better end product—and, of course, the final result is really what counts.

We have joined together on numerous occasions and I would cite in particular his strong support for the basics of my pioneering approach to postal reform back in 1969. That was by far the most extensive legislative effort in which I have had a key role, from the drafting of legislation on up the line to public law.

Both Mr. GROSS and I saw the tide of legislative sentiment swing away from our fundamental approach before the postal reform law was enacted. But that is the way the legislative ball bounces, compromise on legislation is the name of the game, as we both have come to know so well over the years.

During this 93d Congress there has been much effort spent on congressional reform. The effort really was not needed so far as our committee is concerned, as I believe the gentleman from Iowa will agree. We already had a fine relationship between the minority and the majority and essentially were meeting the basic reforms that evolved.

Many of my colleagues already have expressed their deep appreciation for the dedicated work of Mr. GROSS in the House over the years.

Mr. GROSS need step aside for no other Member in comparing the solid homework which he put into his every day's work in this House. How he was able to keep such a sharp eye on the intimate details of so many bills, day after day, I will never know.

Mr. GROSS very often was in the minority on issues, but he never let controversy bother him. Indeed, he thrived on it. He never lost sight of his point and, perhaps more important, never did I see him disagreeable.

He has been the exemplification of tenacity and always with deepest respect for the House and his colleagues.

Mr. GROSS tells us he is going back to Iowa to catch up on his fishing. His fellow anglers back home ought to be forewarned that they have got some real competition on the way.

Mrs. Dulski joins me in warmest best wishes to Mr. GROSS and his wonderful helpmate, Hazel, as they head back to enjoy the good things in life in their home State of Iowa.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I hope to goodness that when our colleague, CLARK FISHER, the gentleman from San Angelo, Tex., leaves us at the end of this Congress he will somehow find the time to write a book about his years in Washington. The stories this man could tell.

As you know, CLARK FISHER is an author as well as a Congressman with 32 years experience. He was elected to the 78th Congress and his people have returned him to each succeeding Congress. As Representative for his district and as a member of the Committee on Armed Forces, CLARK FISHER's record has been an outstanding one. This, Mr. Speaker, is not overstatement. Our colleague came to Washington in January of 1942 while our Nation was still in recoil from the December 7 bombing of Pearl Harbor. It is awesome to think about the decisions he has been called upon to make all down through the years but the gentleman from Texas has taken it in stride.

Calm in his approach, giving counsel when asked, CLARK FISHER has been a friend to old and new Members of the House alike. All of us are in some way indebted to him and wish him good fortune in the years ahead.

Mr. MCCLORY. Mr. Speaker, in rising to pay a farewell tribute to our distinguished colleague from the 36th District of New York, the Honorable HENRY P. SMITH III, I am moved to recall the close personal friendship which has developed between HENRY SMITH and his wife, Helen, and my wife, Doris, and me—in recent years.

Mr. Speaker, in recalling the dramatic production "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," a most exciting and illuminating drama could be written about Mr. SMITH from New York's 36th District—for HENRY SMITH looks, and thinks, and acts every part the distinguished Congressman which he is—and has been during these past 10 years.

Mr. Speaker, it has been my privilege to sit alongside Congressman SMITH as a member of the House Judiciary Committee and to work with him on an almost daily basis in the intimate and intricate work of this great committee of the House of Representatives.

Mr. Speaker, I think it can be recognized that insofar as the House Judiciary Committee is concerned our work during the 93d Congress has been more historic than that of any comparable period experienced by our great Nation. We have conducted the only in depth impeachment inquiry involving a President of the United States, and we have attended to the confirmation of two Vice Presidents under the 25th amendment to the Constitution. These landmark achievements mark a record which may never again be matched in our Nation's history.

Congressman SMITH has been an active and vital part of these historic proceedings. In addition, let me add that he has exhibited the kind of judicial temperament and thoughtful interpretation of the Constitution which characterized his earlier service as a county judge of Niagara County of New York. He has adhered to the dictates of his conscience. He has been objective and statesmanlike. He has been thoughtful and articulate. In short, he has displayed those qualities of national leadership which have made him a Congressman of honor and distinction.

Mr. Speaker, our colleague HENRY SMITH and I had the privilege of procuring our education at the same institution of higher learning—Dartmouth College in Hanover, N.H. This bond has helped to promote the close friendship which he and I have enjoyed here on Capitol Hill. In addition Congressman SMITH's wife, Helen, and my wife, Doris, have many interests in common, and have been associated in mutual endeavors to promote the arts and humanities, as well as a better understanding of our political system and of the great issues with which our Nation has been confronted.

Mr. Speaker, as Congressman HENRY SMITH leaves these Halls and enters new fields of interest, I know that Members on both sides of the aisle will join in extending to him, sincere good wishes for useful activities consistent with his exceptional talents and that we may look for HENRY and Helen Smith to enjoy many years of good health and happiness together.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to salute the retiring dean of the Massachusetts delegation, my good friend HAROLD DONOHUE.

HAROLD was a veteran when I came to Congress, and that was not exactly yesterday. He has even been a minority member, an experience which I hope never to share with him. He has served under all types of Presidents and through all sorts of national crises.

But HAROLD's record shows much more than longevity. During his tenure on the Judiciary Committee he has helped pass an extraordinary range of progressive legislation which has helped open up all aspects of American life. HAROLD has used his growing experience to make greater and greater contributions in the House, without ever becoming dulled by routine or inured to the feelings of the people and the need for change. The people of the Third District have time and again honored him with overwhelming majorities. They will be sorry to lose him as their Representative, but glad to have him home full time.

I expect to continue to see HAROLD frequently, but I still cannot help but feel some sadness at his well-deserved retirement. I have never been in a Congress without HAROLD DONOHUE, and it seems a little late to start now. My very best wishes go to HAROLD for many, many more happy years.

REPORT ON ACTIVITIES AND ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF THE JOINT COMMITTEE ON ATOMIC ENERGY

(Mr. PRICE of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, I present for the information of my colleagues the annual report on the activities and accomplishments of the Joint Committee. This report covers the activities of this 2d session of the 93d Congress.

ACTIVITIES AND ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF THE JOINT COMMITTEE ON ATOMIC ENERGY IN THE 93D CONGRESS, 2D SESSION (1974)

FOREWORD

It has been the practice of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, at the close of each session of the Congress, to submit for the information of the Congress, the executive branch, and the public a report of its activities. (The report for the first session of the 93d Congress was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 119, pt. 33, p. 43296.)

The Joint Committee on Atomic Energy was organized on August 2, 1948. It consists of nine Members from the Senate and nine Members from the House of Representatives. No more than five from each body can be members of the same political party. The chairmanship alternates between the Senate and the House of Representatives with each Congress.

Present membership is:
Melvin Price, Illinois, Chairman.
John O. Pastore, Rhode Island, Vice Chairman.

Chet Hollifield, California.¹
John Young, Texas.
Teno Roncallo, Wyoming.
Mike McCormack, Washington.
Craig Hosmer, California.
John B. Anderson, Illinois.
Orval Hansen, Idaho.
Manuel Lujan, Jr., New Mexico.
Henry M. Jackson, Washington.
Stuart Symington, Missouri.
Alan Bible, Nevada.²
Joseph M. Montoya, New Mexico.
George D. Aiken, Vermont.
Wallace F. Bennett, Utah.
Peter H. Dominick, Colorado.
Howard H. Baker, Jr., Tennessee.

The Joint Committee is one of the few committees established by statute rather than by rule of each House and is unique in several respects. For example, it is the only Joint Committee of the Congress with legislative functions, including the receipt and reporting of legislative proposals. The Committee is also charged by law with legislative responsibility as "watchdog" of the U.S. atomic energy program. As part of its responsibilities, the Committee follows closely the classified activities of the executive agencies including the Atomic Energy Commission and the Departments of Defense and State, concerning the peaceful and military applications of atomic energy. The unclassified activities are closely reviewed as well.

In all of these activities, the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, representing the Congress and the public, seeks to assure the implementation of the following national policy expressed in the Atomic Energy Act of 1954:

"... the development, use, and control of atomic energy shall be directed so as to make the maximum contribution to the general welfare, subject at all times to the paramount objective of making the maximum contribution to the common defense and security. . . ."

¹ Resigned from Committee on Dec. 13, 1974; John E. Moes, California, appointed on December 13, 1974 to fill vacancy.

² Resigned from Congress on December 17, 1974.

During the 93d Congress, second session, the Joint Committee and its subcommittees held a total of 89 meetings, of which 32 (36%) were held in executive session and 57 (64%) were held in public session.

A total of 34 publications consisting of hearings, reports, and committee prints were published by the Joint Committee in this session of the 93d Congress. The publications include testimony taken in executive session with classified material deleted before printing.

A list of the publications follows:

1974 (93d Cong., 2d Sess.)

AEC Authorizing Legislation, Fiscal Year 1975:

Part 1, Hearings, February 19, 1974.
Part 2, Hearings, February 26 and 27, 1974.
Part 3, Hearings, February 28, 1974.

Reports: Authorizing Appropriations for the Atomic Energy Commission for Fiscal Year 1975, H. Rept. 93-969, April 3, 1974. (S. Rept. 93-773, April 8, 1974.)

Reports: Supplemental Authorization of Appropriations for the Atomic Energy Commission for Fiscal Year 1975, H. Rept. 93-1434, October 7, 1974. (S. Rept. 93-1246, October 8, 1974.)

Atomic Energy Legislation through the 93d Cong., 1st Session, Committee Print, July.

Current Membership of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, Committee Print, August.

Naval Nuclear Propulsion Program, 1972-73, (declassified), Hearings, February 8, 1972 and March 28, 1973.

Proposed Sale of La Crosse Boiling Water Reactor to Dairyland Power Cooperative, Hearings, August 3, 1973.

Military Applications of Nuclear Technology (Part 2) (declassified), Hearings, May 22, and June 29, 1973.

Future Structure of the Uranium Enrichment Industry (Phase II), Hearings, October 2, 3, and 4, 1973.

Nuclear Reactor Safety (Part 1, Phase I and IIa), Hearings, January 23, 1973. September 25, 26, 27, and October 1, 1973.

To Consider December 1, 1973 AEC Report on Energy Research and Development, Hearing, December 11, 1973.

Selected Materials on Atomic Energy Indemnity and Insurance Legislation, Committee Print, March.

Possible Modification or Extension of the Price-Anderson Act (Phase I), Hearings, January 31, March 27 and 28, 1974.

Reports: Revising and Amending the Price-Anderson Indemnity Provisions of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, H. Rept. 93-1115, June 18, 1974. (S. Rept. 93-1027, July 23, 1974.) (Conf. Rept. 93-1308, August 20, 1974.)

AEC Omnibus Legislation: 1974 [see below].

Proposed amendment to section 54 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, to enable Congress to concur in or disapprove international agreements for cooperation in regard to certain nuclear technology: S. 3253 and H.R. 13896—to delete the requirements that Congress authorize amounts of special nuclear material which may be distributed to a group or nations. [Subcommittee on Agreement for Cooperation], [hearing held April 30, 1974].

Reports: Amending the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as Amended, To Enable Congress to Concur in or Disapprove Certain International Agreements for Peaceful Cooperation, H. Rept. 93-1149, June 25, 1974. (S. Rept. 93-964, June 25, 1974.)

Conference Report: International Nuclear Agreement Congressional Review Act, (Conf. Rept. 93-1299, August 19, 1974.)

AEC Omnibus Legislation—1974:

Testimony on H.R. 14849; S. 3502; Foreign distribution of special nuclear materials and S. 3669; H.R. 15416, Atomic weapons and special nuclear rewards, [hearings held June 18, 1974].

Reports: AEC Omnibus Legislation—1974, H. Rept. 93-1155, June 26, 1974. (S. Rept. 93-989, July 9, 1974.)

(The two preceding legislative hearings were printed in one volume.)

Transportation of Radioactive Material by Passenger Aircraft, Committee Print, September.

Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, Hearing, September 10, 1974.

Annual Reports to Congress on Nuclear Information, Open Meeting, July 22, 1974.

Reports: Annual Reports to Congress on Nuclear Information, H. Rept. 93-1414, October 2, 1974. (S. Rept. 93-1228, October 4, 1974.)

To Facilitate the Entry Into Foreign Ports of United States Nuclear Warships, H. Rept. 93-1467, October 16, 1974.

(Unclassified hearings held June 14, 1972), (S. Rept. 93-1281, October 16, 1974.)

AEC Nuclear Weapons Testing Program, Hearing, September 23, 1974.

The following publications will be released in the near future:

Proposed Changes in Contract Arrangements for Uranium Services, Hearings, March 7, 8, 26, and April 18, 1973.

Nuclear Reactor Safety (Part 2, Phase IIb and III), Hearings, January 22, 23, 24, and 28, 1974.

AEC Authorizing Legislation, Fiscal Year 1975 (Part 4), Hearings, March 4 and 5, 1974.

(Note: Included in this part is hearing of July 25, 1973, entitled "Current Status of AEC Controlled Thermonuclear Research Program")

Possible Modification or Extension of the Price-Anderson Act (Phase II), Hearings, May 9, 10, 14, 15 and 16, 1974.

Development, Growth, and State of the Nuclear Industry, Hearings, February 5 and 6, 1974.

Nuclear Powerplant Siting and Licensing, Hearings, March 19, 20, 21, 22; April 24, 25, 26, and May 1, 1974.

Uranium Mill Tailings in the State of Utah, Hearing, March 12, 1974.

Naval Nuclear Propulsion Program—1974 (declassified), Hearing, February 25, 1974.

Future Structure of the Uranium Enrichment Industry (Phase III), Hearings, June 25, 26, 27; July 18, 17, 18, 30, 31; August 6; November 26; and December 3, 1974.

AEC Weapons Program Authorization Request, Fiscal Year 1975 (declassified), Hearing, February 19, 1974.

Proposed Modification of Restrictions on Enrichment of Foreign Uranium for Domestic Use, Hearings, September 17 and 18, 1974.

Solar Energy Research and Development, Hearings, May 7 and 8, 1974.

1. LEGISLATIVE ACTIVITIES

A. Atomic Energy Commission Fiscal Year 1975 Authorization Act (Public Law 93-276).

The Atomic Energy Commission's authorization request for fiscal year 1975, as initially submitted to the Congress on February 7, 1974, called for authorization of $2,469,423,000 for "Operating expenses" and $1,130,850,000 for "Plant and capital equipment" (including increases in prior-year authorization) making a total requested authorization of $3,600,273,000.

This request represents an increase of $1,130,518,000 or about 45.8 percent, above the $2,469,755,000 authorized for fiscal year 1974.

The Joint Committee's recommended authorization for fiscal year 1975 was $3,676,833,000 which is $78,560,000 or about 2 percent more than the amount requested.

Generally, the Commission's authorization request reflects estimated costs in two broad categories of effort, namely, military and civilian applications. Military applications include primarily the nuclear weapons and naval propulsion reactors programs as well as a portion of the nuclear materials program. Approximately 42 percent of the Commission's fiscal year 1975 estimated program cost, or $1,531,867,000 is attributable to military applications. The estimated cost for the civilian applications of atomic energy totals $2,138,036,000 or about 58 percent of the program costs.

The change in the percentage of civilian versus military applications estimated costs from fiscal years 1974 to 1975 is reflected in the priority increases the AEC proposed to give to energy development programs and basic and supporting energy research which would contribute most directly to solving energy related problems and to maintaining the quality of our Nation's environment. These energy programs and related research will receive an aggregate increase of about 32 percent above estimated fiscal year 1974 costs, while all other AEC programs, including the weapons, naval reactor development, space nuclear systems, and high energy physics programs will only receive an aggregate increase of about 4 percent.

The Joint Committee began consideration of the proposed legislation authorizing appropriations to the AEC for fiscal year 1975 with a public hearing on February 19, 1974. At this hearing, Dr. Dixy Lee Ray, Chairman of the AEC, reviewed the overall budget request. Subsequent public hearings occurred on February 26, 27, 28, and March 4. In the course of these hearings the AEC's programs for civilian reactor development and reactor safety research, applied technology, physical research, regulation, biomedical and environmental research, controlled thermonuclear research and radioactive waste management were the subjects considered. The hearing records contain information on the status of and accomplishments under the various programs being carried out under the Atomic Energy Program.

Other hearings were held in executive session on February 20, 21, 25, and March 5. AEC programs reviewed during these hearings were weapons, nuclear materials security, naval reactors, and nuclear materials production.

B. Supplemental Authorization of Appropriations for the Atomic Energy Commission for Fiscal Year 1975.

On September 4, 1974, an executive communication was transmitted to the Congress, requesting the Congress to consider proposed supplemental appropriations to the Atomic Energy Commission of $54,700,000 for operating expenses and $18,300,000 for plant and capital equipment.

The full committee held an executive hearing on September 12 and 28, 1974, and an open hearing on September 23, on the request for authorization of supplemental appropriations. The funds requested by AEC are to be used primarily to conduct a minimal underground test program and for the safeguarding of special nuclear material from diversion from its intended uses. The underground nuclear test program was revised as a result of the Threshold Test Ban Treaty signed by the United States and the Soviet Union on July 3, 1974. That Treaty prohibits all nuclear weapons tests in excess of 150 kilotons yield beginning March 31, 1976. The AEC stated that they would need to include several tests over the yield threshold in fiscal year 1975 in order to complete the weaponization of devices already approved for development.

On September 23 and October 7, 1974, the full committee met in executive session for markup of the bill. At the conclusion of these sessions, the committee voted to approve a supplemental authorization of $62,200,000 for operating expenses and $18,300,000 for plant and capital equipment.

The bill was passed by the House of Representatives on November 25, and by the Senate on December 10. The Senate amended the bill by reducing the supplemental authorization for plant and capital equipment to $16,050,000, and specifying that, $23,000,000 of the total authorization was to be applied to the safeguards program. The House concurred in the Senate amendment on December 16, 1974.

C. Extension and Modification of the Price-Anderson Act.

The Price-Anderson Act was enacted in 1957, and extended and amended in 1965 and 1968. The Act was designed to protect the public and the emerging nuclear industry by assuring the availability of funds for the payment of claims in the unlikely event of a catastrophic nuclear incident. Among other things, the Act provides funds for public liability in the event of a nuclear incident up to a total amount of $560 million. This amount is provided for by requiring nuclear power plant licensees to maintain financial protection through insurance or other means in the full amount available from private insurance (currently $110 million) and by providing for government indemnity for the remainder of the $560 million. Other features included in the Act by the amendments of 1966 are no-fault liability and provisions for accelerated payment of claims immediately upon occurrence of a nuclear incident.

The Act is scheduled to expire on August 1, 1977. Because of the long lead times involved in planning new commitments to nuclear power, the Joint Committee was urged to consider the matter of extension and possible modification of the Act during the 93rd Congress in order to prevent an unwarranted disruption in the planning process for nuclear power plants, such as might result from uncertainty over the future of the Price-Anderson Act. In order to permit early consideration, the Joint Committee, in July 1973, requested the Atomic Energy Commission to submit studies and alternative proposals in the indemnity area. In response to this call, the Commission filed a broad based staff study in January 1974 and the Columbia University Legislative Drafting Fund submitted an independent review sponsored by the Atomic Industrial Forum. Months of informal interchange among members of the Joint Committee, the Atomic Energy Commission, and their staffs, and representatives of private industry and the general public culminated in public hearings beginning on January 31, 1974. On April 22, 1974, the Atomic Energy Commission forwarded to the Congress proposed legislation which was introduced as H.R. 14408 by Chairman Melvin Price of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy on April 25, 1974, and as S. 3452 by Senator John O. Pastore, Vice-Chairman of the Joint Committee, on May 7, 1974. Additionally, a related bill, S. 3254, was introduced by Senator Mike Gravel on March 27, 1974.

Following public hearings, held on May 9, 10, 14, 15, and 16, 1974, the full committee met in executive session on June 11, 1974, and after careful consideration voted to submit a committee bill in lieu of the above-mentioned measures. The bill was introduced on June 11, 1974, by Chairman Price (for himself and Mr. Hosmer) as H.R. 15323. H.R. 15323 provided for a ten-year extension of the Price-Anderson Act, until 1987, and for a number of changes in the Act. The major change was a provision for replacing the government indemnity with a retrospective premium insurance system over a period of years as more power reactors become licensed. This system would also have allowed an increase in the limit on liability above $560 million after the government indemnity had been phased out. This was expected to occur in about the 1977-1982 time frame. The bill would also have extended Price-Anderson coverage to offshore nuclear power plants and to shipments of nuclear material between AEC licensees via routes wholly or partially outside U.S. territorial limits.

The Joint Committee met again on June 13, 1974, in open session and voted to report favorably on the bill with amendments by a rollcall vote of 11 to 2 (Cf. H.R. Rept. 93-1115). On July 10, the House of Representatives considered H.R. 15323 and passed the bill with three amendments by a vote of 360-43. The bill was messaged to the Senate and referred to the Joint Committee on July 11.

The Joint Committee met again in open session on July 22 and voted 9 to 1 to report the bill favorably to the Senate with further amendments (Cf. S. Rept. 93-1027).

On August 8, 1974, the Senate passed H.R. 15323 by voice vote with three floor amendments, insisted on its amendments, and asked for a conference. One of these amendments reduced the period of extension of the Act to five years. Another amendment added the provision in Section 12 described below, which resulted in a Presidential veto of the bill. The conferees met on August 14, 1974, and again on August 20, 1974, reaching agreement on the latter date, and agreed to report their recommendations to their respective Houses (H.R. Report 93-1306).

The House of Representatives approved the conference measure on September 24, 1974; the Senate followed on September 30, 1974. The Act was then sent to the President on October 1, 1974. The President vetoed the measure on October 12, 1974, citing his approval of the substantive sections of H.R. 15323, and basing his veto on "the clear constitutional infirmity" of a provision in Section 12 of the bill allowing Congress to prevent it from becoming effective by passing a concurrent resolution within a specified time. The President urged the Congress to reenact the measure without the offending provision.

H.R. 15323 and the veto message were referred to the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. The Joint Committee met on November 19, 1974 in executive session and agreed not to attempt to override the veto, and to take up the reenactment of this legislation immediately when the 94th Congress convenes.

D. AEC Omnibus Legislation (P.L. 93-377).

On October 30, 1974 the Atomic Energy Commission forwarded to Congress a proposed amendment to Section 54 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended. The AEC proposal would have eliminated the ceilings on amounts of special nuclear materials which can be distributed to international agencies, such as the IAEA or Euratom. The legislation was requested in order to permit supply of nuclear fuels through IAEA to certain foreign customers for U.S.-manufactured reactors. This proposal was incorporated in S. 3253, introduced by Senator Joseph Montoya (by request) on March 27, 1974, Representative Melvin Price, Chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, introduced an identical bill (by request), H.R. 13896, on April 2, 1974.

On May 18, 1974, following hearings on April 30 before the Subcommittee on Agreements for Cooperation of the JCAE on H.R. 13896 and S. 3253, revised legislation was introduced in lieu of the earlier bills, by Senator Montoya as S. 3502, and by Chairman Price, for himself and Mr. Hosmer, as H.R. 14849. The modified proposal provided for an increase in the IAEA ceiling to accommodate the proposal arrangements for fuel supply, and provided a simplified procedure for future ceiling increases, subject to congressional review.

On May 9, 1974, the Atomic Energy Commission transmitted to Congress a proposed 1974 Omnibus bill containing one amendment to the Atomic Energy Rewards Act of 1955, and five amendments to the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended. The AEC's proposed legislation was introduced on May 20, 1974, by Chairman Price (by request) as H.R. 14901.

This bill clarified and expanded the scope of activities subject to the Atomic Weapons Rewards Act, exempted from regulatory licensing requirements certain classes and quantities of special nuclear materials, allowed export of such exempted items and other specified materials to nations with whom agreements for cooperation have not been executed clarified the status of agreement state licensees with regard to by-product material, and granted express authority for AEC to conduct a program of approval of persons to have access to or control over significant quantities of special nuclear material.

On May 23, 1974 Chairman Melvin Price introduced H.R. 14998, another amendment to the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended. This bill provided for a further five-year extension, to 1979, of AEC's authority to compel the licensing of atomic energy patents. This authority would have expired on September 1, 1974.

Following full discussion in executive session, the Joint Committee combined these various legislative proposals into a single clean bill, introduced on June 17, 1974 by Chairman Price as H.R. 15416, and by Vice Chairman Pastore as S. 3669 on June 19, 1974.

On June 18, 1974, the full Joint Committee conducted a hearing on H.R. 15416. This was followed by an open mark-up session on June 25 during which the Joint Committee voted to approve these bills with an amendment. The legislation was passed without further amendment by the Senate and the House on July 11, 1974 and August 1, 1974 respectively.

E. Annual Reports to Congress on Nuclear Information (Public Law 93-514).

On July 8, 1974, Senator Stuart Symington introduced S. 3728, a bill to assure that adequate nuclear information essential to Senate decisions be provided to that body. This would be accomplished through a report submitted to the Senate twice in each session of Congress by the Senate section of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. The report would provide facts and information concerning nuclear energy, nuclear weapons, and nuclear policies, the knowledge of which would contribute to the exercise of informed judgments by all Senators respecting foreign policy, defense, international trade and other related matters.

On July 11, 1974, Chairman Melvin Price introduced H.R. 15891, a companion bill, expanding the scope of S. 3728 to require that the reports provided for in S. 3728 be furnished by the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy to both Houses of Congress.

On July 22, 1974, the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy met in open session and voted unanimously to submit a committee bill in lieu of those measures. The bill was introduced on July 23, 1974 by Chairman Price as H.R. 16074, and on July 24, 1974 by Senator Symington as S. 3802. The Joint Committee met again on September 26, 1974 and voted unanimously to report these bills favorably. This legislation was approved without amendment by the Senate and the House on October 9 and November 25, respectively.

F. Nuclear Warship Liability Resolution (Public Law 93-513).

The Joint Committee has received testimony at various times concerning restrictions on entry of U.S. nuclear warships into ports of foreign countries. Concerns over liability in the event of a reactor accident have been offered by some nations as a reason for restricting access to their ports. Hearings on this matter were held on June 14, 1972, at which time testimony was received from the following individuals:

Admiral Elmo R. Zumwalt, Chief of Naval Operations;

Hon. U. Alexis Johnson, Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs;

Admiral Hyman G. Rickover, Deputy Commander for Nuclear Propulsion, Naval Warships Systems Command, Navy Department; Director, Division of Naval Reactors, AEC; and

Mr. Benjamin Forman, Assistant General Counsel for International Affairs, Department of Defense.

On July 16, 1974, Rep. Craig Hosmer filed a proposed joint resolution (H.J. Res. 1089) which was aimed at removing any question of congressional intent relative to the assumption of liability in the event of a reactor incident in a foreign port. The Joint Committee expressed a desire to receive the views of the Department of State and of Defense concerning this problem before proceeding on the resolution. By letter dated September 4, 1974, the Secretary of Defense expressed his Department's support of the resolution, and suggested minor alterations in language. By letter dated September 17, 1974 over signature of Ambassador-at-Large McCloskey, the Department of State supplied its comments on the resolution. Finally, on September 26, 1974, in testimony before the Joint Committee in executive session, Secretary of Defense Schlesinger and Dr. Dixy Lee Ray, Chairman, AEC, expressed their support of the resolution and termed it necessary and urgent.

On October 9, 1974, "clean" resolutions, incorporating the DOD recommendations, were introduced in the Senate by Vice-Chairman Pastore as S.J. Res. 248, and in the House of Representatives by Mr. Hosmer, as H.J. Res. 1161. These resolutions were referred to the Joint Committee. On October 10, 1974, the Joint Committee met in executive session and voted unanimously to approve these resolutions. S.J. Res. 248 passed the Senate and the House without amendment on November 2 and November 25, 1974 respectively.

G. Nuclear Power Plant Licensing Improvements.

Since 1971, the Joint Committee has been looking intently at the problem of delays in the siting and licensing of nuclear powerplants. Extensive hearings on this issue were conducted in 1971 and again in 1972. On December 13, 1973, Chairman Price introduced H.R. 11957, a bill providing for changes to expedite the licensing process. He called at that time for others to submit similar proposals, and announced that the Joint Committee would hold hearings to develop legislation to deal with this problem. The hearings began in March, continued in April and concluded in May 1974. Witnesses who testified at these hearings included the Chairman, members and staff of the Federal Power Commission, representatives of the nuclear industry, including utility licensing applicants, interested States, environmental associations and professional experts in the field of administrative procedure.

In hearings held on March 19, 20, 21 and 22, 1974, the Joint Committee examined in detail the overall process of planning, siting, designing, constructing, and operating nuclear power plants, and explored in depth the causes of delay. The most frequently identified causes of delay were design changes, poor productivity of labor, changes in regulatory requirements, and prolonged regulatory procedures, including legal challenges involving right-of-way, site, aesthetic or environmental issues.

On April 24, 25, 26 and May 1, 1974, the Joint Committee continued its hearings on the siting and licensing of nuclear powerplants for the purpose of receiving testimony on various legislative proposals which had been referred to the Joint Committee to eliminate delay in the process of licensing of nuclear powerplants. These proposals included the bill sponsored by Chairman Price

(H.R. 11957), a bill proposed by Representative McCormack (H.R. 1223), and the legislative proposal of the AEC (H.R. 13484 and S. 3179). A related bill, S. 3547, introduced by Senator Kennedy on May 29, 1974, after the Joint Committee had concluded its hearings on the siting and licensing of nuclear powerplants, incorporated major portions of a draft bill proposed by an environmental lawyer, Anthony Rolman, which was considered during the hearings.

On September 17, 1974, Chairman Price, joined by all the other House members of the Joint Committee, introduced H.R. 16700, a composite bill incorporating various features of each of the bills mentioned above, along with other provisions suggested by the results of the hearings. The bill was referred to the Joint Committee.

H.R. 16700 provided for a number of changes to the procedures for approving sites and designs for proposed nuclear power plants. It provided for designated sites reviewed in advance a specific application; for standardized plants; for replacement of mandatory hearings with an opportunity for a hearing in certain instances; for discretionary, rather than mandatory ACRS review of applications; for limited work authorizations and interim operating licenses prior to completion of hearings, where need is shown and environmental reviews have been completed; for expedited hearing procedures; for coordination of Federal and State reviews; for a survey of nuclear power park sites (this provision was incorporated into the Energy Reorganization Act of 1974, P.L. 93-438); and for increased participation by intervenors through early notice of intent to file applications and through provision of technical reports and other documents. This legislation is expected to receive early consideration by the committee in the 94th Congress.

II. CERTAIN AGREEMENTS FOR COOPERATION (P.L. 93-485)

A. Section 123 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, as constituted prior to the amendment thereto effected by P.L. 93-485, provided that proposed agreements for cooperation by the United States and other nations, in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, and amendments thereto, must be submitted to the Joint Committee for a period of up to 30 days while Congress is in session.

In accordance with such requirement, the following proposed civilian agreements for cooperation were submitted to the Joint Committee in 1974:

On April 1, an amendment to the Agreement with AEA.

On April 9, an amendment to the Agreement with the Repub. of China.

On April 9, a superseding Agreement with Spain.

On May 13, an amendment to the Agreement with Sweden.

On May 16, an amendment to the Agreement with the Repub. of Viet-Nam.

On May 16, a superseding Agreement with Thailand.

On May 16, an amendment to the Agreement with South Africa.

On May 17, a superseding Agreement with Portugal.

On May 28, an amendment to the Agreement with Austria.

On June 17, an amendment to the Agreement with Greece.

On July 15, an Agreement with Greece, which was withdrawn on July 26.

Soon after the announcements by President Nixon on June 14 and 17, 1974, that he was taking steps to negotiate a cooperative nuclear power agreement with Egypt and a similar agreement with Israel, the Joint Committee reported out a bill to augment the requirements of Section 123 of the Atomic Energy Act in regard to such proposed cooperative agreements for nuclear power. In the Senate, the bill, S. 3698, was approved in amended form on July 10, 1974.

The House passed a version of the Senate bill on July 31, 1974, and thereafter Senate-House Conferees agreed upon the text of S. 3698 which was approved by both Houses and on October 26, 1974 was signed into law (P.L. 93-485) by President Ford.

As amended, subsection 123 d. now provides that proposed foreign agreements of cooperation involving a reactor that may be capable of producing more than 5 thermal megawatts or special nuclear material for use in connection with such a reactor must be submitted to the Congress in the same manner as proposed foreign agreements entailing military or nuclear weapons information.

Before such agreements may be effective, the following steps must be taken:

First, the Atomic Energy Commission must submit to the President the proposed agreement for cooperation, together with its recommendations. The submitted proposal must include (1) the terms, conditions, duration, nature and scope of the proposed cooperation, (2) a guarantee by the other party that the security safeguards and standards provided for in the agreement will be maintained, and (3) certain other guarantees by such party respecting the use of special materials and their unavailability to unauthorized persons;

Secondly, the President must approve the proposed agreement, following a written determination by him that its implementation would promote, and would not constitute an unreasonable risk to, the common defense and security; and Thirdly, the proposed agreement for cooperation, together with the President's approval and determination, must be submitted to the Congress.

Pursuant to subsection 123 d., as most recently amended, the submission to the Congress must be for a period of 60 days while Congress is in session. Prior to the lapse of the first 30 days of this period, the Joint Committee is required to submit a report to the Congress of its views and recommendations respecting the proposed agreement together with a proposed concurrent resolution stating in substance that the Congress favors, or does not favor, as the case may be, the proposed agreement for cooperation. The proposed agreement cannot become effective if during the 60-day period the Congress passes a concurrent resolution stating in substance that it does not favor the contemplated agreement. The amendment to Section 123 effected by P.L. 93-405 applies to both proposed agreements for cooperation within the categories of coverage identified in subsection 123 d. and to proposed amendments to covered agreements for cooperation submitted to the Congress after October 17, 1974, the effective date P.L. 93-485.

B. In addition to the foreign agreements for cooperation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy mentioned above, the Joint Committee received, on August 15, 1974, a proposed amendment to the July 3, 1958 Agreement, as amended, between the Government of the United States and the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. The latter agreement is for cooperation in uses of atomic energy for mutual defense purposes. It is a classified agreement providing for the transfer by the United States to the Government of the United Kingdom, and for the transfer from the United Kingdom to the United States, of certain materials and equipment. The new amendment, received by the Joint Committee on August 15, would extend for 5 years, until December 1, 1979, the period during which the basic agreement would remain in force. The President's submission was in furtherance of subsection 91 c. of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, and accorded with the provisions of Section 123 of that Act, as constituted prior to the amendment effected by P.L. 93-485.

III—INFORMATIONAL HEARINGS

A. Naval Nuclear Propulsion Program:

The Joint Committee held an executive hearing on the Naval Nuclear Propulsion Program on February 25, 1974. At that time Admiral Rickover presented information on the status of the nuclear navy including detailed information on the nuclear shipbuilding program.

Admiral Rickover reported that as of the time the hearings were held, nuclear power warships had steamed a total of 25 million miles. He pointed out that the navy nuclear propulsion plants now consist of 126 reactors which have operated for a cumulative period of 1150 reactor-years without a reactor accident.

The naval reactor program continues to be one of the developing improved nuclear reactor propulsion systems for both submarines and surface vessels. In large measure the crux of the effort centers on the development and testing of long lifetime nuclear cores for naval reactors.

B. Uranium Mill Tailings:

On March 12, 1974, the Joint Committee's Subcommittee on Raw Materials held a public hearing on the legislation which had been introduced which would authorize the Atomic Energy Commission to enter into a cooperative agreement with the State of Utah to contain and render harmless uranium mill tailings. During the hearing it was pointed out that there were a number of inactive uranium mills in western states which have associated tailings piles which should also be considered for remedial action. As a consequence, the Atomic Energy Commission, the Environmental Protection Agency, and the various States concerned cooperated in a study to assess in each case the need for remedial action. A Phase I report has been furnished to the Joint Committee which identifies the mills where remedial action is recommended. In a second phase of the study, engineering estimates are to be made on detailed plans for removal or other remedial action including cost estimates for each case.

C. Nuclear Power Reactor Safety:

The Joint Committee held public hearings on nuclear power reactor safety on January 22-24 and 28, 1974. The Committee first received testimony from the AEC on the data and rationale underlying the Commission's decision of December 28, 1973, on acceptance criteria for the Emergency Core Cooling Systems (ECCS) for nuclear power plants. After completion of the AEC testimony, the Committee heard from representatives of the nuclear community, organizations opposed to nuclear power, independent scientific and technical experts in the field, and members of the public at large.

These hearings concluded the Committee's special hearings on nuclear reactor safety, which commenced on January 23, 1973, with testimony from outgoing AEC Chairman Dr. James R. Schlesinger. The next phase of these hearings consisted of testimony by the Atomic Energy Commissioners, their principal staff, the Advisory Committee on Reactor Safeguards and the Atomic Safety and Licensing Board Panel. Testimony was heard in public session on September 25, 26 and 27 and October 1, 1973. The safety hearings were recessed at that time to await the AEC's decision on ECCS.

This comprehensive series of hearings provided an opportunity for all sides to be heard on the complex issue of nuclear reactor safety. It provided valuable background information for the Committee's consideration of the proposed Price-Anderson extension and siting-licensing legislation. It is expected that the record of these hearings will be published in the near future. The Committee will, of course, continue to devote major attention to assuring that atomic energy programs are carried out in a safe manner.

D. Solar Energy:

On May 7-8, 1974, the Joint Committee held two days of intensive hearings on the subject of solar energy research and development. The Committee had before it for consideration legislation introduced by Senator Humphrey which would authorize a five-year, $600 million program of solar energy research. The hearings developed a complete record on the present status and the prospects for solar energy utilization and technology, both Governmental and industrial, in the U.S. and worldwide. The hearings also provided the Committee with an opportunity to receive reports from several AEC laboratories on the solar energy research being carried out under the expanded authority of the AEC to work in non-nuclear areas.

E. Policy on Import of Foreign Uranium:

On September 17-18, 1974, the Committee met to consider the AEC proposal for gradually relaxing and finally removing the restrictions on enrichment of foreign uranium intended for use in domestic power reactors. In accordance with Subsection 161 v. of the Atomic Energy Act, it was required that this proposal lie before the Congress for a review period of 45 days since it involved a modification to the criteria governing the provision of uranium enrichment services. The AEC specifically proposed to permit an enrichment services customer to provide up to 10% of enrichment feed from foreign sources in 1977. The percentage allowable would increase each subsequent year to 15, 20, 30, 40, 60, and 80 percent respectively until 1984, when there would be no further restriction on the source of enrichment feed. The AEC also indicated its intent to closely monitor the uranium situation to assure the maintenance of a viable domestic uranium industry.

After hearing from the AEC, representative views of the proposal were received from the uranium producers and the uranium users as well as other interested parties. Subsequent to the hearing, in response to a Committee request, the AEC provided additional information to clarify its position on several points discussed at the hearing—particularly with respect to the circumstances and manner in which the AEC might act to reimpose the restrictions at some later date. The 45-day review period expired on October 16, and thus the AEC put its previously announced plan into effect on October 26, 1974. The hearings and supplemental information were useful in documenting the diverse views on this subject, and the record should be valuable in the future as the AEC policy is gradually implemented.

F. State of Nuclear Industry:

On February 5-6, 1974, the Committee held hearings on the "Development, Growth, and State of the Nuclear Industry", pursuant to Section 202 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954. Testimony was received from the AEC, key leaders from the major sectors of the nuclear industry, and the Federal Energy Office. The hearings provided an overall look at the state of the nuclear industry, and an opportunity for the industry to discuss the progress and problems being encountered in the development and application of nuclear energy. They were highly beneficial in terms of providing background information for the Committee's consideration of the FY 1975 budget as well as other legislative matters taken up during the rest of the session.

G. Uranium Enrichment:

As a follow-up to Phase I and Phase II hearings held during 1973, the Committee held extensive Phase III hearings on the Future Structure of the Uranium Enrichment Industry on eleven separate days during June, July, August and November.

In April a Committee Print of draft legislation to establish the United States Enrichment Corporation (USEC) had been prepared and circulated widely in the industry for comment. A somewhat modified form of this bill was introduced in October and was considered at the November hearings.

Under the proposed legislation, USEC would take over the Atomic Energy Commission's gaseous diffusion and gas centrifuge facilities and programs, contracts and funds, with the mission of operating them in a business-like fashion, free of the strictures and delays of the budgetary-authorization-appropriation cycle. USEC would be empowered and directed to take strong, decisive action to assist in the entry into and eventual complete take-over by private enterprise of the function of enriching uranium for nuclear fuel, and the recapture for the United States of an appropriate share of the foreign enrichment market.

Extensive testimony by commercial and investment bankers and industrial leaders at the Phase III hearings clearly established that without substantial Government assistance private industry would not be able to raise the multi-billion dollar funds to build private enrichment plants, and that assistance beyond the legal authority of the Commission or the Energy Research and Development Administration was needed.

As the Phase III hearings progressed, a virtual consensus emerged as to the urgent need for enactment of strong legislation to assure against the development of a nuclear fuel gap and to remove the contracting gap precipitated during the year.

The Committee also became increasingly aware of the sensitivity of the enrichment effort to a shortfall of uranium feed or of chemical reprocessing capacity, either one of which could cause problems in the nuclear fuel cycle, similar to those caused by a shortage of enrichment capacity.

IV. CLASSIFIED ACTIVITIES

A. Military Applications:

The Joint Committee on Atomic Energy met in executive session on February 19, 1974, to receive testimony from the Supreme Allied Commander Europe on NATO nuclear matters. An unclassified version of this hearing will be published in the near future as a Committee print entitled "To Consider NATO Matters."

The Subcommittee on Military Applications of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy held an executive session on August 19, 1974, to receive a briefing from the Department of Defense on security of deployed U.S. nuclear weapons.

The Subcommittee on Military Applications held an open session on September 10, 1974, to receive testimony on the proliferation of nuclear weapons. A report of this hearing has been published as a Subcommittee hearing print entitled "Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons."

B. Central Intelligence Agency:

On February 21, 1974, the Director of the CIA briefed the Joint Committee on foreign intelligence matters. From time to time during the year, the CIA has provided the Committee with information concerning foreign intelligence relating to atomic energy.

C. Foreign Trips:

At the request of the Vice Chairman, and with the approval of the Chairman, the Deputy Director of the Joint Committee staff visited certain NATO installations in June and October, 1974. Reference to the June trip concerning the security of U.S. nuclear weapons in Europe was made by Vice Chairman Pastore in the Congressional Record of September 25, 1974, page 32522.

D. Disarmament Matters:

On March 15 and June 18, 1974, the Director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency briefed the Joint Committee on the status of the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks and the current United States test ban policy, with particular reference to a possible threshold test ban treaty.

On a continuing basis the Joint Committee, through its contacts with the Department of Defense, Department of State, Atomic Energy Commission, and Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, keeps fully and currently informed on matters relating to disarmament.

V. SAFEGUARDS AND SECURITY

On May 17, 1974, the Committee announced the selection of a special panel to study the transportation of nuclear materials. This panel produced its first report on September 17, 1974, on the transportation of radioactive material by passenger aircraft. This report was distributed to the public and is available at the Joint Committee office.

The Joint Committee has always insisted that public health and safety receive prime consideration, including the security and safeguarding of nuclear installations against sabotage and takeover and preventing the diversion or loss of nuclear materials. The Committee has strongly supported and frequently recommended increased funding for the nuclear materials security programs conducted by the Division of Military Applications, and those regulatory programs concerned with the possession, use, and disposal of nuclear materials and installation security.

The weapons program's nuclear materials security budget reached a new high of $5 million for FY 1975. Research and development efforts, as well as the procurement of new systems are underway. New concepts of material accountability, physical containment, surveillance methods, transportation and communications are being implemented. Additional approaches and concepts are under study.

In the regulatory program, the funding, staff, and a number of published regulations and guides are being increased significantly over FY 1974. Funding is up 21%, guides and regulations by 71%, and staff by 15%. The dollar cost increased by 25% to almost $68 million. These activities, which apply to commercial and other licensee facilities, are concerned with plant physical protection, material protection in transit, and improved materials accountability practices. To insure compliance by licensees, it is planned to increase the number of inspections by 23%. To assure that the public is kept fully and currently informed on regulatory activities, the LORDS system of monthly reporting has been initiated. LORDS is the acronym for Licensing On-Line Retrieval Data System. Following are listed the areas covered:

Nuclear Power Plants.
Nuclear Fuels.
Nuclear Materials.
Reactor Safety Research.
Additionally, a monthly report is issued which details the results of AEC inspections. Included in this report are the memorandums concerned with the issuing or denial of licenses for activities associated with nuclear materials.

When the FY 1975 AEC supplemental appropriations request was submitted to the Congress, the Joint Committee recommended that the $18 million requested for safeguards and security be increased to $23 million. This increased authorization for appropriations was passed by the Congress.

VI. OTHER ACTIVITIES

A. Nuclear Electric Power in Space:
Pioneer-10 and Pioneer-11, both of which use nuclear power supplies, are actively transmitting scientific data to Earth. Solar cell systems were not practical because of the distance the spacecraft would be from the sun. Each system employs four nuclear radioisotope electric generators which initially produced about 166 watts for the experiments, the transmitters and the electric heaters which keep mechanical devices from freezing. The solar power output should allow data collection and transmission for at least 8-10 years. Pioneer-10, launched March 2, 1972, passed around Jupiter in 1973 and is now about 500 million miles from Earth on its way out of our solar system. It is sending data on the radiation flux and magnetic fields it is encountering in space and on meteoroid impacts. In the blackness of space there are no pictures for it to take even if it were possible to send them back to Earth. Pioneer-11 passed 26,000 miles above Jupiter's surface (Pioneer-10 was at 75,000 miles) and it took remarkable color pictures. The electromagnetic field and radiation fluxes were high, as predicted, but the spacecraft camera lenses and experiments survived. A slight amount of damage might have been done to the voltage regulator. Pioneer-11 flipped around Jupiter and is now en route to Saturn, which it should reach in the Spring of 1979 to photograph that planet's rings.

Most of the experiments and transmitters left on the moon surface by the five Apollo crews are still operating satisfactorily. As an example, the Apollo 12 ALSEP (Apollo lunar surface experimental package) launched November 14, 1969, was projected to last 365 days. As of the end of calendar year 1974, it will have been operating 1868 days and gives no indication of imminent failure.

B. Confirmation Hearings:

The Senate Section of the Joint Committee held hearings on December 10 and 18 to consider the nominations of Mr. William A. Anders, Mr. Victor G. Glinisky, Mr. Edward A. Mason, Mr. Marcus A. Rowden and Mr. Richard T. Kennedy to members of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. A joint hearing was held on December 11, with the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee to consider the nomination of Dr. Robert C. Seamans, Jr., as Administrator, Energy Research & Development Administration.

C. Changes in Committee Membership during 1974:

Chet Holifield, California:
Appointed, August 2, 1946.
Chairman, 97th Congress (1961-62), 98th Congress (1965-66), 91st Congress (1969-70).
Vice Chairman, 88th Congress (1963-64), 90th Congress (1967-68).

Member of the House Military Affairs Committee which considered the original proposed atomic energy legislation, enacted as the Atomic Energy Act of 1946, 1945-46.

Announced retirement from Congress at end of 93rd Congress and resigned from Committee on December 13, 1974. (John E. Moss, California, appointed to fill vacancy effective December 13, 1974).

Craig Hosmer, California:
Appointed, January 18, 1958.
Retiring from Congress effective at end of 93d Congress.

George D. Aiken, Vermont:
Appointed, January 29, 1959.
Retiring from Congress effective at end of 93d Congress.

Wallace F. Bennett, Utah:
Appointed, January 29, 1959.
Retiring from Congress effective at end of 93d Congress.

Alan Bible, Nevada:
Appointed, January 28, 1971.
Resigned from Congress on December 17, 1974.

Peter H. Dominick, Colorado:
Appointed, February 10, 1971.
Leaving Congress effective at end of 93d Congress.

Orval Hansen, Idaho:
Appointed, February 10, 1971.
Leaving Congress effective at end of 93d Congress.

VII. COMMITTEE PLANS FOR 94TH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION Included in tentative plans for special attention in connection with the Committee's legislative and oversight responsibilities in the First Session are the following:

Licensing of Nuclear Power Plants.
Price-Anderson Insurance and Indemnity Protection.

Provision of Uranium Enrichment Services.
Liquid Metal Breeder Reactor Demonstration Plant.

Energy Research and Development Program.
Nuclear Power Reactor Safety—The Rasmussen Study.

Policies Concerning the Supply of Natural Uranium.
Nuclear Power Reliability.

Nuclear Engineering Standards.
As the legislative work load permits, consideration will be given to the conduct of hearings on the Growth, Development and State of the Nuclear Industry as provided under Section 202 of the Atomic Energy Act.

THE 93D CONGRESS

(Mr. PRICE of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, as Congress draws to a close, I think this is an appropriate time to look back over the accomplishments of the last 2 years and examine the actions which resulted in what I consider to be a job well done.

If there is one word which can adequately express the achievements of the last 2 years, I think that word would be "reform." This Congress convened in 1973 with a feeling that it was time for a change in our Nation's policies and the way our Nation conducts its business. It began what at times became a painful process of restoring the balance between the executive and legislative branches of Government. This process will continue but the 93d Congress laid solid groundwork in its accomplishments.

The work of the 93d Congress falls basically into three large categories: political reform, economic reform, and social welfare. I would like to take a few minutes to briefly review major legislation passed in each of these areas.

POLITICAL REFORM

Possibly the most far-reaching of the political reforms enacted by the 93d Congress are the Federal Election Financing Act Amendments of 1974. This act significantly strengthened campaign finance laws, limiting not only contributions to any candidate from an individual or multi-candidate committee, but also limited campaign spending in primary and general elections for Federal representatives.

The Hansen committee changes realigned the jurisdiction of House committees and created a new Select Committee on Aging in addition to establishing a number of other revisions in committee workings. Rules changes have made House proceedings more open and effective. Revision in the steering and policy committee gives more Members a voice in House leadership decisions, while the rule limiting Members to one subcommittee chairmanship has opened up 35 chairmanships to less senior Members.

The Budget Control Act has done much to restore the constitutional balance between the legislative and executive branches of Government. New House and Senate Budget Committees will coordinate all new legislation with the Federal budget, thereby replacing the old piecemeal system with a new comprehensive spending policy. The Budget Office will assist both Houses with technological support, while the entire budget review system will help to keep a tighter rein on spending. Another provision of the act provides for impoundment control which in effect will insure Presidential action on congressional-approved spending.

CXX—2645—Part 31

Finally we have twice had the rare privilege of exercising congressional duties under the 25th amendment by the approval of a President's nomination of a Vice President of the United States.

ECONOMIC REFORM

The most pressing problem which has faced the 93d Congress is the economy. In the midst of a severe recession, Congress has taken decisive steps to help put the country back on its financial feet.

Anti-trust laws have been stiffened and penalties for violation have been increased, while new trade reform legislation will permit presidential reduction of tariff barriers to stimulate trade.

An increasing amount of energy legislation aims at making the Nation less dependent upon foreign energy sources. Price controls have been on crude oil while research will continue to look for feasible alternatives to fossil fuels. Nuclear energy research and development has been given top priority.

Direct aid to citizens who have been caught in the economic crunch has not been forgotten. In an effort to prevent food shortages and increase food production, Congress enacted the Food and Agriculture Act. And most recently the Emergency Jobs and Unemployment Assistance Act has been passed to fund an estimated 300,000 public service jobs throughout the country. Additional amendments will allow up to 13 weeks of federally financed extended unemployment benefits to those who have exhausted regular compensation and to those not covered under existing State unemployment laws. Also, unemployment benefits have been voted for workers not covered by the system.

At the local level, the Congress appropriated $38,862,000 for seven flood control and navigation projects which are designed to spur the economic growth of our area.

SOCIAL WELFARE

The 93d Congress showed an intense interest in the increasing needs of the people of this Nation. Major legislation passed included the Elementary and Secondary Education Act which extended the act of 1965 and authorized $29 billion in Federal aid to education over the next 4 years. Included in the act are programs for educational assistance for the handicapped, financial support for libraries, additional funds for Federal student loans and grants and an extension of the authorization for the National Foundation for the Arts and Humanities. Alcohol and drug abuse education, environmental education, and the new Community Schools Act to sponsor adult evening education and other community services were also funded. In addition, the Vietnam GI bill provides new education benefits for post-World War II veterans.

A new housing law was passed to benefit lower- and middle-income families with public housing and community development programs and increased FHA mortgage and loan limits. Mass transportation legislation provides for increased Federal aid for transportation operation and construction grants, while separate acts have authorized aid for highway and rail construction, airport development and motor vehicle and schoolbus safety requirements.

A number of new acts will assist the elderly and those on fixed incomes. Social security benefits have been increased 11 percent and a number of programs for older Americans have been instituted. Veterans' pensions have been increased by 10 percent. The Pension Reform Act has guaranteed workers that they will be able to live decently upon retirement, while the minimum wage law provides every worker with a viable wage.

Health and safety were two more concerns of Congress and a number of health and medical services acts were passed authorizing Federal funds for medical care and research. Programs under the disaster relief amendments, the fire prevention and control bill and the law enforcement assistance program were also approved.

Finally, in a series of environmental bills, Congress made certain that Americans would enjoy their Nation's water and clean air for years to come. The Safe Drinking Water Act, Solid Waste Disposal Act, Clean Air Act, and Surface Mining Control Act are of particular note in the field of environmental legislation.

Mr. Speaker, in noting these reforms, I know that I have missed many important pieces of legislation. However, it was not my purpose to read a litany of all that the 93d Congress has done for the Nation, but rather to point out the landmarks which I feel have characterized the mood of this Congress.

The 93d Congress has not solved all the ills of this Nation and I am sure that my colleagues agree that much is left to be done. However, the dedication and concern manifested by the Members of this Congress will not soon be forgotten. I was proud to serve with such a group and I am sure that the efforts of the 93d Congress will serve as a positive example to the Members of the incoming 94th Congress.

PROJECT DA VINCI BALLOON FLIGHT

(Mr. PRICE of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the Congress and public should be aware of the successful first flight of Project Da Vinci. Considerable valuable scientific data on the nature of the atmosphere, its movement, constituents, and electrical field were generated by this balloon flight of November 1. The 12-hour flight carried the heaviest manned scientific flight ever flown, including some 2,000 pounds of meteorological instruments, power supplies, and telemetry.

41956

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—HOUSE

December 20, 1974

Although balloons are hardly new, they have not been used in the lower atmosphere for such a complex and integrated set of measurements made while the balloon travels with the air. To mount such a project required scientists able to think outside the beaten path, and who were able to conduct a safe operation with different equipment and in an unfamiliar environment. That such an innovative and different project can be ventured is also a tribute to the organizations involved.

With this in mind, I wish to compliment the Atomic Energy Commission, principal sponsor of the flight, the U.S. Army Materiel Command, the National Geographic Society, and the many other agencies and private corporations that supported the flight. A Project Da Vinci fact sheet and selected news articles are herewith submitted for the RECORD:

PROJECT DA VINCI FACT SHEET

Project da Vinci is a manned, balloon mounted meteorological experiment in the lower atmosphere.

Purpose: To obtain a detailed picture of changes in the behavior of a body of air as it moves across the country. To determine usefulness of manned balloon flight as basic research technique.

Launch Date: November 1, 1974.

Launch Site: Las Cruces, New Mexico Municipal Airport.

Flight Path: 200 miles, northeast.

Flight Duration: 12 hours.

Crew: Jimmie Craig, Pilot; Vera Simons, Co-Pilot; Dr. Rudolf J. Engelmann, On-board scientist, and Otis Imboden, Photographer.

Sponsors: U.S. Atomic Energy Commission, National Geographic Society, and Atmospheric Sciences Laboratory, Department of the Army.

Experiments: Interrelated experiments to obtain detailed picture of changes in an air parcel as it travels across differing terrain, including temperature, humidity, air pressure, gravity waves, ultraviolet radiation, electrical fields, small and large air circulations, particulates, ozone and sulphur dioxide levels.

Total Payload: 4,900 pounds; 800 lbs. ballast; 600 lbs. gondola; 700 lbs. life support, radio and navigation equipment; 700 lbs. crew, and 2,100 lbs. scientific equipment.

Balloon:

Size—70 feet high, 70 feet in diameter.

Construction—vertical gores with reinforced, heat sealed seams.

Material—4 millimeter polyethylene.

Helium—150,000 cubic feet.

Gondola: Designed and constructed by Grumman Houston Corporation.

Size—10 feet in length, width and height.

Weight—600 lbs.

Material—aluminum and fiberglass.

Features—Two levels: top, with tables, platforms and swingout booms; lower, with quarters for crew, batteries, storage. Upper level fiberglass includes flotation core. Designed to absorb 3 G landing shock.

Related Project Dates:

September 3, 1974—Delivery of gondola to Sandia Laboratories for equipment mounting and tests.

September 3-24—Receipt and testing of all scientific equipment at Sandia.

September 24-27—Meeting in Albuquerque of crew with all scientists; crew training in gondola.

September 29—October 11—Crew high altitude conditioning.

[From the Seattle Times, Nov. 12, 1974]

BEEPING BALLOON PROBES LOWER ATMOSPHERE
(By Hill Williams)

It was a wild night. The 70-foot helium balloon floated majestically above the moonlit New Mexico landscape, emitting a loud "beep" every 12 seconds.

And on the ground, the drivers of four "chase vehicles" desperately drove up and down back-country roads trying to keep the balloon in sight.

But the flight, although the balloon stayed aloft only a third of the planned 36 hours, was a highly successful attempt to explore the lower atmosphere which, although we live in it and get our sunshine through it, is surprisingly little understood.

Known as Project da Vinci, the balloon flight was sponsored by the Atomic Energy Commission, the Army's Atmospheric Sciences Laboratory and the National Geographic Society. It lifted off from near Las Cruces, N. M., about 8:30 p. m. November 1 and landed about 200 miles northeast in the face of threatening thunderstorms.

The project, in the opinion of the on-board scientist, Dr. Rudolf J. Engelmann, was "a resounding success" and probably will lead to more.

Much of the automatically acquired measurements, including particle counts and measurements for an experiment planned by Abdul J. Alkeweeny of Battelle-Northwest in Richland, are still to be analyzed.

But there were surprises. For one thing, Engelmann reported that, even though a balloon moves as part of the air mass, there was enough air flow around the gondola to turn the propellers of anemometers, wind-measuring devices.

"This was a welcome surprise because it means there is enough air movement so that our activity in the gondola won't contaminate the air we're trying to study," Engelmann said.

The experiments included releasing smaller balloons to be tracked, dropping aluminum "needles" to see if it affects the atmosphere's electrical field and lowering instruments on 25-foot booms below the gondola.

And, of course, periodically emitting those loud "beeps."

"The sounder was an exciting thing," Engelmann said. (It was designed to find turbulence layers and temperature inversions much as a depth finder seeks them in water.)

"We pointed it down, up and horizontally. And we found we could pick up (atmospheric) structure in the horizontal as well as vertical. It was the first time we'd ever tried that."

Engelmann, a meteorologist, is deputy manager of environmental programs for the A. E. C.

What did the beep sound like?

"Well, it was an almost pleasant sound," Engelmann said. "You wouldn't object to it for a doorbell—if it weren't so loud."

Engelmann had a busy time aloft, but not quite as hectic as those on the ground who were trying to shine laser beams at the balloon's instruments, and release transmitters on balloons.

At one point, the four-vehicle caravan roared through a sleepy town at 2 a.m.—and had to explain to an alarmed constable what they were doing.

Engelmann said balloon-mounted instruments can make measurements far more subtle than those on aircraft, because of the disturbance of the aircraft itself.

One sensitive experiment measured the electrical field in the air itself, something that might be used to guide automatic pilots of aircraft.

"We managed to get measurements that if they are good, and I think they are, will be revealing whether it is possible to build one particular type of automatic pilot for helicopters," Englemann said.

[From the Science News, Nov. 9, 1974]

FOUR IN A BALLOON: SHORT BUT SWEET

For all the current attention being paid to lighter-than-air craft as future sources of transport, free ballooning (unaided by propellers or other driving forces) remains an uncertain endeavor, ever at the mercy of the fickle winds. Yet it is these same weather-linked responses, plus the lack of vibrating, polluting engines, that make the free balloon in many ways an ideal laboratory for studying the subtleties of the atmosphere. Thus, at 8:45 MST on the night of Nov. 1, a 70-foot plastic balloon carrying 150,000 cubic feet of helium gently lifted four people and more than a ton of scientific instrumentation into the air from Las Cruces Municipal Airport in New Mexico.

Known as Project da Vinci (SN: 9/21/74, p. 182), the flight had been delayed four times from its original Oct. 12 launching date—once for technical reasons and three times due to the vicissitudes of the weather. Aloft, the weather continued to leave no doubt about who was in charge, notably outrunning ground crews with winds of more than 45 miles per hour at the balloon's maximum altitude of 13,100 feet and finally blowing in an ominous thunderhead from the West. With that, safety-conscious officials chose to end the mission (formerly envisioned as lasting up to 36 hours), 11 hours 55 minutes after it began.

Yet, says Harold Ballard of the U.S. Army Electronics Command's Atmospheric Sciences Laboratory, chief ground-based scientist for the project, the flight was largely a scientific success. A longer mission would have given larger data samples, including more daylight observations, but at least 20 of the 25 experiments aboard performed exactly as planned, probing temperature, humidity, wind-shear patterns, electrical fields, atmospheric pollutants, and other phenomena.

A plan to release a score of small, helium-filled "tetroons" was abandoned when it turned out that air blowing through the 85-foot gap between the main balloon and the gondola beneath it would whip the tetroons away too fast for their assigned task of following the diffusion of atmospheric turbulence. There were problems with an infrared radiometer intended to measure the thermal brightness of objects on the ground, and a radar altimeter was muzzled when its frequency interfered with work at nearby White Sands Missile Range. Sensors to monitor the balloon's skin temperature were omitted before launch for fear that they might possibly damage the frail polyethylene fabric, and communications problems eliminated a plan for using ground-based processing of data from the flight to direct the release of ballast.

The other experiments, however, performed just as planned, particularly including a sulfur dioxide pollution sensor sent along by Battelle Pacific Northwest Laboratories in Washington and a group of electrical field detectors provided by Johns Hopkins Applied Physics Laboratory to aid design of remotely piloted aircraft. From the ground, more than 50 radiosondes were released to further probe the atmosphere, as laser beams shone upward to locate temperature inversions.

The da Vinci team will reunite late this month to discuss the mission, while the experimenters begin months of data analysis. Then comes the big decision: whether to do it again.

December 20, 1974

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—HOUSE

41957

perimeters begin months of data analysis. Then comes the big decision: whether to do it again.

[From the Albuquerque Journal, Nov. 4, 1974]

PIONEERING BALLOON TERMED SUCCESSFUL
(By John A. Webster)

The crew of a manned research balloon project Sunday termed their pioneer flight a success and said it would likely be the forerunner of future flights.

"I think it's the beginning of a new era in ballooning," said Vera Simons, the co-pilot and originator of Project da Vinci. "It was the first scientific balloon flight with four people aboard and the first since 1960."

Project da Vinci carried 25 experiments to collect data about the lower atmosphere. The flight was terminated early Saturday after one-third of its planned 36 hours because of bad weather, but officials said the shorter time would not greatly affect its scientific purpose.

"Twenty-three of the 25 experiments were very successful," said Keith Smith of Sandia Laboratories, which designed the scientific payload for the flight. "And we collected 95 per cent of the data" in a mobile van that followed the balloon on the ground.

Smith said it would take scientists several months to analyze the data from Project da Vinci, then final planning could begin for a similar flight proposed for next fall.

Ms. Simons and Jimmie Craig, the pilot of the balloon, also praised the flight as a "beautiful" ballooning experience.

Craig said the most anxious moment for the crew was during the launch period when the balloon was being raised into place above the gondola. There were some cross winds during launch preparations at Las Cruces, he said, and the balloon suffered a "severe jolt" when the crane hoisting it shifted gears.

"The balloon just shot up with all the power it had, then braked suddenly," he said. "It could have burst near the top."

When the balloon encountered an unexpected temperature inversion shortly after takeoff which impeded its rate of ascent, "we had a nagging worry that it (the jolt) might have opened a seam," Craig said.

Aside from that one worry, he said, the "balloon behaved like a lady. It performed consistently well and gave us no surprises. It was a marvelous trip and I'm looking forward to flying another."

He said the landing in a field four miles northeast of Wagon Mound, was a "storybook" landing with no damage to crew members or instruments.

The flight was designed to go east from Las Cruces into western Texas, but it was carried by winds on a northerly path to the northeastern New Mexico plains.

"You're at the mercy of mother nature and we could only do what she would allow us," Craig said.

Ms. Simons said the temperature during the flight never got below 23 degrees and the crew was "never uncomfortable." She said she and Craig each got about two hours sleep as they took turns piloting the balloon.

The project was jointly sponsored by the Atomic Energy Commission, the National Geographic Society and the Army's Atmospheric Sciences Laboratory at White Sands Missile Range.

UNITED STATES SHOULD RECONSIDER ITS U.N. GENERAL ASSEMBLY MEMBERSHIP

(Mr. KOCH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. KOCH. Mr. Speaker, with the conclusion of the 29th session of the United Nations General Assembly, it is appropriate that the United States give serious consideration to our continued membership in that world body. During the past year, I have been distressed over many of the United Nations' actions. In my judgment it has exhibited an overwhelming pro-Arab bias and anti-Israel prejudice and perpetrated injustices that have violated the very principles upon which the United Nations was founded. Most reprehensible has been the United Nations' failure to deal with the problem of terrorism and its welcome of Yasir Arafat, head of the Palestine Liberation Organization, as an honored guest. The PLO is a band of international guerrillas whose very existence mocks the principles of world law on which the United Nations was founded.

Next year marks the 30th anniversary of the United Nations. It is noteworthy that one of the last decisions made by the Assembly was to call for a conference next year to consider revisions of the United Nations Charter. At this time, one can only expect that any revisions will make things worse for democratic nations.

In anticipation of this conference and in reflection of the U.N.'s recent record, I think it is appropriate that the United States question whether we will continue our membership in the General Assembly. My own position is that we should at least withdraw from all General Assembly activities and cease funding its special agencies next year to demonstrate our disillusionment with that body and our unwillingness to continue to be a party to its immoral acts.

We should only retain our seat and veto on the Security Council for the practical purpose of protecting ourselves from some wanton action by the General Assembly.

On December 11, I supported the Gross amendment to bar appropriations for any of the United Nations' special agencies. While this motion failed, the House did move to prohibit any aid to UNESCO until that organization refrains from adopting politically oriented resolutions. It is this organization that recently cut off assistance to Israel.

Subsequently, the United States has announced it will not contribute to the special aid fund proposed to help countries hit by escalating commodity prices. I applaud this decision. The very countries that we would be aiding are those that have joined with the Arab block in perpetrating the General Assembly's anti-Israel tyranny. They have bowed to Arab blackmail and dominance and yet are still the victims of extortion by the oil sheiks. The way to reduce commodity prices for everyone is to put food, oil, and other commodities on the same bargaining table and negotiate concomitant worldwide price reductions for all, and eliminate artificially fixed prices.

Mr. Speaker, the United States is the only major country left in the United Nations willing to resist terrorism and speak out against the injustices perpetrated within the United Nations. We must make it clear that we have had enough of the U.N.'s irresponsibility—and that we are not going to benignly stand by while the right of Israel or any other country simply to exist is placed in question by marauding nations and countries unwilling to oppose terrorism.

CHARTER OF THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY OF THE UNITED STATES

(Mr. FRASER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. FRASER. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of our Democratic colleagues who helped to shape a constitution for our party, I submit the following:

On December 7, 1974, the Democratic Party of the United States adopted a charter providing for its governance. This action was taken in Kansas City, Mo., by the Conference on Democratic Policy and Organization which had been charged with this responsibility by the 1972 Democratic National Convention. The charter in its final form follows:

CHARTER OF THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY OF THE UNITED STATES

PREAMBLE

We, the Democrats of the United States of America, united in common purpose, hereby rededicate ourselves to the principles which have historically sustained our Party. Recognizing that the vitality of the Nation's political institutions has been the foundation of its enduring strength, we acknowledge that a political party which wishes to lead must listen to those it would lead, a party which asks for the people's trust must prove that it trusts the people and a party which hopes to call forth the best the Nation can achieve must embody the best of the Nation's heritage and traditions.

What we seek for our Nation, we hope for all people: individual freedom in the framework of a just society, political freedom in the framework of meaningful participation by all citizens. Bound by the United States Constitution, aware that a party must be responsive to be worthy of responsibility, we pledge ourselves to open, honest endeavor and to the conduct of public affairs in a manner worthy of a society of free people.

Under God, and for these ends and upon these principles, we do establish and adopt this Charter of the Democratic Party of the United States of America.

ARTICLE ONE

The Democratic Party of the United States of America

The Democratic Party of the United States of America shall:

1. Nominate and assist in the election of Democratic candidates for the offices of President and Vice President of the United States;

2. Adopt and promote statements of policy;

3. Assist state and local Democratic Party organizations in the election of their candidates and the education of their voters;

4. Establish standards and rules of procedure to afford all members of the Democratic Party full, timely and equal opportunities to participate in decisions concerning the selection of candidates, the formulation of policy, and the conduct of other Party affairs, without prejudice on the basis of sex, race, age (if of voting age), religion, economic status or ethnic origin, and, further, to promote fair campaign practices and the fair adjudication of disputes;

December 20, 1974

5. Raise and disburse moneys needed for the successful operation of the Democratic Party;

6. Work with Democratic public officials at all levels to achieve the objectives of the Democratic Party; and

7. Encourage and support codes of political ethics that embody substantive rules of ethical guidance for public officials and employees in federal, state and local governments, to assure that public officials shall at all times conduct themselves in a manner that reflects creditably upon the office they serve, shall not use their office to gain special privileges and benefits and shall refrain from acting in their official capacities when their independence of judgment would be adversely affected by personal interests or duties.

ARTICLE TWO

National Convention

Section 1. The Democratic Party shall assemble in National Convention in each year in which an election for the office of President of the United States is held.

Section 2. The National Convention shall be the highest authority of the Democratic Party, subject to the provisions of this Charter. The National Convention shall recognize the state and other Parties entitled to participate in the conduct of the national affairs of the Democratic Party, including its conventions, conferences and committees. State Party rules or state laws relating to the election of delegates to the National Convention shall be observed unless in conflict with this Charter and other provisions adopted pursuant to authority of the Charter, including the resolutions or other actions of the National Convention. In the event of such conflict with state laws, state Parties shall be required to take provable positive steps to bring such laws into conformity and to carry out such other measures as may be required by the National Convention or the Democratic National Committee.

Section 3. The National Convention shall nominate a candidate for the office of President of the United States, nominate a candidate for the office of Vice President of the United States, adopt a platform and act upon such other matters as it deems appropriate.

Section 4. The National Convention shall be composed of delegates who are chosen through processes which (i) assure all Democratic voters full, timely and equal opportunity to participate and include affirmative action programs toward that end, (ii) assure that delegations fairly reflect the division of preferences expressed by those who participate in the Presidential nominating process, (iii) exclude the use of the unit rule at any level, (iv) do not deny participation for failure to pay a cost, fee or poll tax, (v) restrict participation to Democrats only, and (vi) begin within the calendar year of the Convention provided, however, that fairly apportioned and openly selected state Party committees, elected no earlier than January 1st of the preceding mid-term Congressional election year, from states not having state conventions authorized to elect delegates, shall not be precluded from selecting not more than 25% of their respective state delegations according to the standards provided in this Charter and the By-Laws.

Section 5. The delegate vote allocable to each state shall be determined as provided in the By-Laws, consistent with a formula giving equal weight to population, which may be measured by electoral vote, and to the Democratic vote in elections for the office of President. The apportionment of delegates who are to be elected from units no larger than a Congressional district shall be determined by the state Democratic Party in accordance with the Call to the National Convention.

ARTICLE THREE

Democratic National Committee

Section 1. The Democratic National Committee shall have general responsibility for the affairs of the Democratic Party between National Conventions, subject to the provisions of this Charter and to the resolutions or other actions of the National Convention. This responsibility shall include: (i) Issuing the Call to the National Convention; (ii) conducting the Party's Presidential campaign; (iii) filling vacancies in the nominations for the office of President and Vice President; (iv) formulating and disseminating statements of Party policy; (v) providing for the election or appointment of a Chairperson, an Executive Vice Chairperson of the opposite sex, a Second Executive Vice Chairperson, a Treasurer, a Secretary and other appropriate officers of the National Committee and for the filling of vacancies; and (vi) all other actions necessary or appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Charter and the objectives of the Democratic Party.

Section 2. The Democratic National Committee shall be composed of: (i) the Chairperson and the highest ranking officer of the opposite sex of each recognized state Democratic Party; (ii) two hundred additional members apportioned to the states on the same basis as delegates to the National Convention are apportioned, provided that each state shall have at least two such additional members; (iii) the Chairperson of the Democratic Governors' Conference and two additional governors selected by the Conference; (iv) the Democratic Leader in the United States Senate and the Democratic Leader in the United States House of Representatives and one additional member of each body appointed by the respective leaders; (v) the Chairperson, two Executive Vice Chairpersons, the Chairperson of the National Finance Council, the Treasurer and the Secretary of the Democratic National Committee; (vi) the Chairperson of the Conference of Democratic Mayors and two additional mayors selected by the Conference; (vii) the President of the Young Democrats of America and two additional members selected by the organization biennially in convention assembled; and (viii) additional members as provided in Article Eleven of this Charter. No more than twenty-five additional members of the Democratic National Committee may be added by the foregoing members.

Section 3. Members of the Democratic National Committee apportioned to the states and those provided for in Article 11 who are not otherwise members by virtue of Party office, shall be selected by each state Democratic Party in accordance with standards as to participation established in the By-Laws of the Democratic Party for terms commencing on the day the National Convention adjourns and terminating on the day the next Convention adjourns. Such members shall be selected during the calendar year in which a National Convention is held, through processes which assure full, timely and equal opportunity to participate. Vacancies shall be filled by the state party as provided in the By-Laws. The members of the National Committee from each state shall be divided as equally as practicable between committeemen and committeewomen. Members of the Democratic National Committee who serve by virtue of holding public or party office shall serve on the Committee only during their terms in such office. Members of the Democratic National Committee added by the other members shall serve for the period designated at the time of their selection, but in no event beyond the day the next Convention adjourns. Members of the Democratic National Committee who serve by virtue of holding state Party office shall be selected by such Parties in accordance with standards as to participation established in the By-Laws.

Section 4. The By-Laws may provide for removal of members of the Democratic National Committee for cause by a two-thirds vote of the National Committee and may also require continued residence in the jurisdiction represented by the member and affirmative support for the Democratic Presidential and Vice Presidential nominees as a condition of continued membership thereon.

Section 5. The Democratic National Committee shall meet at least once each year. Meetings shall be called by the Chairperson, by the Executive Committee of the Democratic National Committee, or by written request of no fewer than one-fourth of the members of the Democratic National Committee.

Section 6. The Democratic National Committee shall submit to each National Convention, prior to the commencement thereof, a written report of the activities and affairs of the Democratic Party since the preceding National Convention.

ARTICLE FOUR

Executive Committee

Section 1. There shall be an Executive Committee of the Democratic National Committee, which shall be responsible for the conduct of the affairs of the Democratic Party subject to this Charter, the National Convention and the Democratic National Committee.

Section 2. The Executive Committee shall be elected by and serve at the pleasure of the members of the Democratic National Committee. The size, composition and term of office shall be determined by the Democratic National Committee, provided that no fewer than one-half of the members shall be elected from regional caucuses of members of the Democratic National Committee.

Section 3. The Executive Committee shall meet at least four times each year. Meetings shall be called by the Chairperson or by written request of no fewer than one-fourth of its members. The Executive Committee shall keep a record of its proceedings which shall be available to the public.

ARTICLE FIVE

National Chairperson

Section 1. The National Chairperson of the Democratic Party shall carry out the programs and policies of the National Convention and the Democratic National Committee.

Section 2. The National Chairperson shall be elected (i) at the first meeting of the Democratic National Committee held after the National Convention, and (ii) at a meeting of the Democratic National Committee held after the succeeding presidential election and prior to March 1 next, and (iii) whenever a vacancy occurs. The National Chairperson shall be elected and may be removed by a majority vote of the Democratic National Committee, and each term shall expire upon the election for the following term.

Section 3. The National Chairperson shall preside over meetings of the Democratic National Committee and of the Executive Committee. In the absence of the National Chairperson, the next highest ranking officer of the National Committee present at the meeting shall preside.

December 20, 1974

Section 4. The National Chairperson shall serve full time and shall receive such compensation as may be determined by agreement between the Chairperson and the Democratic National Committee.

ARTICLE SIX

Party Conference

The Democratic Party may hold a National Party Conference between National Conventions. The nature, agenda, composition, time and place of the Party Conference shall be determined by the Democratic National Committee. At a meeting held during the first calendar year after each Presidential election, the Democratic National Committee shall vote upon the question of whether such Party Conference shall be held.

ARTICLE SEVEN

Judicial Council

Section 1. There shall be a Judicial Council of the Democratic Party appointed by the Democratic National Committee, the function of which shall be to review and approve state plans for the selection of delegates to National Conventions and to decide challenges to such state plans, provided, however, that the right of the Democratic National Convention and Democratic National Committee to settle credential disputes concerning their respective bodies shall not be abridged.

Section 2. The Democratic National Committee shall determine and provide necessary support for the Judicial Council.

ARTICLE EIGHT

National Finance Council

Section 1. The Democratic National Committee shall establish a National Finance Council, which shall have general responsibility for the finances of the Democratic Party. The National Finance Council shall raise funds to support the Democratic Party and shall advise and assist state Democratic Parties and candidates in securing funds for their purposes.

Section 2. Members of the Finance Council shall be selected and approved as provided in the By-Laws, and the Chairman of the Finance Council shall be elected or approved by the Democratic National Committee.

ARTICLE NINE

National Education and Training Council

Section 1. There shall be a National Education and Training Council of the Democratic Party, which shall be responsible for the creation and implementation of education and training programs for the Democratic Party in furtherance of its objectives. The allocation of funds to the National Education and Training Council shall be provided by the Democratic National Committee and shall be budgeted at least one year in advance of anticipated expenditures. In order to encourage a lifetime of meaningful political participation for every Democrat, the National Education and Training Council shall attempt to reach every young citizen as they enter the electorate at eighteen years of age.

Section 2. The National Education and Training Council shall be composed of (i) eight members elected by the Executive Committee and (ii) the National Chairperson.

Section 3. The National Education and Training Council shall operate under the guidance of the Executive Committee.

ARTICLE TEN

Full Participation

Section 1. The Democratic Party of the United States shall be open to all who desire to support the Party and who wish to be known as Democrats.

Section 2. Discrimination in the conduct of Democratic Party affairs on the basis of sex, race, age (if of voting age), religion, economic status or ethnic origin is prohibited, to the end that the Democratic Party at all levels be an open party.

Section 3. In order to encourage full participation by all Democrats, with particular concern for minority groups, native Americans, women and youth, in the delegate selection process and in all Party affairs, as defined in the By-Laws, the national and state Democratic Parties shall adopt and implement affirmative action programs.

Section 4. The goal of such affirmative action shall be to encourage such participation in delegate selection processes and in Party organizations at all levels, as defined in the By-Laws, of the aforementioned groups as indicated by their presence in the Democratic electorate.

Section 5. This goal shall not be accomplished either directly or indirectly by the national or state Democratic Parties' imposition of mandatory quotas at any level of the delegate selection process or in any other Party affairs, as defined in the By-Laws.

Section 6. Performance under an approved affirmative action program and composition of the Convention delegation shall be considered relevant evidence in the challenge of any state delegation. If a state Party has adopted and implemented an approved and monitored affirmative action program, the Party shall not be subject to challenge based solely on delegate composition or solely on primary results.

Section 7. Notwithstanding Section 5 above, equal division at any level of delegate or committee positions between delegate men and delegate women or committeemen and committeewomen shall not constitute a violation of any provision thereof.

ARTICLE ELEVEN

General Provisions

Section 1. Democratic Party means the Democratic Party of the United States of America.

Section 2. The By-Laws shall provide for states in which the Democratic nominee for President or electors committed to the nominee did not appear on the ballot in elections used for apportionment formulae.

Section 3. For the purposes of this Charter, the District of Columbia shall be treated as a state containing the appropriate number of Congressional Districts.

Section 4. For the purposes of this Charter, Puerto Rico shall be treated as a state containing the appropriate number of Congressional Districts.

Section 5. Recognized Democratic Party organizations in areas not entitled to vote in Presidential elections may elect such voting delegates to National Conventions as the Democratic National Committee provides in the Call to the Convention.

Section 6. The Canal Zone, Guam and the Virgin Islands shall each have one vote on the Democratic National Committee, which vote shall be divided between two members when both are present, except as may otherwise be provided by the By-Laws.

Section 7. The By-Laws shall provide for regional organizations of the Party.

Section 8. To assure that the Democratic nominee for the office of President of the United States is selected by a fair and equitable process, the Democratic National Committee may adopt such statements of policy as it deems appropriate with respect to the timing of Presidential primaries and shall work with state Parties to accomplish the objectives of such statements, provided, however, that such statements of policy shall not be deemed to be binding upon any states in which the state laws are in conflict with such statements.

Section 9. The Democratic National Committee shall adopt and publish a code of fair campaign practices, which shall be recommended for observance by all candidates campaigning as Democrats.

Section 10. The Democratic Party shall not require a delegate to a Party convention or caucus to cast a vote contrary to his or her expressed preference.

Section 11. Voting by proxy shall not be permitted at the National Convention. Voting by proxy shall otherwise be permitted in Democratic Party affairs only as provided in the By-Laws of the Democratic Party.

Section 12. All meetings of the Democratic National Committee, the Executive Committee, and all other official Party committees, commissions and bodies shall be open to the public, and votes shall not be taken by secret ballot.

Section 13. The Democratic National Committee shall prepare and make available to the public an annual report concerning the financial affairs of the Democratic Party.

Section 14. In the absence of other provisions, Robert's Rules of Order (as most recently revised) shall govern the conduct of all Democratic Party meetings.

Section 15. There shall be authentic texts of this Charter published in all of the official languages of these United States, which include French and Spanish, as well as English. Authentic French and Spanish texts shall be approved by the Democratic National Committee during calendar year 1975.

ARTICLE TWELVE

Amendments, by-laws and rules

Section 1. This Charter may be amended by a vote of a majority of all of the delegates to the National Convention. This Charter may also be amended by a vote of two-thirds of the entire membership of the Democratic National Committee provided that at least thirty days written notice of the meeting and any proposed amendment has been given to all members of the National Committee and has been released to the national news media. This Charter may also be amended by a vote of two-thirds of the entire membership of any Democratic Party Conference called under the authority of this Charter for such purpose.

Section 2. By-Laws of the Democratic Party shall be adopted to provide for the governance of the affairs of the Democratic Party in matters not provided for in this Charter. By-Laws may be adopted or amended by majority vote of (i) the National Convention or (ii) the Democratic National Committee provided that thirty days written notice of any proposed By-Law or amendment has been given to all members of the National Committee. Unless adopted in the form of an amendment to this Charter or otherwise designated, any resolution adopted by the National Convention relating to the governance of the Party shall be considered a By-Law.

Section 3. Each official body of the Democratic Party created under the authority of this Charter shall adopt and conduct its affairs in accordance with written rules, which rules shall be consistent with this Charter, the By-Laws and other provisions adopted pursuant to authority of the Charter, including resolutions or other actions of the National Convention. The Democratic National Committee shall maintain copies of all such rules and shall make them available upon request.

Section 4. Each recognized state Democratic Party shall adopt and conduct its affairs in accordance with written rules. Copies of such rules and of any changes or amendments thereto shall be filed with the Democratic National Committee within thirty days following adoption.

December 20, 1974

RESOLUTION OF ADOPTION AND IMPLEMENTATION

Section 1. The Democratic Party of the United States of America, assembled in a Conference on Democratic Party Organization and Policy pursuant to resolution adopted by the 1972 Democratic National Convention and the Call to the Conference hereby adopts for the governance of the Party the Charter attached hereto.

Section 2. The Preamble and Articles I, III, VIII, IX, X, XI and XII of the Charter shall take effect and be in full force upon and after the adoption of the Charter by this Conference.

Section 3. All other Articles of the Charter shall take effect and be in full force upon and after the adjournment of the Democratic National Convention next succeeding this Conference.

Section 4. Until By-Laws are adopted pursuant to the Charter, the present Rules of the Democratic National Committee, the Delegate Selection Rules adopted by the Democratic National Committee and the National Convention Rules of the O'Hara Commission shall serve as the By-Laws of the Democratic Party, except insofar as they may be inconsistent with the provisions of the Charter.

December 7, 1974.

REPUBLICAN RESEARCH TASK FORCE'S REPORT

(Mr. FREY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. FREY. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the Republican research task force on reform and rule changes presented their recommendations on reform. While this is only a preliminary report—covering the most urgent areas—a more comprehensive report will be issued after the start of the 94th Congress.

I would like to thank BILL FRENZEL and the other members of the task force for responding so quickly and efficiently to this desperate need for congressional reform.

Despite the recent defeat of the Bolling committee report, several reform measures were adopted by the House and I believe the House must stand by these votes.

During the recent debate on congressional reform, the House voted for one-third minority staffing and against proxy voting. We in the minority party must insure the majority party does not evade these issues as they would if the Democrat leadership tries to reinstate proxy voting when the rules are presented in January.

In the task force's report we have called for the elimination of proxy voting and binding caucus instructions—unit rule—and have endorsed increases in minority staffing. There is no better argument for congressional reform than the manner in which the House has proceeded during the last week.

I urge my colleagues to read these recommendations and join us in reforming the House so we may better serve the people.

BILL TIMMONS

(Mr. FREY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. FREY. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret that we note that William E. Timmons, Assistant to the President for Legislative Affairs, will be leaving the White House at the end of this year. Bill has done a great job over the last 6 difficult years. I do not think there is any individual who has worked harder or who has had more problems thrown at him. Bill has expended every effort to try to solve the problems, and above all, has always kept his word. He lets you know where you stand; if he was unable to succeed in the request, he always let you know why.

I have had the pleasure to know Bill for some years before he took this position and have always had the highest regard for his ability, his integrity, his intelligence. I wish him well in whatever he may do, and know that all of us will miss him. I only hope that the people throughout this country can know how effective he has been in working for the national good. Good luck and best personal wishes.

AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY OPPOSES PROXIMIRE-HOSMER VITAMIN BILL

(Mr. ROGERS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I have great concern, shared by many Members of Congress, over the effect of a provision in the Proxmire-Hosmer vitamin bills (S. 2801 and H.R. 10093) which would have the effect of revoking the Delaney anticancer clause—section 409(c) (3) (a) of the Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act—as it applies to special dietary foods.

The Delaney anticancer clause presently prohibits the addition to human food of any additive which has been found to induce cancer when ingested by test animals.

A November 21, 1974, letter from the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare's Office of the General Counsel states:

The Proxmire-Hosmer bill overrules this anticancer clause, and would require that food ingredients which have been proved to produce cancer in test animals nevertheless be permitted for use in special dietary food (although not in other food) unless and until the Food and Drug Administration could prove that such ingredients ordinarily render the food injurious to health, i.e., that the ingredient does, in fact, cause cancer in humans.

At the present time, the Food and Drug Administration has no proof that these ingredients do cause cancer when consumed in food. Until now, the Agency has interpreted both the general safety provisions contained in section 402(a) (1) of the Act, and the specific anticancer clause contained in section 409 of the Act, to prohibit any cancer-causing substance from use in food in order to preclude any possibility that these substances may be harmful to consumers. If the Proxmire-Hosmer bill is enacted the Food and Drug Administration will be required to revoke this interpretation of the law with respect to special dietary food (although it will continue to apply to all other food)."

The Kyros vitamin bill (H.R. 16317), which I cosponsored and which has been reported out of the House Subcommittee on Public Health and Environment, would provide for the consumer's right to purchase vitamin and minerals without repealing the Delaney anticancer clause for the protection of persons from carcinogenic substances.

Recently the American Cancer Society has indicated its concern about provisions of the Proxmire-Hosmer amendments relating to the Delaney anticancer clause. These concerns are set forth in the following letter, which I would like to insert in the Record for the information of the Members:

AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY, INC.,
New York, N.Y., December 17, 1974.
Congressman PAUL G. ROGERS,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Public Health and Environment, Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN ROGERS: The American Cancer Society shares your concern about provisions of the Proxmire-Hosmer amendments to the Health Manpower Act which would take away from the Food and Drug Administration, the authority to regulate additives to dietary foods. The Society's Board of Directors took action in 1957 in support of the principles embodied in the Delaney Amendment, and is categorically opposed to any legislation which would delete those principles from food and drug control legislation.

The Society's policy regarding the control of food additives is clear, and is expressed in a letter, dated July 22, 1957, from the ACS Legislative Committee Chairman to Congressman John Bell Williams, Chairman, Health and Science Subcommittee of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee:

"We believe that in considering the health problem created by the increasing use of chemical additives in food the adage 'an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure' is particularly applicable.

"We strongly urge that your Committee recommend legislation to the Congress to strengthen the Food and Drug Administration and that this legislation embrace the following principles:

"1. That the proponent of any proposed chemical additive be required to conduct tests which will demonstrate that the additive is safe for human consumption in the manner in which it will be used, and that these tests include one to determine whether the additive may be carcinogenic to experimental animals. The adequacy of these tests should be determined by the Food and Drug Administration.

"2. That permission to use the additive be withheld until its safety has been demonstrated to the satisfaction of the Food and Drug Administration by the proponent.

"3. That no substance shall be approved found to induce cancer in man, or after tests provided in No. 1 above, found to induce cancer in animals."

This policy remains unaltered.
Sincerely,
GEORGE P. ROSEMOND, M.D.,
President.

MCPL REPORT ON INTERNATIONAL ENVIRONMENTAL ACTION

(Mr. FRASER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. FRASER. Mr. Speaker, the past 2 years have made us increasingly aware that food shortages, energy and resource deficits, difficulties in sustaining economic growth, and similar problems are intimately related and global in scope.

Moreover, we have come to know that solutions to these problems are going to put increasing pressures on the planetary environment, which is, after all, the fundamental source of all that makes human survival possible. As we work out methods for expanding food, energy, and resource production, as we seek to stimulate lagging economies, it is vital that our efforts take adequate account of the environment, which, if neglected, will cease to provide the wherewithal to sustain life as we know it.

December 20, 1974

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—HOUSE

I believe my colleagues will take some encouragement, as I do, from knowing that the 2-year-old environment program of the United Nations has been working on a variety of fronts to protect and conserve our global environment. Though the U.N. has been subject to some criticism recently, its carefully conceived and well-administered environment program, under the leadership of Maurice Strong, is daily working on our behalf and on behalf of our children to preserve the human environment. I know of few international efforts in which our investment is more wisely spent.

Recently, several of us who belong to Members of Congress for Peace Through Law have examined the U.N. environment program in some detail. The results of the MCPL inquiry have been published in a report entitled—"What's Happened Since Stockholm?" In order that the Congress may fully inform itself on this vital and promising program, I include the full text of this study in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

WHAT'S HAPPENED SINCE STOCKHOLM?
INTERNATIONAL ENVIRONMENTAL ACTION SINCE THE 1972 STOCKHOLM CONFERENCE ON THE HUMAN ENVIRONMENT

(A report by the World Environment and International Cooperation Committee of Members of Congress for Peace Through Law)

PREFACE

In June, 1972, after more than two years of preparation, 113 national delegations, representatives from international organizations, and a host of nongovernmental observers met in Sweden for the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment. First proposed by the Economic and Social Council and endorsed in a UN General Assembly resolution of 1968, the conference had as its theme the urgent reminder "Only One Earth."

The conference has come to be regarded as perhaps the high-water mark in a sudden tide of ecological awareness that opened the decade. Attended by no little controversy—generated among groups of nations, by different conservation priorities and strategies, and by the multitude of interests implied in the conference title—the effect of this convocation was nevertheless to energize the global community in regard to its total environment.

The questions that remained after the assembly were whether the lofty and at times seemingly contradictory goals of the participants could be made a reality, whether the numerous and pressing tasks of stemming and preventing global pollution could be handled on the broad scale necessary for success, whether the many disputes which arose during debate could be resolved, and, in brief, whether a common front for the preservation and improvement of the world's environment could be developed and sustained.

These questions have assumed an even more dramatic significance in the intervening two years. World-wide shortages of fuels, foodstuffs and other resources, together with regional cases of disastrous drought, desertification, and flooding and mounting evidence of the existence of trans-boundary environmental degradation have thrown into even sharper relief one of the working postulates of the Stockholm conference—that the problems of the human environment are interwoven on a global scale and must be approached on the same scale. In this sense, the 1972 assembly came none too soon.

Since the conference, what action has resulted from this emerging awareness of the interrelatedness of resources, population, economic development and the natural environment? What is envisioned for the future?

In the months since Stockholm, the original Environment Secretariat in the UN has been transformed into the UN Environment Programme and has developed from the Stockholm resolutions a comprehensive, well-conceived, and practical Action Plan for grappling with the problems of man's habitat. The UNEP promises to become an increasingly effective force for international environmental improvement. It has received widespread support in the global community. As members of MCPL's World Environment and International Cooperation Committee, several of whom attended the Stockholm Conference, we believe that the UNEP strategies described in the following report merit the attention and the support of all Americans concerned with the future of our planet and our home.

GILBERT GUDÉ,
Member of Congress, Chairman, World Environment and International Cooperation Committee.

DONALD M. FRASER,
Member of Congress.

CHARLES A. MOSHER,
Member of Congress.

ADLAI E. STEVENSON III,
U.S. Senate, Vice-Chairman, World Environment and International Cooperation Committee.

CLAIBORNE PELL,
U.S. Senate.

HARRISON A. WILLIAMS, Jr.,
U.S. Senate.

INTRODUCTION

International Environmental Action Since the 1972 Stockholm Conference on the Human Environment

The Conference on the Human Environment was productive in a number of ways. Besides drawing world-wide attention to a complex set of related issues, it passed three resolutions, calling for a World Environment Day (June 5th), for the cessation of nuclear weapons tests, especially in the atmosphere, and for the convening of a second conference on the human environment at some future date.

On an institutional level, the conference adopted resolutions urging the establishment of a Governing Council for Environmental Programmes, a voluntary fund for the promotion of these programmes, and a small secretariat for initiating and administering them. Most significantly, the conference made 109 separate recommendations for environment-related activity.

The following December, at its 27th Session, the UN General Assembly adopted the conference proposals essentially intact. It created a 58-member Governing Council, established the UN Environment Programme and its voluntary fund, set up an Environment Coordination Board among UN agencies, selected environment conference Secretary-General Maurice F. Strong of Canada as UNEP's first Executive Director, and agreed unanimously on Nairobi, Kenya as the site for UNEP headquarters. The 109 conference recommendations were endorsed by the General Assembly and became, in effect, the environmental agenda for UNEP.

In the intervening two years, the UNEP has assumed a concrete form, moving from the general blueprint drawn up at Stockholm to a functioning reality. In his Environmental Message to the Congress in February, 1973, President Nixon proposed an initial expenditure of $100 million for the first five years of the UN Environment Fund. He later recommended that the U.S. contribute 40% of this fund.

In June, 1973, the 58-member Governing Council met for ten days in Geneva to begin the process of giving specific shape to the Stockholm resolutions, to agree on procedures for the environmental fund, and to work out the organizational structure, program priorities, and operating philosophy for UNEP.

Early in October, President Jomo Kenyatta of Kenya presided at the opening of UNEP headquarters in the 29-story, circular tower of Nairobi's International Conference Center. Meanwhile, the 28th General Assembly, in New York, approved the plans contained in the report of UNEP's Governing Council, ratified the decision to sponsor a Conference and Exposition on Human Settlements (Vancouver, Canada, May 31–June 11, 1976), and requested a detailed survey from UNEP on the world's living marine resources threatened with depletion.

In an action with important implications for international environmental problems, the General Assembly also approved a resolution on "cooperation in the field of environment concerning natural resources shared by two or more states." The resolution called for "the establishment of adequate international standards for the conservation" of these resources and for regular UNEP reports on "measures taken" to satisfy this directive.

The second meeting of UNEP's Governing Council was held in March 1974, in Nairobi and was described by one observer as "businesslike." In a sense, the Government Council, with 16 African, 12 Asian, 10 Latin American, 6 Eastern European and 13 Western European and other members, is a microcosm of the world, and hence of its environmental problems and approaches. Again, the spirit of cooperation that makes possible the resolution of such problems survived the acid test of international politics.

I. UNEP: SCOPE AND STRATEGY

Confronting the problems of pollution on a planetary basis requires, first of all, a strategic view of purposes and possibilities. Without a conceptual framework, one which is acceptable to a majority of states and practical in terms of its aims, any multilateral efforts would quickly founder in the sheer variety and magnitude of environmental tasks and individual nations' priorities.

Policy aims

The UNEP Governing Council, at its first session, developed three general policy objectives for the program, stating its scope in broad terms:

—to provide improved knowledge for integrated and rational management of the resources of the biosphere and for safeguarding human well-being, as well as ecosystems;

—to encourage and support an integrated approach to the planning and management of development, including that of natural resources, so as to take account of environmental consequences;

—to assist all countries, especially developing countries, to deal with their environmental problems and to help mobilize additional financial resources to this end, with a view to promoting the full participation of developing countries in national and international efforts for the preservation and enhancement of the environment.

UNEP as catalytic agent

The organizational strategy evolved by UNEP under Maurice Strong's leadership rests on the conception of the Environment Programme, not as a large operating bureaucracy or specialized agency, but rather as a catalytic agent. It aims to be a small and efficient vanguard, innovating, stimulating, coordinating, integrating, monitoring, and supplementing activities by other organs at the local, national, regional or international levels.

UNEP will not start anew but will seek to build on, guide, and enhance existing programs. It will sponsor research and action in areas which have hitherto been neglected, overlooked, or lost between jurisdictions. UNEP will not deal with exclusively national problems. Rather, it will concentrate on those which have transnational or regional consequences or which require multilateral solutions.

Nor is it foreseen that UNEP's small staff of some 200 people, including 80 professionals (engineers, environmental scientists, attorneys, economists, and planners) will undertake remedial programs itself. It will, instead, initiate research, pilot programs, consultations, etc., aimed at helping national governments and regional and international institutions to take remedial or preventive measures.

The Environmental Dimension

Maurice Strong, speaking to the UN General Assembly in November, 1974, described the Environmental Programme in these terms:

"UNEP approaches its own role on the premise that environment is not an issue or discipline separate and apart from others, but a new dimension which must be brought to bear on the whole range of activities which affect the health of the environment."

In this role, UNEP operates primarily through existing institutions. It helps the World Meteorological Organization, for example, to identify and fill gaps in its global monitoring system for environmental purposes. It works with the International Atomic Energy Authority on potential nuclear power hazards to the environment, especially in regard to transportation of nuclear materials. It ensures that the programs of the Food and Agriculture Organization do not have an adverse impact on the area of concern of the World Health Organization or vice versa. Where necessary, UNEP is prepared to add funds to existing programs for their environmental dimension.

As an integrating mechanism for issues and solutions, UNEP will play an analogous role among nations, stimulating concerted effort on common environmental problems. One means of doing this job is a network of program activity centers which will enable national institutions in a particular field to cooperate in achieving common aims.

The State of the Environment

A primary responsibility of the UNEP Executive Director is the preparation of a State of the Environment Report, designed, in Strong's words, "to point up the major environmental issues requiring the attention of policy makers and the public." Along with this report, UNEP is to prepare regular reviews of current environmental activities. The first of these reviews is being readied for the third session of the Governing Council. It will cover the subjects of arid and semi-arid lands, tropical forests and woodlands, soil loss and water quality.

These documents form the foundation of UNEP's three-tiered approach to its work. Level One—the State of the Environment Report and the topical reviews—aims at providing information on the principal environmental problems and efforts, in order to identify gaps, frame objectives, and set priorities. Level Two consists of the program of specific actions proposed to satisfy those objectives and priorities. Level Three covers the particular tasks which have been approved for support by the fund of UNEP as a means of facilitating implementation of the overall program set forth in Level Two. Normally, the UNEP fund will serve as "seed money" and will not support more than a portion of the total expenditures relating to any particular program activity.

Marshaling Resources

UNEP is not endeavoring to develop an "in-house" research and problem-solving capacity adequate to all environmental issues. Instead, a considerable portion of UNEP's effort will be contracted to qualified national and international institutions, private and official. This will strengthen the world-wide research base in the environmental field, capitalize on existing experience and knowledge, and avoid duplicated effort.

Likewise, UNEP is serving a "clearing house" function, which, in Strong's terms, "will facilitate the matching of the needs for technical assistance and training with the facilities available to these needs. UNEP's own rather limited funds will then be directed primarily to filling gaps and meeting special needs."

II. UNEP'S PRIORITIES: THE ACTION PLAN

The refining and assigning of priorities to the 109 recommendations of the Stockholm Conference by the UNEP staff and Governing Council has reflected three primary considerations: (1) the pressing need to increase and exchange knowledge of the biosphere; (2) the need to deal first with the most critical areas of environmental degradation; and (3) the need to carry forward in practical ways the emphasis given by the Stockholm Conference to the quality of human life. At the same time, the staff and council have given considerable attention to avoiding future environmental difficulties by promoting better "foresight" mechanisms, long-range planning with an environmental component, new strategies of development, and greater awareness of the long-term solutions and short-term environmental costs.

Six Priorities

In keeping with its overall policy objectives, the Governing Council has approved these six areas for priority action by UNEP:

1. Human Settlements: Human Health, Habitat and Well-Being. In this field, UNEP seeks to raise the general level of human health by attacking endemic, environmentally related health hazards and by preventing threats to human health from food, air, land and water contaminants. Vital to this effort is the development of improved land-use criteria and techniques for the optimum utilization of dwelling space.

UNEP has already made a modest start on translating these priorities into action through the establishment of environmental health standards and the monitoring of pollutants and toxic substances in air, food, soils, and water in conjunction with WHO. In January, 1975, an expert workshop will be conducted in the Netherlands, leading to an international register of potentially toxic chemicals.

On another front, Habitat, the Vancouver Conference-Exposition on Human Settlements in 1976, aims at producing answers to the problems of human environmental degradation resulting from "transitional" or "spontaneous" settlements—the slums, bidonvilles, and favelas which have proliferated and swollen as a result of mass rural-urban migration. In a related action, the UNEP Governing Council has approved a $4 million, 4-year allocation to assist in establishing an International Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation following a recommendation to the General Assembly by the UN Economic and Social Council.

2. Land, Water and Desertification. Here UNEP is working to control the loss of productive soil from erosion, salination, and desertification. As a beginning, UNEP is developing a world soil map, showing resources and threats to them, in an effort to understand climatic and man-made effects on soil conditions. The urgency of this task is reinforced by the finding that much of the soil lost in the Sahel—scene of widespread drought and famine—may not be recoverable.

As in other priority tasks, UNEP is concentrating on specific but representative target areas; arid and grazing lands in North Africa and West Asia; tropic woodlands and forests in Latin America, where the impact of timbering on ecosystems is under study; and parks and reserves in Latin America and Africa and their contribution to local ecosystems. Preparations are being made for major UNEP involvement in the UN Water Conference scheduled for 1977 in Buenos Aires.

3. Trade, Economics, Technology and its Transfer. Consideration of trade, economics, and technology is fundamental to the overall problem of developing practical environmental management techniques. The charge to UNEP in this area has special significance for the developing world, which has a certain advantage over its more industrialized cousins in that it is not yet totally committed to the high-pollution, high-waste technologies that the developed states have inherited. UNEP thus fosters the discovery and adoption of low-waste or non-waste manufacturing technologies, industrial complexes wherein technologies are grouped so that one's waste output is another's material or energy input, and other methods of avoiding or minimizing industrial pollution.

In this same connection, UNEP is responsible for assisting states in the formulation of environmental guidelines for development projects; for promoting studies that safeguard against the negative aspects of transferring industrial technologies from the developed states; for examining the environmental costs, risks, and benefits of alternatives industry siting plans; for examining the optimum uses of natural products and their role in ameliorating pollution resulting from production of synthetic substitutes; for promoting the training of personnel in techniques which incorporate environmental factors into development planning; and for exploring ways of encouraging development assistance that will offset any increase in costs resulting from the use of environmentally sound technologies.

Whatever their level of development, states are concerned with the differential impact of environmental considerations on their economies. For this reason, UNEP is charged with helping to ensure that environmental measures do not create non-tariff trade barriers, to maximize opportunities and assess risks arising from changes in comparative economic advantage, to seek ways of offsetting negative trends in trade caused by environmental concerns, and to assess the feasibility of a global early-warning system for notifying countries whose health or trade may be affected by the export of environmentally harmful products or by environmental measures.

4. Maritime Domain. In the oceans, UNEP's mandate includes assessing problems in the marine environment, surveying the activities of international and regional organs dealing with the management and conservation of living resources, and assisting nations to identify and control land-based sources of ocean pollution. UNEP is also working with the Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO) to achieve a deadline for prohibiting ocean oil discharges and to seek measures minimizing accidental spills. Similarly, it is urging the International Whaling Commission to adopt a ten-year commercial whaling moratorium.

In a pilot project aimed at establishing a monitoring mechanism for the marine ecosystem, UNEP will concentrate first on the Mediterranean, which exhibits, often in extreme form, many of the pollution problems found in semi-enclosed bodies of water. Plans for this project are to be developed at a meeting of coastal states and international agencies in Spain early in 1975.

5. Conservation of Nature, Wildlife and Genetic Resources. UNEP projects in this field will address not only the obvious need for protecting plants and animals, especially rare or endangered species, but also the need to create regional and national institutions for collecting, evaluating and conserving gene pools of plants and animals in order to maintain genetic diversity. Without such gene banks, the tendency to narrow genetic resources through neglect or through generations of selective breeding may result in a future inability to develop hardy and resistant strains of flora and fauna.

Under this same program area, UNEP will assist in investigating the impact of human activities on ecosystems. It foresees the identification and protection of unique and representative natural ecosystems and sites and preparation of a catalogue of threatened species of crop-plants, fish, domestic animals and micro-organisms, as well as the compilation of a clean-rivers register.

6. Energy. Producing energy involves the conversion of matter into heat, a reversal of nature's general tendency to convert heat into matter. This reversal may have dire thermal consequences for the biosphere. Therefore the Governing Council has invited UNEP to prepare a state-of-the-art report on energy and energy technology as a first step toward understanding the energy cycle, developing environmentally sound energy policies, and formulating specific energy and environment projects for UNEP. A panel of experts will meet early in 1975 to examine the subject of energy and the environment.

Earthwatch

As a separate priority, the Governing Council is seeking the cooperation of the international community in building a worldwide detection mechanism—Global Environmental Monitoring System (GEMS)—to identify pollutants and insect- or wind-borne diseases likely to affect weather, climate, and living organisms. At the same time, the council wishes to develop internationally agreed upon "primary protection standards" as a basis for assessing the significance of pollution levels for human health. UNEP has therefore convened a technical meeting for the purpose of defining and developing monitoring programs and protection standards for submission to the council.

In a related move, the council has authorized UNEP to undertake the pilot phase of the International Referral System (IRS), aimed at drawing upon and exchanging environmental expertise available throughout the world. Information specialists met in Heidelberg in the autumn of 1973 to work out the design for IRS.

Education, Training, Assistance and Information

UNEP activity in this area aims at supporting and encouraging: environmental information collection and dissemination mechanisms; the training of experts in various environmental sciences, especially on the local level; education programs which will increase public awareness of environmental matters; and expanded research capabilities, particularly in developing countries.

III. UNEP: ORGANIZATION AND FUNDING

The UNEP organizational structure is a straightforward one and is depicted in abbreviated form in the accompanying chart. Naturally, this agency is responsible to the UN General Assembly and to the will of its members as expressed in the resolutions of the Assembly. Specific direction of UNEP policy and activities is provided by the 58-member UNEP Governing Council, which meets yearly to review, amend and approve proposals made by UNEP's Executive Director or by member nations.

Although the Fund of the UN Environment Programme is in some measure a separate entity, its Director also functions as the Assistant Executive Director of UNEP for Environment Fund and Management. The distinction between the Fund and the environmental secretariat stems from the dual funding of UN environment efforts through both the regular budget and the voluntary fund. UNEP also works closely with the UN Environment Coordinating Board to mesh UNEP activities and policies with the environment-related programs of other agencies in the UN family.

Private sector involvement

Additionally, non-governmental organizations play an important role in the Environment Programme, as they do in most other UN functions and agencies. Individual organizations and "peak" groups or coalitions such as the North American Committee of NGOs Concerned with the Environment may make policy and program inputs to the UNEP decision-making process and to their national governments, as well as send representatives with observer status to environment conferences and working sessions. Representatives of non-governmental groups meeting in Nairobi in March, 1974, agreed to set up an NGO Environment Service Center to facilitate cooperation between UNEP and private organizations. Moreover, UNEP has joined with such groups as the Sierra Club and the International Institute for Environment and Development on specific cooperative activities. In November, 1973, the International Chamber of Commerce established in Nairobi an International Center for Industry and the Environment. The Center was welcomed by UNEP Executive Director Maurice Strong as "providing the required link between UNEP and world industry."

Official participation

Revealing the early U.S. awareness of the need for immediate and well-supported remedial and preventive action in the global environment, the U.S. Advisory Committee on the 1972 Stockholm Conference and its Chairman, Senator Howard Baker, recommended in their report to the Secretary of State the establishment of a voluntary fund for the environment with an initial capitalization of $500 million for five years. This concept was well received in both the House and Senate. The fund was later organized, first as the Environment Fund and later as the Fund of the UN Environment Programme to emphasize its association with UNEP, with a five-year goal of $100 million.

To date, some 50 countries—26 in the developed world and 24 in the developing category—have pledged firm contributions to the Fund totalling $96.5 million for the five-year period 1973-1977. It is estimated that, if those nations whose pledges have been made on an annual basis continue their pledges at their current rate, the Fund will achieve its objective of $100 million for five years with relatively little difficulty.

To this Fund objective, the United States made an initial pledge of $40 million. In explaining to the Congress President Nixon's 1973 request for 40% U.S. funding of the UNEP Fund, the Secretary of State's Special Assistant for Environmental Affairs, Christian A. Herter, Jr., noted that this amount: "... represents one of the lowest (if not the lowest) initial U.S. contribution made to a new UN voluntary fund in the launching of which the United States has had a substantial national interest."

We also expect that the dollars we spend will be more than compensated for by the benefits to be derived, bearing in mind that some of the activities are economically significant (that is, might harmonize standards, help agriculture, facilitate trade, etc.), are needed to prevent a further degradation in the global environment, and can only be effectively dealt with multilaterally. (Emphasis added.)

In view of dwindling world food reserves, fertilizer scarcity, and other commodity shortages which have become acute in the 18 months since those words were spoken, Mr. Herter's remarks have an element of understated prophecy about them. It has become increasingly evident, for example, that the U.S. can continue to serve as the world's primary reserve granary only at considerable expense in terms of storage costs, rising domestic food prices and the like. Viewed in this light, an annual U.S. investment of $8 million in UNEP's efforts to improve techniques globally for conserving soil, air, water and other resources vital to food production seems very small indeed. This is but one of the ways in which the American contribution to UNEP will have consequences of direct benefit to the U.S. and its citizens.

Moreover, although the U.S. pledge to the Fund is a large amount of the total, it represents less on a per capita basis than has been pledged by many other nations, including several in the developing world. Pledges per 1,000 of population for countries selected from various geographical regions are shown below in relation to capacity to contribute as represented by Gross National Product per capita (pledges as of 9/15/74).

Country	1971 GNP per capita	1974 UNEP pledge per 1,000 population
Argentina.....	$1,239	$1.62
Australia.....	2,870	37.16
Botswana.....	160	2.29
Canada.....	4,140	66.27
Cuba.....	510	2.71
Denmark.....	3,430	78.99
Finland.....	2,550	31.77
France.....	3,360	26.69
Federal Republic of Germany.....	3,210	34.49
Hungary.....	1,200	1.90
Iran.....	450	1.23
Jamaica.....	720	1.01
Japan.....	2,130	13.87
Kenya.....	160	2.34
Mexico.....	700	3.45
Norway.....	3,130	109.53
Philippines.....	240	.24
Saudi Arabia.....	540	1.91
Swaziland.....	190	5.80
Sweden.....	4,240	120.42
United States of America.....	5,160	38.34

Source: Compiled from figures supplied by UNEP and the World Bank.

Uses of the fund

The Fund of the UN Environment Programme is restricted in its use to paying for direct, substantive activities in the field of the global environment, for expenses incurred in supporting these activities, and for the costs of administering the fund itself. The costs of the UNEP secretariat, of providing services to the UNEP Governing Council, and certain other costs of the total UNEP program are borne by the regular UN budget. While this division of funding appears somewhat complicated, it ensures that UNEP Fund monies pledged by individual countries are channeled more toward substantive environmental activities and less toward the overhead of the Environment Programme.

Within the Fund are four major categories or accounts, shown below together with an explanation of the spending category and the 1974 and 1975 funding levels.

(a) Fund Programme Activities are the program's constituent projects which the Governing Council has approved for funding. The Fund Programs, which is limited to the resources of the Environment Fund, does not, however, constitute the entire UNEP effort on behalf of the environment: Authorized 1974: $18,000,000; authorized 1975: $20,000,000.

(b) The Fund Programme Reserve is an amount set aside each year to meet unforeseen needs, finance unanticipated projects or phases of projects, or meet other needs as determined by the Governing Council. The reserve is generally established at 10% of the resources allocated for Fund Programme Activities but was reduced by the Governing Council for 1975: Authorized 1974: $1,600,000; authorized 1975: $900,000.

(c) Programme Support Costs are those overhead expenses (such as travel, salaries for program management personnel and similar positions, furniture, equipment, office supplies and common staff services) incurred in carrying out specific Fund Programme Activities: Authorized 1974: $1,715,000; authorized 1975: $2,091,000.

(d) Administrative Costs of the Fund are, as the account caption suggests, the expenses associated with managing and overseeing the Fund itself: Authorized 1974: $1,186,000; authorized 1975: $1,434,000.

Additionally, the Governing Council has established a Financial Reserve account to ensure the financial liquidity and integrity of the Fund, to compensate for uneven cash income and to meet similar requirements. The level of the Financial Reserve is currently maintained at 7.5% of total fund resources for the years 1973 and 1974: $900,000 was set aside in 1973 and $750,000 is expected to be credited to this account in 1974.

Distribution of the Fund

In 1974, resources were apportioned by the Governing Council for Fund Programme Activities as follows (as of 1 October):

Priority areas Project Category	U.S. dollars
A. Human settlements, health, habitat and well-being.....	1,996,787
B. Land, water and desertification (ecosystems).....	432,750
C. Education, training, assistance and information.....	710,828
D. Trade, economics and transfer of technology.....	112,300
E. Oceans (marine pollution).....	169,182
F. Conservation of nature, wildlife and genetic resources (including natural reserves).....	552,500
G. Energy and environment.....	242,147
Earthwatch
A. Global environmental monitoring systems.....	950,300
B. International referral system.....	1,205,850
Other (Integrated planning and management methods, future programs, "outer limits," natural disasters, ecodevelopment).....	549,130
Additional contributions to ongoing 1973 projects.....	125,000
Total	7,046,774

(Figures include only UNEP share of projects undertaken in conjunction with other agencies. Project duration varies from several days to 42 months.)

CUMULATIVE GEOGRAPHICAL DISTRIBUTION OF 1973 AND 1974 FUND PROJECTS

	United States (dollars)	Percent
Regional:
Africa.....	504,240	4
Asia and Far East.....	679,360	5
Europe.....	93,500	1
Latin America.....	753,450	6
Western Asia.....	335,350	3
Sub-total, regional.....	2,365,900	19
Global.....	9,841,214	81
Grand total.....	12,207,114	100

IV. ENVIRONMENT AND DEVELOPMENT

Conflicting Views

In the period before and after the 1972 Stockholm Conference, a major and often bitter debate centered on the interaction between environmental concerns and economic development programs. On the one hand, developing countries considered that pollution was principally a product and a problem of the developed world. They resisted the notion that they should pay for global clean-up efforts either directly or indirectly, through non-tariff trade barriers in the form of environmental standards, through environmental constraints on development projects, through losses of commodity markets to recycled goods and similar economic effects. To the developing world, the sudden concern of industrialized nations for the environment was a pretext for curbing or terminating economic growth in the Third World or, at least, for reducing development assistance. Moreover, the way in which the issue was posed—concentrating on industrial effluents, etc.—led underdeveloped countries to believe that the more advanced nations had no appreciation for the impoverishment of the human environment that stems, not from too much industrial growth, but from too little.

For their part, developed nations were alarmed by what they viewed as a cavalier attitude toward environmental degradation. They also felt that the additional costs of industrial pollution safeguards might give a comparative advantage to developing nations, where the relatively higher absorptive capacity of the environment would draw effluent-producing industries into "pollution havens," thus causing a shift of manufacturing firms. They resisted, for a time at least, the concepts of "additionality" and "compensation" (whereby developing countries would be remunerated for the extra costs of pollution control in development projects or for trade losses stemming from environmental codes). They came to see the developing world's approach to the international environment as merely an effort to increase foreign aid.

In the intervening two years, the fears and suspicions of both developed and developing nations, while not wholly eradicated, have diminished substantially, leading to a healthier working atmosphere. There are several reasons for this attenuation of concern. Not all are positive.

LIMITS TO GROWTH

At the outset, the concern of the developing nations was greatly stimulated by the fact that the advent of the environmental movement paralleled the evolution of zero-growth or limits-to-growth models among the advanced countries. Since both approaches address themselves to the condition of world resources, the zero-growth and environmental movements were seen as two sides of the same coin. Environmental rehabilitation seemed to mean restricting economic development.

Further reflection and the marshaling of new or available research have shown that the anticipated antagonisms between environment and development are not so sharp as was first thought. To quote Maurice Strong, "The answer lies not in stopping growth but in a drastic change in our conception of the purpose of growth and a corresponding reorientation of the growth process." Indeed, while both objectives cannot be fully maximized simultaneously, they can be integrated much more harmoniously than some expected. Developing states have discovered that environmental safeguards are less costly than foreseen. They will also eventuate in future savings to the extent that they avoid the pollution clean-up costs now being experienced by industrialized economies. Data collected by the World Bank, for example, show that inclusion of environmental safeguards in developing projects increases costs by an acceptable two to four percent. By contrast, at the time of the Founex Report (a preliminary study of the environment-development issue made by development economists a year before Stockholm), it was estimated that such costs might be increased by 20 to 25%.

Environmental Insurance

As a result of this new recognition, developing states have been more willing to exploit their well-known advantage of relative freedom from industrial pollutants by integrating environmental criteria in their development planning, thus hopefully purchasing insurance against the predicament now faced by the advanced states.

Similarly, with broader understanding of environmental processes, has come the recognition on both sides that pollution-control efforts may not need to be uniform. If standards are relaxed somewhat, if Philadelphia air quality criteria are not insisted on for Bombay, then the environment may be safeguarded at reasonable cost. This approach, which implies a dual standard, or regional or national standards for environmental quality, is not entirely free from hazard. Presumably, it could still foster pollution havens, foul areas now relatively pollution-free, and lead to greater transnational shifts of manufacturing facilities.

However, variant environmental standards need not necessarily lead in this direction, if they are developed with the understanding that such standards serve essentially different purposes—aiming at preventing excessive pollution in non-industrialized localities and at reversing heavy pollution in industrialized ones. Whether this two-level approach will adequately protect local environments remains to be seen.

Resource pinch

Additionally, fuel and commodity shortages coupled with slowing growth rates, inflation and other economic problems in the advanced states have altered their perspective on the environment, softening their concern as they strive to stimulate their economies and to meet pressing, basic needs. To the extent that environmental and economic goals conflict in the short term, such conflict is one faced by all states. Recognition of this problem has produced a greater identity of views on the issues of economic growth and the environment between the developed and developing worlds than existed at Stockholm. Whether this circumstance implies a halting or a reversal of the environmental movement, as some have suggested, or represents a more pragmatic approach to environment-development questions remains to be seen. Yet it is clear that changes in world economic conditions since Stockholm are forcing a re-evaluation of the permissible tradeoffs between environmental protection and economic growth.

Finally, the work of the UN Environment Programme itself, the Governing Council and UNEP Executive Director Maurice Strong and his staff, have gone a long way toward overcoming antagonisms that grew up among industrialized and non-industrialized states over the issues of growth vs. the environment. In the framing of its strategy and the choice of its programs, UNEP has stressed two crucial points: (1) that economic development and environmental protection aim at the mutual objective of improving the material condition of mankind now and in the future and (2) that the numerous elements which make up the biosphere are ultimately interrelated, so that the long-term individual self-interest of each, as well as the common good of all, depends on the preservation of the whole environment. Degradation of water, air, earth, animal, or plant resources is no respecter of national borders. Worsening conditions in any sector of the biosphere will in time spill over into or impact on others. World food shortages stemming from recurrent flooding or drought provide a tragic illustration of how man's failure to conserve soil resources in some regions can affect food cost and availability continents away.

Declaration of Cocoyoc

The evolution of the environment-development debate is well reflected in the Declaration of Cocoyoc, a statement prepared at the Symposium on Patterns of Resource Use, Environment and Development Strategy held in Mexico in October, 1974, under the chairmanship of Lady Barbara Ward Jackson and the sponsorship of UNEP and UNCTAD. The declaration states:

We recognize the threats to both the 'inner limits' of basic human needs and the 'outer limits' of the planet's physical resources. But we also believe that a new sense of respect for fundamental human rights and for the preservation of our planet is growing up behind the angry divisions and confrontations of our day.

We have faith in the future of mankind on this planet. We believe that ways of life and social systems can be evolved that are more just, less arrogant in their material demands, more respectful of the whole planetary environment. The road forward does not lie through the despair of doom-watching nor through the easy optimism of successive technological fixes. It lies through a careful and dispassionate assessment of the 'outer limits', through the co-operative search for ways to achieve the 'inner limits' of fundamental human rights, through the building of social structures to express those rights, and through all the patient work of devising techniques, and styles of development which enhance and preserve our planetary inheritance.

Outer Limits

The 'outer limits' mentioned in the Declaration of Cocoyoc refer to the boundaries imposed on human activities by the global environment and by the necessity for preserving it. Violation of these boundaries, as, for example, in the area of climatic change, will alter the conditions essential to the support of life and to the collective survival of mankind.

UNEP hopes to prevent such violations of the biosphere and to aid in the long-range decision-making that is basic to sound environmental planning in both developed and developing countries. It plans to cooperate with such agencies as the International Institute of Applied Systems Analysis (Vienna) to determine where these outer limits to man-made change may lie. This kind of foresight mechanism will help to avert environmental disasters and to guide future development strategies.

The Common Interest

Thus, charges heard in some developed states that contributions to the Environment Fund amount to "back-door" foreign aid are shortsighted in the extreme. This view neglects the fact that the developed countries, and especially the United States, are responsible for much the greatest part of the industrial pollution in the world today. As Secretary Kissinger's Special Assistant for Environmental Affairs, Christian A. Herter, Jr., testified before Congress:

... It should be stressed that, as the world's most industrialized nation, we are the greatest polluter. Thus, we cannot reasonably expect others to bear a disproportionate share of the costs in cleaning up the wastes that we generate.

While it is difficult to express our pollution contribution in quantitative terms, nonetheless, with less than 6 percent of the world's population, we account for the use of more than one-third of the world's energy production.

The leading role of the U.S. in pledging to supply some 40% of the Environment Fund for its first five years is not a payment for past pollution, however. Rather, it represents a sound and self-interested investment in identifying and finding solutions for environmental problems which have had or will have an effect on the U.S. First of all, it is the developed world's need for commodities—foodstuffs, timber, and minerals—which provides both growth opportunities and much of the environmental threat—especially of renewable resources—the continued availability of these commodities to developed and developing nations cannot be guaranteed. Nor can the capacity of the underdeveloped nations to meet their own food needs be expanded without proper attention to the effect of gross environmental factors. Yet if this capacity is not extended to cover anticipated population increases and hoped-for rises in living standards, there will be ever more serious pressures on world food supplies, with attendant costs to the developed world.

Thus, if contributions to the Environment Fund are to be construed as a form of foreign aid, it is probably one of the most useful programs available. UNEP's work can lead not only to the solving of current pollution problems for which the U.S. bears a major responsibility but also to the prevention or mitigation of future problems which would ultimately affect the U.S. adversely. Indeed, with its comprehensive approach to the human environment, it is not too much to say that UNEP has the promise of reducing the need for certain kinds of foreign aid which addresses only symptoms—such as flood or drought relief—by stimulating a more careful husbanding and use of the earth's resources throughout the international community. To this kind of effort, the developed world is well advised to commit both its relevant technological advantages in pollution control and its financial aid to further the application and the broadening of these technologies.

Finally, as UNEP has been at some pains to point out, the Environmental Fund is neither large enough nor are UNEP projects so constituted that any single nation can draw special advantage from them. UNEP endeavors, by design, aim at increasing the general fund of information, at pilot and demonstration projects and at representative target areas which will have the broadest possible application and impact. In the long term, the benefits of this approach—in aggregating knowledge and in solving environmental problems—will be shared by all states.

Environmental diplomacy

The message that Maurice Strong and his aides have been carrying to numerous capitals is that concern for the environment is not a luxury but an absolutely fundamental prerequisite to preserving and bettering human life on this globe. In a world where the futures of states and individuals are inextricably linked together by the common thread of a shared biosphere, no person and no nation will long be able to stand aside from this concern without courting disaster.

Through their practice of environmental diplomacy, UNEP's representatives have brought home to rich and poor nations alike the fundamental necessity and practical benefits of integrating environmental concern into their economic planning and thinking. They have dramatized the lesson that the environment is indivisible and requires citizens and nations to work together for their individual and common survival and betterment. Although the clash between environmental and development goals will likely continue, although there will be recurring environmental disputes between states and regions, the UNEP and its initial staff are already performing a remarkable service in showing skeptical governments that, in an age of advanced technology, man's environment will best supply his needs when treated with care and respect.

de Almeida, M. Ozorio et al. "Environment and Development," International Conciliation, No. 586, January, 1972 (Contains the Founex Report).

Berry, R. Stephen et al. "A Special Report—What Happened at Stockholm," Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists, XXVIII:7, Sept., 1972.

Borgese, Elizabeth Mann. "Who Owns the Earth's Resources?" Vista, 9:1, August, 1973.

Cahn, Robert. "Ecology and International Assistance." Washington: The Conservation Foundation, 1969.

Environment—Nairobi. Nairobi, Kenya:

UN Environment Programme, Communication Division, November, 1973.

Howe, James W. and Susan Sammartano. "Environment and Development" in The United States and the Developing World: Agenda for Action. Washington: Overseas Development Council, 1973.

Keys, Donald F. "The 28th General Assembly of the United Nations." Washington: World Federalist Education Fund, 1974.

"Participation by the United States in the United Nations Environment Program." Hearings before the Subcommittee on International Organizations and Movements, Committee on Foreign Affairs, House of Representatives, 93rd Cong., 1st Sess. Washington: U.S. Government Printing Office, 1973.

"Report of the Governing Council, 1st Session, 12-22 June, 1973." UN Environment Programme, Doc. No. A/9025. New York: United Nations, 1973.

"Report of the Governing Council, 2nd Session, 11-12 March, 1974." UN Environment Programme, Doc. No. A/9625. New York: United Nations, 1974.

Stanley, C. Maxwell. "Environmental Management by the United Nations." Occasional Paper No. 1. Muscatine, Iowa: The Stanley Foundation, 1972.

NB: Draft and final program documents of the UNEP and the Governing Council, UNEP statements and press releases and UN General Assembly publications relating to the Environment Programme are available from UN Information Offices in Geneva, New York and Washington and should be consulted for additional details on UNEP organization and operations.

THE INSTITUTE OF NUCLEAR MATERIALS MANAGEMENT

(Mr. PRICE of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the critics of nuclear power in the United States, over the past year or so, decided that few in this country were actively concerned with the continual upgrading of the safeguarding and security of nuclear materials and installations. I am certain that many of these critics, particularly the most vocal, are unaware that there has been for over 16 years a professional organization in the United States with international membership from academic institutions, Government laboratories and agencies, utilities, transportation organizations, insurance companies, and all segments of the nuclear industry devoted to the management, safeguards, accountability and control of nuclear materials. The organization is the Institute of Nuclear Materials Management. The basic objectives of the Institute are to further the advancement of nuclear materials management in all its aspects, including:

The application of principles of chemistry, physics, accounting, auditing, statistics, and chemical, nuclear and electronic engineering to the management of these materials.

The promotion of research in the fields of nuclear materials management and safeguards.

The encouragement and development of standards consistent with existing and proposed professional and regulatory requirements.

The improvement of the qualifications and usefulness of those individuals engaged in nuclear materials management as a profession.

The institute is the sponsoring organization for the American National Standards Institute Committee N-15, Standards for the Control of Nuclear Materials. Committee N-15 is divided into seven subcommittees and is actively developing a variety of standards in its assigned area of responsibility.

The institute is actively involved in the development and application of nuclear materials safeguards in a number of ways. The institute's Safeguards Committee has recently issued an evaluation of safeguards during transportation of nuclear materials. A separate Government Relations Committee reviews proposed Government regulatory changes in the field of safeguards and transmits the comments of INMM members to the proposing regulatory agency. The institute, more than any other professional organization, combines the training and experience of persons who are actively involved in the application of safeguards procedures to actual plant operations, and who accordingly can comment knowingly concerning the value of any procedure.

The institute also is represented on several other professional committees in the general field of nuclear industry standards.

The institute offers certification to those whose training and experience have attained an exemplary level of technical or managerial competence. In recognition of individuals who have met these high standards, the institute offers the designation of certified nuclear materials manager. The applicant is examined carefully by the Certification and Ethics Committee, and is expected to demonstrate his competence on a written examination. The distinction is granted by the executive committee on the recommendation of the Committee on Professional Standards and Certification.

The institute was created on May 17, 1958. The first general membership meeting was held in 1959; annual meetings have been held since then. I have been invited to address the 1975 annual meeting of the Institute of Nuclear Materials Management and I consider this a signal honor.

I insert in the RECORD at this point the letter inviting me to address the 16th annual meeting and the institute's call for papers. Note that in addition to the very large scope of interest indicated, the Technical Program Committee will consider papers on additional relevant topics:

INSTITUTE OF NUCLEAR MATERIALS MANAGEMENT,
December 11, 1974.

Congressman MELVIN M. PRICE,
Chairman, Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN PRICE: Captain Edward Bauser and Colonel Seymour Shwiler of the Joint Committee Staff visited Los Alamos recently for technical briefings and discussions on a number of topics including nuclear materials safeguards and the AEC's safeguards technology program here at LASL. Our interactions with several members of the JCAE and their staff people have afforded us here at LASL an excellent opportunity to gain a better appreciation of the JCAE's direct concern and interest in stringent nuclear safeguards on both the domestic and international levels. It is abundantly clear for example that safeguards technology and instrumentation for inspection and surveillance must play a key role in safeguarding any future international agreements for U.S.-supplied nuclear power reactors and nuclear fuel materials to developing nations.

At a recent meeting of the Executive Committee of the Institute of Nuclear Materials Management (INMM) I discussed the interest which the Joint Committee has in effective safeguards and nuclear materials management. The upshot of all this—and my reason for writing at this time—is that it is our unanimous desire to have you, as the Chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, address the 1975 Annual Meeting of the Institute of Nuclear Materials Management to be held next June 18-20 in New Orleans, Louisiana.

As you may already be aware, the INMM is the one professional organization in the United States which is concerned specifically with management, safeguards, accountability, and control of nuclear materials. The institute's unique role and high standards of professionalism in the field of nuclear safeguards and materials management is generally recognized throughout the United States, and its membership includes prominent leaders from both government and private industry sectors of the nuclear community.

The Institute's 1975 Annual Meeting provides the major U.S. professional forum for timely review and updating of national and international policy, programs, and progress in the vital (albeit at times controversial) area of nuclear materials safeguards, NPT inspection, and surveillance. Accordingly, as INMM Program Chairman, it is my honor to invite you, on behalf of the Institute, to address our 1975 Annual Meeting next June in New Orleans. Although details of our technical program have not been worked out, we are considering an evening banquet on Thursday, June 19, or if it should be more convenient for you, a noontime luncheon could be planned for the same day. (Possible second choices might be Wednesday, June 18, or Friday, June 20.) The INMM Executive Committee joins me in expressing our sincere desire to have you address our 1975 meeting on any aspect of the important and timely subject of safeguards (national and/or international) which you may choose to discuss.

Needless to say, your address would be the highlight of our meeting, which we hope to make the best attended and most significant in INMM history!

Very sincerely,
G. ROBERT KEEPIN.

THE INSTITUTE OF NUCLEAR MATERIALS MANAGEMENT CALL FOR PAPERS FOR THE 16TH ANNUAL MEETING

The Sixteenth Annual Meeting of the Institute of Nuclear Materials Management will convene in New Orleans, Louisiana, June 18-19-20, 1975.

The program will consist of sessions of contributed and invited papers and panel discussions and/or workshops covering all aspects of nuclear materials management and safeguards. Papers in all areas of the nuclear industry are solicited on such topics as:

Physical Security:

Transportation and Communication.
Containment, Locks, and Seals.
Surveillance and Verification.
Division Path and Probabilistic Analyses.
Federal vs Private Guards.

In-Plant Materials Control:

Accounting and Audit.
Assay Techniques and Measurements.
Standards and Measurement Controls.

Statistics Error Statements.
Quality Control and Assurance.
Nuclear Energy and Materials Management:
U and Th Supply; Ore, Feed Analysis.
Enrichment Plant Safeguards.
Utilities and Reactor Safeguards.
Recovery, Reprocessing, and Recycle.
Waste Management and Effluent Control.
Government Imposed Regulations.
Indemnity and Risk Assessment.
International Safeguards and Inspection Safeguards, the Press and the Public.

PROCEDURE

Prepare an informative summary appropriate to a 15-20 minute presentation. Length of the summary is not crucial (nominally in the range 200-600 words) but it must furnish sufficient detail to permit an accurate review. Please include:

Title of the paper.
Author(s)—If two or more, indicate speaker.

Company affiliation.

Mailing address.

Telephone number (indicate if FTS).

Suggested classification of paper by topic.

Summaries are to be submitted by March 1, 1975 to:

G. Robert Keepin, Chairman
INMM Technical Program Committee
Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory
P. O. Box 1663
Los Alamos, New Mexico 87544
Tel. (FTS) 505-667-4042

Receipt of your summary will be acknowledged by return mail. All summaries will be reviewed by the INMM Technical Program Committee, and those accepted will be presented at the conference. Notification of accepted papers will be made by April 1, 1975. Accepted papers will be presented at the Annual Meeting and published in full in the INMM Proceedings.

HONORABLE H. R. GROSS

(Mr. PRICE of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, one of the most, if not the most hard-working Member of the House, the Honorable H. R. Gross of Iowa retires this year after 26 years of conscientious service to the American taxpayer.

I know of no Member in my legislative career who has exhibited greater knowledge about every piece of legislation which has come to the House than H. R. Gross. Sheer doggedness, diligence and persistence mark H. R. Gross' character. At the same time he is one of the most gracious and understanding men with whom I have served.

I am proud to have served in the House with H. R. Gross. He has demonstrated the difference one Member of Congress can make on legislation and national policy. He has been the conscience of the House.

This House will miss H. R. Gross. I am very sorry to see him retire. I sincerely hope he enjoys his retirement. No man has worked harder. My sincere good wishes go with him.

ACHIEVING PRICE STABILITY WITHOUT WIDESPREAD DISTORTIONS TO THE ECONOMY

(Mr. ASHLEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.)

Mr. ASHLEY. Mr. Speaker, legislation was introduced yesterday by Chairman PATMAN and other members of the House Committee on Banking and Currency which upon enactment would impose an immediate freeze on all prices, wages, rents and interest rates.

While I agree that prompt and concerted action must be taken to curb inflation, perhaps including direct controls, I am opposed to the Patman bill and will offer instead, in the days ahead, a measure which I believe will offer far greater assurance of achieving price stability without widespread distortions to the economy.

The most serious defect in the Patman approach, in my view, is that it mandates an across-the-board freeze on all prices, wages, rents, and interest rates in every sector of the economy at levels prevailing on the date of enactment of the bill.

Rather than place the entire economy in this kind of bureaucratic straight jacket, a preferable approach in my view would be to broaden vastly the monitoring responsibility of the Council on Wage and Price Stability and to authorize and direct the Council to impose controls or constraints in those sectors or particular situations where price, wage, rent and interest rate behavior has been irresponsible and unjustified.

The differences in these two approaches is very important. The Patman bill with the stroke of a pen would substitute total Federal regulation in place of our market economy. My alternative would continue to rely on the market place to make the basic decisions with respect to supply and demand but it would correct past abuses and prevent new ones from occurring.

Mr. Speaker, there are many causes of our current inflation which must be analyzed and understood in order for effective remedies to be applied. We are all aware of surging worldwide demand for food and other commodities. We are painfully aware that the price of imported oil has almost quadrupled in little more than a year. We know that the last effort at controls fostered recurring rounds of price-wage catch-up, and it is clear that wide-scale anticompetitive practices have made their contribution to the cost-of-living increase. Both Federal Reserve monetary policy and Federal fiscal policy have also had inflationary consequences, and the private sector itself has failed to exercise the self-discipline that stable growth and a sound dollar require.

Total control, as proposed in the Patman bill, not only fails to address these causes but would create distortions that actually prevent the fundamental corrections in our economy which are necessary. Worse yet, this approach would deepen recession and mounting unemployment by curbing the investment incentives which the private sector legitimately depends upon.

My approach, on the other hand, recognizes that the economy is beset by both demand-pull and cost-push pressures and that they require very different treatment.

To the extent that rising prices are attributable to a continuing disequilibrium between supply and demand, the obvious cure is greater production in those sectors where this is possible. Clearly controls are not responsive to this kind of inflationary situation. However, to the extent that living costs continue to escalate because of administered prices and/or wages, there may well be ample justification for Federal intervention, either indirect or in the form of actual constraints.

The compelling necessity, in short, is to devise a legislative mechanism which is sufficiently flexible to permit different responses to different situations. The most dangerous, self-defeating course that we could take at this time would be to limit our options and alternatives to a single remedy—massive in its ramifications, as we know from bitter experience—and then to mandate its use.

THE YAKUTSK EXPLORATION

(Mr. ASHLEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. ASHLEY. Mr. Speaker, in reviewing the debate of the Eximbank conference report yesterday I see in the RECORD on page 41060 the statement by Senator STEVENSON and a colloquy between Senator STEVENSON and Senator SCHWARTZ which suggest that none of the $40 million which is the limitation on Eximbank credits that may be used for fossil fuel exploration and research in the Soviet Union may be used for the Yakutsk project. There is no such limitation in the law nor any suggestion of such limitation in the conference report for the simple reason that the conferees had no intention whatever of imposing such a limitation.

The Yakutsk exploration project now pending before the Bank requests Eximbank financing of $49.5 million in support of $110 million of U.S. exports. The Bank could not, without prior approval of the Congress, participate in the Yakutsk or any other fossil fuel project if the Eximbank loans and guarantees exceed $40 million. However, it is clear from the discussions of the conferees and the language meticulously agreed upon that Eximbank may loan or guarantee up to $40 million for research or exploration of fossil fuel resources in the Soviet Union whether it be for Yakutsk or elsewhere. If for example the required financing for the Yakutsk exploration project can be found from other sources so that Eximbank financing of $40 million or less is required, Eximbank is free, as it was intended by the conferees to be, to use up to $40 million for this project or any other project.

TOWARD A NATIONAL SUGAR POLICY

(Mr. VIGORITO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VIGORITO. Mr. Speaker, in the past year we in the United States have witnessed the price of sugar rise from 12 cents a pound to 75 cents a pound. It was because of this economic reality that I called the Agriculture subcommittee on Domestic Marketing and Consumer Relations to order.

The purpose of these hearings was threefold.

First we of the subcommittee attempted to investigate the correlation between the defeat of the Sugar Act in June, and the rapid rise in the cost of sugar.

Second we intended to exercise the subcommittee's constituted power and duty to conduct legislative oversight over the Department of Agriculture's implementation of the existing Sugar Act and the effect of that implementation on the price of sugar.

Finally, we of the subcommittee sought to explore alternative proposals to reduce or at least stabilize the price of sugar for Americans. We of the subcommittee did accomplish our purposes—now we must proceed further to establish guidelines to achieve market stability. As a result of the knowledge gained from the 5 days of hearings which called upon those representing all aspects of the sugar industry, I seek to impart to my colleagues some of what we have discovered.

What became painfully clear was the Department of Agriculture's hostility toward and ineptness in administering the sugar program over the past year and a half. A review of the Department's testimony delivered by Arthur Calcagnini exposed not only his hostility toward the Sugar Act program but also the Secretary of Agriculture's complete support of that hostility. It is my belief that the 18 month tenure of Mr. Calcagnini as head of the Sugar Division might approach nonfeasance in office due to his failure to comply with his oath of office to faithfully execute the U.S. sugar law.

Let us look beyond the Department's hostility toward the existing sugar program and examine its inept predictions of consumption figures in the United States. Secretary Butz, knowing full well that the world sugar market was tight, released figures of projected domestic consumption that will exceed actual consumption by approximately 800,000 tons of sugar. The implications of this gross misjudgment can only be seen when one realizes that only 10 million tons—or 12 percent—of sugar is traded on the world market. In such a tight and volatile market one can easily see the impact of the massive infusion of American projected needs in forcing the world prices up to dizzying heights.

During the course of the witnesses' testimony it became quite clear that there was a substantial difference of opinion about the viability of the existing sugar law. Several of the witnesses favored the proposed extension of the Sugar Act, which was defeated in June because it would have provided stability of sugar prices for Americans.

In the defeated act, payments to sugar-growers would have been reduced to a maximum of $9,400 per farmer. There would have been a repeal of the one-half-cent excise tax on all sugar processed in our country. A ban would have been placed on the exportation of U.S. grown sugar. The defeated bill would have allowed the Secretary to permit the importation of refined sugar if needed by consumers. But none of these safeguards now exist and American consumers are subject to the vagaries of the international sugar market, this is something short of being a paragon of free enterprise.

December 20, 1974

Many witnesses were pleased that the Sugar Act was defeated. They felt that it was an archaic and wasteful program which is better left dead. Even though these individuals did not support the Sugar Act, they made it clear that the United States must establish some sort of policy to insure adequate supplies of sugar, but they left unclear what the Government could do in the absence of sugar legislation.

During the course of the hearings it was proposed by some that the U.S. Government in some manner subsidize sugar-using industries. These individuals wanted short-term assistance, but the realities of our system make it clear that once we initiate a subsidy program we would probably never extricate ourselves from the quagmire of subsidy payments.

Where are we now? At the present time, Japan, the world's second largest importer of sugar, has already arranged for its sugar needs for 1975. The United States, the largest importer—6 million tons—has not yet begun to seek its supplies for 1975. On the world sugar market there will be a 2 or 3 million ton shortage in 1975. This shortage will probably be reflected here, because of our lack of preparation, in the first 7 months of next year when our needs will be approximately 3½ million tons. During that period we will probably be able to procure no more than 2½ million tons on the world market. This may be eased by the possible sugar beet crop expansion both here and around the world by July, but this certainly will not erase the entire shortage or its impact. Existing tight market conditions will continue to be reflected here into 1976 and perhaps beyond.

In light of this knowledge garnered from the hearings, I believe it is imperative that the United States develop a national sugar policy. The policy should include:

First. Incentives for U.S. sugar growers to produce as much sugar as possible, as opposed to the uncertainty that exists on the world sugar market.

Second. A system of country-by-country quotas set up to insure the American consumer ample supplies of sugar at reasonable prices.

Third. Action must be taken to remove the 50-cent per hundredweight processing tax and the 62-cent per hundred-weight import duty.

Fourth. The present and projected future demands for sugar eliminate the need for subsidies for sugar.

Finally, I would like to alert my colleagues to the possibility of the establishment of a sugar cartel. On November 28, in Mexico City, 20 Latin American nations including Cuba have agreed to establish a cartel to raise the price of sugar to 75 cents a pound. This sugar producing group has formulated plans to take further action in the coming months.

Let us pledge ourselves the time, energy and presence of mind to establish a national sugar policy early in 1975, before it is too late.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

(Mr. DANIELSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. DANIELSON. Mr. Speaker, looking back over the Record of December, I note a missed number of votes. For the Record, I now state how I would have voted on each of these questions had I been present.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1974

Rollcall No. 658: Motion to suspend the rules and agree to the conference report on S. 425, Surface Mining and Reclamation Act of 1974. I would have voted "yea."

Rollcall No. 659: Motion to suspend the rules and pass S. 2201, to provide for the settlement of damage claims arising out of certain actions by the United States in opening certain spillways to avoid flooding populated areas. I would have voted "nay."

Rollcall No. 660: Motion to suspend the rules and pass S. 4040, the Veterans' and Survivors Pension Adjustment Act of 1974, to provide a 12 percent increase in pension rates for eligible veterans and their survivors. I would have voted "yea."

Rollcall No. 661: Motion to order the previous question on the rule, House Resolution 1485, providing for the consideration of H.R. 5853, the Surface Transportation Act of 1974. I would have voted "yea."

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1974

Rollcall No. 672: An amendment to H.R. 17234, to amend the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, to end all aid and military credit sales to India. I would have voted "nay."

RECESSION—NOT INFLATION—IS THE NO. 1 ENEMY

(Mr. REES asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, last November 5, the Wall Street Journal printed an article by James P. Gannon titled "How To Lose a Battle" with the theme that Congress would probably panic over deteriorating economic conditions and abandon inflation control efforts.

While we must continue to fight inflation, I disagreed with Mr. Gannon's observations as I felt that much of our current inflation was tied to one-shot events such as the horrendous price increase of petroleum and an erratic weather pattern in our farm States. I felt at that time, as I do now, that main enemy is recession and that we had better act immediately if we wanted to prevent the recession from becoming a depression.

Several days later I wrote a reply to Mr. Gannon's article. Unfortunately I have not heard from the Wall Street Journal. Because I think that my reply might be of interest to Members I offer for the Record my letter concerning our current economic problems:

As a "congressman-politician," just re-elected and about to participate in the lame duck congressional session, I was naturally interested in James Gannon's recent article in the Wall Street Journal, "How to Lose a Battle," with its tag line: "The gathering weakness in the economy is spending into a general recession that is likely to panic the White House and Congress into early actions to pump up the economy, at the expense of inflation control."

The article seems to imply that we in Washington should concentrate all of our energies on the fight against inflation, and only when it's finally knocked down to a respectable 3% should we then wheel our armies around and attack the dragon of recession. I'm afraid that if we did that, we might be fighting a depression instead of a recession. Must we always combat only one while neglecting the other?

We have been using the "old time religion" of tight money to halt inflation, and the result is that the economy has been dampened; demand is down, unemployment is up, and we are in a recession. To continue monetary restraint would only exacerbate the recession. The inflation we have today no longer seems to be one in which too much money is chasing too few goods, but appears to be directly related to major one-shot events that have already occurred: the 400% rise in imported crude oil prices, the adverse weather endured by the world's farmers causing a rise in food prices, and the lifting of wage and price controls.

Once the economy has absorbed the heavy impact of these happenings, there should be a reasonable leveling of prices. If we had an overheated economy at one time that required holding down the money supply to dampen demand, we don't have it now; it seems obvious that the economy is no longer overheated—it's underheated.

Although Mr. Gannon cites the Gallup poll finding that 81% regard the high cost of living as the nation's most important problem, I found in recent campaign visits to my district that, while my constituents are of course deeply concerned about inflation, they are terrified about a recession which might cause the loss of their jobs and destroy their earning power. In my district wage earners are being laid off, builders are going bankrupt, and industry is being starved because of the lack of capital and declining sales.

I think my colleagues are becoming disenchanted with economic experts. At the recent economic summit, a fed-up Senator Mansfield stated: "This conference has had the participation of the foremost economists in the country—in and out of government. They have told us what the inflation and recession are all about—in a hundred versions. The talk has been of micro-economics, macro-economics, econometrics, and what-not."

"Of these things, of importance to economists, the public knows nothing. Of inflation, the public knows a great deal. Of recession the public is learning more and more each day."

I don't feel that Sen. Mansfield's beliefs reflect "panic."

Even non-economists can see that the supply of money, for example, had absolutely nothing to do with those huge increases in crude oil prices, the weather in the world, or the adjustment of wages and prices to the lifting of controls. Pompous reiterations of the "free market allocation of resources" dogma no longer cause me to genuflect, any more than they cause my friends in the building or savings and loan industries to genuflect. I'm tired of seeing the medium- and smaller-sized businesses in my district with their backs to the wall because they don't have the ability of Fortune's 500 to market their commercial paper or to obtain a big line of credit with a major bank. I become concerned and frightened when I hear from constituents who have been laid off their jobs and who are now reaching the end of their entitlements to unemployment insurance.

December 20, 1974

It's fine to talk about budget restraint. All of us are for budget restraint—it's the new "motherhood." But what will happen with the current recession: the budget will go up and tax collections will go down. The majority of our federal budget is for payments to individuals, part of it in the form of unemployment insurance, public service jobs, and welfare payments, all of which go up during a recession. And federal revenues drop when taxpayers become unemployed, business sales decline, or bankruptcies increase; neither unemployed wage earners nor bankrupt firms pay many taxes.

So I expect that Congress will, in Mr. Gannon's words, "panic." We will probably raise Cain over excessive monetary restraint. We will probably continue trying to bring the housing industry out of its deep depression; we will probably appropriate more money for a public jobs program and supplemental unemployment benefits program; and some are even talking about reviving the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to help bail out businesses that are about to go broke because of "free market allocation" trying to operate in an imperfect market.

While we politicians closely follow the economic statistics, we follow our constituencies far more closely. Behind the statistics are human beings and human organizations, and a tenth-of-a-percent increase in the rate of unemployment directly affects individuals and their families whom we personally know and deal with. When we face those who are the innocent victims, we must offer them hope and help. We certainly will not tell them that, by becoming unemployed or going bankrupt they have gallantly aided our country in its fight against inflation. That line won't buy means or pay rent.

The recession is here. Best we deal with it.

THE CASE OF VLADIMIR BUKOVSKY

(Ms. HOLTZMAN asked and was given permission to extend her remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Ms. HOLTZMAN. Mr. Speaker, the denial of basic human liberty in the Soviet Union is a matter of concern to Americans and all persons of conscience.

When it was revealed, several years ago, that Soviet dissidents were placed in insane asylums as punishment for their views, a worldwide outcry arose. The man who disclosed this practice to the West was Vladimir Bukovsky, and for that crime he has been imprisoned for the past 3½ years.

I would like to read to my colleagues portions of a letter, smuggled out of the Soviet Union by Bukovsky's friends, which gives a vivid picture of his suffering and the infuriating reason for his imprisonment. It makes painfully clear the extent to which dissent is repressed in the U.S.S.R., and illustrates why we must continue to work for the freedom of Soviet political prisoners.

LETTER ON VLADIMIR BUKOVSKY

Vladimir Bukovsky, who on December 31 of last year turned 31, has been imprisoned under conditions of starvation and without qualified medical care for three and a half years. Since October of last year no one was given any opportunity to see him, even once, and during the entire period of his arrest, was allowed to send him anything; either food, or medication or warm clothing.

What did he do that he should deserve such severe punishment? About four years ago, Bukovsky communicated to Western psychiatrists (including some Americans) the facts about placing in our country of dissidents, psychologically healthy people otherwise, into insane asylums as a punitive measure. For this he was sentenced (including a five-year exile) to 12 years of complete deprivation of all his rights.

The last half year of Bukovsky's existence, first in a concentration camp and later in the town of Vladimir prison, where he finds himself currently, has spent under torture from severe starvation. He has already lost more than 14 kilograms of weight, has reached a stage of extreme exhaustion and, in the beginning of June, began to show signs of edema. Ahead of him are still three years of horrible starvation and then a five-year exile to the northern regions of our country. Bukovsky is a sick man. He has heart trouble along with rheumatism and a liver condition, contracted already while in prison. Everyone has lost all hope of seeing him alive and free if extraordinary measures will not be undertaken to save him.

Vladimir Bukovsky is not a criminal, not an extremist, not a terrorist; he did not break any of the laws of his land as incorporated in the constitution of the Soviet state. All he did was to attempt to draw attention to the inhuman treatment which is being perpetuated upon those like himself. He fought for human rights.

RICE, TRADE DEFICITS, DIPLOMACY, AND CONSUMERS

(Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, Tuesday, the Rice Act of 1974, H.R. 15263, was soundly defeated by opponents of an expanded and competitive industry.

Today, I am introducing the Rice Act of 1975, as a first order of business for the new year. It is my hope that the small snowball which hardened during the debate on this important issue will gain momentum over the holidays and that it will roll into the 94th Congress with additional size and support.

In introducing this bill I acknowledge the existence of formidable opposition in the Congress. In Washington, I must observe, it is not infrequent that the voices of full pocketbooks scream louder than the groans of hungry stomachs. But, the facts remain.

First, America is a bountiful land which possesses an increased capacity to produce food.

Second, World demand for rice as a staple food is enormous. Evidence is abundant that population is increasing at a much faster rate than food production. Next year I would hope to elicit the support of the international community and would welcome their active participation in this legislation which would change a national food policy in order to achieve international goals. People simply cannot eat conferences, and, active support in specific food legislation is essential to success.

Third, Just this week the United States trade deficit fell another $1.1 billion into the red in the first 3 months ending in September. The Department of Commerce reported the balance was in deficit by $3.58 billion in the third quarter compared with $2.48 billion in the second quarter and a surplus of $1.8 billion in the first quarter.

For the first three quarters of this year the trade deficit is already $4.26 billion.

In announcing the second largest trade deficit in U.S. history Secretary of Commerce, F. B. Dent, said that this severe deficit "underscores the need for vigorous promotion of U.S. foreign trade."

This urgent need compels me to point out to my colleagues that American dollar export potential for rice alone is about $1 billion annually which could reduce our current trade deficit by almost 25 percent.

Therefore, I shall again enlist the active support of the business community which, like the international community, must involve itself in the Rice Act of 1975 to change a national food policy in order to respond to a national fiscal emergency.

Lastly, as we have previously pointed out, the current rice program is inherently unfair to American consumers because a minimum domestic price is now established without regard to market or competitive considerations. The current noncompetitive rice industry insures higher consumer prices.

Though some consumer groups actively assisted us in our efforts this year we must sound the alarm for more support from other consumer interests next year in order to attack the inflationary rice industry that exists under the current program.

Protectionism is the product of complacency but the motivation for survival of the current obsolete rice program has been stronger than the determination of business interests, the international community and consumer groups to change a law for a bygone era.

MSGR. STANISLAUS M. GOSPODAREK OF AMSTERDAM, N.Y., OBSERVES THE 60TH ANNIVERSARY OF HIS ORDIINATION TO THE PRIESTHOOD

(Mr. STRATTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, on November 17, 1974, Msgr. Stanislaus M. Gospodarek from Amsterdam, N.Y., celebrated his diamond jubilee of ordination, representing 60 years of service in the priesthood. For nearly 30 of those years, Monsignor Gospodarek served as pastor of St. Stanislaus Church in Amsterdam and is primarily responsible for the physical, educational, and spiritual development of that parish to this day. I am delighted, Mr. Speaker, to join in honoring Monsignor Gospodarek in this momentous year in his life, and insert herewith a recent article from the Amsterdam Evening Recorder which more fully details the accomplishments of this devoted servant of God and the community:

MSGR. GOSPODAREK CELEBRATES 60TH ANNIVERSARY AS A PRIEST
AMSTERDAM.—Msgr. S. M. Gospodarek will celebrate his Diamond Jubilee of ordination representing 60 years of service in the priesthood.

December 20, 1974

He will offer a Mass of Thanksgiving in St. Stanislaus' Church Sunday at 11:15 a.m.

He was born in Poland in the village of Lagiewniki, near Gniezno, on April 7, 1891. He was brought after baptism to New York on May 30, 1891. His parents came to Albany.

He attended the public schools of Albany and later transferred to St. Casimir's parochial school. He went to the high school of the Polish Seminary in Detroit, Michigan from 1904 to 1909 and graduated with honors. He majored in languages, including English, Polish, Latin, Greek, German, French and Hebrew.

Because of the pressing need to have priests familiar with Polish language, his ordination was accelerated to Dec. 19, 1914. He celebrated his first Mass in St. Casimir's Church, Albany, on Christmas Day. Early in February, 1915, he was assigned assistant at St. Mary's Church, Schenectady.

On Oct. 5, 1918 he was transferred to St. Adalbert's Church, Schenectady, and on Oct. 5, 1919 Bishop Gibbons appointed him pastor of Holy Trinity, Troy. He began to make new arrangements for the welfare of the parish and its members, and was able to provide Sisters of the Resurrection to teach religion and Polish.

A home was bought and furnished to house the new sisters comfortably. The old rectory was discarded and a better home acquired for the pastor with better furnishings.

The church was redecorated and painted both internally and externally. The non-active nearby Baptist Church was bought and repaired and converted to a civic center for parish affairs.

During the depression the pastor was able to provide government donated flour, potatoes and some victuals. Some 19 years were spent at that church.

APPOINTED HERE

After the death of Rev. Anton Gorski, the pastor of St. Stanislaus' parish, on Dec. 10, 1937, Bishop Gibbons appointed Msgr. Gospodarek pastor on Jan. 27, 1938. The new pastor was faced with a debt of $35,000. Since three priests were operating from the old rectory, it became necessary to provide new quarters, hence a new rectory was projected and built in 1941, the present three-story edifice.

The church was redecorated, stained glass windows were installed, new pews and new carpeting were added and a good PA system and new lighting was provided. The parish brought forth about 20 priests by vocations and 30 sisters.

The school was also renovated, painted and a sprinkler system installed in case of fire. New desks for teachers and pupils were provided. The convent was also given a thorough renovating. The parish generously supported the new Bishop Scully High School, donating $123,000.

For his good work, Bishop Scully made him a monsignor in April 1957. He was also appointed a consultant to the diocese under Bishop Scully. The new cemetery consists of 188 acres at a cost of $25,000.

The Most Rev. Edwin B. Broderick, D.D., Bishop of Albany, said, "I rejoice with Msgr. Gospodarek on his 60th Anniversary to the priesthood. This anniversary represents years of dedicated service to God and the people of the Albany Diocese. I join with his friends on this joyful occasion in wishing him many years of continued happiness."

RETIREMENT OF GEN. ANDREW J. GOODPASTER, A GREAT AMERICAN LEADER AND SPOKESMAN

(Mr. STRATTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments to acknowledge some of the many great contributions to our country of a very distinguished American, Gen. Andrew J. Goodpaster, retiring Supreme NATO commander in Europe.

General Goodpaster, one of the finest soldiers this country has produced, retired this week after more than 39 years in uniform. His career, which began when he entered West Point from Illinois in 1935, spanned World War II, the Korean War, the war in Vietnam and the Cold War in Europe.

A warm, sensitive and judicious man, as well as a brilliant general, Andrew Goodpaster brought to the profession of arms the very best of human attributes. He dedicated himself selflessly to the service of his country—and his country was most magnificently served.

It is unusual when a man distinguishes himself in more than one field; it is even rarer when he does so in three. General Goodpaster is one of those very exceptional persons who combines all the qualities of the soldier, the scholar, and the statesman.

He commanded a combat engineer battalion in Europe during World War II. He was twice wounded. Among many decorations, he earned the Nation's second-highest award for valor under fire, the Distinguished Service Cross. Later he commanded a division in NATO; and later still, he became Gen. Creighton Abrams' deputy in Vietnam. Andrew Goodpaster is a proven combat soldier.

Andrew Goodpaster gained academic status early when he graduated second in his class at West Point. After World War II he earned a Ph. D. from Princeton University and some years later served as Commandant of the National War College here in Washington. Andrew Goodpaster is an outstanding scholar.

General Goodpaster held sensitive jobs dealing with national security matters in the Joint Staff in the Pentagon and served for 6 years in a key position in the White House under President Eisenhower. He then capped his career with more than 5 years as Supreme Allied Commander in Europe, a position demanding statesmanship as well as generalship. Andrew Goodpaster has proved himself a very effective statesman.

In his most recent and most important assignment—the Supreme Commander in Europe—his mission has been to deter war. He had to be both a general and a statesman—to keep his forces ready to fight and also to convince his allies and countrymen of the need for unity and preparedness. His determination to improve the organization, training and equipping of the diverse forces under his command reinvigorated NATO's military capability and credibility. He constantly sought to balance the requirements of peacetime efficiency with those of wartime effectiveness. As a member of the Special Subcommittee on NATO, I had the good fortune to see General Goodpaster's work closehand on several occasions. The country was lucky indeed to have had his services at a very crucial time in our history.

Mr. Speaker, I believe I may know better than many Members of this body the extent and the nature of General Goodpaster's most important service to our country and the free world during these past few years. He did a great job in keeping his forces ready, and he did a great job of enlisting the cooperation and support of our NATO allies. But most of all, Mr. Speaker, General Goodpaster did more than any other individual to hold together the support of the American people and the U.S. Congress for the NATO alliance that was first forged together under General Eisenhower back in 1949. He did that in a very direct and nimble way, simply by being able to explain, clearly, forcefully, and persuasively to the Members of the House and the Senate, year after year, as we have periodically addressed ourselves to the question of U.S. military force levels in Europe, the importance of our continuing NATO commitment to the peace of the world.

The fact that over these past few years we have successfully resisted all these efforts to reduce our forces in Europe at a time when Warsaw Pact forces have been steadily increasing their strength in eastern Europe has been due almost entirely to General Goodpaster.

Our only hopes that even though General Goodpaster has now retired we may still be able to call on his expertise and persuasiveness next spring when once again we fight the battle of NATO forces in Europe.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure every Member of the House will join with me in saluting General Goodpaster for his splendid career of public service and in wishing him a long and fruitful retirement.

THE BEST CONGRESSMAN

(Mr. GAYDOS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, in the January issue of Harper's magazine which arrived in my office today, there is an article entitled "The Best Congressman." It is all about our beloved colleague, the Honorable DANIEL J. FLOOD, of Pennsylvania's 11th District. In my opinion DAN FLOOD is the "best Congressman" and my only complaint is that the Harper's article did not say enough about the help given to millions of people by DANIEL J. FLOOD, Member of Congress.

For those of us who sit in this great Chamber when the HEW-Labor appropriations bill is under consideration or for those of us on Appropriations who greet the generals and admirals at the beginning of each year for a friendly interrogation, it is DAN FLOOD who dominates the stage with another audience firmly in his hands. These yearly performances should be demand appearances for every Member for they are exquisitely flawless, executed with style, grace, elegance, wit, eloquence, stamina, brilliance, and discipline. This is the show side of DAN FLOOD. But for those of us who know him well, the work side is just as impressive. He really knows how to get the job done.

December 20, 1974

He has been a true friend during my 8 years here and I leave here this week owing DAN FLOOD more than just another I.O.U. Mr. Speaker, if the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania will not object, I place at this point in the Record the aforementioned article from Harper's magazine.

THE BEST CONGRESSMAN

(By George Crille)

"There sits a buffoon with the mold of Zeus, the strength of Atlas, and, forgive me, but he is godlike."—Melvin Laird.

Rep. DANIEL J. FLOOD is one of the more bizarre products of the seniority system—an aging, pugacious, Red-baiting eccentric whose vision of the national interest never seems to extend beyond the borders of his constituency.¹ He is one of the thirteen subcommittee chairmen of the House Appropriations Committee—a group of men so powerful that they are known in Congress as the College of Cardinals. Like the other appropriations chiefs, Flood holds a near-veto power over major portions of the annual $300 billion federal budget, and he wields his power ruthlessly to channel untold millions of federal dollars into his district. Because of his tireless advocacy of military spending and his insatiable appetite for pork-barrel programs, Congressman Flood is one of those politicians who are widely denounced for their distortions of our national priorities. In short, he is a vivid illustration of what liberal reformers feel is wrong with Congress.

There is, however, a different way of looking at this malefactor of great influence; seen through the eyes of his constituents in Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, DAN FLOOD is without doubt the best Congressman in the country. For almost three decades he has served as Wilkes-Barre's guardian angel. A peerless ombudsman, he is a father, a priest, an employment bureau, an entertainer, a miraculous "fixer"; and on two occasions when disaster threatened the very survival of his district, he emerged as its savior.

Flood is the last of the great eccentrics to sit in the House, and, befitting his character, he bears a startling resemblance to the colorful villains of vaudeville melodrama. It's the moustache that first catches the eye, almost surreal with its waxed wings and carefully sharpened points. The clothing has to be considered a bit conservative compared to that of twenty years ago, when Flood sported a raccoon coat and derby and dressed regularly in morning coat and striped pants. Today his Edwardian suits, with their bold stripes and wide lapels, seem almost conventional (at least for men of less than his seventy-one years), though the same can't be said for the red-white-and-blue sneakers that Flood delights in wearing.

"Now hear this!" the Congressman shouts at his noisy colleagues. Flood is presiding over the House of Representatives in place of the Speaker, and he is dressed for the occasion in a white Panama suit with black shirt and matching scarlet handkerchief and tie. "This is important!" he says, pounding the gavel. The noise subsides but two members are still talking. Flood points the gavel at them: "Don't let the moustache fool you, this is Flood talking."

¹ The Eleventh Congressional District of Pennsylvania, consisting of five coal-mining and industrial counties (Carbon, Columbia, Luzerne, Montour, and Sullivan) in the northeastern part of the state. The Eleventh's biggest city is Wilkes-Barre (1970 population 58,856).

The chamber hushes. All eyes focus on the Speaker's chair as Flood launches into his introduction.

"Now, before the curtain rises on scene one, the chairman will set down certain guidelines to be observed during these proceedings." He admonishes the members once again that there will be no conversations in the chamber.

"As the curtain rises," he says, pausing to gesture to the leaders of the coming floor debate, "the dramatis personae: at stage right, the gentleman from Texas, Mr. Mahon, has one hour, and at stage left, the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. Cederberg, has one hour. And at stage center, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Flood." He gives himself no time limit.

These performances are not the adornments of a politically secure old age: DAN FLOOD was always bizarre. Once in 1946, as a freshman Congressman, he appeared before a group of drunken miners out on a wildcat strike wearing a silk top hat, white tie, and tails. A satin-lined cape was slung over his shoulders, and he carried an ebony sword stick as he mounted the union-hall stage.

"Who is this pansy?" a burly miner belted from the crowd. Flood seemed not to hear the jeers and snickers as he coolly removed his top hat and placed it on a chair. Then, with his cape flying, he leapt from the stage and decked the accusing miner across four rows of chairs. "I used to get into a fight most every night," he recalls nostalgically today. "There was always some joker trying to start things. That was until they found out just who DAN FLOOD was."

Flood has been making dramatic appearances before one kind of audience or another ever since the late 1920s, when he became a Shakespearean actor and performed in fifty productions on the legitimate stage.² Star-struck women would cluster outside the theaters where his picture appeared on giant posters, sighing, "Ah, Dan, ah, Dan" when the dashing Irish matinee idol appeared to sign autographs. For a time it appeared that the theater would be his life. But on the day Rudolph Valentino was buried, Flood, who was appearing at the old opera house in Wheeling, West Virginia, quit the stage to attend Harvard Law School, finally to return to his theatrical calling by performing on what he considers the greatest stage of them all—the floor of the House of Representatives.

FLOOD MEETS FLOOD

The rains from tropical storm Agnes first hit Wilkes-Barre on June 21, 1972. By the morning of June 23 the Susquehanna had risen forty feet and sent Agnes's waters pouring over the dikes protecting the twenty-two communities clustered around Wilkes-Barre. In the early dawn, a few residents were amazed to see what appeared to be a fleet of small boats cruising down the flooded main street of town. They were coffins, pried out of the earth by the raging currents and sent on a macabre voyage through the city.

A day later, Wilkes-Barre and its neighboring cities in the Wyoming Valley were ghost towns with more than 200,000 people evacuated from their homes. Of the estimated $4 billion in damage caused by the flood—acknowledged by some authorities as the worst civil disaster in this country's history—nearly one quarter of the losses came from the greater Wilkes-Barre area. In Washington, Flood was working in his one-bedroom apartment next to the Capitol at 2:00 a.m. when he learned that the Susquehanna was starting to rise over its banks. For sixteen years he had served on two subcommittees with Republican Congressman Melvin Laird, Laird, now Secretary of Defense, was fast asleep at 3:00 a.m. when his phone rang: "Stand by!" Flood shouted into the phone after telling Laird that he was on his way to take command of the rescue effort, and that he expected full-scale assistance from his old friend.

² Flood grew his moustache for a role as a plantation owner in White Cargo, a play in which he appeared in New Orleans. One of the ushers at those performances was a young boy named F. Edward Hébert, now chairman of the House Armed Services Committee.

"Yes, sir," the Secretary of Defense replied.

Several hours later, Flood stepped into Laird's helicopter at the Pentagon for the trip to Wilkes-Barre. He sat in silence as the chopper flew through the storm. His legislative assistant, Richard Altman, remembers that Flood's anger seemed to flare up as he neared his district. Then, as the chopper landed at the Wilkes-Barre/Scranton airport, Flood turned to Altman and spoke for the first time—much as a sheriff in a Western might have informed a bad man that there wasn't room in his town for the two of them: "This is going to be one Flood against another."

There is no precedent and no legal authority for a Congressman to take control of any part of a disaster relief mission. It is a local and state responsibility that cannot be assumed unless the state asks for federal assistance. The man in charge of the rescue effort in Flood's district was the Luzerne County civil defense director, a retired general named Frank Townsend. At the peak of the flooding, Gov. Milton Shapp called Townsend to ask if the situation warranted seeking federal assistance. Townsend, a stalwart foe of federal intervention in state affairs, insisted that the situation was completely under control. He indicated that Washington's assistance would only complicate matters.

The senior military officer on duty in the area, Lt. Howard Glad, was the first to greet Flood. Without stopping for an introduction, the Congressman announced he would establish his command post in the Naval Reserve Center and that Glad would serve as his "Navy lieutenant two-striper operations officer." "He had no authority to do this," Glad recalls, but Flood was impatient with mere legalisms, and Glad was not about to challenge a man who had just arrived in the Secretary of Defense's helicopter. "What do you need here?" Flood asked.

"Helicopters," Glad replied, and then explained that it wasn't possible to get authorization to have any sent in. "Well," declared Flood, "I'm vice-chairman of defense appropriations." By afternoon Flood's new aide had a good idea of the powers inherent in that title. Forty additional helicopters appeared on the scene, and during the next few days, Glad estimates, they were making around 1,600 sorties a day. "We were yanking people off of rooftops and porches, hilltops and trucks. There were eighteen cardiac arrests, two Caesarean sections, two appendectomies, and two tracheotomies following helicopter evacuations. Without Flood we wouldn't have had any helicopter support in those critical first days. Without the helicopters, at least 1,000 people might have been killed." As it was, there were only four deaths.

As the flood waters poured over the dikes in Wilkes-Barre, they pushed their way throughout most of the city, halting deferentially half a block on either side of DAN FLOOD's small frame house. That night on the television news, Flood, dressed in fatigues, was shown standing on a hill overlooking his flooded district. "Today," he said, "I have ordered the Army Corps of Engineers not to permit the Susquehanna to rise one more inch."

Technically, of course, the Congressman had no authority to order the Corps of Engineers to do anything, much less make the rains go away. Indeed, out in the flooded cities he was forced to battle for his district's survival on two fronts: one with a federal bureaucracy reluctant to enter a state without authorization and the other with General Townsend.

A typical skirmish in the latter battle broke out when Townsend refused to authorize a request for stethoscopes and other sorely needed medical supplies. According to one person who saw the requisition order, the General scribbled in the margin: "If they have to listen to a heart beat they can darn well go down on their knees and pull their ears to the patient's chest." Flood sent an Army truck to pick up the supplies anyway, only to have the National Guardsmen refuse to release them. The truck came back empty, and an incensed Flood put in a call to Governor Shapp. An observer recalled his words: "If you won't give us the supplies we'll blast the place open." The medical supplies were handed out.

Another skirmish: on Wednesday the General ordered the National Guard troops out of the valley. On Friday Flood not only had them back but had arranged to have several companies of Army reservists reassigned to Wilkes-Barre for their summer training. And another: the General ordered a halt to the emergency federal food shipments that were being distributed to tens of thousands of flood victims at the local airport. A call from Flood, and the Department of Agriculture reinstated the shipments under the pretext of "supporting the federal effort." And so the local battle with Townsend went.

Meanwhile, on the federal level, Flood continued to perform like a circus impresario calling out one more remarkable act after another. On the second night of the flood, a fire started in downtown Wilkes-Barre and threatened to spread throughout the central city. Burning office buildings were surrounded by several feet of water, making it impossible for fire trucks to move in. This was the sort of challenge that seemed to delight Flood.

Reasoning that the nearest analogy to his problem was a fire at sea, Flood located a Coast Guard fireboat in New Jersey and then found a C-130 transport in Boston. An Air Force general was awakened at 2:00 A.M. by a strange, theatrical voice. After cracking several jokes, Flood identified himself as "the vice-chairman of defense appropriations. My spies tell me you have a C-130 on the line there."

When the plane arrived in Wilkes-Barre with the fireboat, two flatbed trucks from the Tobyhanna Army Depot rushed the boat to the flooded city, where it steamed off and put out the fire, just a few hours after it had begun.

Flood was exhilarated. At sixty-eight he was working twenty-two hours a day and seemed to be getting stronger as he went along. Throughout the crisis he continued to dress extravagantly in purple and brown Edwardian suits, his moustache carefully waxed. Harried bureaucrats from assorted federal agencies, summoned to Wilkes-Barre by Flood, waited outside his "command post" to be received.

"Why, you must have crystal balls," Flood snapped at one official who had just given a detailed accounting of the damage. "Those are the very questions I was going to ask you to look into." Flood listened for a moment more as the man launched into a new set of statistics. "Okay, that's enough. Pull the curtain down." The man kept talking. "Curtain down!" Flood shouted. "When an act's good, get out in time."

The Tobyhanna Army Depot was just a shooting range until Flood took an interest in the installation. The Army had decided to shut it down when the vice-chairman of defense appropriations persuaded the Pentagon to transform it into the principal East Coast base for overhauls of communications equipment.

Enter another man from the General Services Administration. When he flubbed his lines, Flood barked, "I'm getting food flown here. I'm getting medicine and personnel. Now I want germicides from you. I want soap tonight!" The tongue-tied GSA man mumbled a commitment as Flood waved him off the stage. "That's it. Good show, enough for one show." The next official opened the door as Flood muttered: "A bureaucrat's a bureaucrat until you do something about it."

ARM-TWISTING

In a sense Flood had been rehearsing for his role in the Great Deluge ever since he entered Congress in 1944. In that year the Eleventh Congressional District was suffering an even greater disaster than the waters that would drown it twenty-eight years later. For decades, coal mining had been the sole industry in northeastern Pennsylvania, an area that holds the only major deposits of anthracite coal in the country. During World War I, more trains came into Wilkes-Barre than into any other city except Chicago. Each year 100,000 men tolled in the mines to produce 100 million tons of coal for a seemingly limitless market. By the end of World War II, however, anthracite was no longer competitive with bituminous coal, which is easier to mine, nor with liquid and gaseous fuels. Today, the demand for anthracite has all but disappeared save one loyal but increasingly reluctant customer, the U.S. Army.

In 1960 Flood discovered that it was technically possible to convert the U.S. Army's 8,000 coke-burning barracks furnaces in West Germany to anthracite use. Granted, anthracite coal was not being used anywhere else in the world: it was expensive to buy, even more expensive to ship across the Atlantic from Wilkes-Barre, and particularly expensive to hire more than 1,000 men needed to stoke the furnaces. Nevertheless, the furnaces were converted.

By the late 1960s, even the Army began to flinch at the annual cost of the favor to Flood. Budget officials estimated that the Army could save over $20 million a year by reconverting the furnaces to oil. Moreover, there were no longer enough people willing to work in the Wilkes-Barre mines, and the companies were falling behind in their shipments. They had even resorted to lobbying with immigration officials to let them import German miners. Year after year, the Army has attempted to get Congress to appropriate funds for the reconversion, and each year the proposal has died in the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee, of which Dan Flood is vice-chairman.

At lunch in the House dining room, Flood eagerly admitted to his role in the matter: "Hell, yes, I stopped it." Other Congressmen seated at adjoining tables looked up with smiles. "I did it by twisting arms and hammering heads. I'd break a few arms if I had to."

"Why does the Army let you do it?" Flood was asked.

"They can't be blamed," he said sympathetically. "After all, here's Flood, a nice fellow, and he's got a great reputation for being for defense appropriations—bang, bang, bang, and all that. Jesus Christ, suppose you were one of these goddamn generals or secretaries or deputy secretaries. What are you going to do? Jeopardize the Army materiel command with a son of a bitch like that for a couple of million dollars, for a couple of tons of coal?"

Flood is like a barroom civics teacher, de-

"Last year, in the wake of the energy crisis, Flood managed to write into law a measure prohibiting conversion of the furnaces. A despairing Army budget official remarked, 'Now he's made it so we could get put in jail for trying to convert those furnaces.'" lighting in relating how he pressures the system to respond to his district's needs. "It just so happens that I get along with most of the members of the subcommittee [Defense Appropriations]. I do a lot for them, and I'm also chairman of the Labor Health, Education, and Welfare Subcommittee. For the first time in history the HEW bill is bigger than Defense. Here I am, identified with three-fourths of the whole federal budget. You can imagine what that means. You get to be known, and while you don't threaten anyone—they are very understanding people and very human—it's this sort of thing, you see. It's very technical and I use all of these opportunities, advantages, seniority, and all of this stuff for the purpose of helping whatever is left of the goddamn anthracite coal industry."

Almost every year Jack Anderson devotes a column to "Dapper Dan Flood." He writes of the 100 free flights Flood took on Continental Airlines when his law firm was put on the airline's retainer, or of the time Flood obtained a large defense contract for Medico Industries, which Anderson maintained had connections with the Mafia. One column charged Flood with pressuring HEW to award a $500,000 contract to an unqualified Wilkes-Barre firm. Flood's approach to answering such charges is generally the same. "That wasn't the first time I've twisted some arms for someone back home," he said. "I've done it hundreds of times. In fact, I did it fifteen times today already."

THE BENEVOLENT DICTATOR

The Wyoming valley had been declared a federal disaster area once before, in the 1950s, when the death of the coal-mining industry had lifted the unemployment rate to 19 percent. There were no major roads into the district, the closest fully equipped hospital was in Philadelphia, and the area was split into twenty-two competing and inefficient municipalities.

Yet by 1972 the valley had achieved a complete recovery. When the floodwaters came in June, unemployment had dropped to the national average as a diversified industrial base offered more and more jobs and a hopeful future. There is no mystery behind the recovery. On every facet of it rests the signature of Dan Flood.

On more than one occasion, truckers driving down Interstate 83 have been startled by the sudden appearance of a white Cadillac convertible bearing down on them. In it are Mr. and Mrs. Dan Flood, on their way to Wilkes-Barre. A parakeet called Tony is in a cage on the floor, Cocoa the dachshund sits on Mrs. Flood's lap, and a goldfish in a bowl rests between the Congressman's legs. "Overtake that truck," Flood orders his aide, and, as the Cadillac accelerates, he leans out the window and shakes his fist at the driver: "You bastard, you're going too fast! [Aside] The bastard doesn't know that I built this highway."

As Flood tells it, he was serving on another appropriations subcommittee, which had jurisdiction over the Bureau of Public Roads, when the planners sought funding for a major north-south interstate highway linking Montreal to New Orleans. "Well, that won't do me any good," Flood said after looking at the plans, which called for the road to pass far to the west of his district. "Why?" one planner asked.

"I'm from Wilkes-Barre," Flood replied. Three weeks later, a new plan called for the highway to pass through Wilkes-Barre. "The chairman of the subcommittee, John Rooney, was an usher at my wedding," Flood explained.

In the decade after World War II, about the only new jobs created in Flood's districts came as a result of his efforts—particularly through a series of federal area redevelopment programs for which he claims primary responsibility.

"The first big thing was the so-called Flood-Douglas bill, which provided federal funds (including long-term, low interest loans for businesses) for depressed areas. You can imagine what kind of funds my district got," Flood crowed. "The bill was too parochial, though, and we couldn't get enough votes to keep it going, so we expanded it into the Appalachian Bill," Flood went on. "I got Robert Kennedy in on that one, and, lo and behold, thirteen counties on the New York-Pennsylvania border turned up in Appalachia. That must have surprised them. But we had to get more votes, so we gave birth to the Economic Development Act, and everybody is included in that." Not by any coincidence, the EDA regional office for the Eastern United States, the Virgin Islands, and Puerto Rico was located in Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania.

Flood does not restrict his efforts to the federal bureaucracy. He has also demonstrated a particular talent at persuading defense-oriented businesses to locate factories in his district. "I'm not a genius," he says of this effort. "Little birdies fly by and drop these goodies on my desk. For example, I find out that a company is looking for a site to make shoes or erasers or whatever, and I go to them and say, 'I need you.' Somebody at the company board meeting will say, 'By the way, Flood's on the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee.' Later, you can be sure that company won't be overlooked."

Frank Carlucci, former director of the Office of Economic Opportunity, still recalls his surprise when he informed Flood that some of the OEO programs in his district would have to be cut back in keeping with nationwide reductions. "Gentlemen," Flood said, after listening to the lengthy explanation, "there comes a time when every man must learn to rise above principle." Carlucci duly adjusted the funding in the entire state of Pennsylvania to keep the programs in Flood's district intact.

"There aren't many programs originating from Washington that we haven't participated in," says Edgar Lashford, director of the Wilkes-Barre Chamber of Commerce. "Flood finds them and then he's on the phone telling you to get a committee together to apply for them. From the time he first calls, you better believe you'll get a couple of letters a week asking what you've done and telephone calls at all hours of the night. He'll either have us go to Washington to meet with a representative of the given funding agency, or they'll come up here. They'll even fill in the applications for you if you need the help. I shudder to think of the frustration we'll encounter the first year Dan Flood's no longer in Washington."

After the great disaster of 1972, Flood set off for Washington to mount the major lobbying campaign of his career. He was resolved that the federal government should—at the very least—restore his district to its antediluvian status.

"There has probably never been a Congressman in any district in history where the need for all the skills and powers that I have was so necessary," Flood boasted as he embarked on his campaign. It was no idle boast.

For the last three decades, Flood has operated rather like a Mafia don, viewing a request for help from a fellow Congressman as an opportunity rather than a burden. By 1972 his IOUs were carefully distributed

"The target of the original Model Cities program was to be limited to inner-city ghettos, but when the bill ran into trouble Speaker of the House John McCormack sought Flood's assistance. Flood agreed to cosponsor a modified bill. The bill passed, and Wilkes-Barre became the first city to have its application granted for the Model Cities program."

throughout the power structure of the House, hitting every region and committee, and extending to both parties. "Flood's in a position to accommodate a lot of members," explained Speaker Carl Albert. "It's money that makes the merry-go-round, and HEW is the biggest peacetime committee of all." President—and former House Minority Leader—Ford agreed with Albert's view, adding that Flood possesses the most important quality necessary to acquire influence in the House: "He's a man of his word. He's asked me for some favors, and he's stood up for us on some tough votes."

Joe Waggoner of Louisiana, a spokesman and leader of the Southern delegation, chuckled when asked about Flood: "The old boy is a boy I suppose you don't find too many of in the North. He understands the practical problems of politicians in the South. I'll give you an example: the schools in Otto Passman's district [in Louisiana] were being cut out of Emergency School Assistance money because the district hadn't complied with the court desegregation order. So Otto went to Dan, and Dan forced HEW to change its regulations so that the schools could qualify for funds. He's a Congressman's Congressman. The way we operate around here is, if he wants it and we've got it, it's his."

Rep. Tom Steed of Oklahoma, a fellow member of the College of Cardinals, seemed to summarize the prevailing sentiment of Flood's colleagues: "It's true that I do more for Dan Flood than I do for other members of Congress. It's because Dan Flood can do more for me than other members of Congress."

Steed was the first to answer Flood's appeal for assistance by allowing him to appear before his House Treasury, Postal Service, and General Government Subcommittee to ask for a funding increase in the President's relief bill: "Dan gave a prayer oration, a real tearjerker; it would have melted a heart of stone. Well, he saw to it that the $100 million was raised to $200 million."

Flood was not working alone. Scores of other Congressmen also had Agnes's waters to contend with, and they, too, were calling in their IOUs. But none quite like Flood. "Now look goddamn it," Flood could be heard barking at hesitant colleagues. "I've taken care of you before, now you get in line."

In the hall outside the House floor, Flood, wearing dark glasses and dressed in a Panama suit and red-white-and-blue sneakers, greeted Rep. William Barrett of Philadelphia. Barrett, an old-style ward politician who still wears a boiled shirt, proudly reported that an amendment had passed providing direct federal assistance to private and parochial schools affected by the flood.

"It's absolutely unconstitutional," Flood declared, feigning disapproval.

"Unprecedented," Barrett replied with a smile.

"Though considered a liberal on domestic issues, Flood has long been a darling of political conservatives because of his hard-line stands on defense and foreign-policy questions. His lobbying efforts in Congress, employing heated warnings of the 'Red menace' in Panama, are largely responsible for frustrating the efforts of four Presidents to amend the Panama Canal treaty. The Panamanian General Assembly recognized Flood's work several years ago with a resolution declaring him Panama's 'Public Enemy Number One.'"

"According to Barrett, Flood's lobbying campaign was largely responsible for doubling the amount of federal assistance offered to disaster victims. Calling Flood's efforts 'unprecedented,' Speaker Albert observed that Flood had only begun his planned efforts. "I think he will probably be successful and in the process will be setting precedents."

A KIND OF IMMORTALITY

Louis Harris has found that less than 50 percent of the American voting public can identify their Congressman by name. In Pennsylvania's Eleventh Congressional district, which in 1970 reelected its Congressman to a twelfth term with 97 percent of the vote, it's a rare citizen who doesn't know the name of Dan Flood. More often than not, his constituents can also tell you what committees he serves on, what his accomplishments for the district have been, and how his health is. Invariably, someone in their families has been helped by him.

Bill Barnes is a retired coal miner crippled by black-lung disease. He sits day after day in his air-conditioned trailer with an oxygen inhaler next to his chair. The breath of life is slowly, painfully leaving him. "My two brothers and father and all of my cousins and uncles died of black lung," he says. "I'm just waiting my time. There's no work I could do, and you can't collect Social Security until you're sixty-two, and then it's only $165 a month. How ya goin' to live on that?" Thanks largely to Flood's success in rallying his colleagues to pass the black-lung bill, Barnes and the 25,000 other black-lung victims in Flood's district are receiving $165 a month in disability payments. "It's because of Dan Flood that we all have a chance of living a little longer," Barnes reflected.

"People are now saying we shouldn't have passed that bill, that it opened the floodgates—well, Flood opened them," Rep. Bob Casey of Texas commented. "You won't find a similar piece of legislation on the books—not for the asbestos workers or the textile workers or steelworkers. Flood convinced the rest of us that he had more of the affected miners in his district than anywhere else. I can assure you that you won't find any black lung in Texas, yet the whole delegation voted for it."

On the day of the vote, Flood discovered that some swing votes were shifting. "These guys from the steel and asbestos plant district wanted to know why they shouldn't be included—'What about us?' they asked. I knew I had to do something goddamn quick."

House Majority Leader Thomas P. ("Tip") O'Neill, Jr., recalls Flood's performance that day. "Ordinarily speeches don't change votes anymore but this one did. It was one of the two or three most impressive speeches I've ever heard. Most of us hadn't even heard of black lung before that day. It completely killed the opposition. He got a standing ovation."

"You can't get away with that kind of speech very often," Flood commented later. "I went pretty far—a very stylized performance, in full costume. Oh yes, I pulled out all the stops. I think it was impromptu, too."

Each year Flood assigns a different branch of the armed services responsibility for putting on an extravaganza at the Wilkes-Barre Veterans' Day Parade, and he always has a platoon of generals and admirals flown in from the Pentagon to walk with him at the head of the procession.

In 1962 it seemed unlikely that the parade would take place—Flood had undergone surgery for advanced cancer of the stomach and esophagus, a dangerous operation requiring a long and painful recuperation. But in Flood's world the show must go on. Defying his doctors and the realities of his physical condition, he took his usual position at the head of the parade. Then, as on every Veterans' Day in Wilkes-Barre for the last two decades, the vice-chairman of defense appropriations led his admirals and generals while jets swooped overhead, Army marching bands blared, and drill teams did their fancy stepping. Flood walked along the four-mile parade route, his expression defiantly concealing his agony, his constituents applauding as he passed by. The Navy was in charge of entertainment last year as Flood, fortified by an overwhelming election victory, marched gallantly at the head of the greatest parade in Wilkes-Barre's history.

Tears come to the eyes of Catherine Flood when she talks of the man who was once her childhood matinee idol. A onetime actress herself, she met him during a Ferris wheel ride at a church social. The wheel got stuck, and they were suspended in the air together for several hours until a fire truck came with a ladder and brought them down. "He believes that you've always got to give that audience just as much as you did the first night. No matter how big or small the group, he never lets up. He always gives his best performance."

For several years after his operation, Flood resembled a walking corpse and he was given up by his colleagues as moribund. But by the late 1960s he seemed to have miraculously regained his health.

With trusted friends he sometimes accepts an offered arm for support when walking. But this is all somehow concealed from the public eye; and when a crisis such as the Great Deluge arises, he manages to fool even himself.

The lights burn late into the night in Flood's offices in the old Cannon Office Building. He works at his desk six, sometimes seven days a week. Each morning at his apartment next to the Capitol, he waxes his moustache and selects his costume for the day. At 9:00, he takes his wife's arm and walks out into the hall.

"Every night's a first night," Catherine Flood says to her matinee idol as he steps into the elevator. And as the door closes, she adds, as she has each morning for the last twenty years: "Cut 'em deep and let 'em bleed!"

RESOLUTION OF INQUIRY

(Ms. HOLTZMAN asked and was given permission to extend her remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Ms. HOLTZMAN. Mr. Speaker, on September 30, 1974, I introduced a resolution of inquiry in the House of Representatives, directing President Ford to furnish the House with information relating to certain services, facilities, and payments provided by the United States to Richard Nixon and members of his immediate family.

I delayed calling up this resolution on the floor pending the receipt of information relevant to some of the requests made in my resolution. I received this information today.

I intend to analyze this information and pursue this matter further in the 94th Congress. I remain concerned over the wasteful and unnecessary expenditure of taxpayers' money that has been made for the benefit of a man who brought the highest office of our land into disgrace.

TRIBUTE TO HON. O. C. FISHER

(Mr. STEED asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. STEED. Mr. Speaker, when this session ends, Congressman O. C. FISHER will be leaving us to go back to the southwest Texas country he has so ably represented for 32 years.

Through his long and steady work on the Committee on Armed Services he became one of the outstanding authorities on national security. He helped to formulate national policy in this vital field in some of the most critical periods of our history.

CLARK FISHER has been a key figure in the development of extensive water and flood control projects in southwest Texas, and it is fitting that one of them is being named in his honor.

It is good to see that the people of his district have extended so many testimonials showing their appreciation of the consistent service he has given them.

He has already made noteworthy contributions to the history of the area, and I am glad that he anticipates more.

During my entire service here he has been a friend and neighbor. I salute his work.

NUTRITION PROGRAM FOR ELDERLY

(Mr. PEPPER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, this 93d Congress has recorded many notable achievements for the American people, despite the many problems we as a Nation have faced in these 2 years and continue to face as we prepare to make way for the 94th Congress.

One of our most notable achievements for older Americans has been the renewal of the nutrition program for the elderly for another 3 years—thus making it unmistakably clear that the Congress intends for this highly successful program to continue and to be expanded beyond what was accomplished under the original 2-year authorization.

For many reasons this hot meals program got off to a much slower and more limited start than we originally had envisaged. This shortfall in the use of the funds the Congress has appropriated for this program was recognized in the Conference Report 93-1503, on H.R. 16900, the supplemental appropriations bill, which provides the $125 million in new funds for the nutrition program for fiscal 1975.

Referring to the nutrition program for the elderly, the report states:

It is the intent of the conferees that the Department of Health, Education and Welfare utilize carryover funds to build the program operating level for the nutrition program authorized by Title VII of the Older Americans Act to at least $150 million for Fiscal Year 1975.

At the time this language was adopted there was some confusion over the extent of the carryover funds which would be available to expand the nutrition program to the $150 million level in the current fiscal year. I, therefore, undertook a survey of the State offices actually implementing the program to determine how much of the fiscal 1973 funds had been expended and whether any of the 1974 funds had been spent.

I found that the funds appropriated for fiscal 1973 had actually been spent during this calendar year 1974. Virtually none of the fiscal 1974 money has actually been translated into meals for our older citizens.

Unless there is a change in the implementation of this program, the money Congress appropriated for fiscal 1974—which ended last June 30—will not reach the intended beneficiaries as daily hot meals until the calendar year 1975.

And the expanded program we have just voted will not become a reality until calendar 1976.

There is no need for this to happen.

I found that there are abundant funds to achieve the level of service mandated by the Congress for the current fiscal year, which ends June 30, 1975. Most of the $100 million for fiscal 1974 is still unspent and we have added another $125 million in the supplemental appropriations bill for fiscal 1975.

There is ample money to double the number of hot meals in the next 6 months and thereby fulfill the congressional mandate to build the operating level of the program "to at least $150 million for fiscal year 1975."

A doubling of the nutrition program in the next 6 months is entirely in line with the authorizations included in the 3-year extension of the program which we voted in this Congress. We authorized a $150 million level for fiscal 1975, a $200 million level for fiscal 1976, and a level of $250 million for fiscal 1977.

Since the program is now operating at the $100-million-a-year level, only about $50 million actually will be spent on hot meals for older Americans in the first 6 months of this fiscal year—that is, through December 31, 1974.

Doubling our effort will mean the spending of $100 million in the next 6 months—raising the operating level to $200 million a year—for a total expenditure on actual hot meals of $150 million in fiscal 1975.

An operating level of $200 million a year is what we have authorized for the fiscal year beginning next July 1, with a further increase in the program to $250 million in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1977.

Yet—unless the States and the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare respond to the congressional mandate in the conference report more readily than they have to previous expressions of congressional intent with regard to this program—the funds we have appropriated for this fiscal year will not actually reach our needy older citizens as daily hot meals until the calendar year 1976.

There is no need for this long delay in providing nutritious meals for people who desperately need them. The money is available, the need is clear, and my survey has convinced me that the States can expand existing meal programs and establish others awaiting only the availability of the necessary operating funds.

Instead of about 220,000 meals daily—still short of the 250,000-meal level envisaged in the original 2-year authorization—we could be providing more than 400,000 hot meals each day by the end of June 1975.

What must be changed is the concept of forward funding which was developed by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and accepted by the States, despite a legislative record which indicated that the Congress wanted to accelerate the buildup of this program—after delays in implementation caused by two Presidential vetoes of HEW appropriations bills.

I think it would be useful to put this legislative record into the RECORD, and then to contrast it with the implementation as revealed in my survey of the State implementing offices.

The survey conducted by my staff earlier this month covered 38 of the 50 directors of aging programs in the States and the District of Columbia. Not included in the initial survey were Alaska, Arizona, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Kansas, Nebraska, New Mexico, Oregon, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Vermont.

Before giving the results of this survey, I would like to review the legislative history.

I drafted in the spring of 1970 the bill to establish title VII which passed both Houses of the Congress by overwhelming votes and was signed into law March 22, 1972, as Public Law 92-258. Senator EDWARD M. KENNEDY sponsored the bill in the Senate and, with very fine bipartisan support, the legislation was first passed in the Senate in November 1971 while the White House Conference on Aging was in session here in Washington. We were not able to complete action in the House in that Congress but we moved quickly in the 92d Congress to authorize this nationwide extension of what previously had been an experimental program in certain areas.

Public Law 92-258 authorized an appropriation of $100 million in fiscal year 1973 and $150 million in fiscal year 1974—for distribution to the States on the basis of each State's percentage of the Nation's population age 60 and over. The States, in turn, were to redistribute their allotments to local governmental agencies and private nonprofit groups for the establishment and operation of hot meals programs. The law provided for a 90-10 Federal-State and local matching of funds.

The President recommended the full $100 million authorized for fiscal 1973, but appropriation of these funds was delayed by two presidential vetoes of fiscal 1973 Labor-HEW appropriations bills. Finally the funds were made available in the fiscal 1973 second supplemental appropriations bill, which became law as Public Law 93-50 on July 1, 1973, the day after the end of fiscal year 1973.

Recognizing this delay in funding, the Congress provided that the fiscal 1973 funds would remain available for commitment through December 31, 1973; that is, during the first half of fiscal year 1974.

The Congress also moved ahead with the fiscal 1974 appropriation—which was set at $104.8 million in anticipation of the administration exercising the authority given the Executive to reduce by 5 percent appropriations in the Labor-HEW appropriations bill, Public Law 93-192. This appropriation for fiscal year 1974 became law on December 18, 1973, and the 5-percent cut was imposed, reducing the sum to $99.6 million.

Thus the Congress had appropriated in the space of less than 6 months a total of nearly $200 million to enable the States to implement as rapidly as possible a program to provide an estimated 250,000 hot meals daily for older Americans.

Instead, HEW developed a concept of forward funding which involved releasing funds to the States during the fiscal years for which they were appropriated, but in the process advising the States that the funds were to be spent only in succeeding years.

In practice this meant that what the Congress intended to be an acceleration of a delayed program became administratively even more delayed.

Thus, although the appropriation for fiscal 1974 became law on December 18, 1973, HEW did not make any of these funds available to the States until April 9, 1974, almost the end of the fiscal year. And the States were informed that these 1974 funds could be obligated to local hot meals sponsors anytime up until June 30, 1975.

My survey of the States shows that the first $100 million—appropriated July 1, 1973, for fiscal year 1973—was formally obligated to the States during late July, August, and September 1973. Most of the States obligated their fiscal 1973 funds to projects within their States by the end of 1973.

Local projects actually began to deliver meals to the elderly, according to responses from the States, during the first 3 or 4 months of 1974. These local sponsors were told that these funds were to be used over a period of 1 year from the time of funding. Thus fiscal 1973 funds were translated into meals from the first quarter of 1974 into the first quarter of 1975.

To date about 90 percent of the fiscal 1973 funds have been transferred from the U.S. Treasury to the States for payment to operating projects. Some $180,000 in fiscal 1973 funds were not obligated by the States and were returned to the U.S. Treasury.

With respect to the fiscal 1974 funds, as I noted, they were appropriated on December 18, 1973, and were made available to the States only on April 9, 1974, to be used to refund existing local programs for a second year. My survey indicates that only 9 of the 39 States questioned have already committed all of their fiscal 1974 to local projects, although all but two of the remaining States indicated that their funds would be allocated at the local level shortly.

It is apparent that these fiscal 1974 funds, which we appropriated more than a year ago, will not begin feeding needy senior citizens until the first quarter of next year—and will be spread out over the period ending with the first quarter of 1976.

It is equally apparent that this is not what the Congress intended. Rather it is the result of an administrative withholding of the benefits of this program from the poor elderly Americans for whom it was intended. Any doubt about this is removed by the clear language of the supplemental appropriations conference report.

The Congress intends a significant expansion of the nutrition program. The language of the conference report is in accord with Public Law 93-351, enacted July 12, 1974, under the able leadership of Chairman JOHN BRADEMOS of the Select Education Subcommittee, providing for a 3-year extension of the original program, with authorizations of $150 million for fiscal 1975, $200 million for fiscal 1976, and $250 million for fiscal 1977.

The money to feed 400,000 meals daily is available. And the need is certainly there.

All of the nutrition projects have long waiting lists. Only about 3 or 4 percent of those eligible for these meals are currently being served. In addition, inflation is having a serious effect on the ability of sponsors to continue providing as many meals as they are today—a level still some 12 percent below the target set for last June 30.

During title VII's first operating quarter, those receiving meals contributed $2.3 million toward the cost. As inflation increases financial pressures on the elderly, they will be increasingly unable to contribute toward the operating costs of the sponsors.

The Department of Agriculture predicts that food prices will rise on a fairly broad front in the first half of 1975. The Wall Street Journal recently reported that the increase in food prices will be another 15 percent in the coming year.

HEW has suggested that the same number of meals will be served in coming months, despite inflation, because funds will not be required for State administration of the program or for the startup costs of local projects. State administration will be paid in the future under title III of the 1973 amendments to the Older Americans Act. But very little money was used for State administration under the original act—only about 1 percent of the State allotments, instead of the 10 percent allowed. Thus the transfer will release few funds for meals.

Very little money for meals is expected from the elimination of startup costs. My survey indicates that most of the meals sponsors incurred only very small capital investment costs and have already been putting virtually all of their allotments into food and personnel costs.

My concern over the future development of this program stems from its remarkable success in the first full year of actual operation. It promises to be one of the best programs we have devised for older Americans.

Group meals, providing nutritious food in a socially supportive setting, have been highly popular with older people. The participants find it a meaningful experience and professionals in the field of aging recognize the meals center as a major means of bringing a variety of services and supportive experiences for the older citizen.

A report submitted to the Senate Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs last June recommended that title VII be expanded so that every community can have a program for its older citizens. A panel of the recent mini-White House Conference on Inflation urged that the title VII budget be increased in order to meet the nutrition needs of the elderly more adequately, despite the need for economy in other budget areas.

The real test of this program's appeal, however, is visible in any project where you can see the significant role these meal centers play in the lives of our older citizens.

I am proud of the support the Congress has given to this concept. I hope those responsible for the administration of the program will seize the opportunity to take the congressional mandate for their own and make the remainder of fiscal 1975 a period of rapid expansion of the benefits of this program.

IT IS ESSENTIAL TO SIGN INTO LAW S. 426, SURFACE MINING CONTROL AND RECLAMATION ACT OF 1974

(Mr. PERKINS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the Record.)

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely essential that the President sign into law S. 426, the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1974.

When coal is extracted from the ground it leaves varying degrees of destruction, but nothing to compensate for it. The wealth taken from the ground does not find its way back into the local economy to reclaim lands, to reforest, to restore the purity of streams, and to rebuild the highways and roads.

The mining of coal is a unique type of activity. Mr. Speaker, unlike other commercial enterprises within an area where the economy is actually improved by the enhanced financial ability of a local community to improve its schools, its roads, its parks, and its public services, when coal is extracted from the ground, too often none of its value is available to the community for these improvements.

Many parts of Appalachia are today scarred evidences of our lack of a sound balanced energy and environmental policy.

My concern that a portion of the wealth represented from the extracted coal should be available to the county for reclamation and public improvement has prompted me to advocate for the past 20 years a coal severance tax, the proceeds of which would be directed into the county from which the coal was extracted.

In the current Congress I sought to implement this by the introduction of H.R. 1605, a bill to impose a tax on the severance of oil, gas, and coal, and to return the proceeds of such tax to the counties from which such oil, gas, or coal was taken.

Mr. Speaker, the bill now on the President's desk for his signature, S. 426, in part incorporates this principle by the establishment of an abandoned mine reclamation fund into which 35 cents for each ton of coal obtained from surface mining and 25 cents for each ton of coal recovered by underground methods would be available for reclamation and restoration purposes.

Mr. Speaker, on balance I believe S. 426 is an effective bill, a bill that will not only assure the Nation the coal supply needed for its economic well-being, but also establishes a sound policy of protecting our environment. In this regard, this bill strikes an appropriate balance.

I am alarmed by hints that the President might be contemplating a veto of this measure. Mr. Speaker, the delay occasioned by a veto will cost the Nation dearly with respect to both its energy needs and its conservation concerns.

PUBLIC LANDS SUBCOMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS FOR WILDERNESS AREAS ACCEPTED BY THE HOUSE: MORE WILL BE CONSIDERED NEXT YEAR

(Mr. MELCHER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. Speaker, the House has approved and passed over to the Senate during the past 2 days H.R. 12884 and S. 3433. The latter bill is the eastern wilderness bill containing 16 areas to be designated as wilderness and 17 areas to be studied for similar designation all in the national forests in the Eastern United States.

H.R. 12884 designates four areas in western national forests and 14 areas in wildlife refuges as wilderness. The areas are in 24 different States and total 925,000 acres of public lands as wilderness and directs the study on 125,000 acres in 17 eastern areas for possible inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System.

Two areas in Colorado, Flat Tops and Eagles Nest, on which the Subcommittee on Public Lands held extensive hearings were not approved. The subcommittee should continue consideration of these two areas promptly next year in the new Congress. Field hearings have been requested by citizens in Colorado and the subcommittee should consider that possibility. Both areas have outstanding qualities for wilderness designation. Drawing the boundaries involve questions of water rights and careful review by the subcommittee next year should make it possible for equitable decisions and inclusion of these areas in the National Wilderness Preservation System.

THE OUTLOOK IF THE PRESIDENT VETOES THE STRIP MINE BILL AS SEEN BY THE KANSAS CITY STAR

(Mr. MELCHER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. Speaker, before President Ford vetoes the strip mine bill, I hope he will read an editorial in the Kansas City Star of Monday, December 16, entitled "The Strip Mine Bill: More Bad Advice for Mr. Ford."

The Star views the bill as the product of 3 years of effort by Congress to provide "a sensible rein on what is clearly America's most destructive industry."

It predicts that if Mr. Ford vetoes the current bill, the next Congress will pass a "bitingly restrictive" measure and that the new Congress will override any veto of it.

I agree with the Star that we have written a bill which will wisely require the restoration of the land, and make coal mined and consumed in our times pay the full cost of production, which includes restoration of the land, instead of deferring that cost to another generation. I also agree that the coal industry would be wise to accept the measure, to give up its destructive practices now and go ahead and produce coal, rather than fight on to preserve their ability to strip mine land and leave its restoration in doubt. It is time for the coal industry to move into the new world in which the necessity of conservation is recognized.

The new Congress is not going to enact a watered down strip mine bill; it will enact a bill at least equally stringent and I share the Star's view that the new Congress will override any veto sought by coal or utility companies that might encourage lax regulations.

I include the Star editorial in the Record:

THE STRIP MINE BILL: MORE BAD ADVICE FOR MR. FORD

It was with disappointment shading to bitter anger that we received the news of President Gerald Ford's intention to veto the strip mine regulatory bill that will reach his desk in this last week of the 93rd Congress. Once again—and the list of his misjudgments is growing—this appointed President seems determined to fly in the teeth of the public's perception of its own interest.

The White House objects that the bill would cut coal production, raise the cost of energy and contribute to inflation. That is a mixture of half-truth and outright error.

The legislation would not take strip mines out of production. It would simply prevent the establishing of new stripping operations on terrain where the resulting hideousness would be irreparable. It would not raise the cost of stripped coal. It would only include in the per ton cost the price of reclamation—a very real, measurable cost, but one which is now being deferred to the next generation for payment.

By obliging the focus of the coal industry to shift back to deep mining, the larger effect of this legislation would be to provide jobs, to insure prudent use of this country's enormous coal resources, to give further relief over the long term from dependence on imported energy. And all of this in a way that a people with a sane regard for the value and beauty of their national landscape would find acceptable.

The nature of the strip mine industry and the duplicity of those who lobby on its behalf are well known. The record of willful irresponsibility and rapaciousness is written indelibly on the mutilated countryside wherever the power shovels have passed. Anyone who has seen a strip-mined area and then heard the industry's apologists prate about reclamation can measure for himself or herself the distance between the truth and the lie.

The strip operators' logic is the logic of pure public-be-damned greed. But for all its shabby transparency, it has prevailed with Gerald Ford or the men who command his ear. And so the effort of more than three years to impose a sensible rein on what is clearly America's most destructive industry is again delayed.

In the last Congress, the House overwhelmingly voted a stern regulatory bill but sent it to the Senate to late for action. In this Congress, both chambers voted curbs and then arrived at a compromise on a modest version. What of the next—and very different—Congress that will convene on Capitol Hill?

The White House says that Mr. Ford will offer a strip mine proposal of his own next year, but he will be whistling in the wind. Any reasonable calculation would suggest that his feeble offering will be brushed aside and that a younger, more liberal, more lopsidedly Democratic Congress will write the law to fit the need.

It will be a law more bitingly restrictive in its protection of the public good than the one that the strip mine industry has just fought successfully to thwart. And when Mr. Ford vetoes it, as he assuredly will, the Congress, voting decisively to override, will spare the country the consequences of the President's arbitrariness and error.

HON. GEORGE MAHON

(Mr. WHITTEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, it is a real pleasure to call attention to the ceremony which took place in the Sam Rayburn Room of the U.S. Capitol last week on the 10th day of December, 1974.

At that time a portrait of my friend and colleague, Hon. GEORGE MAHON of Texas, was unveiled before a standing-room-only crowd of his colleagues and friends from Texas. This honor is well deserved, for GEORGE MAHON, Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, has served in that capacity for a longer continuous time than any man in history, and his service has been and is outstanding.

Among those speaking were the Speaker of the House, Hon. CARL ALBERT, the Majority Leader, Hon. T. P. O'NEILL, the Minority Leader, Hon. ELFORD CEDERBERG, and of course, President Ford, a long-time colleague and friend who said:

If I were to describe anyone with whom I served who deserved the accolade of a statesman, I would pin that label on GEORGE MAHON. . . . I cannot think of a single person who is more decent, more honorable, more dedicated, more loyal, more careful, and when the issues are down and the going tough, can be more for the right.

Mr. Speaker, having served with GEORGE MAHON on the Appropriations Committee for 32 years and ranking next to him, it was my privilege to serve as Master of Ceremonies.

A copy of the program follows.

PROGRAM, DECEMBER 10, 1974, 11:00 A.M., THE SAM RAYBURN ROOM, THE U.S. CAPITOL

Master of Ceremonies: Honorable JAMIE L. WHITTEN, Ranking Majority Member, Committee on Appropriations.

Remarks: Honorable CARL ALBERT, Speaker of the House of Representatives; Honorable THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Majority Leader of the House of Representatives; Honorable JOHN J. RHODES, Minority Leader of the House of Representatives; Honorable ELFORD A. CEDERBERG, Ranking Minority Member, Committee on Appropriations.

Unveiling of the Portrait: Mrs. HELEN MAHON, wife of Mr. MAHON, and GEORGE MAHON, grandson of Mr. and Mrs. MAHON.

Remarks: The President of the United States.

Response: Honorable GEORGE H. MAHON, Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Benediction: Dr. Edward G. Latch, Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

Artist: Charles J. Fox. The portrait was donated by people of West Texas; it is being presented to the House of Representatives and will hang in the Appropriations Committee in the Capitol.

REDUCTION OF ADMINISTRATION REQUEST FOR APPROPRIATIONS

(Mr. SMITH of Iowa asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, in the last 2 days I have placed material in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in summary of action taken during the 93d Congress. I would now like to add one final item.

APPROPRIATIONS

While precise figures are not yet available on all appropriations bills, the estimate is that Congress will have reduced the fiscal year 1975 appropriations requests submitted by the administration by a total of $5.6 billion.

DEBATE ON ABORTION

(Mr. GUDE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. GUDE. Mr. Speaker, during the 93d Congress there has been considerable debate, much of it heated, concerning legislation involving the January 22, 1973, decision of the Supreme Court relative to abortion. This debate has not only been heated, but because of the constraints inherent in floor debate, has added a minimum of rational dialog to an understanding of the problems of this most complex area.

Regardless of whether or not one agrees with the Supreme Court decision, the gravity of this issue demands that all individuals or groups who wish to be heard on this vital subject should have the benefit of a governmental forum for objective, rational discussion. Unfortunately, there have been no committee hearings in the House of Representatives on proposals in this area and the House rejected a proposal for a selected committee to study the subject. A Senate Committee has held hearings, and this has contributed to a more thoughtful analysis of the numerous questions surrounding abortion laws. But the complexity of the issues involving abortion are so great and involve such broad segments of legal, medical, social, and religious fields of knowledge and belief that I have strong doubts that legislative committees are fully able to give the attention and time to this subject that justice and equity require.

I believe the most desirable forum to address this vital subject would be a blue ribbon panel or commission composed of professional and lay people with extensive comprehensive knowledge of this field. I believe a commission similar to the Commission on the Ethics of the Use of Human Subjects in Biomedical Research is necessary to adequately address and fully study this area.

Just one illustration of the complexity of the issue has to do with the physiological effects of abortion which is addressed in the paper "Influence of Induced and Spontaneous Abortions on the Outcome of Subsequent Pregnancies" by Stefanos N. Pantelakis, George C. Papadimitriou, and Spyros A. Doxiadis. This paper was supported in part by U.S. Public Health research grant No. 5R01 NBO 6390 01-13 from the National Institute of Neurological Diseases and Blindness. The article is from the Institute of Child Care and the State and University Alexandra Maternity Hospital, Athens, Greece.

As this paper notes, there have been other studies in the same subject area and this facet of the medical aspects of abortion is in itself complex. Certainly final conclusions based on this one study would be unwise.

However, I believe that the thrust of the final comments in this paper raises tremendously profound questions as to the impact of the practice of abortion as far as medical effects are concerned. And as I have stated, equally difficult questions lie in the ethical, social, mental health, and religious aspects.

I insert at this point the final comment from "Influence of Induced and Spontaneous Abortions on the Outcome of Subsequent Pregnancies."

Although the language is somewhat technical I urge my colleagues to read it. I will be glad to make available the full copy of this paper to any office requesting it.

The comment follows:

COMMENT

The large number of induced abortions in Greece, where they are perhaps the most widespread method of birth control, and the subsequent development in a large percentage of women of permanent infertility has already been noted by other authors.

The purpose of our work was the study of the effect of abortion on the outcome of subsequent pregnancies. The incidence, therefore, of abortions found in the various groups of the present study is not representative of the over-all incidence of abortion in the general population, and from this point of view it is not comparable to the incidence assessed in the last few years in Greece by other authors. Since the material of the present study consisted only of women who were admitted into the Maternity Hospital to give birth, all women in whom one or more abortions resulted in permanent infertility were necessarily excluded. According to Louros, this group constitutes about one third of the women subjected to an induced abortion.

It is natural to wonder to what extent information collected about an action forbidden by law and religion could be reliable. It was collected during the stay of the mother in the maternity hospital and was part of the medical and obstetric history which the mother usually gives with honesty since she knows that this information is essential for the proper care of herself and her baby. In our material the percentage of women admitting one or more induced abortions among those whose present pregnancy was not the first is about 29 per cent. Valaoras in his first study performed in 1963 to 1964 regarding the incidence of abortions in a sample of the general population states that, although married women said that they consider abortion to be the most effective method of birth control, only 8.5 per cent admitted that they had one or more abortions during their married life. Later, in another study done in 1966 to 1967, on a sample of 0.5 per cent of married Greek women aged 20 to 50 years, the same author states that 35 of 100 women admitted a total of 76 induced abortions.

As seen in Fig. 3, with an increasing number of pregnancies there is also a rise in the percentage of abortions while with increasing age the percentage of abortions is decreased. This last finding appears at first strange and contrary to the findings of Valaoras and associates where abortions became more frequent with advancing age within the reproductive period. This difference is easily explained from the different composition of the clinical material. The cases of abortion in our material were collected at the end of pregnancies which should be considered as either desired or else impossible to terminate for various reasons. Thus, it may be assumed that our material includes many young women who because of not practicing contraception had many previous pregnancies terminated by abortions but for whom the present pregnancy was a desired one. It also includes older women at the end of their fertile period who desired children and who for various reasons beyond their control could not have them earlier. Thus, our material does not contain women who, after achieving the number of children desired, obtained an abortion to avoid having more.

Most past studies related to induced abortions have examined the ill effects of this intervention on the health and fertility of women, but the present work shows that both induced and spontaneous abortions have other serious aftereffects as well; both the stillbirth rate and the prematurity rates are doubled in women with previous induced or spontaneous abortions.

Our findings agree with those obtained in Hungary and in Japan. According to those studies, the higher prematurity rate among women who had abortions seems to be unrelated to the age, the number of previous births, the occupation, or other characteristics of the mothers. The rate of prematurity was also noted to increase with the number of previous abortions as observed by us.

In the present work the significantly higher stillbirth and prematurity rate observed among women with one or more previous induced abortions was also found among women with spontaneous abortions.

There is no general agreement as to the interpretation of these findings. Incompetence of the internal cervical os is often a cause of premature labor. This incompetence is often caused by previous induced abortions and can lead to spontaneous interruption of pregnancy.

In an analysis of the causes of stillbirths, Philippe and colleagues found that 40 per cent of the mothers had one or more previous induced abortions, while only 7.5 per cent of the group with previous spontaneous abortions reported previous induced abortions. In some cases of spontaneous abortion a curettage follows but the dilation of the cervix takes place by itself with the contractions of the uterus and not forcibly with some instrument. Therefore, trauma of the cervix could not be responsible in such a case for the increased prematurity rate as happens in induced abortion. It is likely that the explanation of spontaneous abortion is that there may be an anatomic or functional defect (hypoplastic uterus, abnormal position, abnormal shape of the uterus, hormonal deficiency) and the same cause may be responsible for premature birth.

But if we leave aside the possible causes of a high stillbirth and prematurity rate, the two groups have an important difference from a sociomedical point of view. While in many cases of spontaneous abortion interruption of pregnancy cannot be prevented, every induced abortion is a planned medical intervention and must therefore be decided after a thorough consideration of all likely after-effects.

ROCKEFELLER NOMINATION TROUBLES MANY ON CAPITOL HILL

(Ms. ABZUG asked and was given permission to extend her remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Ms. ABZUG. Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the near unanimous approval by the Senate of the nomination of NELSON ROCKEFELLER to be Vice President, and the vote favoring confirmation in the House of Representatives, there are many misgivings among Members of both bodies concerning Rockefeller and his wealth. One of the editors of the Village Voice in New York City, Mary Perot Nichols, has covered the proceedings with respect to ROCKEFELLER's confirmation closely during the past weeks, and I would like to insert at this point in the Record one of her recent columns:

[From the Village Voice, Dec. 23, 1974]

RUNNIN' SCARED

(By Mary Perot Nichols)

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Screw the little man and up with the billionaire! That was the word from Washington's power elite last week. A UPI dispatch in the Washington Star-News last Thursday said it all: "The House Rules Committee today effectively killed a bill which would have given a small tax break to almost 40 million low and moderate income taxpayers and would have ended the oil depletion allowance."

Taxpayers of Queens please note: the Star-News quotes your representative, James J. Delaney (D-New York) as saying "there was not enough time to deal with the bill (the tax relief bill) this session." Thereupon, Delaney, according to the Star-News, "moved that the panel consider no further bills this year except the nomination of Nelson A. Rockefeller to be Vice President."

It was perhaps ironic that the U.S. Senate approved the Rockefeller nomination in a vote of 28-to-12 the very same week that two Senate subcommittees headed by Senators Lee Metcalf and Edmund Muskie issued the fourth volume in a huge study of the concentration of wealth in America, which included the scary note that in many cases the subcommittees couldn't even find out exactly who controlled vast sums of this ever concentrating dough.

For example, there was some information in the reports on Cudd & Company, which if you read Dick Roberts' article in The Voice on September 19, you would know is a "front" or a "nominee" for the Chase Manhattan Bank. As a Muskie-Metcalf aide said to me after this exhaustive study was released, "We still don't even know who votes the stock of Cudd & Company."

As for bank holding companies, the Muskie-Metcalf staff aide said, "We have even less information about who owns them. He noted that when the head of the Joint Chiefs of Staff General George Brown "claimed the Jews owned the banks, he was wrong because nobody knows who owns them." He added, "For all we know, the Arabs do."

So now, unless some snags develop this week, we have the scion of the single largest and as yet unplumbed concentrations of wealth the world has ever seen, on his way into the White House. A big fight is expected to occur on Tuesday (after this is written) in the House Rules Committee as at least some members of the House Judiciary Committee come forward to testify that Nelson Rockefeller still hasn't coughed up a full list of his gifts and loans to political persons. Brooklyn Congresswoman Liz Holtzman will make that latter point. Others may well talk about how the Judiciary Committee did too limited a study, leaving out the not yet known gifts and loans of brothers Laurance and David to politicians.

There were some pretty unholy alliances forming on the hill last week. A member of the staff of conservative North Carolina Republican Senator Jesse Helms giggled as he said to me, "You'll never believe who we're working with—Ralph Nader!" Others engaged in a last ditch, stop Nelson fight include such liberals as Bella Abzug, Don Edwards (a Democrat and Liberal from California) and John H. Roussetot, a right-wing California Republican. But barring some last-minute revelation about Rockefeller—that is, say, of the magnitude of his gifts to the Wholly Bought Roman—the Rockefeller juggernaut is not likely to be derailed.

It was not just money that was the subject of congressional criticism of Rocky last week. It was also morality. The money issue was sloughed off in the Senate as Rocky supporter after Rocky supporter got up and said it was just plain un-American to keep such a good man out of the second highest office in the land just because he was so rich. But it wasn't a question of rich, it was a question of how rich and the attempt by the Rockefellerers to conceal how they worked in concert using their money to gain power and their power to gain more money—that bothered a lot of people I wouldn't label as anti-capitalist. As Texas Democrat Representative Barbara Jordan noted, even as she voted for him on the Judiciary Committee: Rockefeller was "a man swollen with wealth—so comprehensive that its tentacles reach and nudge and puncture the very fabric of our government."

How big the Rockefeller actually is was outlined to the House Judiciary Committee by two University of California professors, G. William Dornhoff and Charles L. Schwartz Monday last. Would you believe $640 billion? Testified Professor Schwartz: "The list of corporations contained in this table of multiple interlocking directorates with the Rockefeller family represents an immense portion of the entire economic apparatus of this country."

Brooklyn Democrat Liz Holtzman, hardly a raving radical, noted as she voted against Nelson Rockefeller that the family's chief money factotum tried to purvey the notion under oath that no Rockefeller wants to control any company. "Yet," said Holtzman, "on cross-examination he had to retract his statement and, in fact, admit that the Rockefellerers did, indeed, control certain companies."

Holtzman, like Senators Birch Bayh (D-Indiana), Gaylord Nelson (D-Wisconsin), Representative Jerome Waldie (D-California), Father Robert Drinan (D-Massachusetts) and others were all frightened at the thought of combining this immense and still not fully revealed economic power with the power of the presidency. Said Holtzman: "I share the view that the Founding Fathers reflected when they wrote the Constitution; namely, a profound and abiding skepticism of power. . . . I share the skepticism they would have felt, since I am making a judgment as a surrogate for the people, as to whether a disinterested judgment could be made by somebody whose family and who himself has such vast interests in the oil companies, on decisions made on oil prices or rollback of oil prices, decisions respecting anti-trust policies."

Father Drinan pointed out as he voted against Rocky that "The entire record of the Rockefeller hearings is devoid of any commitment by the nominee to eliminate loopholes and improve the tax structure. . . . At no time did the nominee appear to be sensitive to the fact that there are shocking inequities in the tax laws which permit the wealthy to pay proportionately less than the working person."

There was evidence to show that Rocky himself had taken every advantage of tax loopholes and Father Drinan pointed out that Rocky paid "virtually no federal tax" in 1970. But the Institute for Policy Studies, in a monograph prepared to assist the Congress, came up with even worse figures on Rockefeller's taxes for a much longer period. In a monograph called "The Disability of Wealth," the Washington-based think tank computed that from 1964 to 1973, "Rockefeller's effective tax paying rate is less than 10 per cent of income." A $15,000-a-year bloke, they note, pays approximately 24 per cent of taxable income each year.

But it remained for Professor Schwartz to puncture the myth that the Rockefellerers are so bloody rich that they aren't really keen to get richer. Schwartz dug up a speech given by a Rockefeller Family Associates (R.F.A.) as they are known to intimates, emissary to a Boston College audience in May, 1970. Said the R.F.A. representative, Charles B. Smith, "We're a relatively loosely organized group of a few people who attempt to invest some of the personal funds of a wealthy family in high risk and potentially high reward companies ordinarily included within the loose, current meaning of venture capital. We concentrate on advanced technologies, usually in the early life of companies, including start-ups." And, comes the punch line, "Our goal, like everyone else's, is to make wads and wads of money."

So, okay, you say, they want to make "wads and wads of money" and so do you. But do you, like Nelson and Laurance, make your money-making activities sound like you are doing philanthropy? If you listened to Nelson Rockefeller at the hearings you would think his IBEC was just a foundation doing good for the poor people of Latin America.

The House Judiciary Committee hearings showed not only that the family that invests together stays together, but that they even pray for the same political candidates—especially if that candidate is Nelson.

But again, it wasn't just the money that bothered some members of Congress, it was Rockefeller's morality. Said Liz Holtzman, "Mr. Rockefeller said that moral leadership was the highest responsibility of the President of the United States. Mr. Rockefeller himself has had a chance in the past two years to show where he stands on the issues of moral leadership," said Holtzman, "and I think it is rather extraordinary that three days after the Saturday Night Massacre (when Archibald Cox was fired) Nelson Rockefeller, despite the outcry over the honesty with which a President conducts his office, stated that Richard Nixon was doing a great job on the domestic front."

Holtzman was "troubled" by a few other Rockefeller moral lapses, including "his evasiveness before the committee; that he did not firmly deny that he would ever set up a plumbers operation"; and "that it took five times of questioning to get him to respond regarding United States policy toward Chile, and he still did not answer the question."

Pressure on House and Senate members from the Rockefeller forces had, according to my sources on the hill, been unbelievable. I caught Liz Holtzman, usually a very cool cat, commenting angrily on them as she left the House Judiciary hearing room last Thursday for the lunch break. Pressed to say what kinds of pressures they were, Holtzman refused to elaborate except to say that it "scared" her. "I didn't get this kind of pressure on the impeachment hearings or anything else I've been involved in." I had heard that some of the pressures on the New York congressional delegation had come from some strange quarters, including from allegedly liberal Democrats, but Holtzman was discreet: "Let's just say he got a lot of friends. And they aren't just Republicans." I had also heard on Capitol Hill that one of the unexpected pressures from New York for Rocky was from the darling of the radicals, City Council President Paul O'Dwyer. Said O'Dwyer on Monday morning: "Yes, I called Liz Holtzman. I didn't tell her how to vote, but I said if we had a choice we'd be better with a Vice President from New York rather than one from Iowa. One thing he knows for sure is what construction is like and he has a great understanding of the inner city." We've all seen the World Trade Center and the Albany Mall, so we know O'Dwyer is right about Rocky understanding construction.

CXX—2646—Part 31

Senator Jesse Helms had the bite put on him from an old hometown, none other than New York Times editor Clifton Daniel. Helms was so annoyed by the pressure that he went on to the Senate floor on October 9 and said: "Mr. Daniel (whom Helms described as the Washington bureau chief of the New York Times) called me this morning to discuss my motivation in raising questions about the governor's use of his power and finances. Mr. Daniel was evidently under the impression that I had doubts about the governor's integrity and he implied concern that I have raised these questions. Let me say that I hope Mr. Rockefeller does not need the New York Times to defend his integrity." Helms and his staff have become so increased by press coverage of the Rockefeller nomination that they have launched a study of who owns the media.

Additional Rocky fighters are the 18 Democratic representatives-elect, led by Tim Worth of Colorado, and including New Yorkers Dick Ottinger and Jim Scheuer, who wrote to House Speaker Carl Albert last week urging him to delay the vote on the Rockefeller confirmation until they are seated in January. Noting that the two men, President Ford and Rocky, are both appointed and not elected, this group said that they, being the most recently elected since Watergate, "are the closest we can come to a direct expression of the people's will. If there is to be a vote on this nomination," they wrote, "it should be theirs."

If Rocky slides in this week, as is expected, there are some who will have taken a big bite out of his leg on his way to the White House. Whether it is big enough to cripple him so he can't run for President in 1976 is another matter. But there is a strong feeling among staff people on the hill that the Democratic senators who voted for Rocky last week have disqualified themselves from ever running against him since most of the dirty dirt that could be dug up on him is out and they voted for him in spite of it. As for Senators Gaylord Nelson and Birch Bayh, who voted against Rockefeller, they might just have built themselves a national constituency.

RETIREMENT OF H. R. GROSS

(Mr. ROUSSELOT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, as a tribute to our very distinguished retiring colleague, the gentleman from Iowa, H. R. Gross, I am today introducing a resolution calling for this House to retire the bill H.R. 144 from use in future Congresses.

Ever since I first had the privilege to serve with Mr. Gross in the 87th Congress, his legislation, H.R. 144, to restore fiscal responsibility at the Federal level has been introduced with this same number. To me, H.R. 144 is the symbol of Congressman Gross' career in this body—a career that has for 26 years been devoted to serving as the foremost advocate for the American taxpayer.

The text of the resolution follows:

Whereas, Congressman HAROLD ROYCE Gross of Iowa is retiring from Congress after twenty-six years; and

Whereas the bill numbered H.R. 144, a bill to provide that Federal expenditures shall not exceed Federal revenues, except in time of war or grave national emergency declared by the Congress, and to provide for systematic deduction of the public debt, has been introduced by Mr. Gross for many Congresses; and

Whereas this legislation is symbolic of his efforts to restore fiscal responsibility at the Federal level; and

Whereas Mr. Gross has distinguished his career in Congress by being the foremost advocate for the American taxpayer:

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives that as a tribute to this outstanding legislator, the bill number H.R. 144 be retired from use in future Congresses.

THE NEW YORK TIMES—"ALL THE NEWS THAT FITS"

(Mr. ROONEY of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. ROONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, the following speech was prepared for delivery on the floor of this House shortly after we reconvened on November 16, 1970. Shortly after that date and since then I mellowed a bit and intended to let bygones be bygones insofar as all the previous untruths I read about myself in the New York Times are concerned. However, when I read one of their editorials of December 9, 1974, stating:

It (referring to the recent Democratic caucus of the Members of the new Congress convening next month) may serve in the future to prevent such anomalies as Representative (deleted) of (deleted) and ROONEY of Brooklyn acting as tinpot tyrants in their respective subcommittee domains in defiance of Presidents of their own party and out of step with a majority of Democrats in the House.

I cannot find the word "tinpot" in my Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary but I do despise tyrants and have never at any time defied any one of the seven Presidents under whom I have served. Most informed people know that our committee recommendations over the years were adopted at least 95 percent of the time on votes of the House, whether recorded or otherwise.

Since the New York Times knew I was voluntarily retiring for reasons of health in less than a month I decided to dust off my November 1970 remarks. They read as follows:

Mr. Speaker, once again New York City has survived primary and general election days and once again the people of New York have shown that they have little in common with the political bent or endorsements of the New York Times. This is not really surprising, however, as New Yorkers have been ignoring the Times for years. It is sad, but true, that the New York Times has ceased to be a newspaper serving a community.

I think this was well summed up some time ago when a former New York Times reporter, Peter Braestrup, was reviewing a book by yet another Times reporter, Gay Talese. Mr. Braestrup had this to say:

The result of course (speaking of changes in the Times) is no longer a "paper of record" but a kind of New York-flavored daily news magazine, strong on commentary, strong on features, stronger on ideas (since Reston's arrival) but skimpier on the old Times' virtues: broad coverage, specific detail and balanced explanation.

Amen. Mr. Braestrup, however, overlooks two other virtues of the old New York Times which today seem to be lacking in that newspaper—accuracy and integrity. In all fairness, I should add that this failing is not peculiar to the New York Times.

The life and times of the container of all the news that is fit to print came in for other discussion in the public prints about a year or so ago when Newsweek had a look at the New York Times editorial page and the panjandrum thereof, one John B. Oakes. Mr. Oakes has been running the New York Times editorial page since 1961 when Charles R. Merz stepped down after 23 years in that exalted spot. Mr. Oakes, a former Rhodes scholar and alleged one-time reporter was, prior to joining the New York Times some years ago, a political and special writer for the Washington Post for 4 years. The Washington Post is of course the parent company of Newsweek and thus it might be expected that the Newsweek article on Oakes would be a favorable one. Perhaps it was meant to be so, but I could not help but wonder as I read it if there were not a heavy application of tongue to cheek by its author. At one point Newsweek says:

Oakes even shuns the Times' daily news conferences, to avoid any hint that he is trying to influence the paper's news coverage.

This must be accurate, since the editorials certainly read like he does. And unless it seem unfair to hang all the editorials on one mighty Oakes, Newsweek goes on to quote Oakes as modestly saying:

I encourage the writers to come forth with ideas but naturally many of the ideas are mine.

Then with an Orwellian logic Mr. Oakes again modestly explains his modus operandi:

We try to take a point of view that we think is beneficial to the country—broadly called liberal and generally internationalist—and then we go ahead and argue it as vigorously as possible. I rule the expression "on the other hand" off the page.

Which I guess is a very economical way to run a newspaper. You do not have to waste space printing a rebuttal or explanation which might in some way conflict with your preconceived set of facts.

And so it would seem that the motto so proudly unfurled by Adolph S. Ochs when he bought the New York Times in 1896 has been changed from "all the news that's fit to print" to now read "print all the news that fits."

The political meanderings of the New York Times, as it has shifted from the paper of record to God knows what, are interesting. For instance, election matters in the 14th Congressional District of New York in Brooklyn held little import for the New York Times editorial writers for the first eight elections in which I was involved. In one, I was endorsed by the Times and in the other seven, the Times saw fit to ignore the contest entirely neither making an endorsement nor withholding one. But in 1960 things suddenly changed and the Times supported my Republican opponent. This policy has continued to date—the Times either endorsing my Republican opponent or another Democrat in the primary. This sudden change I believe was not motivated by any change in the policies or beliefs of either the Times or myself, but rather was based on the heart of the newspaper business—money.

Since January 1949—with the exception of the 1953 and 1954 years of the 83d Republican Congress—I have been chairman of the subcommittee on appropriations for the Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, the Federal Judiciary and Related Agencies of the House Committee on Appropriations. During the 1957 appropriations hearings on the U.S. Information Agency requests it was unearthed that the USIA was spending $244,896 for 7,829 subscriptions to The New York Times. A healthy sum indeed. Some of these went to libraries and reading rooms, but the bulk, we discovered, was being given free to people all around the globe who either could not afford to, or who had no desire to, buy their own subscriptions. The list included over 500 members of the British Parliament who daily received a free copy of The New York Times. The 435 Members of the U.S. House of Representatives get by with two copies in the Speaker's lobby.

To our subcommittee this on the face of it was ridiculous and we moved to curtail the wasteful practice. Thus, we find that in the following year, 1958, The New York Times receipts from USIA subscriptions had dropped to $100,629 as some 3500 gift subscriptions were lopped off the USIA's free list. If the USIA's New York Times subscription list had continued as it was in 1957 the cost to the taxpayers over the following 10 years would have been $2,448,960. However, the actual cost to the taxpayer between 1958 and 1967 was $897,988 representing a "saving" of some $1,550,972 over those years. In addition, the 1968 actual spending and the 1969 and 1970 budget estimates show that an additional $692,072 could be added to that $1,550,972 as the New York Times giveaway subscriptions have dropped to 597 and the cost to the taxpayer declined to $14,088.

In all then, what can be said is that if our subcommittee had not acted to slice this ridiculous wanton and wasteful spending on New York Times giveaway subscriptions, The New York Times would today be $2,243,044 richer—and the taxpayers $2,243,044 poorer.

Now, the loss of almost $2½ million and thousands of subscriptions is serious business to any newspaper—even the New York Times. So serious indeed that it can apparently lead the thinkers, such as the sanctimonious Mr. Oakes, to the conclusion that anybody responsible for such a dastardly act must also obviously be tampering with funds vital to our Foreign Service or some other related function of the Department of State. At least such is the only logical conclusion one can draw from reading Mr. Oakes' comments on my candidacy in the years following the cutback in the New York Times subscriptions. Thus I find, according to the Oakes editorials, that I have abused my subcommittee chairmanship powers and harassed the State Department—both lies—and that I am not a liberal notwithstanding—at the time he was writing—my endorsement by the Liberal Party in New York ever since its creation and an 89 and 1 "correct" voting record according to AFL-CIO COPE's 20-year compilation. And so it is that I cannot help but agree with Mr. Braestrup in his review of Mr. Talese's book when he observes that the new Times is short on "specific detail and balanced explanation." This observation is nowhere more accurate than in stories or editorials in the New York Times concerning State Department moneys and activities.

In some cases the stories may be the musings of one James Reston, known to his friends as "Scotty" when he was a working newsman, or in others the expertly misinformed judgment of editorial writer Oakes. Both men should know better, one because for years he was a first-class reporter and the other if for no other reason than he is a member of that group of quasi-experts which calls itself the Council of Foreign Affairs. Both men have been newsmen long enough, Lord knows, to be able to check a source, be it a printed record or one of the parties to a hearing. Neither has deemed it necessary, on so many occasions, to do so preferring not to let the facts get in the way of a good story. It is almost enough to make one agree with André Maurois when he said "there are certain persons for whom pure truth is a poison."

Thus I found that in 1964 I was the "entrenched foe of adequate appropriations for the Foreign Service," as the New York Times endorsed my Republican opponent and in 1966 it did likewise noting that JOHN J. ROONEY "who, notwithstanding his Liberal Party endorsement, is no liberal." By 1968 my "indefensible policies as chairman of the Senate (sic) subcommittee on appropriations for the State, Justice, and Commerce Departments cost him respect everywhere except in his home district, the fourteenth in Brooklyn." As a public official I have been accused of many things in my time, but running an appropriations subcommittee of the other body was not one of them—at least up until 1968. By 1970, the Times had mellowed a little and I found that I was merely "an obstructive force" as the New York Times once again endorsed my losing opponent. I could go on here at great length, Mr. Speaker, about nonpolitical feature articles naturally featuring my opponent which appear just before election day and the like. Or I could refer to the Rooney blackout—the name JOHN J. ROONEY never appears in the New York Times unless it be in some damning story.

But little would be accomplished by continuing in this vein save to point out that integrity is indeed a passé virtue at the New York Times. It may seem, as I think back on what I have said here today, that I am either angry with, or seeking the endorsement of, the New York Times. I certainly do not and did not seek such endorsement, nor would I accept it since to do so would be more than just a little cynical and endorsement by the New York Times is no feather in a candidate's cap in my district. There are not two dozen residents of it who read it. And I cannot say that I am angry with the New York Times. I can say, however, that it saddens me. In the past few years in New York we have watched the painful demise of four outstanding newspapers, leaving our vast city with the choice of two papers in the morning and one in the evening. A sad state of affairs indeed. It is, Mr. Speaker, a bad day for all of us when any paper folds for any reason be it for incompetent management, dwindling audience, increasing labor and production costs, or whatever. But it is also painful to watch a onetime great newspaper slowly gag itself to death with a massive dose of intellectual overkill concocted not by Mr. Ochs, but by Mr. Oakes.

Mr. Speaker, we are now in 1974 and I should like at this time to supplement the record with some interesting documents concerning some New York Times published untruths. On November 10, 1969, the New York Times published a front-page story from Paris on the future residence of our Ambassador to France. As usual, I was the villain of the piece. While I had long since become accustomed to bias in the New York Times' reporting of affairs in which my name came up, I was still shocked by their consistent inaccuracies. Apparently I was not the only one so shocked. Four days after the story appeared in print, and not at all to my surprise, I received a letter from the Honorable Frank G. Meyer, Assistant Secretary of State for Administration. Secretary Meyer's two-page letter dated November 14, 1969 refuted just about every statement in the story.

I include at this point the Paris story and Mr. Meyer's letter:

PARIS MANSION A PUZZLE (By John L. Hess)

PARIS, November 9—One of the grandest properties the United States owns abroad seems to have become something of a costly mystery. A substantial appropriation has vanished in it, and no one apparently knows how much more will be needed to make it usable.

The building is the former Rothschild mansion on the Rue du Faubourg St.-Honoré, adjoining the British Embassy and less than 100 yards from the Elysée Palace. Its gardens, like theirs, sweep to the Champs-Élysées.

The building was bought from the French branch of the Rothschild family in 1948 for almost $2-million and was used to house the United States Information Service and other agencies. But successive American Ambassadors have cast covetous eyes on it because, as a residence, it would enhance the prestige of the United States and cut their commuting down to a stroll across the gardens to the embassy proper.

They also complained that the existing residence, near the Trocadéro, was cramped and subject to traffic noise.

Representative John J. Rooney, the Brooklyn Democrat who holds the State Department pursestrings in the House Appropriations Committee, had long turned a deaf ear to their complaints. Suddenly, in mid-1967, he cleared an $875,000 appropriation to renovate the mansion as an embassy residence.

According to a Washington dispatch at the time, it was expected that the project would take several months.

Curiously, evacuation of the building had been under way for some time before that, the tenant agencies being assigned to a new embassy annex and other less grand quarters.

The Rothschild building was vacant by mid-1967 and, it now appears, may be vacant for years to come. It appears also that it has swallowed, or is about to swallow, the last of the $875,000 appropriation and that it would take perhaps twice as much more to permit an American Ambassador to move in with propriety.

Although the mansion is a subject of considerable gossip by the embassy, efforts to obtain authoritative information have run into unusual obstacles. The office of Ambassador Sargent Shriver pleaded ignorance and referred a questioner to the local Foreign Buildings Office, which, although technically part of the embassy, is responsible directly to an office of the same name in Washington that, in turn, is said to be responsive to Representative Rooney.

The office here first referred a reporter to Washington, then advised him through the embassy that the Rothschild project had been suspended. Efforts to reach its director, Leo Riordan, have been unavailing.

Workers at the mansion said, however, that two major contracts—for a new roof and cleaning and for repair of the outer stonework—had been completed. They were just beginning the third big job, a new plumbing and heating system.

The best available information was that those jobs had taken the bulk of appropriated funds. But when they are finished the building will still be a devastated shell, needing major work inside.

No over-all cost estimate could be obtained. At the start, in fact, there was talk of demolishing the building and replacing it with "something modern." This would have offered far more usable space than the present structure, with its 22-foot-high ceilings, but it was vetoed because a modern facade could clash with its elaborately ornamented baroque neighbors.

BUILT DURING THE 1830'S

The architect Louis Visconti, who designed Napoleon's tomb and the newer wings of the Louvre, built the mansion, a mélange of Renaissance and neo-classic styles, in the eighteen-thirties for the Baroness de Pontalba. Maurice de Rothschild, who bought it in 1860, embellished its 27 major rooms, including a 66-foot-long state dining room, with valuable antique woodwork, furniture and paintings.

The site, covering two and a half acres in the heart of the city, is one of the most valuable in Paris.

To restore the Rothschild building to its former grandeur—as West Germany did for its residence here—would be an expensive affair. One reason is that when the building changed hands in 1948 the sellers removed not only the Louis XIV furnishings but also most of the carved woodwork, which adorned walls, ceilings, doors and windows.

Some of the woodwork was recently repurchased by the embassy, but it was found that to reinstall it and supply missing or damaged parts would cost what an informant described as a horrifying sum.

There is no longer any firm plan about restoring the woodwork, nor about restoring the parquet floors removed for the new plumbing, nor about the residence itself. According to the embassy, there is no longer an architect on the job either.

ARCHITECT FINDS STANDSTILL

The Boston architect Pietro Belluschi has reported in a telephone interview that he made drawings for the proposed renovation of the Rothschild mansion. "It turned out that the drawings were all right, but the money wasn't," he added.

Dr. Belluschi, dean emeritus of the School of Architecture of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, said the renovation project was at a standstill because of a lack of appropriations.

NOVEMBER 14, 1969.

HON. JOHN J. ROONEY,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I refer to the article in the New York Times of Monday, November 10, 1969, concerning the property presently being renovated for use as the Embassy residence in Paris. Since much of its substance is not factual, I would like to present information to you to correct inaccuracies in the article.

The design cost for rehabilitation of the residence was approved by the Congress for fiscal year 1967. Construction costs in the amount of $875,000 were approved for fiscal year 1968. The latter costs were to be funded from proceeds from the sale of real property. Authorization for these projects was given by Congress in Public Law 88-94 of August 12, 1963.

Because of the effect of Public Law 90-218, the Department was able to undertake not more than $100,000 worth of work of the total project in fiscal year 1968. The remaining balance of $775,000 was approved for obligation during fiscal year 1969.

Contrary to statements in the article that the project is at a standstill and that there is no longer an architect on the job, all the work contemplated in the original estimate submitted to your Committee has now been placed under contract and Mr. Pietro Belluschi continues to function as architect for the project. The roof of the building has been completely renewed. The exterior of the whole building has been cleaned and repainted. There are five contracts now in operation covering the mechanical, electrical, and plumbing work and the general construction items. A balance of $65,000 still remains for obligation.

The $875,000 estimate for the work approved by the Congress was based on the proposition that the final interior finishes and items of interior design would be provided through the action of a committee composed of various eminent people. The committee is expected to be established in the near future and begin its task of obtaining the necessary items and donations to achieve the final decoration of the residence. We have already received donations from various estates and individuals and have promise of more from other sources. Ambassador Norman Winston of New York has been most helpful in achieving economies consistent with the scope of the project.

When the renovation nears completion, it is our plan to place the present Embassy residence at Avenue d'Iena on the market for sale. Present indications are that this sale will produce more than double the cost of the renovation of the Rothschild property.

As of possible interest to you, there are enclosed copies of correspondence between Secretary Rusk and Ambassador and Mrs. Bohlen (Tab A), a copy of the original estimate prepared after detailed consultation with Mr. Winston (Tab B), and a tabulation showing all contracts awarded for the project (Tab C). A comparison of Tabs B and C indicates our original estimate has remained valid in the fact of substantial wage, price and tax increases.

I trust this information will serve to clarify some of the misconceptions reflected

In the Times article. Please let me know if further details are desired.

Sincerely,
FRANK G. MEYER,
Assistant Secretary for Administration.

Not one word of Secretary Meyer's letter ever appeared in the New York Times.

There have been many others of a similar vein. On February 20, 1970, according to a Times editorial, I was responsible for the cutback in the educational and cultural affairs of the Department of State. On February 20, the very same day, Assistant Secretary of State for Educational and Cultural Affairs, John Richardson, Jr., wrote a letter to the editor of the Times strongly criticizing the statements it had made in the editorial. Lo and behold, Secretary Richardson's letter with a change in the date finally appeared in the New York Times—on the 28th of April—or some 2 months after the original editorial had been published, leaving the few who read it probably wondering what in the world Secretary Richardson was referring to in the first place. There are many ways of coloring the news and one of the more obvious is withholding corrections or rebuttals until such time as they are meaningless to the reader.

I include herewith the editorial and Secretary Richardson's letter:

[From the New York Times, Feb. 20, 1970]

REVIVING FULBRIGHT PROGRAM

One of the most valuable of this country's postwar ventures in intellectual and cultural exchange has been cut back savagely in the last two years. It is the Fulbright scholarship program, named for the Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee who conceived it in 1946.

For thousands of young Americans a Fulbright grant for study abroad has provided a timely boost up the academic or cultural ladder. Their counterparts from other countries have been able in even greater numbers to study in the United States. One residue apart from individual accomplishments has been an enhanced respect for American scholarship and intellectual standards.

The hatchet artist from Brooklyn, Representative John J. Rooney, is heavily responsible for slashing the Fulbright appropriation by more than 40 per cent from its modest peak of $53 million in 1966, but the State Department is far from blameless. Under budget-paring pressure last year it ordered cuts that went far beyond those imposed by Congress. Fulbright grantees now total less than half the 12,000 of 1966 and the number of American recipients has been cut from 3,000 to 1,000.

Belatedly, State has had a change of heart and decided to fight for the program. It has cleared for fiscal 1971 a budget request of $40 million—modest enough but a great improvement over the $31.4 million Congress has appropriated for each of the last two years. The hope must be that responsible men in Congress will now heed voices such as that of the American Council on Education, which calls the Fulbright program "a highly effective worldwide infrastructure for educational cooperation."

EXCHANGING SCHOLARS

To the Editor:

I appreciate the positive intent of your recent editorial "Reviving Fulbright Program," and your approval over the years of our educational and cultural exchange efforts.

However, I disagree with the reason you assign for the current reduced level of these educational exchanges, as well as the other people-to-people programs sponsored by the Department of State and included in the appropriation figures the editorial cites. This is due neither to the malevolence you impute to Chairman John J. Rooney nor to any (wholly mythical) cuts "ordered" by the State Department "beyond those imposed by Congress."

The reduction directly reflects a decline from the $53 million appropriated by the Congress for the 1966 fiscal year to the $31.4 million appropriated for the current period. This decline was, in my opinion, due (a) to the whole context of government priorities and budgetary pressures in the last several years and (b) to honest doubts in the minds of many members of the House and Senate Appropriations Committees as to the relevance of some of these programs to the national interest.

The Administration's new request to Congress for a substantial increase to $40 million reflects a conviction that dollars spent on these programs, imaginatively and effectively managed, provide benefits in our relations with other countries greater than can be achieved by dollars spent any other way.

I believe the House appropriations subcommittee which recommended and defended the high 1966 level to the Congress when its members regarded the programs as appropriately justified can be counted on to apply strict but not unfair criteria in considering our request.

JOHN RICHARDSON, JR.,
Assistant Secretary of State for Educational and Cultural Affairs, WASHINGTON, April 23, 1970.

I also learned through the pages of the Times, via one James Reston, that I alone was responsible for the failure of certain Foreign Service personnel to be able to speak the language of the foreign country to which they were being assigned. Had Mr. Reston made so much as one phone call to my office or read the appropriations subcommittee printed hearings he would have realized that in the period he discussed the foreign language training budget rose from a paltry $782,515 under a Republican subcommittee to a little over $5 million under JOHN J. ROONEY, who is, as the Times continually says with an epitaph-like sneer, a Brooklyn Democrat. When Reston found out that he had been given a snow job by someone down in the department he phoned me and invited me to lunch downtown. When I insisted, he joined me for lunch in the House restaurant. He admitted he had been taken for a ride and promised to write a retraction of his story. He has never done so to this day. I include his column published on March 19, 1958, and the letter addressed to me on the same day by then Deputy Under Secretary of State and former career Ambassador Loy W. Henderson:

FOREIGN SERVICE WORKS—A COMMENT ON INABILITY OF U.S. ENVOYS TO TALK LANGUAGE OF NATIONS THEY'RE IN

(By James Reston)

WASHINGTON, March 18—Sometimes a small incident tells more about the problems of United States foreign policy than a month's debate in the Senate. President Eisenhower's luncheon yesterday with the Advisory Committee of the Foreign Service Institute is a case in point. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss the sad state of language training in the Foreign Service, which is primarily responsible for the administration of United States foreign policy at home and overseas.

Actually, what it turned out to be was a briefing session, primarily by men outside the Government, for the President on just how poorly trained in languages his staff is.

The facts are as follows:

Fifty per cent of the entire Foreign Service officer corps do not have speaking knowledge of any foreign language.

Seventy per cent of the new men coming into the Foreign Service are in the same state.

Llewellyn E. Thompson, United States Ambassador in Moscow, is the only United States Ambassador in a Communist country who speaks the language of the country to which he is assigned.

In the nine Arabic-speaking countries the only United States Ambassadors who speak Arabic are Raymond Hare in Egypt and Parker T. Hart in Jordan.

In the non-English speaking countries of the North Atlantic Treaty nations, the United States Ambassadors do not have a workable knowledge of the language in Belgium, France, Germany, Iceland, the Netherlands, Portugal, Turkey, and Greece.

Vinton Chaplin, the Ambassador in Luxembourg, is fluent in French; Val Peterson, in Copenhagen, claims a fair knowledge of Danish; Frances E. Willis, in Oslo, says she can speak "fair" Norwegian; and James D. Zellerbach in Rome says merely that he is "studying" Italian.

The same state of affairs, or worse, exists in the United States Embassies of Asia, and naturally enough, the President was not only interested but enthusiastic about doing something about it.

Those at the White House luncheon were Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther of the Red Cross; Robert Calkins of the Brookings Institution; Hamilton Fish Armstrong, editor of Foreign Affairs; Dr. Clyde K. Kuckhohn of the Peabody Museum; Charles F. Saltzman, former Assistant Secretary of State, and Henry M. Wriston, former president of Brown University.

Also, for the Administration, Under Secretary of State Christian A. Herter; Deputy Under Secretary of State Loy Henderson; Gen. Robert Cutler, an assistant to the President; Harold B. Hoskins, director of the Foreign Service Institute, and the newly appointed Director of the Bureau of the Budget, Maurice H. Stans.

It is the function of the Foreign Service Institute to provide language training for foreign service officers, but its funds have repeatedly been cut, with little or no effort by the President to do anything about it.

Though he is responsible for the appointment of Ambassadors, and though the Foreign Service officers who head our embassies overseas are his personal representatives, the President's attitude was reported to be: "Why didn't somebody tell me about this?"

He was sincerely disturbed, and even angry, about the difficulty in getting adequate funds to provide the necessary language training. He observed that a former secretary of his was recently given a four-year training course at a university on Air Force funds, and he wondered why it was not possible to get even a few months' training for the men who were involved in one of the most lively periods of diplomatic activity in recent years.

REPRESENTATIVE ROONEY INVOLVED

His visitors told him in plain and simple terms. The reason, as almost everybody familiar with the State Department's problems knows, is Representative John J. Rooney, Democrat of the Fourteenth District of New York (Kings County).

Mr. Rooney is chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee that presides over the State Department budget. He has been slashing that budget for years, is less than enthusiastic about giving Ambassadors the necessary language training or representation allowances, and is generally regarded, despite his obscurity, as one of the most powerful men in America, in a negative way, so far as United States foreign policy is concerned.

The President was interested in Mr. Rooney and offered to do something about talking to him. He could not have been more sympathetic to the problems placed before him and his visitors came away convinced that they had had a most useful luncheon.

But at least some of them wondered why the language and training problem had not been discussed and dealt with at the highest level of the Government more than five years ago, or at least in 1956, when the embassies were filled with Presidential appointees who could not speak the language of the countries to which they were assigned.

DEPUTY UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR ADMINISTRATION
WASHINGTON, March 19, 1958.

Hon. JOHN J. ROONEY,
House of Representatives.

DEAR JOHN: I am writing this note to tell you how distressed I am at the statements contained in a newspaper article this morning indicating that you have been slashing the State Department's budget for years and that in general you have been influencing the foreign policy of the United States in a negative way.

I wish to make it clear that those of us in the State Department who are concerned with budget matters do not share these views. We recognize your unexcelled knowledge of the budgetary problems of the Department and the Foreign Service. It is true that at times there have been differences between the Department and your Committee with regard to various budget requests and to the use to which the Department puts funds appropriated to it. Nevertheless, many of your criticisms have been constructive and helpful. Again and again on the Floor of the House you have ably explained the Department's needs and defended its requests. We in the Department respect you and, although at times we have not seen eye to eye with you, we have never doubted your devotion to the public interest and we have always considered that the Department and the Foreign Service are indebted to you for the interest which you have uniformly displayed in our hearings before your Committee.

Sincerely,

LOY W. HENDERSON.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, and to coin a phrase, let me make one thing perfectly clear. This speech is not an attack on the press, or, as it is more fashionably called these days, the media. No indeed. I have too many friends in that business and have seen too many honorable men labor hard and long to bring the truth to the public. I do not want to be associated with those who belabor the press in an effort, I believe, to bring it into line or to discredit it with the public. This is no vendetta. You must grant that the "tinpot tyrant" could refer to the mighty Oakes as a shlemiel but he would not think of doing so. In later years I always signed my wires to him as "your favorite Congressman." I think if a poll were taken of the press galleries right now most of the members would basically agree with what I have just said—and if such a poll is taken, please have someone other than a Times man take it, otherwise this speech will serve no purpose, because the Congressman presently delivering this speech will remain unidentified.

It may be interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that a rival columnist of Reston's, the former distinguished First Lady of our land, the widow of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, possessed a far better sense of fairness and decency than Reston. I include a copy of the column called Eleanor Roosevelt's Day entitled "My Apologies to Representative ROONEY," published in the Washington Daily News on April 4, 1958:

[From the Washington (D.C.) Daily News, April 4, 1958]

ELEANOR ROOSEVELT'S DAY: MY APOLOGIES TO REPRESENTATIVE ROONEY

NEW YORK—A letter from my son, James, who is a congressman from California, tells me I was unfair in what I wrote last week concerning one of his colleagues, Rep. John J. Rooney, of Brooklyn.

(Editor's note: Mrs. Roosevelt's column on Rep. Rooney appeared in The Washington Daily News on Wednesday, March 26.)

I had read a report of a group that had seen the President about the inability of our foreign service employees to speak the languages of the countries to which they are assigned. I gathered that the difficulty lay in insufficient appropriations and that Rep. Rooney, chairman of the appropriations subcommittee, had not been sympathetic to requests in this field.

I also had heard indirectly, Rep. Rooney was not very sympathetic to requests in the field of research of any kind, and I got the feeling that on the Democratic side he perhaps was a little like Rep. John Taber on the Republican side.

I happen to know that we send no young men to our embassy in Russia who do not speak Russian, but I also know that political appointments meant that we often do not get top men in the diplomatic service who speak the language of the country to which they are assigned.

Officers in the regular foreign service, I think, should have the opportunity to learn the language of a foreign country when they are assigned to it, so that they arrive with at least some knowledge of the language and may continue their studies on the spot.

But apparently I was all wrong about Rep. Rooney. I am told he fights valiantly for full State Department appropriations and that he gives that department more than it asks. The trouble is the department does not ask enough, and Mr. Rooney cannot add to the request, altho he fights to appropriate all he can.

I am happy to apologize to Rep. Rooney for my error, and I hope the State Department will take heart and ask for amounts adequate to cover this particular field, which is rather important in diplomacy.

Under the permission heretofore granted me by unanimous consent of the House I shall now include the following documents which have relation to the subject of my oral dissertation:

First. New York Times editorial published on October 20, 1964.

Second. Letter of Hon. William J. Crockett, Deputy Under Secretary of State for Administration, October 22, 1964, to the editor, New York Times, published on October 26, 1964.

Third. Letter of Louis R. Rosenthal, October 27, 1966, to the editor of the New York Times, published on November 3, 1966.

Fourth. Resolution adopted by members of the Foreign Service, both retired and active, assembled on Foreign Service Day, November 15, 1974.

Fifth. Page of Department of State Newsletter for December 1974.

Sixth. Remarks of Representative SIKES, of Florida, on the House floor on December 11, 1974.

Seventh. Letter of Vincent P. Mazzola, M.D., to Mr. John W. Oakes, chief editorial writer, New York Times, dated December 11, 1974.

The documents follow:

[From the New York Times, Oct. 20, 1964]

CONGRESS: BROOKLYN AND QUEENS

Eleven of New York City's nineteen Congressional districts lie in Brooklyn (Kings County) and Queens. One district partly in Brooklyn also includes all of Staten Island (Richmond County.) Unfortunately, the quality of the Representatives from the Brooklyn-Queens area is not proportionate to their numbers.

This is particularly true in Brooklyn, where the long dominance of the Democratic party machine has resulted in returning party mediocrities in election after election. Some of these have risen through seniority to positions in which they wield considerable power, usually harmfully. Notable are Representative John J. Rooney, and Representative Abraham J. Multer, both of whom should be retired to private life.

Many of their colleagues belong to the Tuesday-through-Thursday club, so-called because they generally spend only those days in Washington. But they have controlled their districts so long that their opponents are often political unknowns. For that reason it is not always possible to make a recommendation in every district.

Our recommendations follow:

Fourteenth District—Victor J. Tirabasso Jr. (Rep.) is a lawyer who would surely be better than Representative John J. Rooney (Dem.-Lib.), entrenched foe of adequate appropriations for the Foreign Service.

Tomorrow we shall review the Congressional districts in the New York suburban counties, followed on succeeding days by Connecticut and New Jersey.

[From the New York Times, Oct. 26, 1964]

ROONEY'S RECORD PRAISED—OFFICIAL CITES REPRESENTATIVE'S SUPPORT OF FOREIGN SERVICE

To the Editor: I was concerned to read on Oct. 20 the adverse editorial comment against Representative John J. Rooney of Brooklyn. I consider your description of Congressman Rooney as an "entrenched foe of adequate appropriations for the Foreign Service" to be both unfair and inaccurate.

For more than six years I have been responsible for determining the budgetary needs of the department and for justifying our appropriation requests before the Congress. I have always found Congressman Rooney willing to discuss our problems and to review objectively our requests for funds. He has placed a premium on good management and economy, but has not failed to be critical of waste and inefficiency whenever he thought it was evidenced.

It is the philosophy of the Department of State not to demand additional people to meet our growing responsibilities, but rather to give more adequate support to the people we already have. This was clearly enunciated by Secretary Dean Rusk before Mr. Rooney's subcommittee on March 7, 1961, when he said:

"More people and more money are not the answer to every new problem. We shall strive for better utilization of available resources."

PERSONNEL AND BUDGET

We have worked hard to implement this philosophy and have found Mr. Rooney understanding of and responsive to our needs. Thus, although we have not increased our personnel ceiling since 1961, our annual budget has grown by more than 40 per cent during this same period.

These additional funds have been used to provide a more comprehensive security research program, more adequate communications facilities, a language training program designed to give all our officers fluency in at least one foreign language and better schooling for our dependent children overseas.

With Mr. Rooney's assistance we have been able to assign career officers as Ambassadors to Paris and Rome by providing them with adequate allowances, and we have been able to implement automatic data processing programs encompassing all our activities from accounting to visa work.

I mention these examples merely to show the scope of interest and responsiveness we have received from Mr. Rooney with regard to the needs of the Foreign Service.

Mr. Rooney has been a strong advocate of a strengthened Foreign Service and not our "foe." He has worked hard to help achieve a service composed of professionals equipped to cope with the constant crises and complexities of modern diplomacy.

WILLIAM J. CROCKETT,
Deputy Under Secretary of State for Administration.
WASHINGTON, Oct. 22, 1964.

[From the New York Times, Nov. 3, 1966]
FOR JOHN J. ROONEY

To the Editor: I was quite disappointed to learn that The Times has once again seen fit to withhold its endorsement from one of the most able members of Congress. I refer to Representative John J. Rooney, who has diligently served the members of the Brooklyn community, the state and the nation as a Congressman since 1940. [Editorial Oct. 27.]

If the worst charge that Representative Rooney stands accused of is compelling members of the administrative branch of government to strictly account for the use of the funds they request, I am proud that he stands guilty.

LOUIS R. ROSENTHAL.
BROOKLYN, October 27, 1966.

RESOLUTION: CONGRESSMAN JOHN J. ROONEY
Whereas, Congressman John J. Rooney has served as a member of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives since 1945, a period of almost thirty years, and

Whereas, Congressman Rooney has served as Chairman of the Subcommittee on State, Justice, Commerce and the Judiciary Appropriations for almost twenty-four years, and
Whereas, Congressman Rooney, throughout his long and illustrious service in the Congress has contributed substantially to the well-being of the country and to the interests of the United States in foreign affairs, and

Whereas, Congressman Rooney has continuously sought to assist in promoting and enhancing the stature and performance of the Department of State and the Foreign Service,

Therefore, be it resolved that we, members of the Foreign Service, both retired and active, assembled on this Foreign Service Day of November 15, 1974, do express our high regard and respect for Congressman Rooney's outstanding service to his country and the promotion of its interests overseas, and do record our deep gratitude to Congressman Rooney for his continuing help and assistance to the Department of State and Foreign Service throughout his service in the Congress.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

REPRESENTATIVE JOHN J. ROONEY HONORED BY PRESIDENT, CONGRESSMEN, DEPARTMENT

Congressman John J. Rooney won the thanks of President Ford for "three decades of very distinguished public service," at a State Department reception, November 26.

The President joined scores of State Department officials, Congressional colleagues and other Government officers and friends in honoring the Brooklyn Democrat who will retire at the end of the current session of Congress after a career spanning 30 years.

Mr. Rooney has been the Chairman or Ranking Minority Member of the House Committee on Appropriations Subcommittee for the Departments of State, Justice and Commerce, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies, since January 1945.

The President and Mr. Rooney served together on the Appropriations Committee for 23 years and Mr. Ford's remarks, a highlight of the reception in the Department's John Quincy Adams and Thomas Jefferson Rooms, were interspersed with humorous references about Mr. Rooney—State Department relations and nostalgic recollections of legislative battles.

Mr. Rooney, the President said, has been a "tight-fisted, penny-pinching guardian of the public money." The Congressman has served "with great dedication and distinction," the President added.

Contrary to some allegations of his animosity to the Department, Congressman Rooney said he always considered State "the number one Department in the Government," and that he always had a great respect for "the competent Foreign Service officers serving us overseas."

Secretary Kissinger, in China on an official visit, sent a message which was read to the reception guests by Ambassador L. Dean Brown, the Department's Deputy Under Secretary for Management.

In the cable, the Secretary expressed the appreciation of the Department for Mr. Rooney's help and support over the years.

"I am sorry I can't personally be with you this evening," the Secretary said. "But on my behalf and your many friends who are with you, please accept our personal and sincere appreciation to you as a colleague and friend of many years."

"During your tenure as Chairman and ranking minority member we have never questioned your keen desire of assuring a strong, vigorous and effective Department of State, an organization that exemplifies our great Nation. Your leadership and guidance have helped us to do our tasks in a professional manner. We hope we can continue to look to you for advice and assistance."

"For all your counsel we say thank you and wish you well for the future."

Former Secretary Dean Rusk, in another message, said he deeply regretted that it was not possible for him to be present to join in saluting "a great Congressman and a strong friend of the Department of State."

"Over the years," Mr. Rusk said, "your tireless energy and understanding have helped immeasurably in the strengthening of the Department to meet its ever-growing responsibilities. You will be sorely missed in Washington but will take home with you the warmest good wishes of all of us who had the privilege of knowing you."

Chief Justice Warren E. Burger of the Supreme Court and Representative George H. Mahon, Chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, also lauded Congressman Rooney's record.

Speaker of the House Carl Albert led the House delegation which included Representative John Slack, who is slated to succeed Mr. Rooney as Chairman of the House Appropriations Subcommittee on the Department, Representative Elford A. Cederberg, the ranking minority member, and Representative Wayne L. Hays, Chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee Subcommittee on State Department Organization and Foreign Operations.

Acting Secretary Robert S. Ingersoll welcomed the President at the reception.

Before the evening was over, Congressman Rooney was presented with a replica of the Department's seal and a gavel from the Subcommittee.

Retired Ambassador Loy W. Henderson, "Mr. Foreign Service," also presented the Congressman with a resolution adopted by members of the Foreign Service, both retired and active, at Foreign Service Day, November 15.

The resolution expressed the "high regard and respect for Congressman Rooney's outstanding service to his country and the promotion of its interests overseas," and "our deep gratitude to Congressman Rooney for his continuing help and assistance to the Department of State and Foreign Service throughout his service in the Congress."

JOHN ROONEY'S GREAT RECORD OF SERVICE DEFIES ATTACK

(Mr. SIKES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, my attention has been called to an editorial in a recent issue of the New York Times which gives a completely distorted view of the work of JOHN ROONEY, the distinguished chairman of the State-Justice-Commerce Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations. He has served in this important capacity for many years. It has been my privilege to serve on his subcommittee and I know JOHN ROONEY very well. Knowing Mr. ROONEY and having watched him in action, I find nothing to substantiate the statements made about him in the Times.

The distinguished gentleman from New York (Mr. ROONEY) gives no quarter and asks none when in pursuit of wasteful and extravagant spending of the taxpayers' money. However, he is fair in his treatment of the budget requests. He simply wants the facts which are necessary to justify favorable action on budget requests. He does not tolerate flimsy and empty reasoning as a basis for spending the taxpayers' money.

The writer accuses Representative ROONEY of defying Presidents of the United States, even the Presidents of his own party. Those of us who have served with JOHN ROONEY also know that Chairman ROONEY has enjoyed excellent and cordial relations with the Presidents of both parties over all his years of constructive and valuable service in the House. In fact, all Capitol Hill knows these things about JOHN ROONEY.

The writer of the Times editorial gives free rein to his imagination by stating further that Representative ROONEY has been out of step with the majority of Democrats in the House. This is easily contradicted. It is a well-known fact that during the years of his stewardship, about 98 percent of the recommendations of his subcommittee have been overwhelmingly approved by votes of the full committee, by the great majority of the House of Representatives, and sustained by the Senate. None of his bills were vetoed by any of the seven Presidents under whom he has served.

Therefore, it is suggested that the New York Times editorial writer come down from his Ivory tower by the right stairway. JOHN ROONEY's great record of service defies attack from whatever source, as an unscrupulous attack.

VINCENT P. MAZZOLA, M.D.,
Brooklyn, N.Y., December 11, 1974.

Mr. JOHN W. OAKES,
Chief Editorial Writer,
New York Times,
New York, N.Y. 10036

DEAR MR. OAKES: I was most interested in your column "New Day in the House." Reforms within the law reveal progress in the proper direction. As an advocate of youth and a teacher for many years, my students were a source of stimulation and knowledge to me but respectful in spite of the generation gap. With this preamble, I resent your characterization in the article: "It may serve in the future to prevent such anomalies as Representatives Passman of Louisiana and Rooney of Brooklyn acting as tinpot tyrants in the respective subcommittee domains in defiance of Presidents of their own party and out of step with the majority of Democrats in the House." If these gentlemen were watchdogs for the people of our country after serving many years, it seems most unfair to reward them with a slanderous weapon.

As a resident of the 14th Congressional District for over half a century, which district has been represented by the Honorable John J. Rooney for thirty-one years, such penetrating remarks deserve an apology to the Honorable Congressman who served his people with honor and dignity for this period of time. Critical remarks should not be focused on a great American if the system of seniority in the House needs revision.

I have been a student of change but only after proper research has been made. Research means exploration for the truth. The next session, as you wrote, will be a "New Day in the House," but don't let us forget the contributions of our founding fathers and accomplishments of our loyal citizens who have served America.

Very truly yours,
VINCENT P. MAZZOLA.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF THE 93D CONGRESS

(Mr. ALBERT (at the request of Mr. BREAU) was granted permission to revise and extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD, and to include extraneous material.)

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, the 93d Congress, now in its final hours, has been an historic one.

Members may take pride in what they have done here, for the rest of their lives.

In accordance with the letter and the spirit of the Constitution, the House of Representatives and the Senate have shown conclusively, to the American people and to the world, that our system of government is sound, that it is stable, and that it is capable of performing its awesome tasks notwithstanding the extraordinarily severe trauma it suffered by the resignation of its executive branch's two highest officers.

If I may be excused the personal reference, there is no honor as high as the one I have enjoyed during this historic Congress, that of serving as Speaker of this body for a second term. No privilege ever conferred upon me has been one for which I am more deeply grateful. The responsibilities of the office are great, and during the 93d Congress were more profound, I believe, than at any time within recent memory. I particularly commend the Judiciary Committee's members of both parties, and their distinguished chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ROBINO), for their historic labors in the impeachment inquiry.

Throughout, we have all been sustained by the knowledge that ours is a sacred trust granted us by the American people. The problems with which we have dealt here are those which affect the lives of all of our citizens and of millions all over the world.

We have fulfilled our oaths. We have preserved, protected, and defended the Constitution of the United States. We have fulfilled the mandate of the 25th amendment to the Constitution we swore to uphold. And we have legislated in a vigorous and progressive way for the well-being of our country and its citizens, striving always to preserve the peace and to assure the present and future prosperity of our domestic economy and the viability of its relations with the rest of the world.

We have created new procedures in the internal organization of the Congress, and especially of the House, to permit us to perform our legislative responsibilities more effectively. We have passed a Budget and Impoundment Act that restores our control over Federal expenditures. We have reasserted our rightful prerogatives as to the war-making powers. We have passed rationally designed and humanely motivated legislation affecting the economy, beset as it is by inflation and recession. We have passed bills designed to put people to work, to assist them when they are unemployed, to help them when they are sick, and to assist them when they are elderly. We have passed measures making needed changes in our agriculture-support programs, acted to protect private pension rights, and reformed rules governing campaign expenditures. Many of these measures have had bipartisan support in both bodies of the Congress. We hope that the administration will act constructively and cooperatively with us in the great tasks at hand of resolving our many serious problems.

Our work in the 93d Congress has been the joint endeavor of many minds and many hearts. I recognize and am grateful for the help and cooperation of the leaders, the committee chairmen, the Members on both sides of the aisle, the minority leadership, the officers of the House and its staff members, all of whose efforts have been necessary to what we have achieved.

The distinguished majority leader, "Tip" O'NEILL, has my deepest gratitude. He has been my strong right arm during the past 2 years as we worked together on the extensive and complex legislative duties of this body. He is devoted to the House. He is loyal to his party, but, above all, he is an able and patriotic Member who puts the well-being of his beloved country far above every other consideration.

The leadership owes a debt of gratitude and recognition to majority whip, JOHN McFALL, and to his hard-working chief deputy whip, JOHN BRADEMANS, as well as to all the assistant whips. Their organizational talents, their personal energies and dedication, were essential to what we have done here.

I wish to thank DICK BOLLING and the members of his committee for their splendid work on the internal operations of the House and its committees. The leadership and the House owe much indeed, as well, to Mrs. HANSEN and the members of her committee of the Democratic caucus for their very productive endeavors.

To the Members of the House, both Democrats and Republicans, may I express my deep appreciation for their devotion to the public interest, for their ability and legislative acumen, and for the cooperative help and unending courtesy which I have been accorded by them, on every occasion, and without which I simply could not have fulfilled my responsibilities as Speaker.

The members of my own party have given me splendid support on many important issues. I have enjoyed the aid of steadfast friends of years, and the support of many newer Members who have elated us both by their abilities and their loyalty.

The Republican leadership, too, have shown me many courtesies. I deeply appreciate the assistance of the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. RHODES), and the very able minority whip, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ARENDT). Although viewing legislation from a different frame of reference than mine, they are patriotic Americans dedicated to serving their country, as they have so often demonstrated, particularly in the positions they have taken on national defense and foreign policy measures.

The Members of the House, its officers, and employees, all have bent their every effort to their duties, many driving themselves hard to finish our business, by working long hours, willingly undertaking the myriad tasks which increase with every passing year.

We have, I regret to say, lost the counsel of our distinguished former Parliamentarian, Lou Deschler, who, for 40 years, was noted for the precision and reliability of his rulings and judgment. I have, since Lou's retirement, had the wise advice and counsel of his very able successor, Bill Brown.

A man who was veritably an institution of this body as its Doorkeeper, William "Fishbait" Miller retires now to his beloved Mississippi and to the occasional pursuit and capture of the fish in its rivers and streams, who have learned to fear him over the years. I thank him deeply and sincerely for a lifetime devoted to the internal business of this House, as I greet his successor, Jim Malloy.

To the Members retiring from this body at the close of the 93d Congress, I extend my thanks for your friendship and wish you happiness and success in all your future undertakings.

I include at this point in the RECORD a summary of the legislative accomplishments of the 93d Congress. A far more detailed compilation will be included in the final edition of the RECORD for the 93d Congress.

NATIONAL DEFENSE AND FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Congress reasserted its war powers under the Constitution by placing restraints on the authority of the President to commit U.S. Armed Forces to combat without prior congressional consent. This historic assertion of rightful congressional authority was made after the President, without a congressional declaration of war, conducted massive air bombardment of Cambodia and Laos subsequent to the signing of the Paris accords and the return of U.S. troops and POW's. Despite a clear and convincing record of opposition by both the House and Senate to the bombing, President Nixon vetoed legislation providing for a cutoff of the funds needed to continue it. Congress subsequently gave its final approval to the war powers resolution by overriding the veto. The resolution sets a 60-day limit on commitment of U.S. troops without congressional consent. The power of the President to commit U.S. Armed Forces is defined to include only situations where Congress has declared war or provided other statutory authorizations, or when a national emergency exists because of attack on the United States or its forces.

December 20, 1974

In a major congressional initiative, Congress voted to halt U.S. bombing in Cambodia, effective August 15, 1973, ending the U.S. combat role in Southeast Asia. The amendment to the Continuing Appropriations Act for fiscal 1973 bars the use, after the deadline date, of any past, present, or future appropriations to support combat activities in or over Cambodia, Laos, North Vietnam, and South Vietnam. The act further prohibited the use of any funds appropriated under it, in providing assistance in the reconstruction or rehabilitation of North Vietnam.

In order to assist Israel in replacing military equipment used during the October 1973 War between Israel and the Arab States, Congress voted $2.2 billion in aid. Congressional action authorized the President to apply the funds to Israel's debt owed to the United States for arms purchased since the October war, allowing him to determine whether aid should be in the form of outright grants, or military sales credits, or both.

Congress also voted to provide itself with veto power over international agreements regarding certain nuclear technology; authorized $150 million for disaster relief programs in Pakistan, Nicaragua, Ethiopia, and certain other African nations; prohibited funds to South Vietnam for actions designed to assist the Government of Cambodia or Laos; authorized the Secretary of Defense to recommend a denial of exports, to any Soviet-bloc nation, of goods or technology developed as a result of Defense programs; authorized funds for the International Development Association and the Asian Development Bank; approved legislation implementing the International Convention relating to Intervention on the High Seas; and voted to cut off all military assistance to the Turkish Government after February 5, 1975, and until the President determines that substantial progress has been made toward achieving a resolution of the Cyprus situation.

Foreign aid was authorized in the amount of $2.69 billion for fiscal year 1975. Pending further appropriations, the foreign aid program is to continue as presently constituted at last year's spending level, through February 28, 1975. This measure limited aid to Cambodia, South Vietnam, South Korea, and Chile, subjected the Central Intelligence Agency to greater congressional scrutiny, and denied U.S. support to the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization until UNESCO ceases its discriminatory policies against certain nations, particularly Israel. The authorization provided for $1.1 billion for Middle Eastern countries and the appropriations measure contained the first $325 million of the Middle East aid package.

THE ECONOMY AND INTERNATIONAL TRADE
Inflation, recession, and international trade problems were major concerns of the 93d Congress.

Faced with a record inflation, Congress extended the Economic Stabilization Act of 1970 which authorized the President broad powers to stabilize prices, rents, wages, and salaries. The act also gives the President authority to establish, after public hearings, priorities of use and an allocation system of supplies of petroleum products, including crude oil. Congress also established a Council on Wage and Price Stability authorized to conduct public hearings to help publicize inflation problems and to focus attention on the need to increase productivity in all sectors of the economy.

In other significant actions affecting the well-being of the Nation's economy, Congress:

Authorized the extension of the President's National Commission on Productivity and Work Quality;

Directed the Joint Economic Committee to undertake an emergency study of the current state of the economy and of the problems relating thereto, with special reference to inflation, and to report at the end of the calendar year;

Extended the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965 and authorized the Economic Development Administration to guarantee direct loans and working-capital loans made by private institutions to borrowers in "redevelopment areas" or "economic development centers";

Provided the Small Business Administration with authority to continue making loans to small businesses through the remainder of fiscal year 1975;

Provided deposit insurance of $100,000 per account for public units and raised deposit insurance on other accounts from $20,000 to $40,000;

Authorized the President to use export controls to secure the removal of unreasonable restrictions by other countries on U.S. access to vital commodities;

Authorized funds for the Export-Import Bank to continue making loans to finance exports of American products;

Authorized a study of major reform of the antitrust laws;

Extended authority for Federal bank regulatory agencies to set feasible interest rates on time and savings deposits held by commercial banks, savings and loan institutions, and mutual savings banks;

Established a Federal Financing Bank; Extended for 4 years the Council on International Economic Policy;

Authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to raise the price of gold;

Authorized the purchase of gold by Americans;

Extended the Federal Housing Agency's authority to set Government-insured mortgage rates; and Authorized funds for the FHA's basic Federal housing and urban development programs.

The 93d Congress set Federal standards for product warranties and increased the authority of the Federal Trade Commission by sanctioning its use of court action for the economic relief of consumers affected by unfair or deceptive selling practices. The FTC is also authorized to seek civil penalties for violations of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Companies that offer warranties will now have to state whether these are full or partial warranties, and a full warranty will have to offer a complete replacement or refund for any defective product during the warranty period.

With rapidly growing unemployment in the last half of 1974, the 93d Congress moved swiftly to provide extended benefits to the rapidly increasing number of unemployed American workers. At a 2-year cost of $2.1 billion, the Emergency Unemployment Act now provides for an additional thirteen weeks of unemployment benefits, guaranteeing most eligible workers 52 weeks of benefits. The hourly minimum wage for most nonfarm-workers has been extended to several new categories of workers, including domestics, and several overtime coverage exemptions have been eliminated.

Earlier legislation of the 93d Congress extended the Emergency Employment Act of 1971 for 4 years, to decentralize manpower training programs and promote public service jobs in areas with an unemployment rate of at least 6.5 percent—the Public Employment Program, for which $5.5 billion has now been authorized. A $4 billion appropriation has been passed for jobless benefits and job creation.

Authorized, for 1 year, funds for the Economic Development Administration and for seven regional economic commissions;

Developed a new system under which employers are authorized to contribute to jointly administered trust funds established by unions for the purpose of providing their members with prepaid legal services for tenant, debt, consumer, property, family relations, and other matters;

Allowed States with annual employment rates of 4.5 percent and above to provide the 13 weeks of extended benefits to unemployed workers without regard to existing law specifying that the level of unemployment in States had to increase by 20 percent over 2 years before States could provide additional assistance; and Implemented an agreement liberalizing eligibility requirements for railroad retirement and extending benefit increases.

Comprehensive legislation on international trade included provisions requiring the Soviet Union, in order to obtain the benefit of U.S. trade concessions, to ease curbs on Jewish emigres. The President was given broad authority to reduce trade barriers in preparation for a round of worldwide trade negotiations next year.

The lending authority of the Export-

December 20, 1974

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—HOUSE

41987

Import Bank was extended by the 93d Congress to $25 billion, with a ceiling, for the first time, on loans for projects in the Soviet Union.

Another measure of significance in our foreign trade relations, was the requirement set by the 93d Congress that reserves up to 30 percent of our Nation's oil imports for carriage by American-flag tankers, vitally important and needed assistance for our American merchant marine.

ENERGY, NATURAL RESOURCES, AND THE ENVIRONMENT

Because of the extremely severe energy shortage during last winter's months and the prospects of continuing shortages, Congress took several positive steps, not only to conserve energy and its supply sources, but to protect the environment as well. The Emergency Energy Act of 1973 authorized a variety of emergency measures to conserve and allocate available energy resources, including investing the President with authority to institute rationing, and establishing a system of congressional approval for such energy conservation measures as those restricting store hours, setting shorter work weeks, and requiring carpooling. The Economic Stabilization Act Amendments of 1973 gave the President authority to require sensible allocation of available fuel supplies, and the Emergency Petroleum Allocation Act required the President to put into effect a mandatory allocation program, including rules for crude oil and jet diesel fuels.

In other energy-related matters, Congress acted to:

authorize immediate construction across Alaska of a 789-mile oil pipeline; curb discharges of oil from ocean-going vessels and to regulate oil tankers; set uniform maximum speed limits on national highways at 55 miles per hour; establish an independent Federal Energy Administration to coordinate energy programs and evaluate the Nation's energy supplies and needs;

reorganize and consolidate certain functions of the Federal Government in a new Energy Research and Development Administration in a Nuclear Energy Commission in order to promote more efficient management of such functions;

Authorize the Federal Energy Administration to prohibit powerplants and fuel installations with coal-burning capabilities from using natural gas or petroleum products as their primary energy sources;

Provide $60 million for a 5-year program demonstrating the feasibility of using solar energy to heat and cool buildings;

Establish a geothermal energy coordination and management project;

Authorize the construction and operation of ocean ports capable of receiving the largest oil tankers;

Establish a solar energy coordination and management project; and Include in the Surface Mining Control Act, a program for reclamation of abandoned strip mines.

In other legislation affecting the environment, Congress:

Extended existing protections of fish and wildlife to species that are likely to be endangered in the foreseeable future as well as those in immediate danger of extinction;

CXX—2647—Part 31

Provided the Environmental Protection Agency with authority to control the sale and production of potentially harmful chemicals;

Prohibited for 5 years the licensing and construction of all potentially dangerous water resource projects on designated waterways and adjacent land areas included under study for inclusion in the wild and scenic rivers system;

Authorized funds for the saline water conversion program;

Authorized funds for, and extended the Clean Air Act and the Solid Waste Disposal Act;

Extended the National Sea Grant College program;

Provided for the construction, repair, and the preservation of certain public works on rivers, lakes, and harbors for navigation and flood control; and Prohibited certain ocean-dumping practices, including those affecting oil and mercury.

The 93d Congress passed legislation authorizing the expenditure of approximately $135 million in impounded funds for rural environmental assistance and conservation.

The 93d Congress energy legislation committed the United States to a $20 billion, 10-year program of research and development of nonnuclear energy, part of the program of developing domestic sources of coal, oil shale, and solar energy. Separate legislation gave authority for developing a program utilizing the earth's natural heat as an energy source.

Sixteen eastern national forest areas were designated wilderness areas and seventeen other specified areas were named as eligible for such designation in the future.

AN 11-PERCENT SOCIAL SECURITY INCREASE LEADS LIST OF BENEFITS FOR OLDER AMERICANS, AND OTHER SOCIAL LEGISLATION ASSISTS THE DEPRIVED

The 93d has been a thoroughly concerned and productive Congress from the point of view of older Americans. Congressional approval was given to a two-step social security benefit increase. The 11-percent increase, raising benefits for approximately 30 million Americans became fully effective in June 1974. This means that the average monthly benefit for elderly couples will have increased from $277 to $310.

On its own initiative, Congress expanded benefits for older Americans, through fiscal year 1975, by extending and increasing funds for Federal grants under programs to assist them authorized by the Older Americans Act of 1965. Amendments to the act do the following:

established a national information clearinghouse on the aging to collect, analyze and distribute information on the needs of older Americans; provide Federal grants to States and communities for social service programs for the aged; and authorize grants for training and research in the field of aging;

In other areas of social welfare, Congress passed:

the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act to provide financial assistance for a program for the prevention, identification, and treatment of child abuse and to establish a National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect;

the Domestic Volunteer Service Program Act, to authorize funds for such volunteer programs as VISTA, the program of the University-Year Act, and the retired senior volunteer program, giving, for the first time, statutory authority to the ACTION agency; and the Supplemental Security Income Act, to boost payments for up to 6 million of the needy blind, disabled, and aged.

The 93d Congress extended a key part of the Federal antipoverty program that the Nixon administration had wanted to eliminate. The legislation extends for 2 years the life of the Office of Economic Opportunity's Community Action programs, in which local groups receive Federal funds for job training activities, welfare counseling, and other help for the poor. The OEO will continue unless the President submits for congressional approval next year a reorganization plan transferring its community action and certain other programs to the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. The OEO was renamed the Community Services Administration.

HEALTH AND MEDICAL CARE

This Congress passed one of the most significant and innovative health measures of recent years when it approved the development, with Federal funds and on an experimental basis, of health maintenance organizations. Federal aid is to be provided for approximately 100 HMO's, over a 5-year period, which offer comprehensive health services for a set annual or monthly fee. Although the HMO system has operated for some years now, with services to some estimated 7 million people, Congress passed this legislation to assure adequate financial assistance for existing organizations and new ones, so that any person will have the option of choosing the use of such an organization in making a decision about joining various health-benefit plans.

Late in the previous session of the 93d Congress, legislation was approved, despite an earlier Presidential veto, which provides Federal aid to areawide systems of emergency medical care, increasing the Federal share of the cost of expanding and improving emergency care systems, in areas of exceptional need, from 50 to 75 percent.

In passing the Health Programs Extension Act Congress voted to continue a group of health programs that President Nixon had tried to terminate, including programs such as aid to schools of public health, comprehensive health services, the hospital construction program, migrants' health programs, and those for family planning and community health centers. The legislation denies any court, public official, or public authority the right to require individuals or institutions receiving assistance, under the programs just named, to perform abortions or sterilizations contrary to any person's religious beliefs or moral convictions.

The same programs extended by the Health Programs Extension Act were again extended in the 2d session of the 93d Congress by the Health Revenue-Sharing and Health Services Act, which also provided Federal funds for an Office of Rape Prevention and Control, organized within the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

Among other major health-related programs passed during this Congress were:

Establishment, for the first time, of minimum standards for the Nation's drinking water and authorizing appropriations of $156 million;

Extension of the Lead-Based Paint Poisoning Prevention Act of 1970 and amendment of the Act to ensure a national uniform standard by preempting local and State laws covering allowable lead content; and Establishment of a National Commission on Diabetes.

VETERANS

Despite a presidential veto in 1972, the 93d Congress approved comprehensive veterans' health care legislation extending outpatient care at VA hospitals to peacetime veterans. Those veterans who are 80 percent or more disabled because of service-connected causes may now obtain outpatient treatment without referral from a hospitalized status. In cases where the VA is not able to provide medical care, veterans will be reimbursed for medical expenses outside the VA hospital system. In addition, VA medical care was extended to certain dependents and survivors of veterans.

Congress also took the following actions to assist veterans and their dependents:

Increased monthly pension payments to single and married veterans by approximately 10 percent;

Increased veterans' funeral and burial allowances and established a national cemetery system to be administered by the Veterans' Administration;

Provided certain tax benefits for former prisoners of war hospitalized as a result of service in a combat zone and for persons known killed or presumed missing while serving in a combat zone;

Provided for a 15-percent increase in benefits to veterans who are 10- to 50-percent disabled, and 18 percent to veterans whose disability is 50 percent or more;

Provided, for the first time, full coverage under the servicemen's group life insurance for certain members of the Reserves and National Guard;

Provided for a 22.7-percent increase in monthly educational allowances for veterans and their dependents, and survivors of veterans; and Extended vocational rehabilitation programs for disabled veterans.

The 93d Congress approved a measure designed to help veterans obtain home loans and to give veterans eligibility for insured loans used to purchase condominiums. The legislation will also make it easier for a veteran to get a loan guarantee, for a second time, from the Veterans' Administration. The measure also increases the maximum amount of the Government guarantee for homes purchased by veterans from $12,500 to $17,500, the first increase in 6 years. The maximum loan guarantees for mobile home purchases were also increased.

TRANSPORTATION

For the first time ever, Congress approved legislation offering deficit-ridden, urban mass transit systems Federal subsidies for operating expenses to supplement revenues derived from passenger fares. Under the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1974, a total of $800 million was authorized, during fiscal years 1974 and 1975, for subsidies to States, municipalities, and transportation agencies, helping to defray costs of operating mass transit systems when passenger fares do not bring in enough revenue to permit the systems to break even. Funds have also been authorized for construction and maintenance expenses of mass transit systems.

Congress authorized the largest authorization yet for the 3-year-old quasi-public corporation created in 1970, the National Rail Passenger Corporation, intended to revitalize the Nation's intercity rail passenger service. The Corporation's authority to manage and expand its existing systems has been expanded.

Other major action included:

Extension of the Airport Development Act of 1970 and an increase in the annual authorization level for airport development grants to $310 million from the existing level of $280, with an increase in the Federal share of airport construction costs by 25 percent;

Legislation instructing the Civil Aeronautics Board to set rates that reflect U.S. airlines' cost increases and that give them a reasonable rate of return; the measure also instructs the executive branch to act to eliminate discriminatory practices and user charges by foreign countries against U.S. airlines; and Authorization of $20 billion for Federal-aid highway and mass transit projects during fiscal 1974 and 1975, allowing cities, beginning in 1976, to finance urban mass transit projects, including subways, from the highway trust fund.

LAW ENFORCEMENT AND CRIMINAL PROCEDURE

In an effort to reverse the alarming rise in crime, Congress passed several laws to strengthen the efforts of Federal and local law enforcement officials. The Law Enforcement Assistance Act amendments authorized more than $2 billion to give local law enforcement officials the training and equipment needed to protect our citizens. Amendments to the act also extended the authorizations for the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, increased the minimum amount for State planning grants to $200,000 from $100,000, and authorized the LEAA to assist State and local police training programs and act as a clearinghouse for information relating to the improvement of law enforcement and criminal justice.

Other actions taken by the 93d Congress provided for:

Establishment of an Independent Legal Services Corporation to replace the Office of Economic Opportunity legal services program;

Increased use of furloughs to aid prisoners in adjusting to nonprison community life;

Extension of the Drug Abuse Education Act of 1970 for 3 years, setting priorities for Federal programs, State and local education agencies, and community projects, and the training of secondary and elementary teachers through drug abuse courses; and Approval of new rules of evidence for the Federal courts.

The 93d Congress enacted privacy legislation that increases people's access to information about them in Federal data banks and includes curbs on the selling of mailing lists and the use of social security numbers in identification systems.

The 93d Congress acted to nullify an agreement made by the administration with the former President concerning his tapes and documents. The measure enacted gives custody of them to the U.S. Government, prohibits their destruction, and assures that they will be made available to the courts and the public, because of the public interest in learning the full details of the Watergate scandal.

AGRICULTURE

In a major effort to encourage food production and eliminate subsidies in times of high market prices, Congress amended the Agricultural Act of 1970 to approve a broadly innovative 4-year farm program guaranteeing farmers a "target-price" return on three basic crops—cotton, wheat, and feed grains. If the market falls to pay those prices, Government payments will make up the difference, while "target-prices" will be adjusted to reflect production cost increases during these years. The new system of price guarantees, calculated on the basis of total production, is a significant change from previous years and gives broader protection than did the old Agriculture Act. Under the new system, it is expected that the cost to taxpayers of payments to farmers will be reduced and in some cases eliminated. Annual payments to individual farmers are limited by a ceiling of $20,000. In other areas, the new act extends the food-for-peace program for 4 years; suspends the "bread tax" on domestic wheat, a tax that was passed on to the consumer; increases dairy price support to 80 percent of parity for 2 years, dropping it thereafter to 75 percent; and extends food stamps for 4 years while providing for semiannual cost-of-living adjustments. Finally, a major new rural conservation program is authorized, including a pilot forestry incentives program.

Legislation amended the original Rural Electrification Act by making three important changes to expedite and simplify the guaranteed loan program of REA. First, it exempted from registration with the Securities and Exchange Commission loans guaranteed by the REA. Second, it authorized the assignment of REA guarantees with the approval of the Administrator. Third, it clarified REA Act provisions making the Government guarantee incontestable except for fraud of which the holder had actual knowledge.

MISCELLANEOUS

The heading under which legislation described in this section falls must not be taken to signify its lack of importance. These measures were major achievements of the 93d Congress.

A comprehensive campaign reform was approved by amendment of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, thus providing public financing in Presidential primary and general elections, contribution and expenditure limitations in all Federal elections, and the establishment of an independent Federal Elections Commission. All public financing moneys will come from the dollar checkoff fund and will be subject to the congressional appropriation process.

In an effort to increase the efficiency of the legislative process in the House of Representatives, the House approved a resolution reforming the committee system and providing for procedural changes that it is believed will make the legislative process more efficient and more responsive. In order to enhance oversight of the executive branch, each committee was authorized to establish an oversight subcommittee or to require one of its subcommittees to conduct oversight in the area of its full committee's jurisdiction. In addition, the majority leader and minority leader were authorized to call an early organizational caucus of their parties any time between December 1 and December 20 of even-numbered years. Other provisions related to proxy voting, committee jurisdictions, committee staff increases, bill referral procedures, and a requirement that at least four subcommittees be established within every committee.

A major effort to reassert control over vital congressional spending prerogatives was enacted in the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974. Budget Committees are established in the House and Senate to report current resolutions on the budget, recommend the level of Federal revenues, the appropriate amount of budget surplus or deficit, and the amount by which the statutory debt limit should be increased or decreased. A congressional Office of the Budget is established, and title X of the act places new congressional controls on the impoundment of funds by the President.

The 93d Congress enacted a landmark private pension reform measure. The law will regulate private pension plans that now hold more than $150 billion in assets and cover an estimated 25 million persons. The law does not require businesses or unions to establish pension funds, but it will govern most such funds that are created, and it will apply to most existing private pension funds.

Provisions of the law set pension fund standards for eligibility, vesting, funding, fiduciary responsibility, and reporting and disclosure. An insurance program is established to protect employee benefits and tax incentives are granted to encourage the establishment of retirement accounts by the self-employed or employees not covered by pension plans. Provisions are included for transferring pension rights from one employer to another in some instances.

The 93d Congress amended the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952 by limiting the issuance of U.S. immigration visas to 20,000 annually for each country.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to:

Mr. MORGAN (at the request of Mr. O'NEILL), from 9 a.m., today, on account of official business.

Mr. FOUNTAIN (at the request of Mr. O'NEILL) from 8 a.m. to 10 a.m., today, for necessary absence.

Mr. ADAMS, for December 20, 1974, on account of medical reasons.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

Mr. PERKINS, 30 minutes, today, and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter (on FRANK STUBBLEFIELD).

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. Young of Alaska) to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material:)

Mr. CONLAN, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. HOSMER, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. KEMP, for 60 minutes, today.

Mr. RAILSBACK, for 10 minutes, today.

Mr. ROBISON of New York, for 30 minutes, today.

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin, for 15 minutes, today.

Mr. ASHBROOK, for 30 minutes, today.

Mr. BURGNER, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. CLEVELAND, for 10 minutes, today.

Mr. WYDLER, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. BLACKBURN, for 20 minutes, today.

Mr. HANSEN of Idaho, for 20 minutes, today.

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. BREAU) to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material:)

Mr. KOCH, for 60 minutes, today.

Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois, for 15 minutes, today.

Mr. GONZALEZ, for 5 minutes, today.

Ms. HOLTZMAN, for 20 minutes, today.

Mr. WHITTEN, for 20 minutes, today.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa, for 30 minutes, today.

Mr. REUSS, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. LEGGETT, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. ULLMAN, for 60 minutes, today.

Mr. HAMILTON, for 20 minutes, today.

Mr. MEZVINSKY, for 15 minutes, today.

Mr. DULSKI, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. ANNUNZIO, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. McFALL, for 10 minutes, today.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, permission to revise and extend remarks was granted to:

Mr. FRASER, and to include extraneous matter, notwithstanding the fact that it exceeds two pages of the CON-GRESSIONAL RECORD and is estimated by the Public Printer to cost $625.50.

Mr. ROONEY of New York, and to include extraneous matter, notwithstanding the fact that it exceeds five and one-quarter pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and is estimated by the Public Printer to cost $1,529.

Mrs. GREEN of Oregon, and to include extraneous matter, notwithstanding the fact that it exceeds five and one-quarter pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and is estimated by the Public Printer to cost $1,460.

Mr. SEIBERLING, and to include extraneous material, notwithstanding the fact that it exceeds two pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and is estimated by the Public Printer to cost $764.50.

Mr. ULLMAN, prior to the vote on the trade bill.

Mr. KOCH, to extend his remarks in the body of the RECORD, notwithstanding the fact that it exceeds two pages of the RECORD and is estimated by the Public Printer to cost $973.

Mr. FRASER, to extend his remarks in the body of the RECORD, notwithstanding the fact that it exceeds two pages of the RECORD and is estimated by the Public Printer to cost $1,459.50.

Mr. GAYDOS, and to include extraneous matter, notwithstanding the fact that it exceeds two pages of the RECORD and is estimated by the Public Printer to cost $903.50.

Mr. STEED, and to include extraneous matter, notwithstanding the fact that it exceeds two pages of the RECORD and is estimated by the Public Printer to cost $721.50.

Mr. GROSS, immediately following the remarks of Mr. ROUSSELOT on the confirmation of Mr. Rockefeller today.

Mr. SYMMS, immediately following the remarks of Mr. GROSS following the remarks of Mr. ROUSSELOT on the confirmation of Mr. Rockefeller today.

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin to revise and extend his remarks on the conference report on the health planning bill.

Mr. BROYHILL of North Carolina.

Mr. WIGGINS, to revise and extend his remarks following the remarks of Mr. COHEN.

Mr. HECHLER of West Virginia to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.

Mrs. GREEN of Oregon in three instances.

Mr. MAZZOLI preceding vote on Rockefeller nomination.

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. Young of Alaska) and to include extraneous matter:)

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin in four instances.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois in five instances.

Mr. CRANE in five instances.

Mr. WYDLER.

Mr. BROYHILL of Virginia.

Mr. DERWINSKI in six instances.

Mr. LENT in three instances.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO.

Mr. COLLINS of Texas in two instances.

Mr. O'BRIEN.

Mr. SARASIN.

Mr. HASTINGS.

December 20, 1974

Mr. ASHERBROOK in 11 instances.
 Mrs. HOLT.
 Mr. GUYER.
 Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN.
 Mr. SNYDER.
 Mr. MYERS in five instances.
 Mr. DU PONT.
 Mr. KEMP in four instances.
 Mr. MATHIAS of California.
 Mr. BOB WILSON.
 Mr. DELLENBACK in four instances.
 Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska.
 Mr. MYERS in four instances.
 Mr. ERLERBORN.
 Mr. CARTER in two instances.
 Mr. MCCLORY in four instances.
 Mr. RALLSBACK.
 Mr. WALSH.
 Mr. YOUNG of Illinois in two instances.
 Mr. CLEVELAND.
 Mr. SHUSTER in two instances.
 Mr. ABBON in two instances.
 Mr. GILMAN.
 Mr. ESCH.
 Mr. HOSMER in six instances.
 Mr. GOODLING.
 Mr. MILLER of Ohio in six instances.
 Mr. SMITH of New York.
 Mr. DERWINSKI in two instances.
 Mr. MICHEL.
 Mr. SKUBITZ in five instances.
 Mr. KEMP in two instances.
 Mr. RHODES in five instances.
 Mr. HUBER.
 Mr. JOHNSON of Pennsylvania.
 Mr. SYMMS in three instances.
 Mr. TALCOTT in three instances.
 Mr. FRENZEL in 10 instances.
 Mr. BROWN of Ohio in two instances.
 Mr. HANSEN of Idaho in five instances.
 Mr. WHALEN in two instances.
 Mr. MCKINNEY.
 Mr. DON H. CLAUSEN in six instances.
 Mrs. HECKER of Massachusetts.
 Mr. TOWELL of Nevada in two instances.
 Mr. QUIE in two instances.
 Mr. VEYSEY in three instances.
 Mr. ROUSSELOT.
 (The following Members (at the request of Mr. BREAU), and to include extraneous matter:)
 Mr. ASHLEY.
 Mr. FRASER.
 Mr. PHILLIP BURTON in three instances.
 Mr. VANIK in two instances.
 Mr. CAREY of New York in two instances.
 Mr. BIAGGI in 10 instances.
 Mr. ROY.
 Mr. ANDERSON of California in 10 instances.
 Mr. RARICK in six instances.
 Mr. GONZALEZ in six instances.
 Mr. SISK.
 Mr. RANGEL.
 Mr. WON PAT.
 Mr. KOCH in three instances.
 Mr. DINGELL in three instances.
 Ms. HOLTZMAN in seven instances.
 Mr. PATTEN.
 Mr. HAMILTON in two instances.
 Mr. GETTYS.
 Mrs. GRIFFITHS.
 Mr. ROONEY of New York in six instances.
 Mr. EILBERG.
 Mr. EDWARDS of California in six instances.
 Mr. FLOWERS in three instances.
 Mr. MOORHEAD of Pennsylvania.

Mr. LEGGETT in 10 instances.
 Mr. RYAN.
 Mr. COTTER.
 Mr. RUNNELS.
 Mr. PATMAN.
 Mr. NATCHER in 17 instances.
 Mr. GAYDOS.
 Ms. SCHROEDER.
 Mr. ADDABBO.
 Mr. STARK in two instances.
 Mr. CORMAN in two instances.
 Mr. GINN in two instances.
 Mr. FAUNTROY in two instances.
 Mr. CLARK.
 Mr. DULSKI in 10 instances.
 Mr. JOHNSON of California in three instances.
 Mr. UDALL.
 Mr. WALDIE in five instances.
 Mr. DENHOLM.
 Mr. JONES of Oklahoma in two instances.
 Mr. HECHLER of West Virginia.
 Mr. BRECKINRIDGE.
 Mr. DRINAN in three instances.
 Mr. HELSTOSKI in four instances.
 Mr. ROGERS in five instances.
 Ms. ABZUG in five instances.
 Mr. CHAPPELL.
 Mr. ASPIN.
 Mr. PATMAN in two instances.
 Mr. HARRINGTON.

SINE DIE ADJOURNMENT

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.
 The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. In accordance with the provisions of House Concurrent Resolution 697, the Chair declares the second session of the 93d Congress adjourned sine die.

Thereupon (at 7 o'clock and 10 minutes p.m.), pursuant to House Concurrent Resolution 697, the House adjourned sine die.

SENATE BILLS AND CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED

Bills and a concurrent resolution of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 1045. An act for the relief of Dino Mendoza Pascua; to the Committee on the Judiciary.
 S. 2298. An act for the relief of Robert M. Johnston; to the Committee on the Judiciary.
 S. 2314. An act for the relief of Jiri Emanuel Huebner; to the Committee on the Judiciary.
 S. 2406. An act for the relief of Doctor Jesus Fernandez Tirao and his wife, Benylinda Obiena Tirao; to the Committee on the Judiciary.
 S. 2532. An act to promote conservation, reduce wastage, and attain greater efficiency in the generation, transmission, and distribution of electrical energy and natural gas, encourage improved financial stability of public utilities and natural gas companies, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.
 S. 2644. An act for the relief of Mr. Jose-Ilto S. Arca and Doctor Corazon I. Arca; to the Committee on the Judiciary.
 S. 3103. An act for the relief of Abram Aguirre-Gonzalez and Hilarlo Aguirre-Martinez; to the Committee on the Judiciary.
 S. 3248. An act for the relief of Miss Rosario

Y. Quijano, Walter York Quijano, Ramon York Quijano, Tarcisus York Quijano, Denis York Quijano, and Paul York Quijano; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 3260. An act for the relief of Doctor Gustavo Scienville; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 3735. An act for the relief of Doctor Benedicto Principe and his wife, Erlinda Madula Principe; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 3922. An act to amend the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972 to provide more flexibility in the allocation of administrative grants to coastal States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

S. 3940. An act for the relief of Nestor Manuel Lara-Otoya; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 3977. An act for the relief of Patrick Andre Tasselini and his wife, Fabienne Francoise Tasselini; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 4242. An act to amend the Rail Passenger Service Act; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. Con. Res. 125. Concurrent resolution favoring the suspension of deportation of Carlos Marquez de la Plata-Montalvo; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 356. An act to provide minimum disclosure standards for written consumer product warranties; to define minimum Federal content standards for such warranties; to amend the Federal Trade Commission Act in order to improve its consumer protection activities; and for other purposes.

S. 521. An act to declare that certain land of the United States is held by the United States in trust for the Cheyenne-Arapaho Tribes of Oklahoma;

S. 1083. An act to amend certain provisions of Federal law relating to explosives;

S. 1283. An act to establish a national program for research and development in non-nuclear energy sources;

S. 1296. An act to further protect the outstanding scenic, natural, and scientific values of the Grand Canyon by enlarging the Grand Canyon National Park in the State of Arizona, and for other purposes;

S. 2446. An act for the relief of Charles William Thomas, deceased;

S. 2807. An act to name the Federal building, U.S. post office, U.S. courthouse, in Brunswick, Ga., as the "Frank M. Scarlett Federal Building";

S. 2888. An act to convey certain land of the United States to the Inter-Tribal Council, Inc., Miami, Okla.;

S. 3358. An act to authorize the conveyance of certain lands to the United States in trust for the Absentee Shawnee Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma;

S. 3359. An act to authorize the conveyance of certain lands to the United States in trust for the Citizen Band of Pottawatomie Indians;

S. 3394. An act to amend the Foreign Assistance Act of 1951, and for other purposes;

S. 3418. An act to amend title 5, United States Code, by adding a section 552a to safeguard individual privacy from the misuse of Federal records, to provide that individuals be granted access to records concerning them which are maintained by Federal agencies, to establish a Privacy Protection Study Commission, and for other purposes;

S. 3481. An act to amend the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 to deal with discriminatory and unfair competitive practices in international air transportation, and for other purposes;

December 20, 1974

S. 3548. An act to establish the Harry S Truman memorial scholarships, and for other purposes;

S. 3943. An act to extend the time for using funds appropriated to carry out the 1973 Rural Environmental Assistance Program and the 1974 Rural Environmental Conservation Program;

S. 3976. An act to amend title 17 of the United States Code to remove the expiration date for a limited copyright in sound recordings, to increase the criminal penalties for piracy and counterfeiting of sound recordings, to extend the duration of copyright protection in certain cases, to establish a National Commission on New Technological Uses of Copyright Works, and for other purposes;

S. 4073. An act to extend certain authorizations under the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, as amended, and for other purposes;

S.J. Res. 40. A joint resolution to authorize and request the President to call a White House Conference on Library and Information Services not later than 1978, and for other purposes; and

S.J. Res. 133. A joint resolution to provide for the establishment of the American Indian Policy Review Commission.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. HAYS, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H.R. 620. An act to establish within the Department of the Interior an additional Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Indian Affairs, and for other purposes;

H.R. 1715. An act for the relief of Cpl. Paul C. Amedo, U.S. Marine Corps Reserve;

H.R. 2208. An act for the relief of Raymond W. Suchy, second Lieutenant, U.S. Army (retired);

H.R. 2933. An act to improve the quality of unshelled filberts and shelled filberts for marketing in the United States;

H.R. 3303. An act for the relief of Nepty Masauo Jones;

H.R. 3339. An act for the relief of Deomira DeBow;

H.R. 5264. An act to amend section 2(f) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, with respect to American Samoa, Guam, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands;

H.R. 5463. An act to establish rules of evidence for certain courts and proceedings;

H.R. 5773. An act to establish the Canaveral National Seashore in the State of Florida, and for other purposes;

H.R. 7599. An act to amend the Trademark Act of 1946 and title 35 of the United States Code to change the name of the Patent Office to the "Patent and Trademark Office";

H.R. 776. An act for the relief of Samuel Cabildo Jose;

H.R. 8322. An act for the relief of William L. Cameron, Jr.;

H.R. 8591. An act to authorize the President to appoint to the active list of the Navy and Marine Corps certain Reserves and temporary officers;

H.R. 8958. An act to amend the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 to provide for the disposal of certain excess and surplus Federal property to the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of any group, band, or tribe of Indians;

H.R. 8981. An act to amend the Trademark Act to extend the time for filing oppositions, to eliminate the requirement for filing reasons of appeal in the Patent Office, and to provide for awarding attorney fees;

H.R. 9182. An act for the relief of Fernando Labrador del Rosario;

H.R. 9199. An act to amend title 35, United States Code, "Patents," and for other purposes;

H.R. 9588. An act for the relief of the city of Aransas Pass, Tex., and the Urban Renewal Agency of the city of Aransas Pass, Tex.;

H.R. 9654. An act for the relief of Mr. Aldo Massara;

H.R. 10212. An act to designate the Veterans' Administration hospital in Columbia, Mo., as the "Harry S Truman Memorial Veterans' Hospital"; to amend title 38, United States Code, to increase the rates of vocational rehabilitation, educational assistance, and special training allowances paid to certain eligible veterans and persons; and for other purposes.

H.R. 10701. An act to regulate commerce, promote efficiency in transportation, and protect the environment, by establishing procedures for the location, construction, and operation of deepwater ports off the coasts of the United States, and for other purposes;

H.R. 10827. An act for the relief of Kiyonao Okami;

H.R. 11144. An act to amend title 10, United States Code, to enable the Naval Sea Cadet Corps and the Young Marines of the Marine Corps League to obtain, to the same extent as the Boy Scouts of America, obsolete and surplus naval material;

H.R. 11796. An act to provide for the duty-free entry of a 3.60 meter telescope and associated articles for the use of the Canada-France-Hawaii Telescope Project at Mauna Kea, Hawaii;

H.R. 11802. An act designating the Laneport Dam and Lake on the San Gabriel River as the "Granger Dam and Lake";

H.R. 11897. An act to name the United States Courthouse and Federal Office Building at 110 Michigan Street NW, Grand Rapids, Mich., the "President Gerald R. Ford Federal Office Building";

H.R. 12427. An act to amend section 510 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936;

H.R. 128804. An act to designate certain lands as wilderness;

H.R. 13022. An act to amend the Act of September 2, 1950, as amended, so as to authorize different minimum grade standards for packages of grapes and plums exported to different destinations.

H.R. 13869. An act for the relief of Carl C. Strauss and Mary Ann Strauss;

H.R. 14461. An act for the relief of Judith E. Sterling;

H.R. 14600. An act to increase the borrowing authority of the Panama Canal Company and revise the method of computing interest thereon;

H.R. 14718. An act to discontinue or modify certain reporting requirements of law;

H.R. 15173. An act to extend until January 31, 1978 the authority of the National Commission for the Review of Federal and State Laws on Wiretapping and Electronic Surveillance, and for other purposes;

H.R. 15223. An act to regulate commerce by improving the protections afforded the public against risks connected with the transportation of hazardous materials, and for other purposes;

H.R. 15229. An act to expand the authority of the Canal Zone Government to settle claims not cognizable under the Tort Claims Act;

H.R. 15322. An act designating San Angelo Dam and Reservoir on the North Concho River as the "O. C. Fisher Dam and Lake";

H.R. 15977. An act to amend the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945, and for other purposes;

H.R. 16215. An act to amend the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972, to provide more flexibility in the allocation of administrative grants to coastal States, and for other purposes;

H.R. 16596. An act to provide assistance for unemployed persons;

H.R. 17010. An act to establish a working capital fund in the Department of Justice;

H.R. 17468. An act making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and for other purposes;

H.R. 17558. An act to amend the Act of May 13, 1954, relating to the Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation to provide for a 7-year term of office for the Administrator, and for other purposes;

H.R. 27597. An act to provide a program of emergency unemployment compensation; and

H.R. 17655. An act to extend for 2 years the authorizations for the striking of medals in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the cable car in San Francisco and in commemoration of Jim Thorpe, and for other purposes.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. HAYS, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following title:

H.R. 3538. An act for the relief of Selmer Amundson;

H.R. 14401. An act to authorize military band recordings in support of the American Revolution Bicentennial.

H.R. 15912. An act to amend chapter 37 of title 38, United States Code, to improve the basic provisions of the veterans home loan programs and to eliminate those provisions pertaining to the dormant farm and business loans, and for other purposes;

H.R. 16609. An act to amend Public Law 93-276 to increase the authorization for appropriations to the Atomic Energy Commission in accordance with section 261 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, and for other purposes; and

H.A. 16901. An act making appropriations for Agriculture-Environmental and Consumer Protection programs for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

[December 20, 1974 (legislative day, December 19)]

3108. A letter from the Under Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, transmitting notice of proposed rulemaking concerning Right to Read State grants, pursuant to section 431(d)(1) of the General Education Provisions Act, as amended; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

3109. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of State for Congressional Relations, transmitting reports on deliveries of excess defense articles during the fourth quarter of fiscal year 1974, and for the entire fiscal year, pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2321b(d); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3110. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of State for Congressional Relations, transmitting a report on political contributions made by Ambassador-designate William B. Saxbe, pursuant to section 8 of Public Law 93-126; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3111. A letter from the Assistant Legal Adviser for Treaty Affairs, Department of State, transmitting copies of international agreements other than treaties entered into by the United States, pursuant to Public Law 92-403; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3112. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Defense (Comptroller), transmitting the annual report of the Department of Defense on its disposal of foreign excess property, pursuant to 40 U.S.C. 514d; to the Committee on Government Operations.

3113. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a proposed amendment to the proposed plan for the use and distribution of Chiricahua Apache judgment funds in consolidated dockets 30 and 48, and 30-A, and 48-A, before the Indian Claims Commission, pursuant to 87 Stat. 466-468; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

3114. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a proposed plan for the use and distribution of Cheyenne River Sioux judgment funds awarded in docket No. 114 before the Indian Claims Commission, pursuant to sections 2(a) and 4 of Public Law 93-134; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

3115. A letter from the Deputy Assistant Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a proposed contract with Foster-Miller Associates, Inc., Waltham, Mass., for a research project entitled "Design, Fabrication and Demonstration of a Raise/Boring Shotcrete Support System," pursuant to Public Law 89-672; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

3116. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the National Trails System Act by designating the Potomac Heritage Trail located in portions of Maryland, Pennsylvania, Virginia, West Virginia, and the District of Columbia, as a component of the National Trails System; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

3117. A letter from the Attorney General, transmitting a report on the administration of the Foreign Agents Registration Act for calendar year 1973, pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 621; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

3118. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture for Administration, transmitting a negative report regarding professional and scientific positions, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 3104(c); to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

3119. A letter from the Librarian of Congress, transmitting a report on scientific and professional positions established in the Library of Congress during calendar year 1974, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 3104(a); to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

3120. A letter from the Federal Highway Administrator transmitting an amended report entitled "An Assessment of the Feasibility of Developing a National Scenic Highway System", pursuant to section 134(a) of the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1973; to the Committee on Public Works.

RECEIVED FROM THE COMPTROLLER GENERAL.
3121. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a list of reports of the General Accounting Office for the month of November, pursuant to section 234 of Public Law 91-610; to the Committee on Government Operations.

3122. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report on observations on evaluation of the special supplemental food program administered by the Food and Nutrition Service, Department of Agriculture; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

[December 20, 1974 (legislative day December 19)]

Mr. ICHORD: Committee on Internal Security. Report of activities of the Committee on Internal Security during the 93d Congress (Rept. No. 93-1646). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. POAGE: Committee on Agriculture. H.R. 17507. A bill to amend the Commodity Futures Trading Commission Act of 1974; with amendment (Rept. No. 93-1647). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 4 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER:

H.R. 17679. A bill to establish improved programs for the benefit of producers and consumers of rice; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HOSMER:

H.R. 17680. A bill to amend title 5, United States Code, to provide that officials and employees subject to certain pay limitations, or with respect to whom pay recommendations under section 225 of the Federal Salary Act of 1967 are disapproved, shall be credited, for civil service retirement purposes, with the pay which would be received if such pay limitations were not applicable; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

By Mr. ASPIN (for himself, Ms. ABZUG, Mr. BROWN of California, Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois, Mr. FISH, Mr. HARRINGTON, Mr. MITCHELL of Maryland, Mr. REES, Mr. SARASIN, Mrs. SCHROEDER, Mr. THOMPSON of New Jersey, Mr. WINN, Mr. WON PAT, and Mr. YATRON):

H.R. 17681. A bill to protect the public health, safety, and welfare and the natural environment by regulating the production and importation of chlorofluoromethane; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mrs. HECKLER of Massachusetts:

H.R. 17682. A bill to limit the Medicare inpatient hospital deductible; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LEGGETT:

H.R. 17683. A bill to create a Federal Oil and Gas Corporation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MOSS:

H.R. 17684. A bill to amend the Securities Investor Protection Act of 1970; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ST GERMAIN (for himself, Mr. BAOWN of California, Mr. REES, Mr. TIERNAN, Mr. COTTER, Mr. ASHLEY, and Ms. HOLTZMAN):

H.R. 17685. A bill to modify the effective date of Public Law 93-373 which permits U.S. citizens to purchase, hold, sell, or otherwise deal with gold in the United States or abroad in order to conform such effective date to the effective date of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission Act of 1974; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. STRATTON:

H.R. 17686. A bill to stabilize prices, rents, wages, salaries, profits, dividends, interest rates, and other economic transfers; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

H.R. 17687. A bill to amend the Economic Stabilization Act of 1970 to establish an Economic Stabilization Board, to stabilize prices, wages, rents, and interest rates at levels prevailing on the date of enactment of these amendments, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. VANIK (for himself, Mr. ABZUG, Mr. CONYERS, Mr. DINGELL, Mr. DRINAN, Mr. EDWARDS of California, Mr. FULTON, Mr. GUDK, Mr. HAWKINS, Mr. HECHLER of West Virginia, Mr. HELSTOSKI, Ms. HOLTZMAN, Mr. LEGGETT, Mr. LEHMAN, Mr. MITCHELL of New York, Mr. RODINO, Mr. ROE, Mr. ROSENTHAL, Mr. ROYBAL, Mr. SEIBERLING, Mr. JAMES V. STANTON, Mr. STRATTON, Mr. STUDDS, and Mr. TRAXLER):

H.R. 17688. A bill to amend the Emergency Petroleum Allocation Act of 1973 to prohibit the President from increasing the price of crude oil produced in the United States from the price of such oil in effect on December 1, 1974; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ROUSSELOT:

H. Res. 1521. Resolution in honor of H.R. Gross; to the Committee on House Administration.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mrs. GREEN of Oregon:

H.R. 17689. A bill for the relief of Frances Dwane McGill; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KASTENMEIER:

H.R. 17690. A bill for the relief of Bethani Maria Amble; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

597. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the board of county commissioners, Brevard County, Fla., relative to prohibiting foreign aid to countries levying high taxes on oil utilized by the United States; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

598. Also, petition of Leon and Esther Lofton, Inglewood, Calif., relative to redress of grievances; to the Committee on House Administration.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED AFTER SINE DIE ADJOURNMENT

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 251. An act for the relief of Frank P. Muto, Alphonso A. Muto, Arthur E. Scott, F. Clyde Wilkinson, Arthur D. O'Neill, Joseph H. Avery, Jr., Joshua Cosden, Keith Jewell, Bertha Seelmeyer, Thomas Dennis O'Neill, Robert H. Brookhurst, Michael Senko, Salvatore La Capria, C. J. Moore III, and Ann C. Siegal;

S. 544. An act to amend title 18 of the United States Code to permit the transportation, mailing, and broadcasting of advertising, information, and materials concerning lotteries authorized by law and conducted by a State, and for other purposes;

S. 863. An act to improve judicial machinery by amending title 28, United States Code, with respect to judicial review of decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission and for other purposes;

S. 754. An act to assist in reducing crime and the danger of recidivism by requiring speedy trials and by strengthening the supervision over persons released pending trial, and for other purposes;

S. 1017. An act to provide maximum Indian participation in the Government and education of the Indian people; to provide for the full participation of Indian tribes in programs and services conducted by the Federal Government for Indians and to encourage the development of human resources of the Indian people; to establish a program of assistance to upgrade Indian education; to support the right of Indian citizens to control their own educational activities; and for other purposes;

S. 1418. An act to recognize the 50 years of extraordinary and selfless public service of Herbert Hoover, including his many great humanitarian endeavors, his chairmanship of two Commissions of the Organization of the Executive Branch, and his service as thirty-first President of the United States, and in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of his birth on August 10, 1974, by providing grants to the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace;

S. 2149. An act to amend title 10, United States Code, to provide certain benefits to members of the Coast Guard Reserve, and for other purposes;

S. 2854. An act to amend the Public Health Service Act to expand the authority of the National Institute of Arthritis, Metabolism, and Digestive Diseases in order to advance a national attack on arthritis;

S. 2994. An act to amend the Public Health Service Act to assure the development of a national health policy and of effective State and area health planning and resources development programs, and for other purposes;

S. 3022. An act to amend the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (82 Stat. 906), as amended, to designate segments of certain rivers for possible inclusion in the national wild and scenic rivers system; to amend the Lower St. Croix River Act of 1972 (86 Stat. 1174), and for other purposes;

S. 3289. An act to amend the Act of August 10, 1939 (53 Stat. 1347), and for other purposes;

S. 3433. An act to further the purposes of the Wilderness Act by designating certain acquired lands for inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System, to provide for study of certain additional lands for such inclusion, and for other purposes;

S. 3934. An act to authorize appropriations for the construction of certain highways in accordance with title 23 of the United States Code, and for other purposes;

S. 4206. An act to provide price support for milk at not less than 85 per centum of the parity price therefor, and for other purposes; and

S.J. Res. 262. A joint resolution authorizing the Architect of the Capitol to permit certain temporary and permanent construction work on the Capitol Grounds in connection with the erection of an addition to a building on privately owned property adjacent to the Capitol Grounds.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED AFTER SINE DIE ADJOURNMENT

Mr. HAYS, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H.R. 421. An act to amend the Tariff Schedules of the United States to permit the importation of upholstery regulators, upholsterer's regulating needle and upholsterer's pins free of duty;

H.R. 510. An act to authorize and direct the Secretary of Agriculture to convey any interest held by the United States in certain property in Jasper County, Georgia, to the Jasper County Board of Education;

H.R. 1820. An act to direct the Administrator of General Services to release certain conditions with respect to certain real property conveyed to the State of Arkansas by the United States, and for other purposes;

H.R. 7684. An act for the relief of Nicola Lomuscio;

H.R. 8214. An act to modify the tax treatment of members of the Armed Forces of the United States and civilian employees who are prisoners of war or missing in action, and for other purposes;

H.R. 10710. An act to promote the development of an open, nondiscriminatory, and fair and free competition between the United States and foreign nations, to foster the economic growth of, and full employment in, the United States, and for other purposes;

H.R. 11273. An act to provide for the control and eradication of noxious weeds, and the regulation of the movement in interstate or foreign commerce of noxious weeds and potential carriers thereof, and for other purposes;

H.R. 11847. An act for the relief of certain fire districts and departments in the State of Missouri to compensate them for expenses relating to a fire on Federal property;

H.R. 12044. An act designating the lake created by the Hidden Reservoir project, Fresno River, Calif., as "Hensley Lake";

H.R. 12113. An act to revise and restate certain functions and duties of the Comptroller General of the United States and for other purposes;

H.R. 12860. An act to amend title 10 of the United States Code in order to clarify when claims must be presented for reimbursement of memorial service expenses in the case of members of the Armed Forces whose remains are not recovered;

H.R. 13296. An act to authorize appropriations for the fiscal year 1975 for maritime programs of the Department of Commerce, and for other purposes;

H.R. 14449. An act to provide for the mobilization of community development and assistance services and to establish a Community Action Administration in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to administer such programs;

H.R. 15977. An act to amend the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945, and for other purposes;

H.R. 16045. An act to amend the Solid Waste Disposal Act to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1975;

H.R. 16925. An act to make technical amendments to the Act of September 3, 1974, relating to salary increases for District of Columbia police, firemen, and teachers, and to the District of Columbia Real Property Tax Revision Act of 1974, and for other purposes;

H.R. 17045. An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the States;

H.R. 17085. An act to amend title VII of the Public Health Service Act to revise and extend the programs of assistance under that title for nurse training;

H.R. 17450. An act to provide a People's Counsel for the Public Service Commission in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

H.R. 17828. An act to designate a national laboratory as the "Hollifield National Laboratory";

H.J. Res. 1178. Joint resolution making further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1976, and for other purposes; and

H.J. Res. 1180. Joint resolution making urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and for other purposes.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT AFTER SINE DIE ADJOURNMENT

Mr. HAYS, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee presented to the President, for his approval, bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 421. An act to amend the Tariff Schedules of the United States to permit the importation of upholstery regulators, upholsterer's regulating needle and upholsterer's pins free of duty;

H.R. 510. An act to authorize and direct the Secretary of Agriculture to convey any interest held by the United States in certain property in Jasper County, Ga., to the Jasper County Board of Education;

H.R. 1715. An act for the relief of Cpl. Paul C. Amedeo, U.S. Marine Corps Reserve;

H.R. 1820. An act to direct the Administrator of General Services to release certain real property conveyed to the State of Arkansas by the United States, and for other purposes;

H.R. 2208. An act for the relief of Raymond W. Suchy, second lieutenant, U.S. Army (retired);

H.R. 2933. An act to improve the quality of unshelled filberts and shelled filberts for marketing in the United States;

H.R. 3203. An act for the relief of Nepty Masauo Jones;

H.R. 3339. An act for the relief of Delmilia DeBow;

H.R. 5264. An act to amend section 3(f) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, with respect to American Samoa, Guam, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands;

H.R. 5463. An act to establish rules of evidence for certain courts and proceedings;

H.R. 5773. An act to establish the Canaveral National Seashore in the State of Florida, and for other purposes;

H.R. 7599. An act to amend the Trademark Act of 1946 and title 35 of the United States Code to change the name of the Patent Office to the "Patent and Trademark Office";

H.R. 7684. An act for the relief of Nicola Lomuscio;

H.R. 7767. An act for the relief of Samuel Cabildo Jose;

H.R. 8214. An act to modify the tax treatment of members of the Armed Forces of the United States and civilian employees who are prisoners of war or missing in action, and for other purposes;

H.R. 8322. An act for the relief of William L. Cameron, Jr.;

H.R. 8591. An act to authorize the President to appoint to the active list of the Navy and Marine Corps certain Reserves and temporary officers;

H.R. 8958. An act to amend the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 to provide for the disposal of certain excess and surplus Federal property to the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of any group, band, or tribe of Indians.

H.R. 8981. An act to amend the Trademark Act to extend the time for filing oppositions, to eliminate the requirement for filing reasons of appeal in the Patent Office, and to provide for awarding attorney fees;

H.R. 9182. An act for the relief of Fernando Labrador del Rosario.

H.R. 9199. An act to amend title 35, United States Code, "Patents", and for other purposes;

H.R. 9588. An act for the relief of the city of Aransas Pass, Tex., and the Urban Renewal Agency of the city of Aransas Pass, Tex.;

H.R. 9654. An act for the relief of Mr. Aldo Massara.

H.R. 10212. An act to designate the Veterans' Administration hospital in Columbia, Mo., as the "Harry S. Truman Memorial Veterans' Hospital"; to amend title 38, United States Code, to increase the rates of vocational rehabilitation, educational assistance, and special training allowances paid to certain eligible veterans and persons; and for other purposes;

H.R. 10701. An act to regulate commerce, promote efficiency in transportation, and protect the environment by establishing procedures for the location, construction, and operation of deepwater ports off the coasts of the United States, and for other purposes;

December 20, 1974

H.R. 10710. An act to promote the development of an open, nondiscriminatory, and fair and free competition between the United States and foreign nations, to foster the economic growth of, and full employment in, the United States, and for other purposes;

H.R. 10827. An act for the relief of Kiyonao Okami;

H.R. 11144. An act to amend title 10, United States Code, to enable the Naval Sea Cadet Corps and the Young Marines of the Marine Corps League to obtain, to the same extent as the Boy Scouts of America, obsolete and surplus naval material;

H.R. 11273. An act to provide for the control and eradication of noxious weeds, and the regulation of the movement in interstate or foreign commerce of noxious weeds and potential carriers thereof, and for other purposes;

H.R. 11796. An act to provide for the duty-free entry of a 3.60 meter telescope and associated articles for the use of the Canada-France-Hawaii Telescope Project at Mauna Kea, Hawaii.

H.R. 11802. An act designating the Laneport Dam and Lake on the San Gabriel River as the "Granger Dam and Lake";

H.R. 11847. An act for the relief of certain fire districts and departments in the State of Missouri to compensate them for expenses relating to a fire on Federal property;

H.R. 11897. An act to name the United States Courthouse and Federal Office Building at 110 Michigan Street, N.W., Grand Rapids, Mich., the "President Gerald R. Ford Federal Office Building";

H.R. 12044. An act designating the lake created by the Hidden Reservoir project, Fresno River, Calif., as "Hensley Lake";

H.R. 12113. An act to revise and restate certain functions and duties of the Comptroller General of the United States and for other purposes;

H.R. 12427. An act to amend section 510 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936;

H.R. 12860. An act to amend title 10 of the United States Code in order to clarify when claims must be presented for reimbursement of memorial service expenses in the case of members of the armed forces whose remains are not recovered;

H.R. 12884. An act to designate certain lands as wilderness;

H.R. 13022. An act to amend the act of September 2, 1960, as amended, so as to authorize different minimum grade standards for packages of grapes and plums exported to different destinations;

H.R. 13298. An act to authorize appropriations for the fiscal year 1975 for maritime programs of the Department of Commerce, and for other purposes;

H.R. 13869. An act for the relief of Carl C. Strauss and Mary Ann Strauss;

H.R. 14449. An act to provide for the mobilization of community development and assistance services and to establish a Community Action Administration in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to administer such programs;

H.R. 14461. An act for the relief of Judith E. Sterling;

H.R. 14600. An act to increase the borrowing authority of the Panama Canal Company and revise the method of computing interest thereon;

H.R. 14689. An act to provide for a plan for the preservation, interpretation, development, and use of the historic, cultural, and architectural resources of the Lowell Historic Canal District in Lowell, Mass., and for other purposes;

H.R. 14718. An act to discontinue or modify certain reporting requirements of law;

H.R. 15173. An act to extend until January 31, 1976, the authority of the National Commission for the Review of Federal and State Laws on Wiretapping and Electronic Surveillance, and for other purposes;

H.R. 15223. An act to regulate commerce by improving the protection afforded the public against risks connected with the transportation of hazardous materials, and for other purposes;

H.R. 15229. An act to expand the authority of the Canal Zone government to settle claims not cognizable under the Tort Claims Act;

H.R. 15322. An act designating San Angelo Dam and Reservoir on the North Concho River as the "O. C. Fisher Dam and Lake";

H.R. 15977. An act to amend the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945, and for other purposes;

H.R. 16045. An act to amend the Solid Waste Disposal Act to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1975;

H.R. 16215. An act to amend the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972, to provide more flexibility in the allocation of administrative grants to coastal States, and for other purposes;

H.R. 16596. An act to provide assistance for unemployed persons;

H.R. 16925. An act to make technical amendments to the Act of September 3, 1974, relating to salary increases for District of Columbia police, firemen, and teachers, and to the District of Columbia Real Property Tax Revision Act of 1974, and for other purposes;

H.R. 17010. An act to establish a working capital fund in the Department of Justice;

H.R. 17045. An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provision of services by the States;

H.R. 17085. An act to amend title VII of the Public Health Service Act to revise and extend the programs of assistance under that title for nurse training;

H.R. 17450. An act to provide a People's Counsel for the Public Service Commission in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

H.R. 17468. An act making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and for other purposes;

H.R. 17558. An act to amend the Act of May 13, 1953, relating to the Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation to provide for a 7-year term of office for the Administrator, and for other purposes;

H.R. 17597. An act to provide a program of emergency unemployment compensation;

H.R. 17628. An act to designate a national laboratory as the "Hollfield National Laboratory";

H.R. 17655. An act to extend for 2 years the authorizations for the striking of medals in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the cable car in San Francisco and in commemoration of Jim Thorpe, and for other purposes;

H.J. Res. 1178. Joint resolution further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1975, and for other purposes; and

H.J. Res. 1180. Joint resolution making urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and for other purposes.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS APPROVED AFTER SINE DIE ADJOURNMENT

The President, subsequent to the sine die adjournment of the Congress, notified the Clerk of the House that on the following dates he had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

On December 21, 1974:

H.R. 17505. An act to rescind certain budget authority recommended in the messages of the President of September 20, 1974 (H. Doc. 93-361), October 4, 1974 (H. Doc. 93-365) and November 13, 1974 (H. Doc. 93-387), transmitted pursuant to section 1012 of the Impoundment Control Act of 1974.

On December 24, 1974:

H.R. 6274. An act to grant relief to payees and special indorsees of fraudulently negotiated checks drawn on designated depositaries of the United States by extending the availability of the check forgery insurance fund, and for other purposes;

H.R. 6925. An act to authorize the exchange of certain lands between the Pueblo of Acoma and the Forest Service;

H.R. 7072. An act to allow advance payment of subscription charges for publication for official use prepared for auditory as well as visual usage;

H.R. 7730. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to purchase property located within the San Carlos Mineral Strip;

H.R. 8352. An act to establish the Cascade Head Scenic-Research Area in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes;

H.R. 8824. An act to provide for the conveyance of certain real property of the United States to Mrs. Harriet La Pointe Vanderventer;

H.R. 10337. An act to provide for final settlement of the conflicting rights and interests of the Hopi and Navajo Tribes to and in lands lying within the joint use area of the reservation established by the Executive order of December 16, 1882, and lands lying within the reservation created by the Act of June 14, 1934, and for other purposes;

H.R. 15818. An act to amend title 44, United States Code, to redesignate the National Historical Publications Commission as the National Historical Publications and Records Commission, to increase the membership of such Commission, and to increase the authorization of appropriations for such Commission; and H.R. 17026. An act relating to former Speakers of the House of Representatives.

On December 26, 1974:

H.R. 1355. An act to donate certain surplus railway equipment to the Hawaii Chapter of the National Railway Historical Society, Inc.;

H.R. 5056. An act to provide for crediting service as an aviation midshipman for purposes of retirement for nonregular service under chapter 67 of title 10, United States Code, and for pay purposes under title 37, United States Code;

H.R. 8864. An act to amend the act to incorporate Little League Baseball to provide that the league shall be open to girls as well as to boys;

H.R. 10834. An act to amend the act of October 27, 1972, establishing the Golden Gate National Recreation Area in San Francisco and Marin Counties, Calif., and for other purposes;

H.R. 11013. An act to designate certain lands in the Farallon National Wildlife Refuge, Calif., as wilderness; to add certain lands to the Point Reyes National Seashore; and for other purposes;

H.R. 14349. An act to amend section 3031 of title 10, United States Code, to increase the number of authorized Deputy Chiefs of Staff for the Army Staff;

H.R. 15067. An act to prevent reductions in pay for any officer or employee who would be adversely affected as a result of implementing Executive Order 11777; and

H.R. 16006. An act to amend section 2634 of title 10, United States Code, relating to the shipment at Government expense of motor vehicles owned by members of the armed forces, and to amend chapter 10 of title 37, United States Code, to authorize certain travel and transportation allowances to members of the uniformed services incapacitated by illness.

On December 27, 1974:

H.R. 7077. An act to provide for the establishment of the Cuyahoga Valley National Recreation Area;

H.R. 16136. An act to authorize certain

December 20, 1974

construction at military installations, and for other purposes;

H.R. 16424. An act to establish a Commission on Federal Paperwork; and H.R. 16900. An act making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and for other purposes.

On December 30, 1974:

H.R. 7978. An act to declare that certain federally owned lands shall be held by the United States in trust for the Hualapai Indian Tribe of the Hualapai Reservation, Ariz., and for other purposes.

On December 31, 1974:

H.R. 3538. An act for the relief of Selmer Amundson;

H.R. 14401. An act to authorize military band recordings in support of the American Revolution Bicentennial;

H.R. 15912. An act to amend chapter 37 of title 38, United States Code, to improve the basic provisions of the veterans home loan programs and to eliminate those provisions pertaining to the dormant farm and business loans, and for other purposes;

H.R. 16596. An act to provide assistance for unemployed persons.

H.R. 16609. An act to amend Public Law 93-276 to increase the authorization for appropriations to the Atomic Energy Commission in accordance with section 261 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, and for other purposes;

H.R. 16901. An act making appropriations for Agriculture-Environmental and Consumer Protection programs for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and for other purposes;

H.R. 17597. An act to provide a program of emergency unemployment compensation; and

H.J. Res. 1178. Joint resolution making further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1975, and for other purposes.

On January 2, 1975:

H.R. 1715. An act for the relief of Corporal Paul C. Amedeo, United States Marine Corps Reserve;

H.R. 1820. An act to direct the Administrator of General Services to release certain conditions with respect to certain real property conveyed to the State of Arkansas by the United States, and for other purposes;

H.R. 2208. An act for the relief of Raymond W. Suchy, second lieutenant, U.S. Army (retired);

H.R. 3203. An act for the relief of Nepty Masau Jones;

H.R. 3339. An act for the relief of Delmira DeBow;

H.R. 5264. An act to amend section 3(f) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, with respect to American Samoa, Guam, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands;

H.R. 5463. An act to establish rules of evidence for certain courts and proceedings;

H.R. 7599. An act to amend the Trademark Act of 1946 and title 35 of the United States Code to change the name of the Patent Office to the "Patent and Trademark Office";

H.R. 7684. An act for the relief of Nicola Lomuscio;

H.R. 7767. An act for the relief of Samuel Cabildo Jose;

H.R. 8214. An act to modify the tax treatment of members of the Armed Forces of the United States and civilian employees who are prisoners of war or missing in action, and for other purposes;

H.R. 8322. An act for the relief of William L. Cameron, Jr.;

H.R. 8591. An act to authorize the President to appoint to the active list of the Navy and Marine Corps certain Reserves and temporary officers;

H.R. 8958. An act to amend the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 to provide for the disposal of certain excess and surplus Federal property to the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of any group, band, or tribe of Indians;

H.R. 8981. An act to amend the Trademark Act to extend the time for filing oppositions, to eliminate the requirement for filing reasons of appeal in the Patent Office, and to provide for awarding attorney fees;

H.R. 9182. An act for relief of Fernando Labrador del Rosario;

H.R. 9199. An act to amend title 35, United States Code, "Patents", and for other purposes;

H.R. 9588. An act for the relief of the city of Aransas Pass, Tex., and the Urban Renewal Agency of the city of Aransas Pass, Tex.;

H.R. 9654. An act for the relief of Mr. Aldo Massara;

H.R. 10212. An act to designate the Veterans' Administration hospital in Columbia, Mo., as the "Harry S. Truman Memorial Veterans' Hospital"; to amend title 38, United States Code, to increase the rates of vocational rehabilitation, educational assistance, and special training allowances paid to certain eligible veterans and persons; and for other purposes;

H.R. 10827. An act for the relief of Kiyonao Okami;

H.R. 11847. An act for the relief of certain fire districts and departments in the State of Missouri to compensate them for expenses relating to a fire on Federal property;

H.R. 12044. An act designating the lake created by the Hidden Reservoir project, Fresno River, Calif., as "Hensley Lake";

H.R. 12113. An act to revise and restate certain functions and duties of the Comptroller General of the United States and for other purposes;

H.R. 12427. An act to amend section 510 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936;

H.R. 13022. An act to amend the act of September 2, 1960, as amended, so as to authorize different minimum grade standards for packages of grapes and plums exported to different destinations;

H.R. 13869. An act for the relief of Carl C. Strauss and Mary Ann Strauss;

H.R. 14461. An act for the relief of Judith E. Sterling;

H.R. 14800. An act to increase the borrowing authority of the Panama Canal Company and revise the method of computing interest thereon;

H.R. 14718. An act to discontinue or modify certain reporting requirements of law;

H.R. 15173. An act to extend until January 31, 1976, the authority of the National Commission for the Review of Federal and State Laws on Wiretapping and Electronic Surveillance, and for other purposes;

H.R. 15229. An act to expand the authority of the Canal Zone Government to settle claims not cognizable under the Tort Claims Act;

H.R. 16045. An act to amend the Solid Waste Disposal Act to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1975.

H.R. 16215. An act to amend the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972, to provide more flexibility in the allocation of administrative grants to coastal States, and for other purposes;

H.R. 17010. An act to establish a working capital fund in the Department of Justice;

H.R. 17450. An act to provide a People's Counsel for the Public Service Commission in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

H.R. 17558. An act to amend the act of May 13, 1954, relating to the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation to provide for a 7-year term of office for the Administrator, and for other purposes.

H.R. 17628. An act to designate a national laboratory as the "Hollfield National Laboratory"; and

H.R. 17655. An act to extend for 2 years the authorizations for the striking of medals in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the cable car in San Francisco and in commemoration of Jim Thorpe, and for other purposes.

On January 3, 1975:

H.R. 421. An act to amend the Tariff Schedules of the United States to permit the importation of upholstery regulators, upholsterer's regulating needles, and upholsterer's pins free of duty;

H.R. 5773. An act to establish the Canaveral National Seashore in the State of Florida, and for other purposes;

H.R. 10701. An act to regulate commerce, promote efficiency in transportation, and protect the environment, by establishing procedures for the location, construction, and operation of deepwater ports off the coasts of the United States, and for other purposes;

H.R. 10710. An act to promote the development of an open, nondiscriminatory, and fair world economic system, to stimulate fair and free competition between the United States and foreign nations, to foster the economic growth of, and full employment in, the United States, and for other purposes;

H.R. 11144. An act to amend title 10, United States Code, to enable the Naval Sea Cadet Corps and the Young Marines of the Marine Corps League to obtain, to the same extent as the Boy Scouts of America, obsolete and surplus naval materials;

H.R. 11273. An act to provide for the control and eradication of noxious weeds, and the regulation of the movement in interstate or foreign commerce of noxious weeds and potential carriers thereof, and for other purposes;

H.R. 11796. An act to provide for the duty-free entry of a 3.60 meter telescope and associated articles for the use of the Canada-France-Hawaii Telescope Project at Mauna Kea, Hawaii.

H.R. 11802. An act designating the Laneport Dam and Lake on the San Gabriel River as the "Granger Dam and Lake";

H.R. 12884. An act to designate certain lands as wilderness;

H.R. 15223. An act to regulate commerce by improving the protections afforded the public against risks connected with the transportation of hazardous materials, and for other purposes;

H.R. 15322. An act designating San Angelo Dam and Reservoir on the North Concho River as the "O. C. Fisher Dam and Lake";

H.R. 16925. An act to make technical amendments to the act of September 3, 1974, relating to salary increases for District of Columbia police, firemen, and teachers, and to the District of Columbia Real Property Tax Revision Act of 1974, and for other purposes;

H.R. 17468. An act making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and for other purposes; and

H.J. Res. 1180. Joint resolution making urgent supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and for other purposes.

On January 4, 1975:

H.R. 14449. An act to provide for the extension of Headstart, community action, community economic development, and other programs under the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, to provide for increased involvement of State and local governments in anti-poverty efforts, and for other purposes;

H.R. 14689. An act to provide for a plan for the preservation, interpretation, development, and use of the historic, cultural, and architectural resources of the Lowell Historic Canal District in Lowell, Mass., and for other purposes;

H.R. 15977. An act to amend the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945, and for other purposes; and

December 20, 1974

H.R. 17045. An act to amend the Social Security Act to establish a consolidated program of Federal financial assistance to encourage provisions of services by the States. On January 8, 1975:

H.R. 510. An act to authorize and direct the Secretary of Agriculture to convey any interest held by the United States in certain property in Jasper County, Ga., to the Jasper County Board of Education; and

H.R. 12860. An act to amend title 10 of the United States Code in order to clarify when claims must be presented for reimbursement of memorial service expenses in the case of members of the armed forces whose remains are not recovered.

BILLS DISAPPROVED AFTER SINE DIE ADJOURNMENT

The President announced his disapproval of the following bills with memorandums of disapproval as follows:

H.R. 11929

MEMORANDUM OF DISAPPROVAL

I have withheld my approval from H.R. 11929, "To amend section 15d of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933 to provide that expenditures for pollution control facilities will be credited against required power investment return payments and repayments."

This bill would permit TVA to defer or offset its repayment obligations to the United States Treasury about $85 million per year for 5 years because of expenditures required to install pollution control equipment—and thereby enable TVA to postpone some rate increases otherwise required.

The people who are provided with electric power by the Tennessee Valley Authority have been subjected to substantial increases in power rates in recent months. I must point out, however, that consumers of electricity throughout the Nation have experienced similar rate increases for essentially the same reasons—the rising prices of fuel and materials, the cost of installing air pollution control equipment, and the rising cost of labor.

Nevertheless, TVA customers still pay among the lowest power rates of any region in the Nation—about 30 percent of rates in New York, 64 percent of Chicago, and 78 percent of Louisville, Kentucky.

No one likes to pay higher electric bills. But we must not allow this simple fact to result in new legislation which violates the fundamental principle that electricity should be priced to reflect its cost of production, including the cost of pollution abatement and control. My environmental advisers as well as my economic advisers agree with me that this principle must be upheld.

I see no basis in equity or in logic for departing from this principle in the case of the TVA, and for asking the general taxpayer to make up the difference in TVA power rates. To do so would be unfair to power consumers elsewhere in the Nation who do not have the benefit of Tennessee Valley Authority power facilities and who are required to bear the costs attributed to pollution control on their power bills.

MEMORANDUM OF DISAPPROVAL

I have withheld my approval from H.R. 14214, the "Health Revenue Sharing and Health Services Act of 1974."

H.R. 14214 conflicts with my strong commitment to the American taxpayers to hold Federal spending to essential purposes. The bill authorizes appropriations of more than $1 billion over my recommendations and I cannot, in good conscience, approve it. These appropriation authorizations are almost double the funding levels I have recommended for fiscal year 1975 and almost triple the levels I believe would be appropriate for 1976.

As part of my effort to see that the burden upon our taxpayers does not increase, I requested the Congress last month to exercise restraint in expanding existing Federal responsibilities, and to resist adding new Federal programs to our already overloaded and limited Federal resources. These recommendations reflect my concern with both the need to hold down the Federal budget and the need to limit the Federal role to those activities which can make the most necessary and significant contributions.

In H.R. 14214, the Congress not only excessively increased authorizations for existing programs but also created several new ones that would result in an unjustified expenditure of Federal taxpayers' funds. Although the purposes of many of the programs authorized in this bill are certainly worthy, I just cannot approve this legislation because of its effect upon the economy through increased unwarranted Federal spending.

Finally, it should be pointed out that the Federal Government will spend almost $20 billion in 1975 through Medicare and Medicaid for the financing of health services for priority recipients—aged and low-income persons. These services are provided on the basis of national eligibility standards in Medicare and State eligibility standards in Medicaid and therefore are available to individuals in a more equitable and less restrictive manner than many of the programs authorized in H.R. 14214.

MEMORANDUM OF DISAPPROVAL

I am withholding my approval from H.R. 8193, the Energy Transportation Security Act of 1974.

The bill would initially require that 20 percent of the oil imported into the United States be carried on U.S. flag tankers. The percentage would increase to 30 percent after June 30, 1977.

This bill would have the most serious consequences. It would have an adverse impact on the United States economy and on our foreign relations. It would create serious inflationary pressures by increasing the cost of oil and raising the prices of all products and services which depend on oil. It would further stimulate inflation in the ship construction industry and cut into the industry's ability to meet ship construction for the U.S. Navy.

In addition, the bill would serve as a precedent for other countries to increase protection of their industries, resulting in a serious deterioration in beneficial international competition and trade. This is directly contrary to the objectives of the trade bill which the Congress has just passed. In addition, it would violate a large number of our treaties of Friendship, Commerce, and Navigation.

Although this bill would undoubtedly benefit a limited group of our working population, such benefit would entail disproportionate costs and produce undesirable effects which could extend into other areas and industries. The waiver provisions which the Congress included in an effort to meet a few of my concerns fail to overcome the serious objections I have to the legislation.

Accordingly, I am not approving this bill because of the substantial adverse effect on the Nation's economy and international interest.

I wish to take this opportunity to reiterate my commitment to maintaining a strong U.S. Merchant Marine. I believe we can and will do this under our existing statutes and programs such as those administered by the Maritime Administration in the Department of Commerce.

S. 425

MEMORANDUM OF DISAPPROVAL

I am withholding my approval from S. 425, the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1974.

S. 425 would establish Federal standards for the environmental protection and reclamation of surface coal mining operations, including the reclamation of orphaned lands. Under a complex procedural framework, the bill would encourage the States to implement and enforce a program for the regulation of surface coal mining with substitution of a federally administered program if the States do not act.

The Executive Branch submitted to both the 92d and 93d Congresses legislation that would have established reasonable and effective reclamation and environmental protection requirements for mining activities. Throughout this period, the Administration made every effort in working with the Congress to produce a bill that would strike the delicate balance between our desire for reclamation and environmental protection and our need to increase coal production in the United States.

Unfortunately, S. 425, as enrolled, would have an adverse impact on our domestic coal production which is unacceptable. By 1977, the first year after the Act would take full effect, the Federal Energy Administration has estimated that coal production losses would range from a minimum of 48 million tons to a maximum of 141 million tons. In addition, further losses which cannot be quantified could result from ambiguities in the bill, forcing protracted regulatory disputes and litigation. In my judgment, the most significant reasons why such coal losses cannot be accepted are as follows:

1. Coal is the one abundant energy source over which the United States has total control. We should not unduly impair our ability to use it properly.

December 20, 1974

2. We are engaged in a major review of national energy policies. Unnecessary restrictions on coal production would limit our Nation's freedom to adopt the best energy options.

3. The United States uses the equivalent of 4 barrels of expensive foreign oil for every ton of unproduced domestic coal—a situation which cannot long be tolerated without continued, serious economic consequences. This bill would exacerbate this problem.

4. Unemployment would increase in both the coal fields and in those industries unable to obtain alternative fuel.

In addition, S. 425 provides for excessive Federal expenditures and would clearly have an inflationary impact on the economy. Moreover, it contains numerous other deficiencies which have recently been addressed in Executive Branch communications to the Congress concerning this legislation.

In sum, I find that the adverse impact of this bill on our domestic coal production is unacceptable at a time when the Nation can ill afford significant losses from this critical energy resource. It would also further complicate our battle against inflation. Accordingly, I am withholding my approval from S. 425.

In doing so, I am truly disappointed and sympathetic with those in Congress who have labored so hard to come up with a good bill. We must continue to strive diligently to ensure that laws and regulations are in effect which establish environmental protection and reclamation requirements appropriately balanced against the Nation's need for increased coal production. This will continue to be my Administration's goal in the new year.

H.R. 17085

MEMORANDUM OF DISAPPROVAL

I have withheld my approval from H.R. 17085, a bill that would amend Title VIII of the Public Health Service Act to provide support for the training of nurses.

This measure would authorize excessive appropriations levels—more than $650 million over the three fiscal years covered by the bill. Such high Federal spending for nursing education would be intolerable at a time when even high priority activities are being pressed to justify their existence.

I believe nurses have played and will continue to play an invaluable role in the delivery of health services. The Federal taxpayer can and should selectively assist nursing schools to achieve educational reforms and innovations in support of that objective. The Administration's 1976 budget request will include funds for this purpose. Furthermore, I intend to urge the 94th Congress to enact comprehensive health personnel training legislation that will permit support of nurse training initiatives to meet the new problems of the 1970's.

This act inappropriately proposes large amounts of student and construction support for schools of nursing. Without any additional Federal stimulation, we expect that the number of active duty registered nurses will increase by over 50 percent during this decade.

Such an increase suggests that our incentives for expansion have been successful, and that continuation of the current Federal program is likely to be of less benefit to the Nation than using these scarce resources in other ways. One result of this expansion has been scattered but persistent reports of registered nurse unemployment particularly among graduates of associate degree training programs.

Today's very different outlook is not reflected in this bill. We must concentrate Federal efforts on the shortage of certain nurse specialists, and persistent geographic maldistribution. However, this proposal would allocate less than one-third of its total authorization to these problems. Moreover, it fails to come to grips with the problem of geographic maldistribution.

Support for innovative projects—involving the health professions, nursing, allied health, and public health—should be contained in a single piece of legislation to assure that decisions made in one sector relate to decisions made in another, and to advance the concept of an integrated health service delivery team. By separating out nursing from other health personnel categories, this bill would perpetuate what has in the past been a fragmented approach.

The enrolled bill would also extend various special nursing student assistance provisions of current law. Nursing students are overwhelmingly undergraduates, and as such should be—and are—entitled to the same types of student assistance available generally under the Office of Education's programs for post-secondary education. These include, in particular, guaranteed loans and basic educational opportunity grants for financially hard-pressed students. Categorical nursing student assistance activities are not appropriate and should be phased out, as the Administration has proposed.

S. 4206

MEMORANDUM OF DISAPPROVAL

I am withholding my approval from S. 4206, entitled "an act to provide price support for milk at not less than 85 percent of the parity price therefor, and for other purposes."

This bill would require an immediate increase of $1.12 per hundredweight in the support price for milk, to a record high $7.69. Thereafter, through March 31, 1976, further upward adjustments would be required every three months as necessary to reflect changes in the parity index and parity price for milk.

Such large increases in milk prices to producers would be highly inflationary to consumers and unnecessary. The initial increase alone would raise fluid milk prices to consumers by about 6 cents per half gallon of milk and require increasing CCC's purchase price for cheese, and subsequently market prices, 11 or 12 cents per pound. Correspondingly large increases in the support purchase prices for butter and nonfat dry milk also would be required to carry out the higher support price for milk.

These significantly higher prices would be inconsistent with the Administration's continued and concerted efforts to combat inflation and its serious effects on the Nation's economy. Moreover, such prices would ultimately be damaging to the dairy industry and milk producers.

Consumers are resisting prices they must now pay for milk and other dairy products. To artificially force prices still higher, as this legislation would do, would result in further declines in consumption and be a strong stimulus to excess milk production.

To further reduce the demand for milk and dairy products by the increased prices provided in this legislation would be detrimental to the dairy industry. A dairy farmer cannot be well served by Government action that prices his product out of the market. It also would be detrimental since the Government would be required to buy the large surpluses of manufactured dairy products which this legislation would generate. This would cost taxpayers more than $400 million during the life of the bill.

It is clearly in the best interests of producers, consumers, taxpayers, and the Government that this legislation not be signed into law.

H.R. 2933

MEMORANDUM OF DISAPPROVAL

I am withholding my approval from H.R. 2933, a bill which would amend the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act to make existing grade and quality restrictions on certain imported commodities applicable to imported filberts.

In my judgment, the bill would be unfair to the American consumer and the American farmer, as well as prejudicial to the interests of American trade policy.

H.R. 2933 would be unfair to the consumer because it could unnecessarily increase prices for filbert products. Existing law already requires all imported foodstuffs to meet health standards prescribed under the Food and Drug Act.

The bill could also produce unfair consequences for the farmer by causing the loss of some of his important markets abroad. It could result at best in comparatively limited benefits for domestic producers while risking retaliation from abroad against the larger volume of other products exported by our farmers.

Finally, the bill would be prejudicial to our trade policy because it would be inconsistent with our obligations under the General Agreements on Tariffs and Trade. It would erect a non-tariff trade barrier at a time when we are trying to persuade other nations to dismantle theirs.

Although there are other commodities which are subject to the same statutory restrictions that H.R. 2933 would impose on filberts, no new commodities have been included in that list since January of 1971. I cannot in good conscience support the addition of a new commodity just after signing into law the new Trade

December 20, 1974

Act which has a major aim of eliminating non-tariff trade barriers.

For the foregoing reasons, I am compelled to withhold my approval from H.R. 2933.

H.R. 11897

MEMORANDUM OF DISAPPROVAL

I have today vetoed H.R. 11897, a bill which would name the United States Courthouse and Federal Office Building in Grand Rapids, Michigan, the "President Gerald R. Ford Federal Office Building."

Although I appreciate the honor expressed by the Congress in enacting this legislation, I intend to continue the policy of past Administrations that the executive branch not endorse the naming of Federal office buildings. Generally, the executive branch has deferred to the desires of the Congress on such matters.

However, I know of no Federal office buildings that have been named for a President while still in office. This legislation might begin a precedent I believe it best not to establish.

The proposed naming of this facility for me in my home community is a great honor, and one for which I am deeply grateful; however, for the reasons I have assigned above I feel I cannot sign H.R. 11897.

H.R. 13296

MEMORANDUM OF DISAPPROVAL

I am withholding my approval from H.R. 13296, a bill to authorize appropriations for the Maritime Administration.

This is the annual appropriations authorization bill for certain activities of the Maritime Administration in the Department of Commerce. I would be pleased to approve the measure if it were limited to those authorizations.

Unfortunately, the Congress added an unacceptable amendment which would require the Federal Government to reimburse U.S. flag fishing vessel owners for damage to their equipment by foreign flag ships.

The amendment would require the Secretary of Commerce to provide interest free loans to fishermen to cover the property and the value of produce lost as a result of damage caused by foreign vessels operating in the area of the U.S. Continental Shelf. If an ensuing investigation proved the loss was caused solely by a foreign ship, the loan repayment would be canceled and the United States would attempt to recover claims from the government of the foreign national involved. The program would be retroactive to January 1, 1972, for claims already filed.

This indemnity program would pose serious problems of administration because it would be difficult to establish responsibility for any damage caused. Furthermore, since the bill provides no basis for advance review of the recipient's financial ability to repay a loan the Commerce Department could find itself in the position of holding a group of bad debts. At the same time, claims for damage would be difficult to validate and the result would essentially be a grant program with few effective restraints.

Moreover, this program sets a precedent for the Federal relief of private parties from the actions of foreign nationals. Currently, relief is extended only to fishermen whose vessels are the victims of actions by foreign governments beyond recognized territorial limits. International procedures now exist through which claims against foreign nationals can be asserted and adjudicated and these should be used in preference to a Federal indemnity program.

I urge the Congress to pass once again the appropriations authorizations provisions of the bill early in the next session. Meanwhile, the programs covered by these authorizations and funded by appropriations already enacted can be continued under the continuing resolution which runs through February 28, 1975.

S. 3943

MEMORANDUM OF DISAPPROVAL

I am withholding my approval from S. 3943, a bill "to extend the time for using funds appropriated to carry out the 1973 Rural Environmental Assistance Program and the 1974 Rural Environmental Conservation Program."

The bill would extend from December 31, 1974, to December 31, 1975, the time within which farmers may request and receive approval of cost-sharing assistance under the 1973 Rural Environmental Assistance Program (REAP) and the 1974 Rural Environmental Conservation Program (RECP). In total, this bill would make $125,000,000 available to farmers for water and soil conservation practices which would otherwise not be available beyond December 31, 1974.

In my judgment, this bill is not necessary because sufficient cost-share funds have been made available for producers to finance sound conservation practices. Those producers interested in these programs have had adequate time to request and receive approval of these cost-share funds by the end of December 1974. I understand that those farmers, who have started approved conservation practices during the allotted time and were unable to complete them because of weather or other uncontrollable circumstances, will be permitted to complete these practices and receive cost-sharing assistance during 1975.

This Administration shares the view that REAP and RECP have made important contributions to conservation and the rural environment. However, the programs have long ago achieved their objectives. These programs were initiated in the 1930's to supplement farmers' incomes and provide incentives to farmers to install soil and water conservation practices. They were successful in demonstrating the value of conservation as a good farming practice. Many of the practices supported by the programs are profitable without Federal assistance and the supplementary income from this source has diminished in importance at a time when net farm income is near an all-time high.

It is, therefore, my earnest opinion that this bill is both unnecessary and unjustified, and on that basis I withhold my approval.

S. 3341

MEMORANDUM OF DISAPPROVAL

I have withheld my approval from S. 3341, the "Travel Expenses Amendments Act of 1974."

This bill would raise the maximum per diem allowance and mileage rates for civilian Government employees traveling on official business. I endorse this proposal. Unfortunately, a provision was added to the bill which would establish a rigid system of mileage reimbursement to the disabled veteran—with no discretionary authority for payment of a lesser amount where justified when the veteran was authorized to travel for treatment.

This provision assumes that there are great similarities in the travel situations of Veterans Administration beneficiaries and Federal employees who are away from home on Government business. This is not the case, however. Generally, a short span of time and distance is involved in VA beneficiary travel to a facility for vocational rehabilitation, counseling and health care, while Government employees may be traveling for days or weeks at a time. The employee per diem is designed to pay for necessary living expenses during this period, including those of lodging and meals.

Under this bill, Government employees using their privately owned vehicles may be reimbursed at the minimum 15¢ per mile, or at a rate comparable to the cost to the Government if the employee used a Government-owned vehicle. This flexibility would be continued for Government employee travel under the bill passed by the Congress. However, such management flexibility would not be applicable to travel of VA beneficiaries. The result would be the required payment of unwarranted mileage rates that would add an estimated $25 million a year to the VA budget.

The Administration will ask the 94th Congress for a new bill to raise the maximum per diem and mileage rates for Federal employees which have been inadequate for some time. Many Federal employees who are required to travel in connection with their work have suffered considerable out-of-pocket expenses in recent years. This should be rectified as soon as possible.

GERALD R. FORD.

THE WHITE HOUSE.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

[Submitted Dec. 30, 1974]

Mr. EVINS of Tennessee: Select Committee on Small Business. Energy data requirements of the Federal Government (Rept. No. 93-1648). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. HOLIFIELD: Committee on Government Operations. Reducing abuses in proprietary vocational education (Rept. No. 93-1649). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. HOLIFIELD: Committee on Government Operations. Impact of heroin addiction on the criminal justice system (Rept. No.

December 20, 1974

93-1650). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. EVINS of Tennessee: Select Committee on Small Business. Final report for the 93d Congress (Rept. No. 93-1651). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. DULSKI: Committee on Post Office and Civil Service. Legislative review by the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service for the 93d Congress (Rept. No. 93-1652). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. PATMAN: Joint Economic Committee. Achieving price stability through economic growth (Rept. No. 93-1653). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

[Submitted January 2, 1974]

Mr. POAGE: Committee on Agriculture. Report of the Committee on Agriculture on activities during the 93d Congress (Rept. No. 93-1654). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. MORGAN: Committee on Foreign Affairs. Legislative review activities of the Committee on Foreign Affairs for the 93d Congress (Rept. No. 93-1655). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

41999

Mr. DIGGS: Committee on the District of Columbia. Activities and summary report of the Committee on the District of Columbia for the 93d Congress (Rept. No. 93-1656). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. PATMAN: Committee on Banking and Currency. Summary of activities by the Committee on Banking and Currency for the 93d Congress (Rept. No. 93-1657). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. MILLS: Committee on Ways and Means. Report on legislative review activity during the 93d Congress of the Committee on Ways and Means (Rept. No. 93-1658). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. HOLIFIELD: Committee on Government Operations. Report on the activities of the Committee on Government Operations for the 93d Congress (Rept. No. 93-1659). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. PERKINS: Committee on Education and Labor. Activities of the Committee on Education and Labor for the 93d Congress (Rept. No. 93-1660). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. DORN: Committee on Veterans' Affairs. Activities of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs for the 93d Congress (Rept. No. 93-1661). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. HEBERT: Committee on Armed Services. Activities of the Committee on Armed Services for the 93d Congress (Rept. No. 93-1662). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. SULLIVAN: Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Activities of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries for the 93d Congress (Rept. No. 93-1663). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. TEAGUE: Committee on Science and Astronautics. Activities of the Committee on Science and Astronautics for the 93d Congress (Rept. No. 93-1664). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. BLATNIK: Committee on Public Works. Activities of the Committee on Public Works for the 93d Congress (Rept. No. 93-1665). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. HALEY: Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. Activities of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs for the 93d Congress (Rept. No. 93-1666). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

A TRIBUTE TO EDITH GREEN

HON. WILLIAM V. ROTH, JR.

OF DELAWARE

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, the forthcoming retirement of Congresswoman EDITH STARRETT GREEN marks the end of an historic era in the life of our Nation. She leaves an outstanding record of achievement, particularly in her chosen area of education. It was my privilege, while serving in the House of Representatives, to work with her in pursuit of our common legislative goals for America, and I came to view her with cordial regard and genuine respect. For two decades she has provided able and dedicated leadership in the Congress, leadership based upon the qualities of integrity, independent judgment, and commitment to the public interest.

Born July 17, 1910, in Trend, S. Dak., Mrs. GREEN was brought up in a family deeply involved in politics. Moving to Oregon as a child, she attended public schools and college in that State, and became a schoolteacher acquiring 12 years of practical experience in the work-a-day educational world. Defeated in her bid for Oregon Secretary of State in 1952, while serving as PTA legislative representative, she ran successfully for Congress in 1954 and has been reelected by the people of the Third District—including most of the city of Portland—nine times. During her 20 years of service in the Congress Mrs. GREEN was always a champion vote-getter, winning as much as 74 percent of the vote in Portland.

Mrs. GREEN will always be remembered as "the mother of education" for her tireless support of Federal aid for higher education as well as her keen awareness of abuses in such programs. She remains a firm believer in the importance of local, regional, and statewide responsibility in educational programs, reflecting her commitment to citizen-participation awareness of problems, and working out of solutions at the grassroots level.

Such concerns as these led Mrs. GREEN, in 1973, after 18 years of distinguished service on the Education and Labor Committee of the House—chairing the special Subcommittee on Education, to seek instead a seat on the Appropriations Committee. At the time she explained:

That's where the action is,

Adding later,

I switched when I realized there was no chance of any major higher education legislation coming out in several years.

Looking back over the years, she has stated:

There have been moments of great satisfaction and moments of great disappointment.

She derived "really tremendous satisfaction" from passage of the first Higher Education Act in 1963. Other issues in which she took a strong interest included student aid and the Equal Pay for Equal Work Act. However, in her own words: Education will always be my first love.

Mrs. GREEN's public service in Congress has always reflected a deep-felt conviction that the quality and availability of education is crucial to our democracy. In words written by President Garfield over 70 years ago:

Next in importance to freedom and justice is popular education, without which neither freedom nor justice can be permanently maintained.

To Mrs. GREEN and to her family I extend my very best wishes for happiness and fulfillment in retirement. She retains the esteem of her many friends and colleagues in Washington as she enters upon a new chapter in her life. Wrote the poet Marvell:

So much one man can do that does both act and know.

Had he known Mrs. GREEN, he would surely have written, "and one woman, too!"

HIGHEST RANKING VIETNAM VET DECORATED

HON. ANTONIO BORJA WON PAT

OF GUAM

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. WON PAT. Mr. Speaker, it is a real pleasure to learn that Maj. Gen. John P. Flynn, the highest ranking American military officer to have been captured, by the North Vietnamese, was the recent recipient of the Distinguished Service Medal and the Bronze Star at services held on December 13 at Lackland Air Force Base, Tex.

I had the unique pleasure of meeting General Flynn and his commander, Lt. Gen. George H. McKee, during an October visit to San Antonio, Tex. General McKee is a former commander of Andersen Air Force Base, Guam, and he was most kind to provide a briefing on the training facilities which he commands at Randolph AFB. Later, I met with General Flynn at Lackland AFB, who graciously arranged for me to meet with a number of Guamanian servicemen stationed under his command. Both of these fine officers are a tribute to their service and gracious exemplary men.

The honors which his fellow countrymen bestowed on General Flynn several days ago were only fitting. He has served his country with honor and with pride.

December 20, 1974

He is richly deserving of these decorations and I offer him the congratulations and appreciation of his fellow Americans on Guam for his devotion to duty in times of great stress.

At this time, I insert an article from the Military Service News of December 13, 1974, describing the ceremony honoring General Flynn in the RECORD: LACKLAND COMMANDER TO RECEIVE DECORATIONS AT CEREMONY TODAY

The highest-ranking American held prisoner by the North Vietnamese will be decorated with the Air Force Cross and other medals during a parade ceremony at Lackland AFB today.

Maj. Gen. John P. Flynn, commander of the Air Force Military Training Center, will also receive the Distinguished Service Medal and the Bronze Star. The medals are being presented General Flynn in recognition of "valorous acts or distinguished achievement" while he was incarcerated.

The Air Force Cross ranks second only to the Medal of Honor in importance.

He was a colonel serving as vice commander of the 388th Tactical Fighter Wing, Korat, Thailand, when he was captured by the North Vietnamese. The general was on a combat mission over Hanoi on Oct. 29, 1967, when the F-105 Thunderbird he was piloting was shot down. He remained a prisoner until his release on March 14, 1973.

General Flynn was commandant of the Air Command and Staff College, Maxwell AFB, Ala., before he assumed his position here in August 1974.

The public is invited to view the ceremony, which will occur at the Lackland AFB parade ground. It will begin promptly at 2 p.m., with Lt. Gen. George H. McKee, commander of Air Training Command, presiding.

IS THE U.N.'S LIFE AT STAKE?

HON. DONALD M. FRASER

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. FRASER. Mr. Speaker, Robert J. White associate editorial editor of the Minneapolis Tribune wrote some good sense about the United Nations in the Sunday December 15 edition of his paper.

White does not minimize the problems created this year for the industrialized nations by General Assembly actions. But he thinks it a mistake to predict the imminent end of the United Nations. He is right, of course, and his article explains cogently why he feels this.

The article follows:

IS THE U.N.'S LIFE AT STAKE?

(By Robert J. White)

The 29th U.N. General Assembly was about to wind up its affairs this month with the customary questions about its marginal usefulness and the customary consensus that it is, after all, a unique forum for 138 nations to get together. When something unusual happened.

John Scali, the U.S. ambassador, stood up and told the Assembly that a majority had taken it upon themselves to disregard U.N. rules, violate the charter, pursue sterile objectives and alienate such vital constituencies as the American public and Congress.

There had been notable achievements, he said, but the ability to bring them about still rests largely in the hands of the minority of countries being increasingly outraged by a tyrannical majority.

That and more was said 10 days ago. Why? Interviewed last week on the eve of the rebuttal speeches, Scali gave two reasons, but both seemed to stem from a third, more fundamental concern.

The audience Scali wanted to reach was only partly in the Assembly. Equally important was Congress, now in the final stages of voting on appropriations that include funds for the United Nations and its specialized agencies. Symptomatic of Scali's concern was a wire-service dispatch he held in hand quoting long-time U.N. supporters in the Senate—including Hubert Humphrey—chastising the Assembly.

One purpose of his speech was to assure the House and Senate that U.S. foreign-policy makers share some of the same critical views; that the administration's commitment to continued financial support of the United Nations does not imply indifference to recent U.N. resolutions, and that the time has come to press more forcefully for change in the Assembly.

The second purpose was to "make people here (at the United Nations) aware of the anti-U.N. fever developing in the United States," Scali said. He considers such actions as the ouster of South Africa from the current session of the Assembly and the several votes favorable to the Palestine Liberation Organization ("The issue was whether there should be a Palestine in place of Israel") to have eroded essential U.S. support.

That slide in support, in Scali's view, is the third and underlying reason for giving a speech that he knew would antagonize many of his colleagues from other countries. He puts the warning bluntly: "The life of this organization is at stake."

Yet it seems fair to ask whether the situation is quite that bleak. For one thing, evident in the Assembly is a strong element of the headlines of new found political power. When the small boys on the block realize that, collectively, they are more than a match for the big kid who used to tell them what to do, they find it hard to resist tweaking his nose.

The Kuwait ambassador put it more poetically, referring to the former supremacy "of a certain group that used to roam the building like serene falcons in an uninhabited forest."

The point can also be made that U.S. policy in the United Nations has not been unwaveringly enlightened. A leading example was the years-long U.S. effort to keep China out of the world organization.

Moreover, it would be a mistake to look at the General Assembly as a legislative body. The charter articles defining its powers are filled with verbs like "discuss," "consider" and "recommend." As Scali pointed out in his speech, the real test for the Assembly is not whether a majority can be gathered in support of a given resolution, but "whether those states whose cooperation is vital to implement a decision will support it in fact."

That test becomes more explicit in the Security Council, which the charter gives responsibility for peacekeeping and the settlement of disputes. There, each of the five permanent members, including the United States, has a veto. And the Security Council is responsible for one of the most important U.N. functions taking place today: international peacekeeping in the Middle East.

In contrast to the Assembly, whose penchant for what Scali describes as "one-sided, unrealistic resolutions that cannot be implemented" has caused so much criticism in the United States, the Security Council has performed impressively the past year.

The peacekeeping forces established after the 1973 war were set up through constructive compromise. The Soviet Union had its way on Security Council supervision and the inclusion of troops from a Warsaw Pact country. The United States prevailed in getting considerable authority for the secretary general in overseeing the forces and in excluding Soviet (or U.S.) troops.

This is not to minimize the problems for the United States and other industrialized countries being created in the General Assembly. And it is sad to see the carry-over of political animosities into once apolitical agencies like the Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

One of the most experienced and perceptive U.N. officials agrees that "this is a historic moment." Undersecretary General Brian Urquhart went on to say last week that it would be a mistake, now that the Cold War is dying, to "produce a new confrontation" between developed countries and the more radical part of the Third World. But Urquhart has become philosophical from experience in the United Nations since its beginning.

"Year after year, governments predict the end of the United Nations," he said, "but most don't really want that to happen." Urquhart's rueful observation of the pendulum of opinion is worth keeping in mind: "Last year the complaint was that the General Assembly was dull. This year everyone complains that it's too lively."

HUGH CAREY

HON. JONATHAN B. BINGHAM

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, in the case of HUGH CAREY, the sadness that we feel in saying goodbye to a Member of the House is mitigated by the fact that our friend has successfully achieved a major goal.

The familiar "hail and farewell" in this case is turned around: "Farewell"—to the Congressman; "hail" to the soon-to-be Governor of the Empire State.

From my earliest days in the Congress—in January 1965—I have enjoyed my contacts with HUGH CAREY. In the 89th Congress we served together on the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee. The meetings of that committee were often enlivened by the perceptive and witty comments of the gentleman from Brooklyn.

All during his service in the Congress, and especially while he was on the Education and Labor Committee, HUGH CAREY demonstrated his concern for the least fortunate in our society, the handicapped, particularly children.

In recent years, while a member of the Ways and Means Committee, HUGH CAREY played a major role in the elaboration and passage of revenue-sharing legislation which was of great help to our States and cities.

HUGH CAREY and his family have suffered more than their share of tragedy. In the face of these events, HUGH CAREY has shown enormous courage, buttressed evidently by a strong religious faith. I personally shall never forget the moving sight of HUGH CAREY and his many children standing beside the casket of his beloved wife, Helen, greeting hour after hour the hundreds of relatives and friends who had come to pay their respects.

In his recent campaign for Governor of New York, HUGH CAREY showed a remarkable ability—reminiscent of F. D. R.—to bring hostile and suspicious groups together in an effective coalition.

December 20, 1974

We shall miss HUGH CAREY—his quick intelligence, his forcefulness, his humor, and his friendliness—in the House. But we shall watch with the greatest of interest and no doubt of admiration as he undertakes the task of administering the affairs of our great State of New York.

Good luck to you, Hugh, and the best of everything to you and your wonderful children.

HOWARD W. ROURKE RETIRES

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to make a few comments concerning the career of a remarkable man, Mr. Howard W. Rourke, who is retiring next month after 40 years of service to the public. Few people have had more of an impact on the workings of a public agency in our community than has Mr. Rourke. For the past 20 years, he has been director of the Ventura County Welfare Department in a time when the functions and responsibilities of that agency have changed dramatically. Under his stewardship, the department has become one of the most respected in the country, and Howard himself has been the recipient of numerous commendations and unparalleled praise from National, State, and local boards, his peers, coworkers, and employees, and not the least, from the clients his department serves.

His role in effecting welfare reform at the local, State, and National levels has earned him the gratitude and respect of taxpayers and clients alike. His influence has been felt in the statute books of county, State, and Nation.

The State of California is proud to claim him as a native. But the State of Arizona is equally proud to claim him as a public servant of long standing. He was born in Randsburg, in Kern County, and worked in the gold and silver mines as a teenager. He was educated in Lancaster, Calif., and in Flagstaff, Ariz., and holds degrees from the University of Arizona and the University of Southern California. He worked his way up from scratch, serving in virtually every capacity in the Arizona Public Welfare Department from caseworker to State director of public assistance, a position he held for 10 years before returning to his native State 20 years ago. In addition, he spent 18 months overseas as director of operations for the South Pacific theater of war for the American National Red Cross.

A past president of the California County Welfare Directors Association and first vice president of the National Association of County Welfare Directors, he was chosen by his peers in 1970 to help lead the successful drive to reform our welfare structure. He headed the California Counties Welfare Modernization Task Force and was a principal author of "Time For Change," the welfare reform blueprint published by the County Supervisors Association of California which formed much of the basis for the reform of the California welfare system adopted by the State in 1972. In addition to his regular duties as administrator of the Ventura County Public Social Services Agency, a superagency of 450 employees, with a $26 million annual budget, serving 21,000 public aid and social service recipients, he has made numerous appearances and presentations on behalf of welfare reform throughout California and before congressional committees here in Washington.

He is a former member of the Governor's Advisory Committee on Children and Youth, an active member of the Lions and Elks, and the father of two sons. Sharing in these honors is his wife, Agnes.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, as a public welfare administrator, Howard Rourke has fulfilled his responsibility to the community at large, including the client group, in a way that bespeaks rare vision and conviction about the purpose of his agency—to provide for protection, care and assistance to the people of the State in need thereof, and to promote the welfare and happiness of all the people of the State.

Howard Rourke, we salute you.

TED GIORGETTI HONORED

HON. GEORGE M. O'BRIEN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments today to give special recognition to my good friend, Ted Giorgetti, of the Immigration and Naturalization Service who last week received the Department of Justice Newton-Azrak Award for his part in breaking up a large drug ring in Chicago.

The Newton-Azrak Award is presented annually by the Justice Department to a member of the Immigration Service who has shown outstanding courage, dedication, and competence and who has cooperated with other law enforcement agencies and enhanced the image of the service. It is named for two California agents who were tortured and killed by narcotics smugglers during the course of an investigation.

On April 18 of this year, Ted learned through an informant that large amounts of hard drugs were being smuggled into the Chicago area from Mexico. Working closely with the Drug Enforcement Administration, he organized a series of raids which took place July 28. As a result of his assistance, police were not only able to apprehend the ringleaders but also to seize some 16 pounds of heroin and cocaine. The drugs, worth more than $10 million on the street, amounted to the largest haul ever seized in the Chicago area according to DEA records.

The outstanding devotion to duty and courage that Ted displayed throughout the operation led to his selection for the Newton-Azrak Award. Attorney General William Saxbe presented the award at the 25th Attorney General's Award Ceremony which I attended December 12.

Although I was delighted and proud to see Ted honored, I was hardly surprised. For as long as I have known him, Ted has impressed me as a man of courage and competence, a man who knows his job and does it well, whatever the danger.

And Ted has known danger. An Iowa native, he served as a staff sergeant in the Air Force during the Korean war. In 1958 he joined the Immigration Service as a border patrol agent in Las Cruces, N. Mex. Later he was transferred to El Paso, Tex., and finally promoted to investigator and sent to Chicago where I first met him.

Throughout his career he has been a credit to the service. While it is an honor for Ted to receive this award, it is an even greater honor for me to know him and know that we can all rest a bit easier for having men of his caliber looking out for us.

TRIBUTE TO LES ARENDS

HON. RONALD A. SARASIN

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 16, 1974

Mr. SARASIN. Mr. Speaker, the impending retirement of the Honorable Les ARENDS as a Member of this body is a loss not only to the House of Representatives and the Republican Party, but to the people of the United States. No man in government better exemplifies public service at its best and none is held in higher regard by his colleagues.

While I have only had the privilege of serving 2 years in this Chamber with Mr. ARENDS, that is more than sufficient time to develop an appreciation of why Les is the object of so much affection and respect from his colleagues on both sides of the aisle.

Ability, integrity, courtesy, consideration—virtually any desirable quality one could look for in a colleague and friend—apply in abundant measure to Les ARENDS. The truth of this is borne out by the testimony spread on the RECORD this week by countless friends and admirers of Les ARENDS.

As a first term Congressman and a member of the Republican minority, I have immediate and personal knowledge of the extent to which Les would go out of his way to help the newer Members and to share his vast experience. In spite of the complex and time-consuming duties of minority whip, carried out so ably for more than 30 years, Les always had time to provide advice and assistance to those seeking it.

Many of the tasks which make up the job of party whip could, in less sure hands, result in animosity and ill will. To hold any position of leadership for more than three decades while retaining the friendship and affection of the membership on both sides of the aisle calls for a truly outstanding individual.

December 20, 1974

That LES AREND is such an individual has been proven beyond question and his retirement leaves a void which every Member of the House will feel. I am honored to have been able to serve with LES, even if relatively briefly in comparison to his period of service. His counsel and his example have been invaluable. I join his countless friends in Congress in wishing him a long, happy, and healthy retirement and I am sure he will continue to make a positive and beneficial contribution in whatever he undertakes.

ANTI-INFLATION CAMPAIGN HEAD-ED BY JOHN HARDIN OF ROCK HILL, S.C.

HON. TOM S. GETTYS

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. GETTYS. Mr. Speaker, in the past 2 years many speeches have been made in this Chamber about the acute problem of inflation which confronts our great country. Regrettably the inflationary tide continues to roll on, and the purchasing power of America's citizens continues to be eroded.

I rise today to call the attention of the House to what may be the most comprehensive and perceptive anti-inflation program yet developed by a sector of American business. I refer to the educational campaign devised by the savings and loan business through the joint efforts of the U.S. League of Savings Associations, the national trade association for the savings and loan business, and the Savings and Loan Foundation, the national advertising arm of the industry. The theme of this multifaceted campaign is: "There's no living with inflation."

In discussing this imaginative anti-inflation effort I take particular pleasure in noting that it was developed under the leadership of a distinguished citizen of South Carolina and close personal friend, John A. Hardin. John is president of the First Federal Savings and Loan Association of Rock Hill, S.C. He is also chairman of the United States League's special anti-inflation committee.

Mr. Hardin and his committee early recognized that inflation is at the heart of our current economic difficulties. They understood what daily becomes increasingly evident, that unbridled inflation threatens not only our economic health but also our very way of life.

The league's campaign is a multifaceted effort, including over $1 million earmarked for television messages. At the heart of the effort, however, is a remarkably complete and well-designed kit of materials distributed to the league member institutions in the United States. Especially helpful are several booklets offering concrete, down-to-earth steps which anyone can take to cope with inflation. Savings and loan institutions are distributing several million copies of the key pamphlet, entitled "There's No Living With Inflation."

The potential impact of this grassroots campaign can be appreciated when one remembers there are some 14,000 savings and loan offices in the country. These serve 12 million families with savings and loan mortgages and 60 million savings account holders.

As the anti-inflation message reaches the public through the dedicated efforts of the savings and loan industry, we in Government can expect to hear louder and more insistent demands for leadership and positive action to bring inflation to an end. I am proud that John Hardin, an able and personable friend from my own hometown, has played such a key role in this national effort to meet the most serious economic challenge of our day.

LYDIA Y. UCHIDA AND CHRISTOPHER R. CABRERA RECEIVE RED CROSS CERTIFICATE OF MERIT

HON. DON EDWARDS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call to your attention the meritorious action taken by Ms. Lydia Y. Uchida of 860 North Fifth Street, San Jose, Calif., and Mr. Christopher R. Cabrera, of Visalia, Calif. They both have been named to receive the Red Cross Certificate of Merit, which is the highest award given by the American National Red Cross.

This award is given to anyone who saves a life by using skills and knowledge learned in a volunteer training program offered by the Red Cross in first aid, small craft, or water safety.

On August 29, 1974, Ms. Uchida, trained in Red Cross first aid, and Mr. Cabrera, trained in Red Cross lifesaving and first aid, were making evening rounds to close a building at their university. A 16-year-old friend, whom they knew had been treated for a heart condition, was accompanying them. Suddenly the young man fell to the floor, apparently lifeless. Mr. Cabrera asked Ms. Uchida to telephone for assistance while he began to administer life-support first aid to the victim, whose breathing and heart had stopped. After the call for an ambulance was completed, Ms. Uchida participated in the resuscitation efforts by administering mouth-to-mouth respiration. They continued until breathing was resumed, then comforted the victim until ambulance personnel arrived and transported him to a hospital. A few days later corrective open-heart surgery was performed and subsequently the young man made a normal recovery. Without doubt, Mr. Cabrera and Ms. Uchida's use of their emergency first aid skills and knowledge in this joint resuscitation saved the victim's life.

This meritorious action exemplifies the highest ideals of the concern of one human being for another who is in distress.

CYPRUS REFUGEE RELIEF DINNER

HON. EDWARD J. PATTEN

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. PATTEN. Mr. Speaker, on November 17, 1974, I attended the Cyprus refugee relief dinner in Edison, N.J., where an estimated 2,500 persons gathered to express support for the people of Cyprus. Proceeds will go to the relief fund.

I was enormously impressed—not only with the large crowd—but by what I heard there. Speaker after speaker expressed in eloquent terms the importance of helping the people of Cyprus and restoring freedom and independence on that island shattered by the ruthless and outrageous invasion by Turkey. I will continue to do all I can in Congress to help the people of Cyprus. The Cypriot problem must be solved—and solved soon.

One of the most eloquent speeches made at the dinner was by George M. Boulegeris, cochairman of the Cyprus refugee relief dinner sponsored by the AHEPA Monroe chapter No. 75 of New Brunswick, N.J. I would like my colleagues to read Mr. Boulegeris' welcome address, because it moved me very much and expressed in clear terms the Cyprus situation and the greatness of the Greek people—especially citing their deep love of freedom.

Also included is the Courier-News story covering the dinner.

WELCOME ADDRESS AT CYPRUS REFUGEE RELIEF DINNER

(By George M. Boulegeris)

Your Excellency, Ambassador of Cyprus to the United States, Nikos Dimitriou; Distinguished members of the Congress of the United States: Senator from New Jersey—Harrison A. Williams, and Congressman from our own 15th Congressional District—Edward J. Patten; Consul General of Cyprus in New York, The Honorable Constantine Moushoutas; New Jersey State Senator, Bernard Dwyer; Mayor of Edison, New Jersey, Thomas H. Paternity; Mayor of Somerville, New Jersey, Leroy Gunzelman; Past Supreme President of the Order of Ahepa, John G. Thevos; Reverend Father Anthony N. Pappas of the St. George Greek Orthodox Church of New Brunswick, New Jersey; Reverend Doctor Demetrios Constantelos of the Greek Orthodox Archdiocese and Stockton College; honored guests on the dias, friends all.

As we meet for this activity—the Cyprus Refugee Relief Dinner—I extend on behalf of Monroe Chapter No. 75 of New Brunswick, N.J., our warmest gratitude and very best wishes.

For many decades, the Order of Ahepa has championed the rebirth and growth on American soil the democratic traditions of ancient Greece. Our dedication to the ideals and aspiration of our forebearers has enriched our contributions to our nation and enhanced our common legacy as Americans. Let the time tested heritage of our ancestors inspire us to sustained achievement. And, let this gathering be a living reminder of the Glory of Ancient Greece and a lasting tribute to the Glory of Modern America. The activities that you are witnessing here this evening are indeed symbolic of these beliefs and best described by Past Supreme President of the Order of Ahepa, Dean Alfange, who authored, "What America Means to Me." Within his writings are these few lines:

December 20, 1974

"America is not just rich in material things, an industrial giant, a mighty military power.

"America is the country schoolhouse, the village church, the town meeting, the humble farm house, the rhythmic poetry of the peaceful countryside.

"America is the mirth and laughter of its children, the charity, the generosity, the compassion of its people.

"America is the triumph of merit and diligence over family and cast.

"America is the freedom of choice which God intended all men to have—the right to do, to speak, to worship, to dissent, to dream, to build, to fail, and, to succeed.

"America is the marriage of liberty with authority, of individual freedoms with social organizations.

"America is the best discovery yet of a full and honorable way of life.

"We are rich in all these things that decent people yearn for.

"It is our task to live up to these values and to make them known to every nation—friend or foe.

"For, on us has fallen the challenge to lead the free and the truth about ourselves is more powerful than any man-made misdeed."

Our friends, and again on behalf of Ahepa Monroe Chapter No. 75 of New Brunswick, N.J., we are indeed honored and privileged to have all of you here with us tonight. We thank you.

[From the Courier-News, Nov. 18, 1974]

CYPRUS AMBASSADOR SAYS MAKARIOS MAY GO HOME

(By Karen Bergstedt)

EDISON.—Archbishop Makarios, the exiled president of Cyprus, is likely to return to his island nation within the next few weeks, the Cypriot ambassador to the U.S. said last night.

Filling in for Makarios, who was the scheduled speaker for the Cyprus Refugee Relief Fund dinner at the Pines Manor, Nikos Dimitriou said commitments in London prevented the planned appearance of the Archbishop.

Despite the offer of a dinner organizer to personally fly Makarios from and back to London, the Archbishop felt we couldn't leave his work of keeping abreast of the Cyprus situation for even 24 hours, Dimitriou said.

Noting the decisive win of Premier Constantine Caramanlis in yesterday's elections in Greece, the ambassador said the fate of the military junta—which directed the July overthrow of Makarios on Cyprus—had been sealed.

With a strong government elected in Greece, the Archbishop will soon return to Cyprus, Dimitriou said.

Last night's dinner netted close to $40,000 which will aid an estimated 200,000 refugees, victims of the Turkish invasion of Cyprus that followed Makarios' overthrow.

Sponsored by the Monroe Chapter No. 75 of the Order of AHEPA, a Greek-American organization, the dinner attracted over 2,000 persons. Organizers said close to 5,000 tickets at $7.50 each were sold, with all proceeds going to the relief fund.

In addition to his prediction of the Archbishop's return to Cyprus, Dimitriou said his government opposes any plans for a federation government over separate states for Greek and Turkish Cypriots.

A federation would in fact be "concealed partition" and mean that the Greek-Turkish animosity on the island "would remain as a running sore for years and years," he said. He added such a situation would not be in the best interest of the U.S. or the Western Allies.

Claims that the Turkish Cypriots, a minority about one-fifth the size of the Greek population on the island, are persecuted and treated as second-class citizens are distortions of fact, the ambassador said.

He blamed the Cyprus situation on the "chauvinism and bad faith of the Turkish Cypriot leadership" for propagandizing that peaceful coexistence between the Greeks and Turks on Cyprus is impossible.

With good will on both sides, a peaceful settlement can be achieved, but not while Turkish troops remain on Cyprus, he said.

He called on the U.S. "to stand for what is right" and support the United Nations resolution calling for the withdrawal of all Turkish troops from Cyprus.

U.S. Sen. Harrison A. Williams, Jr., D-N.J., also spoke before the gathering. Labeling the Turkish invasion of Cyprus "an affront to the international community and its sense of decency," the senator criticized the executive branch for not moving decisively to reduce military aid to Turkey.

After two presidential vetoes, the Congress approved compromise legislation postponing a cut-off of aid until Dec. 10, Williams said.

The Turks are reducing their forces on Cyprus, but this is "without meaning without a dramatic reversal of Turkish behavior," he said, asking for a redoubling of U.S. diplomatic efforts to alter the "intransigence" of the Turks.

Rep. Edward J. Patten, Dem.—15th Dist., spoke briefly, opposing Turkey's use of U.S. military aid against Cyprus.

The evening's only disruption came when a man, shouting in Greek, tried to disrupt the Cypriot ambassador's speech. Several Edison police officers, part of a contingent of about 18 uniformed men at the dinner, escorted the man from the dining room. The man later left voluntarily, police said.

HON. HUGH CAREY

OF NEW YORK

HON. THADDEUS J. DULSKI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. DULSKI. Mr. Speaker, it is a personal pleasure to join my colleagues today in paying tribute to HUGH CAREY.

HUGH and I have been closely associated on matters affecting our State since he came to Congress, and our friendship dates back many years.

Last February, long before his gubernatorial campaign gathered momentum, I endorsed and supported his candidacy, knowing from firsthand observation his excellent qualifications for our State's highest office. During his 14 years in Congress, HUGH compiled an enviable record of framing progressive legislation not only for his own constituents, but also for all the people of this country.

It was my privilege to be one of his regional coordinators during that campaign, and western New York will long remember his traveling through a blizzard to keep his commitment at a meeting in Buffalo. This determination to surmount overwhelming odds was echoed throughout the State, in his commitment to good government, his faith in the people, and his desire to meet the challenges of State government.

Erie County responded to HUGH CAREY with one of the greatest margins ever tallied in a Governor's race. The rest of the State responded, too, and a new era begins in the statehouse next month.

Among his better known accomplishments in Congress are his actions resulting in the comprehensive 1965 Federal aid to education law; the landmark revenue-sharing law; neighborhood housing renewal projects, transforming slums into decent housing in his own district, which now serve as national models; the near miraculous revitalization of the Brooklyn Navy Yard into a complex employing over 6,000 people; establishment of a Subcommittee on the Handicapped, and enactment of more legislation to help the handicapped than any other Congressman; and innovative legislation and personal help of all kinds, benefiting everyone in our State.

Although he was involved in a statewide campaign, he did not neglect his congressional responsibilities, taking active part in committee and floor work on national health insurance, tax reform, and the many other proposals to help our troubled economy.

HUGH CAREY's colleagues here know of his leadership abilities and his hard work. His constituents know of his dedication to serving them. New York State voters have recognized these qualities and have selected him to bring his experience and knowledge to bear on the problems facing them.

HUGH CAREY is a team player, and is capable of both giving and receiving cooperation. He will be missed in the House of Representatives, but the great State of New York will benefit from his years as Governor.

THE RICE ACT

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, December 17, 1974

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, on December 17 the House voted on H.R. 15263, The Rice Act of 1974.

Prior to the consideration of H.R. 15263, I had announced my support for reform of rice production programs. However, I voted against H.R. 15263 on passage, primarily because of the adoption—somewhat hastily—of the Symms amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The debate on the bill concentrated on its provisions as drafted by Mr. ALEXANDER. Explanation and debate on the successful substitute amendment were minimal, however, and I do not believe that the Members of the House were offered a clear, understandable, and convincing choice on rice production reform.

The lack of time available for consideration of the substitute seems contrary to our need for careful decisions on agricultural policy. Agriculture merits the most judiciously crafted legislation because at stake are our balance of payments situation, the price of food to consumers, and the availability of food to a hungry world.

Even had H.R. 15263 passed the House, the Senate had little time in which to consider the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I continue to support action to increase the production of rice and other food commodities in the United States, and I fully expect the new Congress to reach the necessary conclusions about the Government's rice policy.

FOR A NEW PATRIOTISM

HON. JOEL T. BROYHILL

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. BROYHILL of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, a constituent, Mr. Elias Van Krugel, is writing a series of articles for the Scottish Rite publication, the New Age, on our heritage to commemorate our coming Bicentennial celebration. The enclosed article should be of great interest to all and help still some strident cries by our so-called sunshine patriots on the future of our Nation.

I commend Mr. Van Krugel's thoughtful article to all my colleagues in the House.

POSTSCRIPT

(By Elias Van Krugel)

The patriots who signed the Declaration of Independence were aware of the awesome obligations that would accompany independence! That historic document concludes with the following words:

"We mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honour."

Courageous words! Inspired words! Words conceived by bold, defiant men who were aware of the peril and affliction that lay ahead, as each affixed his signature!

The conceivers of the United States of America understood full well the significance of the terms of our Declaration of Independence! Many died! Many lost their homes! Many lost their fortunes! The architects of our Nation . . . and the builders who followed . . . were strongly inclined to labor . . . to forfeit . . . to strive for the establishment of this "sweet Land of Liberty!"

In 1976 we will celebrate the bicentennial of an experiment that the world once thought could only end in imminent failure! How could a loose Confederation of thirteen indisciplinate States, convulsed by contention, survive its beginnings? How could a strife-torn Confederation of thirteen Colonies successfully wage a war for independence against the greatest empire in the world? Two hundred years ago, it would have been inconceivable that this Nation . . . conceived in Liberty . . . could become the greatest nation in the world today!

Our Nation survived because its architects and builders didn't abandon it! Fair weather flag-wavers could not have insured America's survival in 1776; fair weather flag-wavers cannot insure America's survival in 1976! Doubters, we had; doubters, we have! But those who can talk only about vanishing virtue, about aberrant alienation, about continuous contention in our American way-of-life, are agents of anxiety and peddlers of poppycock!

We must not believe the bombastic banter about the "bitter-end", for such belief will enfeeble us into a state of ennui and impotence that can dilate dangerously! Like the Liberty Bell, our government is not perfect . . . but, it still works! We can stand and must provide for declarations of honest anxiety and justifiable judgments . . .

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

predicated on the truth . . . for the truth will keep us free!

Ours is a government of, by and for the people. That makes it a government where it isn't always easy to "grin-and-bear-it"! Every mature inhabitant of a democracy is responsible for the workings of his nation! If an exigency emerges . . . if our democracy doesn't deliver . . . you and I, fellow-Americans, are culpable! We enunciate the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness; in our democracy we cannot evade the responsibility of insuring that our fellow-beings have the same right!

The United States of America was conceived in controversy. We have successfully defied dangerously dark days in our democracy, and we should heed the words of Thomas Paine, never forgetting that:

"Those who expect to reap the blessings of freedom must undergo the fatigue of supporting it."

A MISTAKEN IDEA ON FEED GRAIN USE

HON. GENE SNYDER

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, there are some well-meaning people who have suggested that curtailing grain use by American distillers would free grains to feed people in underdeveloped countries where starvation is a problem, but in fact the distillers use little grain in comparison to other industries and recycle what they do use as highly nutritious, enriched animal food. I have an editorial from the Louisville Times which I would like to insert in the RECORD accompanied by a news release from the Distilled Spirits Council of the United States.

The information follows:

NEWS RELEASE

WASHINGTON, D.C., December 18, 1974 (Special).—"Distillers are not a contributing factor to the world food shortage. Grain from which distilled spirits are made is actually used twice, first in the production of beverages, and then as high protein vitamin enriched livestock and poultry feeds." Malcolm E. Harris, president of the Distilled Spirits Council of the United States, DISCUS, explained here today.

"The availability of these high protein feeds produced from mash stillage help assure continuing supplies of high quality meat, milk, eggs and butter for the American consumer," Harris said. He pointed out that grain is not "used" by the distillers in the traditional sense of that word. It is actually "passed through" a distillery with only the starch being removed during the fermentation process. What is left according to well-known animal nutritionist, Frank B. Morrison, is "highly digestible and . . . as rich as corn grain in total digestible nutrients."

Harris explained that these feeds are used for a wide range of animals including those commonly produced for the table. The more than 400,000 tons of this supplemental feed produced last year were of great benefit to food production for human consumption. This 400,000 tons is used as a dietary supplement in millions of tons of animal feeds to produce food for human consumption.

"It is actually recovery of the nutritional resources," Harris explained, "but with a more direct impact than taking your waste-paper or empty cans to a recycling plant. We recover what was at one time considered as waste and use this now to produce good healthy food."

DISCUS' president pointed out that while some people have suggested the grain passed through the distilleries could be used to feed people in underdeveloped countries, the effect of closing down the distilleries would cause severe impact on the nation's economy. The amount passed through U.S. distilleries is minor, less than one-half of 1 per cent of the cereal grain crop according to official Government statistics; but the industry produces $8.6 billion in federal, state and local revenues, and as a whole the United States alcohol beverage industry employs 1.9 billion who receive $10.1 billion in wages, salaries and earnings. The consequences would be "massive," he explained.

Curtailment of the legal industry would also give rise to a resurgence of "moonshining" with attendant health problems and increased law enforcement costs, coupled with a major tax loss.

[From the Louisville Times, Nov. 13, 1974]

TOO FAR

EDITORIAL—A PROPOSAL KENTUCKY CANNOT LIVE WITH

It is perfectly reasonable to suggest that Americans should use less fertilizer on their lawns and rose bushes so that more fertilizer can be spread on the wheat fields of Bangladesh. No right-thinking citizen can object to fattening cattle on grass so that more grain can be distributed among needy human beings. Any decent person would agree that Americans should consume less so that others can eat.

But Jean Mayer, the Harvard nutritionist and author whose column appears in The Courier-Journal, goes way too far when he defends from us a sacrifice that would obliterate civilization as we know it here in Kentucky.

HOW TO SAVE GRAIN

In a statement that must have caused many of his academic colleagues to choke in their cocktail glasses, the learned professor suggested that Americans reduce their consumption of alcoholic beverages. Most liquor, he pointed out, is made from grain. Thus, if Americans would give up going to bed drunk, millions, perhaps tens of millions of people elsewhere in the world, he claimed, could be supplied with grain and not have to go to bed hungry. As a slogan for his campaign he proposed, "Have a drink and starve a child."

Kentuckians must stand united (for divided we fall) against this insidious attack on one of our most hallowed traditions. Let the word go forth, from this time and place, to friend and foe alike, that no mere catastrophe of worldwide proportions will prevent the sipping of Bourbon and brandy water in the cool of a summer evening or the partaking of that life-giving elixir known as the julep in the warmth of early May.

TARC can take our automobiles and Secretary Butz can have our pets. We'll lower the thermostat and throw away the air-conditioner in order to save the mountains of Appalachia. Asians and Africans and Latin Americans are welcome to a fair share of our corn, soybeans and, most important of all, our tobacco.

But let the famine fighters beware of taking unfair advantage of our humanitarian instincts. We must make a stand somewhere, and it is likely to be in the distillery doorway. After all, if we let them restrict Kentuckians' output and intake of Bourbon the next thing you know they'll tell us to plow under the mint and plant cabbage.

December 20, 1974

December 20, 1974

FOREIGN ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1974

HON. HERMAN BADILLO

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. BADILLO. Mr. Speaker, December 10, 1974, will long be remembered as the day that the House of Representatives by an overwhelming vote of 297 to 98 cut off further military assistance to Turkey. Once again the House affirmed the historic American tradition that America is a country which respects the law that governs all men to a policy put forward by a few men.

The law which authorizes the distribution and use of American military aid is clear and not open to arbitrary interpretations. What are the conditions for foreign countries to receive this assistance? The Library of Congress in a legal memorandum stated:

U.S. military aid is intended for the sole and exclusive purpose of permitting recipients to defend themselves against aggression . . . use of articles and services for other than defensive purposes, i.e. for aggression purposes, is barred by law.

Is there any doubt that Turkey has committed aggression in Cyprus, when Turkey not only invaded Cyprus with 40,000 troops, still occupies 40 percent of Cyprus, and is even importing Turkish citizens to consolidate Turkey's occupation of this invaded Cypriot territory. Clearly, Turkey is guilty of employing American military hardware—in the form of planes, ships, tanks, and napalm—to violate the provisions of our military assistance programs.

Turkey's action which resorted to military aggression to impose its own "solution to the Cyprus question," cannot be termed defensive even under the most expansive use of the term. There is no question of Turkey's violation of the law—it is clear and blatant. Shall the United States support a lawbreaker and thereby make a mockery of its own laws?

In 1964, the then President Johnson sent a vigorous warning to the Prime Minister of Turkey stating that U.S. military equipment "for a Turkish intervention in Cyprus" would violate article V of our July 1947 bilateral agreement with Turkey. This agreement required Turkey:

To obtain the approval of the United States for the use of defense articles and defense services (furnished by the United States) for any purpose other than those for which such articles and services were furnished.

Turkey never asked our permission to use American arms in Cyprus, and yet the administration has escalated arms shipments to Turkey. This bilateral agreement which is still in effect today has been bilaterally violated—by both the executive branch of the American Government and by Turkey.

Mr. Speaker, it is the constitutional responsibility of the U.S. Congress as the people's representatives, to advocate a policy in accordance with American law and reflective of the deep convictions of the American people. And it is the administration's responsibility in its constitutional role, to execute the law. In this regard, the administration has failed. Not even the Senate upheld the law when the Secretary of State acted as if he was above the law. Finally, the House of Representatives put the moratorium on military assistance to Turkey. Sections 505b, 505d and 6201 of the 1961 Foreign Assistance Act, and sections 3c and 4 of the Foreign Military Sales Act explicitly delineate the purposes for which military sales are authorized and the penalty for violations.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Since the United States has become the world's leading arms seller—more than $12 billion in 1973—the potential dangers of this program are self-evident. Congress in recognizing its responsibility to oversee and control this burgeoning military sales program, enacted laws strictly monitoring the use of U.S. military equipment distributed abroad.

Mr. Speaker, Turkey should have been declared "immediately ineligible" for substantial violations in July of 1974. More than 5 months have passed since the Turkish invasion and occupation of Cyprus, and the President still has not decided on the eligibility of Turkey to receive further military assistance, except to say that such a legal determination would hurt Cyprus peace efforts.

Can Turkey's blatant violation of all the conditions set down be termed "internal security," "legitimate self-defense," "maintaining or restoring international peace and security," "activities helpful to the economic and social development" of Cyprus? Has Turkey conformed "to the purposes of the charter of the United Nations" when the Turkish military aggression clearly violated the principles of the U.N. Charter, when Turkish troops deliberately interfered with the U.N. peacekeeping forces and restoration efforts on Cyprus, when Turkey defied two cease-fire resolutions and U.N. Security Council demands that all foreign military forces be withdrawn from Cyprus?

In delaying the cutoff of all military aid to Turkey, the United States has contributed to Turkey's imperialistic actions in Cyprus, helped topple the legitimate government of President Makarios, lost the support of the Greek people, and left Greece with no resource but to withdraw from NATO.

The Secretary of State has stressed the breakoff of military assistance to Turkey would undermine our national security. Has our weakened NATO position in the eastern Mediterranean enhanced or hurt or national security? The Secretary of State appealed for an "evenhanded" approach to the situation. Can it be termed "evenhanded" when the United States has unilaterally and unwisely stocked Turkey with weapons making it militarily much more powerful than Greece and Cyprus separately or combined? During this crisis was it "evenhanded" for a naval vessel of the U.S. 6th Fleet to halt, board and search a Greek passenger vessel in the open seas which was carrying relief supplies to Cyprus? This flagrant violation of international law was the subject of a verbal protest on the part of the Greek Government.

America has always prided itself in following moral courses and defending small defenseless nations. In effect, our Government has rewarded the aggressors and punished the victims of aggression.

Mr. Speaker, national security and morality can go hand-in-hand. It is not in our national interest to support militarily aggressive regimes. If we continue to do so we will be isolated in the world body of nations and our national security undermined.

By delaying the cutoff of military assistance to December 10, 1974, the administration markedly increased military deliveries to Turkey. Defense Department figures confirm that in the 3 months before the invasion of Cyprus last July 20, U.S. military aid to Turkey totaled $27.3 million. In the succeeding 3 months the figure sharply climbed to $40.5 million, mostly in the form of F-4E jet fighters, bombs, missiles, ammunition, and trucks.

Mr. Speaker, the administration states that the cutoff of military weapons to Turkey would jeopardize efforts for peace in Cyprus. Can we say that this military escalation has been "evenhanded" and helpful in the search for a solution to preserve the sovereignty, territorial integrity and independence of Cyprus?

Turkey, in defending its actions, claims that their armed forces were needed to defend Turkish Cypriots and find a solution to the Cyprus problem. History repeats itself as Turkey has perpetuated its typical "solutions" in the following situations. We are all aware that to date, Turkey supplied more than 80 percent of the opium to illicit drug markets in the United States. But how many of us are cognizant that since 1900, Turkey has systematically massacred more than 150,000 Greeks, 450,000 Christian Assyrians, and 1,500,000 Armenians. The Armenian slaughter—wiping out two-thirds of the population of the Turkish occupied Armenia—was the first genocide of the 20th century when the Turkish Government planned, organized and executed the almost total annihilation of these ancient people from their fatherland in which they had lived for over 3,000 years.

The conscience of the world has never been stirred—a cloak of silence has been thrust over the "Armenian Question." Encouraged by the indifference of the "civilized" nations, Hitler in 1939 began his own genocide program by remarking, "Who talks nowadays of the extermination of the Armenians?" By standing mute, we aid and abet aggression and imperialism.

Mr. Speaker, what is the real purpose of Turkish aggression in Cyprus? Are the Turkish Cypriots in danger of being liquidated by Greek Cypriots? On the contrary, those in need of protection are the Greek Cypriots who for many years have lived in constant terror of being invaded by neighboring and militarily powerful Turkey, and now are subjected to naked Turkish aggression.

Turkey's original goal in Cyprus has been and still is the annexation of the entire island. In 1955, at the tripartite conference on security in the eastern Mediterranean, which included Cyprus, Foreign Minister Zorlu of Turkey declared unequivocally that if Great Britain ever gave up its sovereignty over Cyprus, then Turkey had the right to annex Cyprus. From 1956-1958, the Turkish Government demanded that the Turkish Cypriot minority be granted self-determination separate from the rest of the island's population, and the establishment of a Turkish military base on Cyprus which would mean the island's partition. Partition was then shelved and independence adopted in 1958, mainly because of the growing Soviet influence in the Middle East.

In the Zurich-London Agreement of 1959, Turkey, along with Greece and Great Britain, agreed to act as one of the guarantors of the independence and territorial integrity of the new republic. At the same time, it also reserved what it considered its unilateral right to intervene militarily in Cyprus whenever the political agreements of the island were "threatened." Instead of guaranteeing the independence of Cyprus, Turkey undid the international and domestic plans that had achieved Cypriot independence.

Prior to July 1974, Turkey tried twice—1964 and 1967—to invade Cyprus by force, however actions by the American Government, NATO, the United Nations and the U.S.S.R. prevented these abortive attempts. Such has not been the case under the present Republican administration. In contrast to the courageous position of President Johnson in 1964 and 1967, the Ford administration not only has done nothing to discourage or prevent Turkey from militarily invading Cyprus, but has sharply increased military aid to the aggressor. Even at the height of American isolationism in 1932, the Hoover-Stimson doctrine denounced the use of force as an instrument of policy and the United States did not recognize any territorial claims gained by such methods.

Turkish Government statements and actions demonstrate that Turkey intends to partition Cyprus into two separately administered zones within a federation, set up a powerful military base, annex the Turkish area of this federation, establish a rump "federal" state on the rest of Cyprus, and finally annex this rump state at the opportune moment just as the Nazis did in Czechoslovakia.

Mr. Speaker, the extinction of Cyprus as an independent country would establish a very dangerous precedent for the liquidation of other states, as a means for settling international territorial problems, and encourage other U.S. aid recipients to do likewise. If the United States does not meet its moral and constitutional responsibility to preserve the independence and territorial integrity of Cyprus, our failure to do so could encourage extremists in the extremist nations to emulate the present Turkish aggressive policies with regards to other U.S. aid recipients.

During these many months of tragedy, what is the present condition and future of the beleaguered Cypriot people. Two-fifths or 40 percent of Cyprus—which is equivalent to 70 percent of the whole economic life of the country including agriculture, mining, and tourism—has been and still is occupied by 40,000 Turkish troops.

In executing their plan to occupy and eventually annex Cyprus, Turkey has committed a whole series of international crimes in its efforts to transfer ethnic populations and thereby force the Greek Cypriots into southern Cyprus. Individual and mass executions of innocent civilians—men, women, and children—rape, pillage, looting have been reported by the U.N. peacekeeping forces who with Cypriot civilians have been the object of U.S.-supplied napalm bombs. Whole villages, even hospitals, schools, and hotels have been destroyed by Turkish air raids.

Even though the Turkish Cypriots comprise 110,000 or 17 percent of the total Cypriot population of 635,000—the Greeks 516,000 or 80 percent, Armenians and Maronites 8,000 or 3 percent—only 35,000 of this Turkish minority live in the north, owning 13 percent of the land. Since the July invasion, more than 200,000 Greek Cypriots have been forced out of the north and are living in refugee camps in the south in violation of the Hague Resolutions of 1907, the Geneva Convention of 1949 and the Protocol to the European Convention of Human Rights of 1950. Those returning were killed outright. Their land and homes have been taken over and occupied by 40,000 troops of the Turkish army, Turkish Cypriots who formerly lived in southern Cyprus and Turkish citizens imported from Turkey. This is in direct violation of the charter of the United Nations (1.1 and 2.4) and the rules of Conventional International Law (article 49-1b), and of the Geneva Convention IV, 1949 which states:

The occupying power shall not deport or transfer parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies.

In addition, Turkey is guilty of forcibly transferring and deporting to Turkey Cypriot citizens from the occupied north also stated as a violation in the Geneva Convention of 1949 to which both Turkey and Cyprus were parties.

Individual or mass forcible transfers, as well as deportation of protected persons from occupied territory of the occupying power or to that of any other country, occupied or not, are prohibited, regardless of their motive.

While Turkey solidifies its position in northern Cyprus, Turkey's Government is purposely in transition so that peace negotiations can be either delayed or indefinitely postponed on the grounds that there is no political government to take responsibility for negotiations on behalf of Turkey.

Cyprus, once a bustling island of cultural progress, business and agricultural advances, and vibrant tourism, is at a virtual standstill, trying to dig itself out of death and destruction, and coping with a grave and potentially explosive refugee situation.

The Turkish Army has not only committed these heinous crimes with our military hardware, but it has interfered with and attacked U.N. peace-keeping forces. International organizations, such as the Red Cross and the U.N. relief agencies have been forcibly barred from entering the occupied areas to render humanitarian assistance in total disregard of international law.

Mr. Speaker, we can no longer be a party to these crimes. We can no longer condone the dismemberment of Cyprus on racial, ethnic, cultural or economic grounds and condemn Cyprus to moral, territorial and economic strangulation. We did not tolerate this in our country more than a hundred years ago—let us not contribute to it in independent and sovereign Cyprus.

Twenty five million dollars has been authorized for fiscal 1975 to relieve the suffering of the Cypriot refugees. Is there any logic to providing military aid to destroy and then trying to repair this destruction with relief funds. This is conscience money to relieve guilty feelings and actions.

Mr. Speaker, in summary, the case against continuation of military aid to Turkey is clear. Turkey's aggression is against the conditions for which it received this assistance, and therefore continued military aid violates international and U.N. law, and undermines our relationship with the new democratic government in Greece, NATO and even Turkey. Would Turkey respect us less for violating not only our law but universal law.

As long as Turkey has an almost unlimited supply of arms and ammunition from the United States, it will not come to the conference table and participate in a settlement. Our contribution to this aggression will work against a peaceful and lasting solution to the Cyprus crisis. Our cutoff of assistance is not unilateral or vindictive, but dictated under our law by Turkey's action.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to reject the conference committee compromise allowing military aid to flow to Turkey until February 5, 1975. The law is clear and to be observed and enforced. As responsible legislators obligated to serve the will of the people, let us either repeal the law and let Turkey do what it wants, or observe the law and cut off all U.S. military aid to Turkey. We cannot do both.

GOV. HUGH CAREY

HON. HOWARD W. ROBISON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. ROBISON of New York. Mr. Speaker, a good deal of our attention is being given, these last days of the session, in saying "Goodbye" to an unusually large number of friends and colleagues who will be leaving the Congress within a few days. In most instances, that is something of a sad occasion—for it is always difficult to end the warm associations that one develops here, over the years, with one's colleagues.

In paying just tribute, however, to Congressman HUGH CAREY for the truly outstanding record he has established as one of the hardest working, most effective, and highly respected Members of this House, his friends can rejoice—even those like myself of opposite political persuasion—that HUGH is going on to new, and even greater, responsibilities.

New York—the Empire State—has been blessed in this century with a remarkable number of outstanding Governors, those readily coming to my mind including, of course, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Thomas E. Dewey and, surely, NELSON ROCKEFELLER. Ours is a great State, as well as being simply a large State. It is also a complex State to govern, due mainly to the up-state, down-state differences that grow out of the inclusion, within our borders, of the city of New York. Those differences are economic, and social, as well as political—and they demand leaders of unusual capacities if they are to be bridged.

I am sure that I shall continue to often disagree with Governor CAREY as he undertakes this special challenge, on top of the enormous challenges posed, in these difficult times, to the Governor of any of our 50 States. But those future disagreements—as with those HUGH and I have had in the past during our tenures in Congress—will be over programs and policies, not principles, for I know HUGH CAREY to be a man of character, integrity, and drive, and I am sure that his one ambition, now, is to be a good Governor and to keep our State ahead, or to move it ahead, after the fashion of those former Governors I have mentioned.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to again congratulate HUGH CAREY—my friend and colleague—on his election victory, last month, and to wish him well as he begins his new career, and to offer him, even though I, too, am leaving Congress, my full cooperation and support in the months and years ahead.

IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION SERVICE
APPROPRIATIONS HISTORY, FISCAL YEARS 1966-75

Fiscal Year	Estimates considered by House	Reported to House	Passed House	Estimates considered by Senate	Reported to Senate	Passed Senate	Public law
(1)	(2)	(3)	(4)	(5)	(6)	(7)	(8)
1966.....	$73,604,000	$73,175,000	$73,175,000	$73,604,000	$73,175,000	$73,175,000	$73,175,000
2d supplemental, 1966.....	1,782,000	1,782,000	1,782,000	1,782,000	1,782,000	1,782,000	1,782,000
1967.....	75,541,000	75,500,000	75,500,000	75,541,000	75,500,000	75,500,000	75,500,000
2d supplemental, 1967.....	3,654,000	3,335,000	3,335,000	3,654,000	3,335,000	3,335,000	3,335,000
1968.....	80,400,000	79,946,000	79,946,000	80,400,000	79,946,000	79,946,000	79,946,000
2d supplemental, 1968.....	6,138,000	5,738,000	5,738,000	6,138,000	5,738,000	5,738,000	5,738,000
1969.....	86,941,000	86,450,000	86,450,000	86,941,000	86,450,000	86,450,000	86,450,000
2d supplemental, 1969.....	3,276,000	3,276,000	3,276,000	3,276,000	3,276,000	3,276,000	3,276,000
1970.....	94,000,000	93,750,000	93,750,000	94,000,000	93,750,000	93,750,000	93,750,000
Supplemental, 1970.....	869,000	869,000	869,000	869,000	869,000	869,000	869,000
2d supplemental, 1970.....	8,344,000	8,344,000	8,344,000	8,344,000	8,344,000	8,344,000	8,344,000
Subtotal, 1966-70.....	434,549,000	432,165,000	432,165,000	434,549,000	432,165,000	432,165,000	432,165,000
1971.....	111,980,000	111,480,000	111,480,000	111,980,000	111,480,000	111,480,000	111,480,000
2d supplemental, 1971.....	10,460,000	10,460,000	10,460,000	10,460,000	10,460,000	10,460,000	10,460,000
1972.....	130,578,000	130,578,000	130,578,000	130,578,000	130,578,000	130,578,000	130,578,000
2d supplemental, 1972.....	366,000	366,000	366,000	366,000	366,000	366,000	366,000
1973.....	135,084,000	135,084,000	135,084,000	135,084,000	135,084,000	135,084,000	135,084,000
2d supplemental, 1973.....	2,400,000	2,400,000	2,400,000	2,400,000	2,400,000	2,400,000	2,400,000
1974.....	139,698,000	139,698,000	139,698,000	139,698,000	139,698,000	139,698,000	139,698,000
Supplemental, 1974.....	3,600,000	3,600,000	3,600,000	3,600,000	3,600,000	3,600,000	3,600,000
2d supplemental, 1974.....	10,406,000	10,406,000	10,406,000	10,406,000	10,406,000	10,406,000	10,406,000
1975.....	180,400,000	175,350,000	175,350,000	184,100,000	176,350,000	176,350,000	175,850,000
Supplemental, 1975.....						705,000
Subtotal, 1971-1975.....	724,972,000	719,422,000	719,422,000	728,572,000	720,422,000	721,127,000	721,404,300
Total, 1966-1975.....	1,159,521,000	1,151,587,000	1,151,587,000	1,163,121,000	1,152,587,000	1,153,292,000	1,156,404,709

1 Includes $2,835,409 resulting from indefinite appropriation to cover certain pay cost increases.
2 Reflects reduction of $500,000 for border enforcement fence (hearings revealed that fence would cost $1.14 per inch).

3 Derived by transfer from Law Enforcement Assistance Administration.
4 Includes $1,482,300 resulting from indefinite appropriation to cover certain pay cost increases
5 Conference report filed November 26, 1974 deletes amount.

JOHN ZWACH: CHAMPION OF U.S. AGRICULTURE

HON. ANCHER NELSEN

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. NELSEN. Mr. Speaker, in years of involvement in government and the legislative process, you meet many people with different backgrounds, different abilities, and different concerns. But one of those who stands out most vividly is my fellow retiree from Congress this year, JOHN ZWACH of Minnesota.

Years ago, I served in the Minnesota Legislature on the senate side. JOHN served in our legislature's house of representatives, later moving over to the senate side where he rose to the position of majority leader.

His interests were wide and varied, but his love for agriculture and its related problems and challenges stood out in the most memorable way. His leadership in the field of agriculture characterized his activities in our State, coupled with his love for education, having taught school himself in years previous to his service in government.

Then JOHN moved on here to the Congress of the United States where he is regarded as the real agricultural champion for the Midwest, and where he has served brilliantly for the agricultural interest of our Nation as a member of the House Agriculture Committee.

Knowing JOHN as a personal friend, as well as his delightful and devoted wife and family, it is easy to understand how his motivations, ideals, and his personal application to solving public problems have always remained at the highest level.

Much could be said of JOHN's accomplishments in the legislative field. But more importantly, his philosophy is right. His devotion to his country, his State, his family and friends will remain an inspiration to all of us.

I certainly want to take this opportunity to wish JOHN and his wife every happiness in their retirement. I hope that my wife and I will continue to see them after we are all settled down once again in our respective farms back home in Minnesota.

TRIBUTE TO LESLIE ARENDS—
"MR. REPUBLICAN"

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, December 16, 1974

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, the hectic last days of any session of Congress oftentimes result in confusion for Members trying to attend to all the business. This year this normal confusion is coupled with the fact that more than 70 Members of the 93d Congress will not be returning for the 94th Congress. However, I will not let the present confusion prevent me from paying my personal respect and tribute to the distinguished minority whip, LESLIE ARENDS, who will be retiring from the House after an exemplary 40 years of continuous service in the House of Representatives.

The people of the 15th Congressional District in Illinois have been blessed by having a man the caliber of LES ARENDS representing them in the U.S. House of Representatives. LES was a man who despite being one of the most powerful Members in the history of Congress never neglected the needs and interests of his constituents, and the fact that he was reelected on 20 different occasions speaks for itself.

Many people have referred to LES ARENDS as being the finest modern-day spokesman for the Republican Party. He has served in the prestigious whip position longer than any other person in the history of the Congress. He has earned respect and affection from his colleagues on both sides of the aisle for the fair and prudent wielding of the great power which he possesses.

Longevity in the House can only be equated with excellence. LESLIE ARENDS retires from the House as the No. 2 ranking Member, an outstanding tribute to the man and his unparalleled record of service to his constituents and the Nation as a whole.

I have had the pleasure of knowing LES ARENDS during my 6 years in the House. I have found him to be both an outstanding public servant and gentleman always willing and able to provide his fellow colleagues with advice or assistance.

LES ARENDS' decision to retire has evoked numerous tributes from his many friends and colleagues who have worked with him during the past four decades. The pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of recent days have been filled with outpourings of affection from Members on both sides of the aisle who recognize LES ARENDS' departure as being a severe blow to the House as a whole. LES ARENDS has been an inspiration for many of us here today as well as those who preceded us. He has amassed a record of service and achievement which is not likely to be surpassed for years to come.

LESLIE ARENDS now prepares to return to his beloved Melvin, Ill., to live a quiet life on his farm with his lovely wife and daughter. He has earned the rest he has coming, he has earned the freedom from the hectic burdens of being the Republican whip. He knows he leaves with the fond blessing of all of us in the 93d Congress who wish him nothing but the best in health and happiness in the coming years.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

BAYARD RUSTIN ON THE PLO

HON. EDWARD I. KOCH

OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. KOCH. Mr. Speaker, Bayard Rustin, one of our foremost civil rights leaders who has fought in every battle on behalf of the oppressed, whether they be black or white, has written a statement on the PLO which can only be described as magnificent. It is insightful and sets forth in a cogent way the reasons why the PLO must be condemned, and why those who cheered Yasir Arafat at the U.N. must be criticized. His statement follows:

THE PLO: FREEDOM FIGHTERS OR TERRORISTS?

One of the most distressing reflections of the unhappy state of world politics is the ease with which words can be perverted, stripped of significance, and made to mean their opposite.

Acts of murder and terrorism are transformed into gestures of "liberation." Hijacking and the slaughter of innocent children are carried out in the name of "peace." The word "racism," once so meaningful to the oppressed of the world, has lost all objective value as it is as often applied to democratic, interracial societies as to those which practice the most extreme forms of apartheid.

The distortion of language is, however, but a symbol of a fundamental surrendering of political and humanitarian principles, typified most dramatically by the warm reception accorded Mr. Yasir Arafat and the Palestinian Liberation Organization by the United Nations. For Mr. Arafat to have shot his way into the General Assembly with a machine gun, only to be greeted by an ovation of applause would have been almost as ridiculous—and deplorable—as the cheers which greeted his tirade of misrepresentation.

What is, after all, the "legitimate struggle" Mr. Arafat and the PLO are conducting? It is a struggle being waged with the tactics of calculated violence, where military targets are avoided, but women, children, athletes, diplomats, airline passengers—the defenseless and uninvolved—are sought and struck down.

By embracing the PLO, the U.N. has given a solemn amen to organized brutality, encouraging along the way no one knows how many other extremist organizations with a grudge against society.

It should be noted that the PLO's terrorism is practiced on dissidents within the Palestinian community as well as on Israelis and their supporters. Mr. Arafat likes to talk of the PLO goal of establishing a "democratic" state, but here again we must distinguish between a word's actual meaning and Mr. Arafat's definition. The PLO is certainly no model of democracy: no one elected Arafat to represent the Palestinians; its authority is guaranteed by the "freedom fighter's gun" to which Mr. Arafat referred at the U.N.

What, then, of the PLO's charge that Israel is a "racist" nation. This accusation has been repeated so often—Arafat made numerous references to Israeli "racism" and "colonialism" in his U.N. address—that it has achieved a measure of acceptance worldwide, and in the American black community. The question is what do the Arabs mean by "racism?" The standard definition is the systematic oppression of an ethnic or racial minority, very often justified on the grounds that the minority is inherently less intelligent, less clean, less pure or in some way inferior to the majority.

Applying this measurement, it is apparent that some of the most blatantly "racist" regimes are in Arab lands. In Iraq, Jews were hanged in a public square, while today napalm is employed against the dissident Kurdish minority. Syria rivals Nazi Germany in its brutal treatment of its Jewish citizens, who are confined to a cramped quarter of Damascus, prevented from emigrating, and from time to time murdered with official sanction. And in the Sudan, it was non-Moslem blacks who were the target of a genocidal war in which 500,000 were killed and many thousands more forced to flee their homes.

I would not pretend that the racial situation in Israel, where some 400,000 Arabs live as citizens, is perfect. But given the enormous problems confronting her, this small nation has achieved a level of racial tolerance that is indeed remarkable. The Arabs within Israel enjoy rights and a standard of living unknown to the masses in Moslem nations. They participate politically; elect their own representatives to parliament; receive public education; and belong to Histadrut, the Israeli labor federation. They are, in other words, a part of the progressive institutions of Israeli society.

I believe that the Palestinian people have the right to a homeland, to self-determination, to the resolution of their state of uncertainty. The Jewish people, historically an oppressed people, have the same right. And given the rhetoric and actions of the PLO, there can be little doubt that to accede to the demand of a bi-national state would result in the Jews of Israel being dealt with much like the Jews in Iraq and Syria.

In her brief history, Israel has forged an enviable record of social achievement. At a time when so many appear willing to accept lies as the truth, to reach dishonest conciliation with terrorists, to barter away the most basic ideals of justice and compassion, Israel more than ever deserves the support of people of good will and common decency.

HAROLD COLLIER

HON. OMAR BURLESON

OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, December 16, 1974

Mr. BURLESON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, having served on the Ways and Means Committee with HAROLD COLLIER for a number of years, I take this opportunity to join his many friends in wishing him well as he prepares to retire from the U.S. Congress.

It has been a real pleasure to know HAROLD over the years he has been here in the Congress and my good wishes go with him in retirement. He will have other pursuits, of course, and I wish him every continued success in whatever effort he may become involved. He has served the Nation and his congressional district well during these years and is most deserving of an enjoyable retirement. Our best to you, HAROLD.

December 20, 1974

December 20, 1974

A TRIBUTE TO HAROLD COLLIER

HON. JOHN B. ANDERSON

OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, December 16, 1974

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it was with sincere regret that I learned that my distinguished colleague from Illinois, HAROLD COLLIER, was planning to retire at the end of the current term. His unending capacity for conscientious, dedicated public service will be missed in this body.

For 18 years, HAROLD has served the Sixth District of Illinois and the Nation honorably and tirelessly. His almost two decades in the House spanned the most unsettling years in recent American history: The several wars in the Middle East, the Cuban revolution, the conflicts for social and political justice in the New Frontier and the Great Society, the assassination of President Kennedy, the war in Vietnam, the bloody riots of the late 1960's, the campus turmoil following the Cambodian incident, the chaos of Watergate, and the resignations of Vice President Agnew and President Nixon.

How can I describe this unique gentleman? His congeniality is well-known. His wit and good humor are always in good taste. But the quality that impressed me most when I first came to Congress, and has endured over the years, is HAROLD's dedication to his office which can only be described as "earnestness." He has placed special emphasis on serving as a liaison between his constituents and the Federal Government. This responsive attitude led him to personally intervene in over 8,000 constituent cases during his career.

During his service on the Ways and Means Committee he earned a reputation as an expert in tax law and an advocate of fiscal responsibility. In these times of economic confusion, we will miss HAROLD's understanding of the complex issues before us. In addition to his duties as the second ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee, HAROLD served on the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, the Joint Committee on Reduction of Federal Expenditures, the Joint Study Committee on Budget Control and the Advisory Board on the National Council on Drug Abuse. His performance on these committees added significantly to the reassertion of congressional constitutional power and responsibility which was long overdue.

HAROLD has long worked and believed in limited Government and fiscal responsibility. These ideas, almost lost in the rhetoric of recent years, are again gaining favor with the voters. We can credit HAROLD for his dedication to these principles in less popular times—the mark of a truly great man.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

He certainly has my very best wishes as he launches into a new phase of life. We are not losing just another Member but a quiet giant.

TRADE REFORM AND THE REPATRIATION OF AMERICAN POW'S AND MIA'S

HON. JOSHUA EILBERG

OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. EILBERG. Mr. Speaker, a very important provision was added to the Trade Reform Act of 1974 while it was under consideration in the Senate; a measure which this House is obligated to concur in when it considers the conference report on the bill. Section 403 of H.R. 10710, as it was passed by the Senate, prohibits the extension of most-favored-nation trade status and Government credits to any non-market-economy country that is not cooperating with the United States in efforts to achieve a complete accounting of all U.S. personnel missing in Southeast Asia, to repatriate all such personnel who are alive, and to return the remains to the United States of all those who are dead.

There are still 934 Americans unaccounted for in Southeast Asia. Some have been missing for many years. Thirty-seven of these men are considered prisoners of war by the U.S. Defense Department. Many of their families have heard nothing from them or about them for years. Yet, hope still exists that our Government will find a way to bring about the repatriation of, at least, some of these men.

Article 8 of the Paris Agreement on Ending the War and Restoring Peace in Vietnam requires all parties in the conflict to exchange complete lists of all captured personnel, to help each other obtain information on missing personnel, and to facilitate the exhumation and repatriation of the remains of the dead. But the North Vietnamese and various insurgent groups in Southeast Asia have ignored this agreement. They have refused to cooperate in the exchange of information and have hindered our efforts to locate and retrieve the bodies of our dead servicemen. The Hanoi government has consistently violated the Geneva Convention on the handling of war prisoners and has refused to respond to numerous pleas from international bodies. The North Vietnamese and insurgents have failed to observe even the most basic elements of human rights with regard to these missing men.

The brave Americans, military and civilian, who were captured, killed, or separated from their units in Southeast Asia while serving their country, deserve our best efforts in bringing them back home. Their families expect and deserve the fullest exercise of American power to this end.

One step the Congress can and should take is to require the Government to exert this country's economic power to encourage the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China to pressure the North Vietnamese into cooperating in this matter. Both of these Communist powers have considerable influence with the North Vietnamese Government, and both would benefit by receiving most-favored-nation status from the United States. Furthermore, on March 2, 1973, both the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China pledged "to strictly respect and scrupulously implement" the Paris Agreement on ending the war, and are, therefore, committed to cooperation in resolving the problem of POW's and MIA's.

The United States should not extend most-favored-nation trade treatment and credit support to these countries or other Communist countries until they are fully cooperating with our efforts to retrieve our prisoners, missing, and dead.

Section 403, known as the Gurney-Chiles amendment, will prohibit the President from extending nondiscriminatory treatment, credit, credit guarantees, or investment guarantees to any non-market-economy country which he determines is not cooperating with U.S. efforts to repatriate POW's and MIA's. These benefits could be extended to non-market-economy countries only after the President has submitted to Congress a report indicating that such country is cooperating in these endeavors.

I urge the House conferees to support this provision.

RHODESIAN CHROME

HON. EDWARD J. DERWINSKI

OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Speaker, you and the House leadership are to be commended for your decision to postpone any further consideration of S. 1868.

I am sure most of the Members here know that I oppose S. 1868, which would once again halt the importation of Rhodesian chrome into the United States. My opposition is based on hard-headed consideration of the economics of chrome and its importance to our industrial well-being. I believe access to Rhodesian chrome is a matter of national interest—a phrase that may sound a bit old-fashioned these days.

The effect of this bill would be to put major U.S. industries at the mercy of the Soviet Union. During the sanctions against Rhodesia the Soviet Union was our principal source of high quality chromite. It took advantage of our dependence upon it in two respects: First, the quality of the ore exported to the United States steadily deteriorated; and second, Russian prices dramatically increased. From $35.78 per ton in 1965 the price steadily increased to $68.45 in 1972 and then fell back to $51.73 per ton in 1973 when sanctions were lifted.

The recent Arab oil embargo demonstrated the complications that could be caused by a politically motivated trade embargo. Should we put ourselves in a position where the tyrants of the Soviet Union could use chrome against the United States as the Arabs did oil?

May I also point out to the Members that there is definite progress being made within Rhodesia in negotiations that will, hopefully, produce an orderly transfer of governmental authority. A viable Rhodesia should not be deprived of the U.S. rights to purchase its chrome ore.

CONTROLLING FOREIGN MILITARY SALES

HON. JONATHAN B. BINGHAM
OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, in an editorial published in the December 1, 1974, edition, the Charlotte Observer called upon the Congress of the United States to exert stronger control over the administration's escalating cash and credit sales programs. Congress has recently acted in this area by passing the amendment to the Foreign Assistance Act which I offered in the House and Senator NELSON sponsored in the Senate. Through this amendment, Congress has acquired for the first time the necessary authority to oversee and control cash and credit arms sales.

I commend the Observer editorial to the attention of my colleagues:

ARMS FOR ALL: CONGRESS IGNORES ITS JOB
The United States' growing role as world supersalesman of military hardware will confront Congress as the new year begins. In recent years it has ducked responsibility, and the results are alarming.

The Ford Administration has proposed heavy increases in foreign military aid, as well as changes that would make it even easier for foreign governments to obtain credit for arms purchases. This amounts to a continuation of the Nixon Administration's policy of accelerating the flow of American arms abroad—to scores of non-Communist countries.

A part of this policy is concealment. It is difficult for Americans to keep abreast of developments, so rapidly have the government and arms manufacturers pushed American arms sales around the globe.

It appears that our arms sales abroad will total about $12 billion in this fiscal year, eight times as much as four years ago. The Soviet Union, even correcting for exchange rate differences, will have foreign arms sales of about $5 billion this year.

Americans who tend to think of our arms exports in the terms of the 1950s—during the days of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization build-up and other developments that could be related to our defense—are little aware of the nature of this latest trend. Some of the sales may be attributed to defense considerations; but in large part, arms are sold much as we might sell automobiles—simply for cash to be gained.

MAKING TROUBLE SPOTS

The results often contribute to regional arms races apart from the Cold War. For instance, we are selling 18 F-5E fighter aircraft to Chile. The stronger and more modern Chile's military forces are, the more Argentina, Brazil and other countries in that area feel they must have new arms, too. In the 1960s, Argentina, Brazil and Chile all decided they must have modern aircraft carriers, submarines and ship-to-air missiles. Each purchase by one of these countries sent the others to market.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

More recently, we have loaded the Middle East with arms—by one estimate, $6.8 billion worth during the past year. If we were looking for a tinderbox in which to throw matches, we could hardly have found a better one.

The Pentagon has pushed these sales by backdoor methods, as well as through means approved directly by Congress. Arms are its business; often that seems the only justification. The Pentagon's close ties with our arms industry make it see arms sales abroad very much the way a steel company would see steel sales abroad. In that situation, American interests are of secondary consideration—unless one thinks that any kind of cash-register action for American companies is in the national interest.

WHAT CONGRESS CAN DO

Congress can assume its proper role—a role it clearly has defaulted on—by reviewing all aspects of a policy that has made us by far the leading arms merchant of the world. It can follow up on efforts by Sen. Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis., and Rep. Jonathan Bingham, D-N.Y., to tighten Congress's control on cash sales of arms. It can cut back direct military giveaways financed by the taxpayers. And it can strengthen requirements that Congress and the public receive reports of all arms sales and commitments—in detail, country by country.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee, a frequent loser in jousts with the Pentagon, put it this way in reporting on the Foreign Military Sales and Assistance bill for fiscal 1974: "If Congress is to regain its role as the fundamental source of national policy . . . it must have the courage to take the initiative in matters such as foreign aid . . . The Committee hopes that the Senate will demonstrate that on military aid and sales policy it has the will, as well as the desire to chart a new course . . ."

BEING TOGETHER AT CHRISTMAS

HON. JAMES A. BURKE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. BURKE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, as we approach adjournment sine die and during this season of advent I thought we should stop for a moment and enjoy the words of a Christmas carol written by a young lady who shows great promise in this field. Jayne Ikard in addition to being a very talented writer of national fame put this carol together in a very short time. "Being Together At Christmas" shows great promise.

BEING TOGETHER AT CHRISTMAS

Music: Addy Fleger (ASCAP)

Lyrics: Jayne Ikard

The holly! the bells! the gingerbread smells!
The faces! the places! Confusion! Profusion!
The shopping, No stopping! The hustle, The bustle!

Keep handy the brandy! The giving, that's living.

Chorus: Being together at Christmas.
Oh, what it means to me, when we're together at Christmas.

Singing carols 'round the tree.
Sharing our love and our laughter, joining a Christmas song.

Why can't it stay like Christmas Day the whole year long.

December 20, 1974

The ice skates! The snow! The candlelight glow!
The sweet cakes! The headaches! It's busy!
It's dizzy
The cookies with sprinkles, the starlight with twinkles,
The madness! The gladness! The sharing, the caring.

Chorus: Being together at Christmas.
Oh, what it means to me, when we're together at Christmas.

Singing carols 'round the tree.
Just like a rose in December, blooming with warmth and cheer.

Why can't it stay like Christmas Day throughout the year?
Why can't it stay like Christmas Day throughout the year?

REV. GEORGE T. COOK'S POIGNANT EXAMPLE

HON. NORMAN F. LENT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, a good friend and constituent, the Reverend George T. Cook, of St. Andrews Church in Ocean-side, N.Y., recently sent me a thoughtful letter expressing his feelings on the Department of Justice antitrust actions against the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. His example of how this suit affects middle Americans prompted me to write personally to the Attorney General. I insert my letter of protest addressed to the Attorney General for the attention of my colleagues. It contains many of Reverend Cook's points:

Congress of the United States,
Washington, D.C., December 19, 1974.

Hon. William B. Saxbe,
Attorney General,
Department of Justice, Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. Secretary: After lengthy consideration, I feel compelled to write to you in regard to the antitrust action brought against the American Telephone & Telegraph Company.

The Assistant Attorney General of the Antitrust Division, Mr. Thomas E. Kauper, told a House Republican antitrust task force in August that the principal concern of the Department of Justice in its antitrust actions is the protection of the American consumer who has to pay the price of all goods and services. Mr. Kauper further asserted that "only through vigorous free competition can we develop and maintain the economic potential to produce the things we all need at prices we can all afford."

Mr. Kauper's assertions bring many questions to mind when this premise is applied to the antitrust action against AT&T. If AT&T's subsidiary, Western Electric, becomes a separate entity, the necessary supporting organizations, such as a sales office, will certainly add to the cost to the consumer. Not only will the cost of the equipment to AT&T increase, but also the quality control presently exercised will be lost. Likewise, the close relationship with research and development needs will be gone.

I also have some serious reservations concerning the fate of AT&T itself. I fear that the profitable portions of the company will be siphoned off by competitors and leave it with only those portions of its business which are unprofitable. The three million Americans who own stock in the company will find their investment worth nothing.

A good friend and constituent, the Reverend George T. Cook, cited an interesting example of how this action will affect the investors in a recent letter to me. Two years ago, a retired member of his church became increasingly infirm and sold part of his telephone company stock, his nest egg, to build a downstairs bathroom in his house in accordance with his doctor's wishes. I think this member of his church is a typical example of the Middle-Americans who own stock in the telephone company. Somewhere in America there are people just like him who have held stock in this company and find that they need to convert this stock to cash to meet an urgent, personal financial crisis. What are they to do?

December 20, 1974

The United States has the cheapest, most modern, and most efficient telephone service in the world today. It is one of the few "giants" that really works. The role of the Federal government is to regulate public utilities, not kill all incentive to maintain an excellent record of performance.

Thank you for the opportunity to express my views on this situation.

Sincerely,

NORMAN F. LENT,
Member of Congress.

CONGRESSIONAL PUBLICATIONS ON ENERGY R. & D.

HON. OLIN E. TEAGUE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. TEAGUE. Mr. Speaker, as the 93d Congress comes to a close I should like to call to the attention of my colleagues the outstanding work done by the Subcommittee on Energy of the Committee on Science and Astronautics. The chairman of the subcommittee is Congressman Mike McCormack from the State of Washington. The ranking Republican is Barry Goldwater, Jr., of California. The other members are: Mr. Fuqua, Mr. Symington, Mr. Hanna, Mr. Roe, Mr. Bergland, Mr. Pickle, Mr. Brown, Mr. Milford, Mr. Thornton, Mr. Gunter, Mr. Wyder, Mr. Esch, Mr. Conlan, Mr. Parris, Mr. Cronin, Mr. Martin, and Mr. Ketchum.

Three major legislative initiatives approved by this Congress in energy research and development originated with this subcommittee. They are:

Public Law 93-409. The Solar Heating and Cooling Demonstration Act of 1974; Public Law 93-410. The Geothermal Energy Research, Development, and Demonstration Act of 1974; and Public Law 93-473. The Solar Energy Research, Development, and Demonstration Act of 1974.

These new public laws will help assure this Nation of viable energy research, development, and demonstration programs in solar and geothermal energy through this decade and into the next.

Another tangible product of the subcommittee's activities has been its extensive list of published documents related to energy research, development, and demonstration. Other subcommittees of the Committee on Science and Astronautics—Science, Research, and Development, and Space Science and Applications have also made valuable contributions to the list.

Because of the many inquiries which the members of the committee and its

CXX—2648—Part 31

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

staff have received concerning available documents on energy research, development, and demonstration, I should like to insert in the RECORD at this time an up to date list of titles:

ENERGY PUBLICATIONS IN PRINT

June 1973, Individual Action for Energy Conservation, Serial C.

February 1974, H.R. 11864—Solar Heating and Cooling Demonstration Act of 1974, Background and Legislative History, Serial L.

May 1974, Energy Legislation, Serial O.

May 1974, Energy From Geothermal Resources, Serial Q.

July 1974, Energy Policy and Resource Management, Serial R.

October 1974, Secondary and Tertiary Recovery of Oil, Serial Y.

Hearings Before the Subcommittee on Energy:

May 3, 1973 ff, Short Term Energy Shortages, No. 7.

May 7, 1973 ff, Energy Research and Development and Space Technology—Joint Hrgs. with Subcommittee on Space Science and Applications, No. 9.

May 15, 1973, Energy Research and Development—An Overview of our National Effort No. 10.

June 5, 1973, Solar Energy for the Terrestrial Generation of Electricity, No. 12.

July 23, 1973, University Energy Research Centers, No. 11.

Nov. 20, 1973, Research Development and the Energy Crisis, No. 22.

Feb. 5, 1974 ff, H.R. 11212 et al. and H.R. 14172, Geothermal Energy, No. 29.

May 23, 1973, Solar Sea Thermal Energy, No. 41.

June 6, 1974 ff, Solar Photovoltaic Energy, No. 43.

June 13, 1974, Bioconversion, No. 40.

July 30, 1974 ff, H.R. 15612 Solar Energy Research, Development and Demonstration Act, No. 42.

Sept. 25, 1973 ff, Energy and Environmental Standard.

May 8, 1974, Oil Shale Technology.

May 21, 1974, Wind Energy.

Hearings Before the Subcommittee on Space Science and Applications:

Feb. 4, 1974, Research on Ground Propulsion Systems, No. 26.

Feb. 7, 1974, Advanced Nuclear Research, No. 32.

Energy publications available from Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402:

December 1972, Energy Research and Development—Report of the Task Force on Energy Price: $2.35, domestic postpaid; $2.00, GPO Bookstore, Number Y4.SCI.2-92-2/EE (5270-01775), Serial EE.

January 1974, Energy Facts. Price: $3.65. Number Y4.SCI.2-93-1/H (564P), Serial H.

January 1974, Inventory of Current Energy Research and Development (Update) Vol. I—5270-020174—$9.80. Vol. II—5270-020175—$3.10. Vol. III—5270-020174—$5.00, Serial J.

ENERGY PUBLICATIONS OUT OF PRINT
(May be available at certain libraries)

October 1971, Energy—The Ultimate Resource, Serial J.

December 1971, Briefing Before the Task Force on Energy (Vol. I), Serial M.

March 1972, Vol. II, Serial Q.

August 1972, Vol. III, Serial U.

March 1972, An Inventory of Energy Research (Vols. I and II), Serial R.

May 9, 1972 ff, Energy Research and Development—Hrgs. before Subcommittee on Science, Research and Development, No. 24.

December 1972, Solar Energy Research: A Multidisciplinary Approach, Serial Z.

March 1973, Federal Government and Energy R&D Historical Background, Serial B.

June 7, 1973 ff, Solar Energy for Heating and Cooling, No. 13.

June 19, 1973, Conservation and Efficient

Use of Energy (Part 1) Joint Hrgs., Subcommittee on Energy and Subcommittee on Conservation and Natural Resources of Government Operations Committee, No. 14.

July 10, 1973, Part 2, No. 18.

July 11, 1973, Part 3, No. 19.

July 12, 1973, Part 4, No. 20.

Sept. 11, 1973 ff, Geothermal Energy, No. 21.

Nov. 13, 1973 ff, H.R. 10952 et al., Solar Heating and Cooling Demonstration Act—Hrgs. before Subcommittee on Energy.

November 1973, Energy from Oil Shale: Technical Environmental, Economic, Legislative, and Policy Aspects of an Undeveloped Energy Source, Serial I.

June 1974, Review of Selected Federal and Private Solar Energy Activities (GAO), Serial S.

COMMITTEE LEGISLATIVE REPORTS

(May be available at certain libraries)

Jan. 28, 1974, Solar Heating and Cooling Demonstration Act of 1973—H.R. 11864, Report No. 93-769.

June 17, 1974, Geothermal Energy Research, Development, and Demonstration Act of 1974, H.R. 14920, Report No. 93-1112.

Sept. 10, 1974, Solar Energy Research, Development, and Demonstration Act of 1974, H.R. 16371, Report No. 93-1346.

ENERGY PUBLICATIONS IN PREPARATION
Hearings before the Subcommittee on Energy:

Dec. 18, 1974, H.R. 17400, Synthetic Liquid Fuel Research and Development Act of 1974.

Reports:

Energy and Minerals from Oil Shale.

Energy from Tar Sands.

Research, Development and Policy for Energy Resources.

Inventory of Energy R&D.

History of Federal Energy R&D.

Hydrogen Economy.

Liquefaction and Gasification of Coal.

Coal Utilization for Electric Power Generation.

CONGRESSMAN DORN LEAVING AFTER SESSION

HON. MENDEL J. DAVIS

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, December 16, 1974

Mr. DAVIS of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my remarks to the many tributes being paid to the dean of our delegation, the Honorable WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN. Perhaps there is no higher honor than being held in esteem by the people with whom you work. Such being the case, WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN has not only won the esteem of his fellow South Carolina delegation members, but also the Members of this House in which he has served so long. He is revered by the people in his district who returned him to Congress term after term.

He is as skilled at oratory as his namesake and has devoted a lifetime of service to his State and country. He is a leader on the national level because of his work as chairman of the House Veterans' Affairs Committee. He still holds the record for being the youngest State senator ever elected and seated in South Carolina at the age of 24.

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN is headed back to his Greenwood County farm and away from the hustle and bustle of politics. At least he thinks he is.

However, I doubt that people on all levels of government, business, and industry will be put off that way. I am sure they will continue to seek his wise counsel and sage advice. There is going to be a vacancy that will be hard to fill and expertise which will be impossible to replace. WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DORN will be missed.

42012

FINANCING FUTURE INDUSTRIAL CAPITAL REQUIREMENTS

HON. HAROLD RUNNELS

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. RUNNELS. Mr. Speaker, I call to the attention of my colleagues an outstanding editorial written by Mr. Robert H. Malott, chairman and president of FMC Corporation.

Mr. Malott presents some significant information on the financing of future industrial capital requirements, which I feel will warrant considerable attention by the new Congress.

Following is Mr. Malott's editorial:

FINANCING FUTURE INDUSTRIAL CAPITAL REQUIREMENTS

(By Mr. Robert H. Malott)

The most insidious impact of inflation is that the capital formation necessary for industry to meet rapidly escalating investment demands is seriously jeopardized. To overcome capacity shortages, to keep American industry competitive with foreign firms, and to avoid the erosion of the value of stockholder investments in the securities of industrial concerns in this country, the seriousness of this problem must be recognized promptly and dealt with directly.

In the last 12 years, U.S. industry has raised and invested $1.5 trillion dollars. It has been estimated that in the next 12 years industry requirements in this country will be $4.5 trillion—and this to support no more than a 4% future growth annually in economic activity. Our U.S. tax policy will play a critical role in determining industry's ability to "self-generate" these funds which are necessary to replace worn out plants and provide the investment necessary to expand capacity and thereby overcome the production-limited environment that contributes so significantly to inflation. The challenge is clear!

Current depreciation rates (including accelerated depreciation) and the investment tax credit are dramatically inadequate for funds established in this way to play a major role in capital accumulation requirements of this magnitude. In addition, our U.S. depreciation regulations are substantially less encouraging to industry in this country than overseas regulations affecting our foreign competition.

While we in the United States are permitted to recover 66% of our investment in the first three years, France provides 90% recovery, Sweden 96%, and England and Canada a full 100%.

The rapid change over the last year in the rate of inflation is compounding our problem and compounding it rapidly. In FMC, for example, based upon inflation rates that have already been in existence since our present plant and equipment has been built and installed, our depreciation rates should be increased by 27% if we assume no future inflation until these investments must be replaced. If we assume a 5% future inflation rate—which seems modest in today's environment—the comparable rate at which we should be allowed tax-free accumulation of replacement funds should be increased 87% or if we assume a rate of 8%, we would need to increase our rate of funds accumulation by 147%! And this is merely to keep our existing plants in good running order. It does not provide for expansion!

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

"Inadequate capital cost allowance" is a sterile and drab subject, remote from the lives of most. The decisions that need to be made in Washington are as much, if not more, political than economical. The actions needed won't bring short-term, highly visible results but failure to make objective and difficult decisions on the part of those responsible for tax policy will touch the lives of all of us. Insufficient capital will inhibit U.S. industry, including FMC, from the growth justifiably expected by stockholders; it will prevent the expansion necessary to increase employment; and it will guarantee the continuation of a shortage environment that will prevent us from coming to grips with inflation.

Will appropriate tax legislation by itself solve our inflation problem? Of course not! But the significance of depreciation policy is misunderstood by many and under appreciated by others. Capital recapture whether via the mechanism of normal depreciation allowance, accelerated depreciation or the investment tax credit is not a business "boondoggle." In a period of high inflation such as we are experiencing, it is critical to industry survival. I urge you to join with me in redirecting our Federal tax policy toward encouraging appropriate capital formation so critically needed to expand the output of goods and services.

ROBERT H. MALOTT,

Chairman and President FMC Corporation.

HON. THAD DULSKI

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. COLLINS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, we will all miss our committee chairman, THAD DULSKI. He has served most ably as chairman of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee for the past 7 years. It was a privilege to serve under THAD.

He is a gentleman and conducts all sessions with the dignity of a Southern colonel, and the amazing thing is he comes from Buffalo.

One of the things I admired most about THAD was the fact that he always had a close touch with the grassroots. Too many men when they come to Congress lose the feel and the feelings of their local communities. THAD went home every weekend and maintained his home in Buffalo. He worked hard in his district office. He was always talking to his Polish neighbors, his German friends, the plain spoken Irish and all of the good solid Americans that made up his district in the Buffalo area.

Much of his strength as a chairman came from the fact that his leadership was based on common sense. He spoke with an understanding of the ideas of the people. He was not guided by some reports or agenda of bureaucrats.

As a chairman, THAD was always fair. Every member had an equal opportunity to speak up. A member's voice could always be heard.

With all of his energy and spirit, we know that THAD is going to continue to be very active in the years ahead. We look forward to seeing him often in the Halls of Congress.

December 20, 1974

KOCH-GOLDWATER PRIVACY SURVEY OF SELECTED PRIVATE ORGANIZATIONS AND STATE/LOCAL GOVERNMENTS—1975

HON. EDWARD I. KOCH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. KOCH. Mr. Speaker, Congressman BARRY GOLDWATER, Jr., and I are very proud and gratified to see the Congress finally pass the Privacy Act of 1974. As sponsors of the Koch-Goldwater Comprehensive Right to Privacy Act we, with many other Members of Congress, have worked hard in a bipartisan effort to pass legislation during this Congress which would protect an individual's right to privacy. The Privacy Act of 1974 is a major breakthrough and first step in insuring the right to privacy by having the Federal Government subject itself to privacy safeguards as regards its information systems.

When Congressman GOLDWATER and I first introduced our Comprehensive Right to Privacy Act, which applies to State and local governments and the private sector, as well as to the Federal Government, we sent copies of the legislation to approximately 100 organizations requesting their comments on the bill. We did this for several reasons. We wanted to know how private organizations were handling their information systems and how they could implement privacy safeguards. We needed their comments in order to write a tighter, more workable bill. Second, we felt it was an appropriate way of alerting the private sector to legislation being worked on in the Congress and receiving their reactions to the bill. As a result of the excellent comments we received, we revised H.R. 14163 and introduced H.R. 15524.

We will again introduce this legislation when the Congress reconvenes in January. It is not perfect legislation at this point and we want to get more comments from persons who will be affected by it than we have at the present time. Consequently, we have developed a questionnaire which we intend to send to the State Governors and many mayors, to the 500 largest corporations in the country, to unions, trade associations, and universities in order to ascertain their reactions to implementing privacy safeguards. We want to know more about how such requirements would affect them and would like their recommendations on the impact of privacy legislation. This questionnaire will be sent out in the next few weeks and we intend to revise the legislation as a result of the comments we receive.

We are placing the questionnaire in the Record to encourage any of our colleagues who believe corporations and organizations in their districts, or their governors or mayors would be particularly interested in having input at this stage to alert them of this questionnaire and that we would be pleased to consider their reactions.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Privacy Act of 1974 calls for the establishment of a Privacy Protection Study Commission.

December 20, 1974

We applaud this effort to study the impact of privacy legislation on the private sector and State and local governments. We feel our effort by sending this questionnaire is compatible with the mandate of the study commission and any information we receive we will make available to DON EDWARD's subcommittee which will consider this legislation. We feel it is of utmost importance to write the best legislation we can with the best information available to us. We look forward to receiving the cooperation of other interested persons.

I would like to take note at this time of the original efforts in the field of privacy by a former Member of Congress, Cornelius Gallagher. Notwithstanding other problems that the gentleman had, he made a great contribution to the field of privacy when he called the attention of the Congress to the prospective greater invasion of privacy by the then effort on the part of some in Government to establish a national data bank. As a result of his efforts at that time as chairman of the Special House Subcommittee on the Invasion of Privacy, which was a unit of the House Government Operations Committee, the national data bank was not created.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

The questionnaire follows:

KOCH-GOLDWATER PRIVACY SURVEY OF SELECTED PRIVATE AND STATE/LOCAL GOVERNMENTS 1975

Organization.

Address. Zip Code.

Organization contact: Name, Title, and Telephone Number.

1. Describe your organization, specify type, function, and major objectives.

2. Indicate the approximate number of employees;

3. Indicate if your organization uses, collects, handles, or disseminates records which contain individually identifiable personal information (manual/automated). If computers are used to handle these records indicate percentage of their use as well as mode of operation;

Type of records	Number of records	Computer operation		ADP supported by—
		Batch	Online	In-house	Service Bureau
(a) Employee records (includes payroll, health, etc.)
(b) Client/student records
(c) Other records: specify (i.e., investigative, sales, credit, mailing list, statistical)

4. If the enclosed Public Law were to apply to your organization's operations, what problems do you foresee. (If needed, use additional sheets for your comments.)

5. Listed below are the ten principles of privacy. For each check:

Column A—If your organization or firm presently practices the principle.

Column B—If you believe that your organization could easily implement the principle.

Column C—If you believe that your organization could not implement the principle because of cost, time, or operational considerations.

Column D—If there are technical, administrative or legal problems and limitations.

Principles of privacy

A B C D

1. Permit any person to inspect his own file and have copies made at reasonable cost to him

2. Permit any person to supplement the information in his file

3. Permit the removal of erroneous or irrelevant information and provide that agencies [organizations] and persons to whom material had been previously transferred, be notified of its removal

4. Prohibit the disclosure of information in the file to individuals in the [organization] agencies other than those who need to examine the file in connection with the performance of their duties

5. Require the maintenance of a record of all persons inspecting such files, and their identity and their purpose

6. Insure that the information be maintained competently with adequate security safeguards

A B C D

7. Require that when information is collected, the individual must be told if the request is mandatory or voluntary and what penalty or loss of benefit will result from noncompliance

8. Require that the person involved in handling personal information act under a code of fair information practices, know the security procedures, and be subject to penalties for any breaches

9. Permit anyone wishing to stop receiving mail because his name is on a mailing list to have that right

10. Prohibit agencies or organizations from requiring individuals to give their social security number for any purpose not related to their social security account, or not mandated by federal statute

*Recognizing that your organization may handle differently employee, client, or other records, you may wish to make additional copies of this page.

Specify type of record

WILBUR EUGENE AINSWORTH, JR.

HON. LESLIE C. ARENDS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I have just learned that another highly-respected member of the White House Legislative Liaison is leaving at the end of this Congress to enter private enterprise.

42013

Wilbur Eugene Ainsworth, Jr., has been Special Assistant to the President for Legislative since 1973. He previously served here on the Hill as administrative assistant to our colleague, G. V. "SONNY" Montgomery, of Mississippi.

Those of us who have had the opportunity to work closely with Gene these past 2 years have nothing but the greatest admiration for his ability and efficiency. He is a gentleman in every sense of the word, and his manner immediately inspires confidence.

The legislative process is one of compromise. Being a Democrat in a Republican administration, Gene has provided excellent liaison with our colleagues on your side of the aisle and has played a key role in many of our legislative endeavors. I am sure all our colleagues join me in expressing our gratitude for the outstanding assistance he has given us.

Let me also extend my best wishes to Gene and his charming wife, Joy, and their two children for success and abundant happiness in the years ahead.

ASPIN STUDY SHOWS HOW TO CUT $4.6 BILLION FROM THIS YEAR'S BUDGET WITHOUT INJURING DEFENSE OR HUMAN NEEDS

HON. JOHN F. SEIBERLING

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that as the 93d Congress draws to a close most of my colleagues are already engaged in serious consideration of the momentous issues we will face at the start of the 94th Congress.

Near the top of the agenda of these pressing problems is the need to reduce the Federal budget. To this end our colleague, Mr. ASPIN, has prepared and circulated to all members of Members of Congress for Peace through Law a series of alternative proposals for reductions in the fiscal year 1975 Federal budget.

This study indicates how, through deletions and deferrals in military appropriations, the $4.6 billion reduction figure recommended by President Ford can be met and surpassed by means that will neither affect our vital defenses nor harm those most hurt by the economic situation. This list of proposals was prompted by the fact that there remain pockets of fat in the defense budget and the fact that the rescissions and deferrals drawn up by the Office of Management and Budget will, if adopted, hit the economically vulnerable the hardest, despite President Ford's assertion in his recent Budget Message to the Congress that they "avoid actions that would unduly add to unemployment or adversely affect those hurt most by inflation."

Mr. Speaker, the text of the study follows:

ALTERNATIVE PROPOSALS FOR REDUCING THE FEDERAL BUDGET

PREFACE

President Ford has announced his intent to reduce fiscal year 1975 expenditures in order to slow inflation. His plan is totally misdirected in its application. It would cut

42014

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

December 20, 1974

spending in those very areas which help the principal victims of inflation—the poor and the elderly—while continuing without change spending on the largest contributor to inflation, the military.

The military budget contains many more questionable items than the two minor programs which Mr. Ford has identified as unnecessary to national defense. He offers to cancel Congress' two gratuitous additions to the Defense Department's 1975 request, $305.6 million for unneeded A-7D and F-111F aircraft. The Air Force agreed to accept these add-ons to its budget only to satisfy the Texas Congressional delegation. Although Mr. Ford did not say so, he has recognized that the Pentagon is quite capable of padding its own budget without such an assist from the Congress. It is unfortunate, to say the least, that the President is unwilling to apply the same standards of value measurement to Department of Defense programs that are applied to the Texas delegation's add-ons. Furthermore, it is simply not true, as the White House asserts, that the Congress has already cut military spending. It merely reduced the increase that the Defense Department asked for. Yet, though the Executive Branch is unwilling to eliminate non-essential spending, the Congress can no longer ignore its duty to make the military accept economic reality.

Because military spending has such a pronounced inflationary effect, it should be the first category of federal expenditure examined for reduction instead of offering cuts which hit the most vulnerable citizen the hardest. The recommendations for $4.6 billion in deferrals and rescissions put forward by the Executive Branch are in the wrong place.

To recommend large reductions in other segments of the federal budget while leaving military spending relatively untouched requires three assumptions: (1) that there is a clear and present danger to the safety of the U.S.; (2) that every dollar appropriated to the Department of Defense is used solely to protect vital American interests; and (3) that no dollar spent on military programs is wasted through mismanagement or misdirected efforts.

None of these assumptions can be sustained. The United States continues to be the world's first ranking military power. It faces no threat of attack from abroad. Though alarmists continue to project new challenges, none has materialized in two decades.

Furthermore, a substantial portion of the military budget (in both direct and indirect costs) continues to be committed to foreign policy initiatives and not vital defense needs. Military aid to foreign countries is the leading example of this kind of spending. While some of this discretionary spending may be justified, there is little or no excuse for using the American taxpayers' dollars to finance the armed forces of regimes whose continued loyalty to the U.S. is questionable, whose strategic significance is marginal and whose ability to support the U.S. militarily is negligible.

Finally, recent experience of military management of weapons procurement should serve to caution us about the return on each dollar invested. Poor management, poor contracting and poor technical forecasting have led to increased costs which far outstrip increases in performance, leaving us with a net loss in defensive might. We would be better off to terminate or curtail many of these wasteful programs now and redirect our energies to building larger numbers of less gold-plated, more trouble-free weapon systems.

The following list of military and related programs identifies $8.5 billion in doubtful military projects. Several of the reductions have been recommended by Congressional committees already. The program elements shown cannot all be reduced in the amounts listed because of costs of contract terminations and because some of the funds have already been spent. But certainly reductions totaling the President's desired $4.6 billion can be made.

Procurement

The patterns of military spending which shaped the FY 1975 military budget are a "hang-over" from the period of accelerated economic growth in the 1960s, when expanding GNP made it relatively more possible to have both guns and butter. The Defense Department must learn to live with the current economic reality of resource shortages, rapid inflation, and relatively stabilized GNP.

This requires avoidance of expensive and duplicative systems, such as the F-14 and F-15 fighters slowing of accelerated and costly programs, such as the Trident submarine, and deferral or fewer quantities of lower priority weapons, such as tactical missiles (Dragon, Lance, Sparrow). Certain programs, like the Airborne Warning and Control System and the LD-963 destroyer, should be cancelled outright on the grounds of their inability to find or perform a military mission within tolerable cost limits.

More than $100 million can be saved merely by agreeing with committee adjustments of certain program quantities—for example, the S-3A, A-10A and F-15A—which did not survive later conferences. The procurement title also includes several billion for aircraft and missile spares, modifications, ground equipment and upgrading of industrial facilities. Undistributed reductions can be made in these accounts without affecting priority support requirements. (See table.)

RESEARCH, DEVELOPMENT, TEST AND EVALUATION

Military research and development, which should be a seedbed for new military technology and cost-saving innovation, has instead become the thin edge of the procurement wedge for weapon systems of questionable military merit. Development is pursued, less because of pressing need or intrinsic capability, than because of vested service and contractor interests. Leading examples are the B-1 bomber, SAM-D surface to air missile, the advanced airborne command post (AABNCP), the STOL transport prototype and the Site Defense of Minuteman ABM system.

The B-1 bomber is an especially instructive and expensive case of the 'presumption of production syndrome' whereby service advocates understate the potency of our current large, serviceable and flexible bomber fleet of B-52s and FB-111s and seek to force the production decision by way of numerous prototypes and a large sunk investment.

The momentum of these research efforts can be halted or abated without prejudice to military posture but at considerable savings in the federal budget. The Congress should permit DoD to develop its own priority list of R&D projects by mandating undistributed percentage reductions in the RDT&E accounts, as shown in the tables below, which indicate program elements of less than essential importance to defense readiness. In the future, the Congress should scrutinize new R&D spending proposals much more cautiously. (See table, p. 4)

Synopsis of DoD RDT&E appropriations, fiscal year 1975 (before recommended reductions)

	Million
Army, Navy, USAF.....	$8,083.20
DARPA, DCA, DMA, DSA.....	255.30
DIA, DNA, & NSA.....	218.00
Technical support to OSD/OJCS.....	17.60
Director, test and evaluation.....	25.00

Grand total, RDT&E..... 8,579.30

Recommended reductions in service RDT&E..... $614.175

Recommended reductions in RDT&E for defense agencies and test and evaluation..... 25.805

Total RDT&E reductions..... 639.980

PROPOSED REDUCTIONS AND DEFERRALS—DOD FISCAL YEAR 1975 PROCUREMENT BUDGET

Program	Quantity approved	Action	Amount saved (millions)	Program	Quantity approved	Action	Amount saved (millions)
Army Aircraft: UH-1 helicopter.....	48	Delete.....	$18.5	Navy missiles:
Navy Aircraft:				AIM 7E (Sparrow III).....	300	do.....	54.9
P-3C ASW.....	12	Delete/defer.....	138.4	Phoenix.....	340	do.....	33.2
S-3A ASW.....	45	Reduce quantity to 40.....	43.6	Standard MR.....	200	do.....	29.1
CT-39 exec. aircraft.....	6	Delete.....	10.5	USAF missiles:
T-34C trainer.....	18	Delete/defer.....	7.0	LGM-30G Minuteman.....	61	do.....	312.0
KC-130R tanker.....	6	do.....	39.1	AIM-7 (Sparrow).....	300	do.....	43.3
Aircraft mods., spares, ground equipment and industrial facilities.....		Reduce.....	100.0	Missile support.....		Reduce.....	509.0
USAF Aircraft:				USN SCN:
A-7D attack.....	24	Delete.....	100.1	Trident.....	2	Delete 1 hull.....	500.0
A-10A attack.....	25	Reduce to 20.....	100.0	SSN nuclear submarine.....		Delete.....	239.8
E-3A AWACS.....	6	Delete.....	328.7	DLGM guided missile nuclear frigate.....	3	Delete 1 hull.....	167.5
E-3A advance procurement.....		do.....	42.0	DLGM advance procurement.....		do.....	92.0
F-111F tac fighter.....	12	do.....	205.5	DD 963 destroyer.....	7	Reduce to 3 hulls.....	400.0
F-15A tac fighter.....		Cut 10.....	66.2	Destroyer tender.....	1	Cancel.....	116.7
Aircraft mods., spares, ground equipment and industrial facilities.....		Reduce.....	150.0	SSBN conversion.....	3	Defer.....	104.6
Army missiles:				Army combat vehicles: M-60A1 tank.....	510	Increase procurement by 500 units.....	+200.0
Dragon antitank.....	15,200	Reduce to about 7,000.....	40.0	Navy torpedos:
Lance.....	194	Cancel.....	64.4	MK-48.....	450	Delete/cancel.....	135.4
				MK-30 mobile target.....	3	Cancel.....	9.8
				Subtotal, potential savings.....			5,213.6

December 20, 1974

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

42015

POSSIBLE CUTS—FISCAL YEAR 1975 DOD R.D.T. & E. BUDGET

(Dollar amounts in millions)

Service and program	Approved	Percent cut	Recommended	Difference	Service and program	Approved	Percent cut	Recommended	Difference
Army: ¹					Ordnance, combat vehicles, and related equipment and other equipment.....	$551.9	5	$524.305	$27.595
Military sciences.....	$109.7	5	$104.215	$5.485	Subtotal, Navy.....				222.865
Aircraft and related equipment.....	234.8	5	223.06	11.74	USAF: ²
Missiles and related equipment.....	593.2	10	533.88	59.32	Military sciences.....	129.2	5	122.74	6.46
Ordnance, combat vehicles, and related equipment.....	245.7	5	233.415	12.285	Aircraft and related equipment.....	1,089.3	10	980.37	108.93
Other equipment.....	531.8	5	505.21	26.59	Missiles and related equipment.....	378.2	10	340.38	37.82
Subtotal, Army.....				115.42	Military astronautics and related equipment.....	453.3	10	407.97	45.33
Navy: ²					Ordnance, combat vehicles, and related equipment.....	142.3	10	128.07	14.23
Military sciences.....	139.6	5	132.62	6.98	Other equipment.....	631.2	10	568.08	63.12
Aircraft and related equipment.....	286.2	5	271.89	14.31	Subtotal, USAF.....				275.89
Missiles and related equipment.....	1,068.1	10	961.29	106.81	Grand total, all services.....				614.175
Ships, small craft, and related equipment.....	671.7	10	604.53	67.17

¹ Examples of program elements which can be deleted/deferred: Materials R. & D.; heavy lift helicopter; UTTAS; advanced attack helicopter; safeguard defense system; missile technology; site defense of Minuteman (ABM); SAM-D; missile range support; tank systems; triservice tactical communications system; surveillance, target acquisition, and night observation systems.

² Examples of program elements which can be deleted/deferred: Defense research services; F-401 engine; CH-53E helicopter; fighter prototype; Sanguine; missile propulsion technology; Concorde; advanced cruise missile; missile; Aegis; Trident missile system; antiship weaponry; surface missile guidance; nuclear propulsion technology; surface effect ships; amphibious assault craft; submarine tactical warfare systems; special processes.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION AND FAMILY HOUSING

Military Construction (NOA) is at $1.9 billion for fiscal year 1975 and includes such deferrable or cancellable projects as "community facilities" (clubs, gyms, etc.) which have no direct bearing on national defense. Monies appropriated for community facilities by service are as follows:

Army: $23.5 million.
Navy: $22.1 million.
USAF: $28.8 million (inc. $4.4 million for 3 officers' clubs).

Provisions of these facilities means that servicemen are receiving government subsidized recreational facilities, despite the fact that their pay has recently been raised to the level of civilian counterparts who receive no federally subsidized recreation facilities.

Among other MILCON items which can be deferred or deleted are $15 million to begin the armed forces medical college in Bethesda, Maryland and the $30 million contingency construction fund of the Secretary of Defense.

Over and above the $1.9 billion set aside for military construction, $1.25 billion has been earmarked for family housing including funding for a total of 10,462 new units at a cost of $337.4 million. This is $49 million more than was appropriated in fiscal year 1974. This program provides quarters for military families who forfeit their housing allowances when occupying these quarters, although the housing allowances do not begin to meet the actual cost to the government of providing quarters in kind. Due to military comparability with civilian pay scales, this program should be subjected to a searching review.

In the meantime, while military housing can be justified at many remote posts, it is required at installations adjacent to urban areas. Furthermore, since military pay is now comparable to that of civilian equivalents, occupants of military family housing should be required to pay the full costs of maintenance, operating expenses and debt service for their quarters, thus relinquishing the rent supplement not available to civilians of similar income.

The family housing cost can be reduced either by a straight percentage or by a reduction equivalent to the difference between occupants' allowances and the cost of housing to the Treasury. For existing quarters, current operating expenses are $380.7 million, maintenance is $353.3 million and debt payment and interest are $167.1 million for FY 1975.

It is recommended that a minimum reduction of $200 million be achieved in the MILCON and family housing accounts by cancelling non-defense construction such as clubs and bowling alleys, by deferring projects like the military medical college, and by curtailing the family housing program and by recouping some of its costs from the occupants.

OPERATIONS AND MAINTENANCE; MILITARY PERSONNEL

Operations and maintenance costs, including salaries for most DoD civilians, and military personnel costs consume well over half of the Defense Department budget. These costs are flexible, however, and can be brought down by instituting basic economies in travel, flying time, bonus payments, ceremonial functions, permanent change of station transfers, military servants (of which an estimated 500 cost the taxpayers some $8,000 per serviceman per year) and in other areas of optional or discretionary spending.

There should be no need to curtail military manpower, yet substantial savings could be achieved by reducing overseas units (as in Korea) and by reducing the number of dependents abroad by instituting shorter, unaccompanied tours. This will permit further reductions in military personnel and foreign contract personnel (doctors, dentists, nurses, commissary staff, etc.) whose primary function is serving dependents. It will also reduce the amounts paid for cost of living allowances (COLA) paid to military personnel accompanied by dependents to allow them to meet overseas living costs, as well as cut costs for maintenance of dependent facilities.

As regards civilian manpower, where there is one civilian for every two uniformed personnel, further savings could be achieved by delaying replacement of normal personnel losses. At the same time, the Department of Defense should instigate rigorous fuel-saving measures throughout the military establishment while examining ways of providing readiness and proficiency training without expending fuel and other costly oil products. Flying and steaming time can be reduced to only essential operations; use of government vehicles and aircraft for other than operational uses can be greatly restricted to reduce the ever more costly consumption of fuel.

It is estimated that through measures of the kind described above an undistributed reduction of five percent can readily be absorbed in the $49.5 billion so far appropriated for O&M and military personnel costs.

OTHER MILITARY AND RELATED EXPENDITURES

Atomic Energy Commission Supplemental Appropriation. The $80.5 million supplemental A.E.C. appropriation includes $57.5 million for new underground tests of large nuclear warheads. This test schedule is inconsistent with and calls into question the good faith of the government's efforts to limit strategic arms, to negotiate a comprehensive test ban, and to halt nuclear proliferation throughout the world. Its effect on the nuclear balance will be, at best, marginal and it may well prove counter-productive to other goals; the entire program should be scrapped now at a savings of $57.5 million.

Military Assistance. A major drain has been imposed on the military budget by assistance programs which deplete U.S. inventories of weapons and ammunition. Many of the costs in the procurement and O&M titles of the defense appropriations bills are associated with the replacement of items actually or virtually given away to military aid recipients. It has been reported that both sides in the Cambodian conflict are armed mainly with American weapons, with the opposition forces capturing, stealing or buying U.S. stocks from the Lon Nol government, which must seek replacements from the U.S. As the Cyprus situation has shown, these arsenals are not always used by their recipients to further American interests but are used even against U.S. allies. Military assistance programs of all kinds should be drastically reduced not only on budgetary but also on politico-military grounds.

Reserves and National Guard. Similar economies are also possible in the various reserve forces accounts. Reduction of staff overhead, in non-essential units (such as Naval Control of Shipping units), and in the excessive numbers of "mobilization assignees" can be readily effected. Active duty training overseas or at points distant from local reserve units can be terminated.

Civil Defense. The $80 million budget of the Defense Civil Preparedness Agency can be reduced by deleting monies appropriated for yet a new set of civilian population relocation plans and for an "all effects" shelter survey.

MINORITIES AND WOMEN MUST WORK TOGETHER

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, affirmative action is a concept which has been in much dispute in recent years. All of a sudden, the middle class white man is feeling the effects of what he calls "reverse discrimination" and has begun to cry out in fear. We blacks, women, and other minorities have lived in fear all of our lives that we might not achieve our goals because of our race or sex. Arbitrary hiring and admissions have always worked against us. Employers are given a great deal of freedom in deciding who they should hire. They speak of such intangible qualities as motivation and enthusiasm. It seems strange that it was always the white male who held these mystical qualities. Affirmative action is certainly a workable answer to the problem.

As a result of affirmative action programs minorities and women have often pitted themselves against each other in competition for the few positions available through affirmative action. In an extremely well written article, Eleanor Holmes Norton, Chairperson of the Commission on Human Rights, says that this should not be so. Minorities and women have much to gain from working together to make affirmative action a viable solution to the problem of our underrepresentation in the work force.

I submit this article for the consideration of my colleagues:

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION FOR BOTH MINORITIES AND WOMEN: THE ROAD TO REAL REFORM
By Eleanor Holmes Norton

Rather than competing with each other, minorities and women can benefit from combined efforts against racism and sexism.

I have been trying to speak openly about an issue that has already taken on a fair degree of troubling mythology. To be sure, it is still only a small undercurrent that one hears occasionally, but it is so erroneous and harmful to equal employment efforts that it ought to be plainly discussed and hopefully discarded. It is the notion that there is some inherent antagonism between minorities and women, as companies are required to design programs to redress historic discrimination against both.

Though I emphasize that it is still a small undercurrent, like so many whispers of distrust it can eventually become loud demagoguery unless met with facts early on. It should be enough that this fallacy has the potential to polarize the two great civil rights movements of the 20th century—the struggle for Black liberation after three centuries of slavery and painful discrimination, and the movement for women's equality after millennia of a sexist caste system. But polarization and discord is not all we would be left with. Such friction, were it to substantially materialize, would destroy affirmative action itself, leaving employers free to revert to the old system of filling jobs that has left every conceivable facet of American life to be run by White males virtually alone.

The argument that either minorities or women, but not both, will profit from affirmative action is one of those easy assumptions that comfort our suspicions while stifling our search for the truth. I have heard it from both sides—from an occasional woman who is certain women will lose out because Blacks make the company look good, and from an occasional Black who is convinced that the women's movement has sprung up just in time to capture the jobs that would otherwise go to Blacks.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

The New York City Commission has done pioneer technical work in affirmative action for both minorities and women. We received the first Federal grant in the country to develop the affirmative action concept for women, having developed much of the early technology that had given substance to the concept for minorities. But we ultimately decided against a segregated program of working to get women into some companies and minorities into others. Instead, we adopted as policy the inclusion of both women and minorities in every complaint. There are currently 170 patterns and practice cases being processed by the Commission, almost half involving both race and sex; most of the others were initiated before the government authorized the sex inequality component of our program. Most of these cases were initiated by the Commission itself; the majority are against the most important companies in New York City, and therefore in the country. This is considered by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, which funds the program, to be an extraordinary caseload, both because so many large companies of 1,000 or more workers are singled out and because we undertake a massive job in each—the total overhaul of the company personnel system down to the smallest details of recruitment, hiring, promotion, testing, credentialism, benefits, assignment, classification and unequal pay, to name some of the major areas.

Because our pattern and practice caseload is so extensive and treats race and sex in every complaint, it provides a good test of how well minorities and women can be integrated into a viable affirmative action program. The fact is that extensive monitoring of each company under compliance with us reveals no appreciable differences or conflicts in meeting standards for bringing in minorities and women.

Some would attribute this result to the fact that a company does not get double credit for Black women, for example. New York City Commission policy disallows the 2-for-1 game that would put a premium on hiring Blacks who happen also to be women. This is just one of several built-in safeguards designed to make certain affirmative action does not become yet another hustle where devices triumph over systemic reform. Another such measure is Commission help in designing outreach procedures tailored to the specific groups sought. In New York City this means pinpointing exact sources of Puerto Ricans, Blacks, and women, and not allowing overdependence on some to the exclusion of others. Still, such safeguards as these could hardly account for the success of Commission policy requiring companies to redress all of the discrimination for which they are responsible, and not part of the loaf.

The fact is that it is precisely the policy of requiring total reform of a personnel system that has eliminated the possibility of conflict among excluded groups. To choose one or the other group is to invite precisely the competition that is feared. We isolate company policies that have an adverse effect on each particular group, while keeping in mind that exclusionary barriers most often affect either several or, in many cases, all excluded groups.

Moreover the point of affirmative action is to objectify personnel systems which have operated with White men in the mind's eye, at least when it came to middle- and upper-level positions. If the antidiscrimination agency does its job well, it will leave the system free of stereotyping as a mode of position-filling. The effect will be to benefit all the groups who have historically failed to meet the stereotype.

The best way to prove this is to demonstrate briefly how difficult it is to do a competent job of affirmative action limited to any single group. Take, for example, clerical work, one of the most important categories of work for affirmative action, both because of the pervasiveness of stereotyping and because of the extraordinary number of jobs being created. Our increasingly white-collar society has met its expansive needs for clericals of all kinds, largely by bringing in women and minorities, who get stuck and remain as clericals. And dependence on these two groups, excluded from more senior positions, has made it easy to set low wages for the clerical category. Today in New York corporations, both minorities and women are overrepresented in these categories, with minorities often running 25 percent of the clerical work-force and women often 80 percent. The overlap between women and minorities is profound. This category helps remind us that half the minorities are women. Affirmative action here via techniques for promotion automatically helps both groups.

To be sure, job-by-job there will be times when companies will have to make a choice among qualified minority males, minority females and White females. But who can truly decry this new kind of corporate choice. The day may come when we will measure our progress by the degree to which this kind of choice replaces the old company choices where White men met themselves coming and going when vying for any substantial job. No formula can or should decide the new choices in the instances where they are necessary.

In any case, the results of our experience indicate what no example of a Black getting a particular job over a woman, or vice versa, can refute. And that is that the longer-range effect of total personnel reform is to so substantially benefit all excluded groups as to render benign individual instances of minority competition.

The all-inclusive effect of integrated women and minorities' affirmative action is further demonstrated by a look at a sampling of specific personnel reforms. Non-job related criteria account for major strains of discrimination in American business and industry. Once this form of discrimination is investigated, it makes little sense to restrict the investigation to minorities or to women alone. Many non-job related criteria do equal damage to both, such as the pervasive Masters of Business Administration requirement for executive positions. And dual benefit for both minorities and women is apparent in elimination of such criteria as specific school affiliation and military officer experience.

The same sort of effect on both groups is apparent in reforming other vital areas of company policy, such as criteria for promotion. Both minorities and women are pervasively found in stereotyped job classifications bunched at the bottom of business and industry. Critical to any affirmative action program are such reforms as non-discriminatory criteria for training programs and for job banks, both of which help women and minorities.

At the same time I want to stress that measures that seem to eliminate barriers for women also help minorities, and vice versa. A fair maternity benefits policy will help women at every level of the company, and especially Black women who work in disproportionate numbers compared with White women. And the elimination of pen and pencil non-job related tests bars such tests for everybody, not only the minority people whose disadvantage is most obvious.

I could go on with this lexicon of personnel reforms to demonstrate my basic point. But the mutuality of interest between

December 20, 1974

December 20, 1974

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

42017

minorities and women in affirmative action does not in fact depend upon the benefit each receives from this or that reform. I cannot overemphasize that it is turning the personnel system upside down and totally remaking it that is the key for every group regardless of who the group is. Ultimately, it is inefficient and unfair to do affirmative action on a piecemeal basis.

The fact is that affirmative action amounts to a brand new personnel technology, not only a device for bringing in excluded groups. It seeks to make personnel systems fair and objective. In the long run business and industry will profit from the new objectivity as it finds increasing numbers of motivated workers glad for the opportunities presented by the new chances for inclusion.

HON. H. R. GROSS

HON. THADDEUS J. DULSKI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. DULSKI. Mr. Speaker, since those early days nearly 16 years ago when I first came to Congress, I have had the pleasure to be associated with my good friend, the Honorable H. R. Gross from the State of Iowa.

He had been a member of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service for several years before I was named in my first term.

For the past 3½ years, we have sat side by side, he as the ranking minority member of the committee and me as chairman.

We have differed on many issues, but we each have respected each other's views. Indeed some of those differences often have resulted in a better end product—and, of course, the final result is really what counts.

We have joined together on numerous occasions that I would cite in particular his strong support for the basics of my pioneering approach to postal reform back in 1959. That was by far the most extensive legislative effort in which I have had a key role, from the drafting of legislation on up the line to public law.

Both Mr. Gross and I saw the tide of legislative sentiment swing away from our fundamental approach before the postal reform law was enacted. But that is the way the legislative ball bounces, compromise on legislation is the name of the game, as we both have come to know so well over the years.

During this 93d Congress there has been much effort spent on congressional reform. The effort really was not needed so far as our committee is concerned, as I believe the gentleman from Iowa will agree. We already had a fine relationship between the minority and the majority and essentially were meeting the basic reforms that evolved.

Many of my colleagues already have expressed their deep appreciation for the dedicated work of Mr. Gross in the House over the years.

Mr. Gross need step aside for no other Member in comparing the solid homework which he put into his everyday's work in this House. How he was able to keep such a sharp eye on the intimate details of so many bills, day after day, I will never know.

Mr. Gross very often was in the minority on issues, but he never let controversy bother him. Indeed, he thrived on it. He never lost sight of his point and, perhaps more important, never did I see him disagreeable.

He has been the exemplification of tenacity and always with deepest respect for the House and his colleagues.

Mr. Gross tells us he is going back to Iowa to catch up on his fishing. His fellow anglers back home ought to be forewarned that they have got some real competition on the way.

Mrs. Dulski joins me in warmest best wishes to Mr. Gross and his wonderful helpmate, Hazel, as they head back to enjoy the good things in life in their home State of Iowa.

WILLIAM E. TIMMONS

HON. LESLIE C. ARENDS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, we cannot adjourn this 93d Congress without first extending a few words of special appreciation to one of the most dedicated and hard-working public servants I have ever been privileged to know—William E. Timmons.

At the end of this year Bill will be retiring from his assignment of the past 6 years as Assistant to the President for Legislative Affairs to return to private life. I personally regret his departure from Government, and I know his absence will be keenly felt here on Capitol Hill where he is so well known and highly respected. Yet, the demands of his office have been great and his responsibility heavy. It is understandable that he would now want to devote more time to his family.

Perhaps one reason Bill has been such an effective liaison between the Congress and the President is because, in a sense, he himself is a product of Capitol Hill. He is genuinely interested in good, sound legislation and takes pride in the result.

Even while attending college at Georgetown University, Bill served as aide to the late Senator Alexander Wiley, of Wisconsin, from 1955 to 1962. Then from 1963 to 1969 he was administrative assistant to Representative BILL BROCK, of Tennessee, before joining the White House staff. His legislative experience in the Senate and House gave him special insights into the problems we face daily as legislators. He has been a student of the legislative process and parliamentary procedure. Although skillfully and forcefully representing the legislative interests of the President and the administration, he has never lost his sensitivity to our needs as well.

His is a tough job even under the best of conditions. As minority whip of the House, I have had almost daily contact with Bill and his excellent staff—often during periods of stress and legislative stalemate—and my admiration for their performance has continued to grow. It has been a pleasure to work with them.

It is impossible to measure in any meaningful way Bill's contribution to the hundreds of bills enacted by the Congress during these past 6 years, but it has been substantial. I do not know what plans he has for the future, but I wish him and his lovely wife Mimi and their children every success and happiness in the years ahead.

I know that all my colleagues here as well as countless friends across the country join me in saying, "Thanks, Bill—for a job well done."

SCHEDULE OF CONGRESSIONAL ALLOWANCES AND OUTLAYS

HON. CLARENCE D. LONG

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, in May 1974, I presented a statement of my personal financial position together with information on my income and income tax.

Today, I am submitting a schedule of my congressional allowances and outlays for the period January 1, 1974, to December 31, 1974.

With these various reports, I have gone well beyond my legal obligation, in order to present to my constituents a brief record of my net worth, my taxes, and my disposition of congressional allowances.

In general, this statement of congressional allowances and outlays shows that in 1974, $12,822.59 was received in stationery allowance, office allowance, travel allowance, and telephone reimbursements, that $10,574.58 was spent on these items, and that the balance of $2,248.01 remains on deposit in the stationery and office accounts, with scheduled outlays from December 19 to 31, 1974, of $22.70, leaving a balance on deposit in the stationery and office accounts of $2,225.31.

I include the following:

Schedule of congressional allowances and outlays
I. STATIONERY ALLOWANCE
Outlays:
For newsletters.....	$4,031.00
Other outlays—for office supplies, flags, souvenirs, personal items.....	2,800.89
Outlays reimbursed by constituents, staff, and campaign.....	-2,448.03
Total	+352.86
Paid by Congressman Long in 1974	4,383.86
Scheduled balance on deposit in stationery account on December 31.....	+2,116.14
Stationery allowance.....	6,500.00

December 20, 1974

II. OFFICE ACCOUNT
Allowance ($500 per quarter)-----	$2,000.00
Outlays for supplies and miscellaneous-----	-1,868.13
Scheduled outlays in the remainder of December-----	-22.70
Scheduled balance on deposit in the office account on December 31-----	109.17
III. TELEPHONE EXPENSES
Reimbursements (from House of Representatives)-----	2,049.39
Transfer from office account to cover unreimbursed telephone expenses-----	+31.30
Total-----	2,080.69
Telephone bills paid in 1974-----	2,080.69
Balance-----	0

The entire 2-year travel allowance was used up in calendar year 1973 for daily travel from Washington to Baltimore, as follows:

Travel allowance for 1973-----	$2,273.20
Travel in 1973: 165 round trips at 116 miles per trip equals: 19,140 miles at 12 cents per mile-----	2,296.80
Balance in travel account-----	0

The telephone expense is the only true expense item, in that all expenditures on telephones for the district office are reimbursed dollar-for-dollar and that telephone reimbursements cannot exceed telephone expenses. The remainder of the allowances, for travel, stationery and office, are flat allowances which then become the personal income of the Congressman with all expenditures tax deductible. There is no provision for returning any balance to the Treasury, and the balances on deposit in the stationery and office accounts at year's end are subject to personal income tax.

MISSOURI CREDIT UNION LEAGUE SUPPORTS CREDIT UNION BANK BILL

HON. WRIGHT PATMAN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Missouri Credit Union League adopted at its annual meeting in November a resolution reaffirming its support for legislation to create a national credit union bank.

Such a bank would be formed under H.R. 7, legislation which I introduced in the current Congress and similar bills were introduced by the gentlewoman from Missouri, Mrs. LEONOR K. SULLIVAN and other Members of the House.

Although hearings were held on this legislation, no action was taken because various credit union groups and the National Credit Union Administration could not agree on the best method for establishing the bank.

One of the principal concerns about the bank was the feature in my bill that would require mandatory membership by all Federal credit unions. This feature was initially opposed by the National Credit Union Administration and other credit union representatives. Now, however, the NCUA has changed its position and favors mandatory membership; and many credit unions who opposed this feature are now embracing it.

Because of the new found support and the reaffirmation of support, such as that shown by the Missouri Credit Union League, it is my plan to reintroduce a national credit union bank bill in the early part of the 94th Congress and to hold hearings on the legislation as quickly as possible. It is my hope that this much needed legislation can be enacted to assist the some 23,000 credit unions in our country.

The resolution follows:

RESOLUTION BY THE MISSOURI CREDIT UNION LEAGUE

Be it resolved: That the Missouri Credit Union League do hereby reaffirm our endorsement and support of legislation to create a national credit union bank, and vigorously urge the passage of legislation similar in its thrust to the national credit union bank measure sponsored by the Honorable Wright Patman, M.C., the Honorable Leonor Sullivan, M.C., and others, since this form of institutional support of credit unions is as critical for the future of credit unions as are federal bank agencies for other financial institutions, cooperatives, agriculture, among others; and we, the credit unions of Missouri, do hereby urge the members of the Missouri delegation to the Congress of the United States, to support and to work for the advancement of this legislation.

(By the 46th Annual Membership Meeting of the Missouri Credit Union League on the 9th day of November 1974.)

HAROLD R. COLLIER

HON. LESLIE C. ARENDS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, December 16, 1974

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, one of the ironies of the Congress is that we frequently lose our best men at the very time we need them the most. This is the way I feel about the retirement of my good friend and colleague from Illinois—HAROLD R. COLLIER—after 18 years in the House. With the country in economic difficulty, HAROLD's vast knowledge and expertise in the field of tax and economic policy is needed now more than ever.

Be that as it may, there comes a time when each of us must decide to step down, even though we may feel the Congress cannot operate without us! All levity aside, however, HAROLD is one who leaves some big shoes to fill, although he is far too modest to admit it.

We in the Illinois delegation and in the State of Illinois have been particularly proud of the representation HAROLD has afforded us on the Committee on Ways and Means for so long, and the same may be said for his work on the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation and the Joint Committee on Reduction of Federal Expenditures. He has always been counted on the side of sound fiscal management for our Government, just as he has labored long and hard for a fair and just tax policy. These are immensely complicated matters and require special diligence to master. HAROLD's experience is invaluable and I am sure that even in retirement his sound advice and good counsel will continue to be sought by those in authority.

Just as he has always set high standards of excellence for his committee and legislative duties, HAROLD also believed that the people of his district should receive the best possible constituent service—and that is what he gave them. He spared no effort to serve them. His personal attention was the rule, not the exception. His concern for the problems of his district was genuine. He has been a Representative in the finest sense of the word.

I know, too, that his many friends in the Congress will miss his keen wit and his uncanny ability to find humor in any situation.

I personally regret that HAROLD is leaving the Congress, but I wish him good health and abundant happiness in his retirement. He and his lovely wife Carol have a place in Florida, as do Betty and I. We are looking forward to getting together from time to time for a round of golf and perhaps to discuss the state of the Nation.

Who knows? We might even write a few letters to our Congressman!

UNEMPLOYMENT IN 1961

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, the announcement this week that the unemployment rate has reached 6.5 percent has been greeted with a chorus of gloom and doom by the media as well as certain Members of Congress and other public figures.

While it certainly is no cause for celebration, I think we should keep things in their proper perspective and pay heed to the President's admonition that we not talk ourselves into an economic situation that might be far more severe than conditions would actually warrant.

I noticed an editorial in the December 9 edition of the Peoria, Ill., Journal Star wherein the editor, Mr. C. L. DANCEY, made a trip to the library to check out the microfilm of past copies of his own newspaper as well as the New York Times for October of 1961 to determine what the major subjects of national concern were when we had a 6.5-percent unemployment rate then, the same as we do now.

Mr. DANCEY compiled a list of headlines filling up more than one full column, and while these headlines covered every topic from reports on incidents at the Berlin Wall to a story regarding exercises which the late President Kennedy was taking at that time to strengthen his back, nowhere could he find the word

December 20, 1974

"recession." The closest one comes in a front page lower-half story wherein an administration spokesman, Kennedy's Commerce Secretary, Luther Hodges, "Says Depressed Areas Should Help Selves." I think another point we should keep in mind is the unemployment figures have been increased as a result of the coal strike which will hopefully be resolved and the miners back to work before too many weeks go by.

I agree wholeheartedly with the editor's view that there is "reason to be concerned about the effect of fear created by the heavy 'jawboning' about recession-depression that has gone on so intensely by politicians and press this time."

I insert the text of the editorial in the Record and close my remarks with an admonition to my colleagues in the Congress and friends in the media that we be careful not to make a bad situation worse by careless exaggeration of the true circumstances.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN 1961

If you want an eye-opener on the matter of the "agenda" or the mood or what is fashionable, politically and as to news and public dialogue, do what I have just done.

Go to the library, check out the microfilm of the Journal Star (or the New York Times) for October, 1961, and see what the major subjects of national concern were when we had 6.5 per cent unemployment then the same as now.

Let me give you a quick day-by-day of the major headlines for starters, as they came along.

"189th, 301st Go On Active Duty."
"Ford Struck by UAW."
"Gromyko, Kennedy Confer on Berlin."
"China Says 'Bullets' May Wreck UN."
"JFK Gets Report on NATO Build-Up."
"U.S. Agrees to Red UN Head Plan."
"War Must Be Prevented Says Gromyko."
"Radio Newsmen Honor Kennedy."
"U.S. Considers Sending Troops to South Vietnam."
"Indict Hoffa."
"U.S. Offers UN Aid Plan."
"Allies Protest Shooting at Berlin Wall."
"Communies May Delay Berlin Showdown."
"Report U.S., U.S.S.R. Agrees on High UN Post."
"New Incidents Flare Along Berlin Border."
"JFK Files to Texas to see Rayburn (who was ill)."
"Laos Factions Pick 'Neutral' Premier."
"10,000 More Troops Go To Europe."
"Assess Red Threat to S. Vietnam."
"East German Police Fire on U.S. W. German Police."
"Report JFK Will Study Mid-Europe Area."
"JFK Sees Airborne Display."
"UN Power Seizure Charged by Russians."
"Warning on Berlin Delivered by U.S. Commander."
"Charge of Red Union Ties Angers Hoffa."
"U.S. Sells Jets to Yugoslavia."
"6,000 Sorties Flown in Huge Mock War."
"U.S. Rejects Red Formulas on UN Chief."
"Western Diplomats Meet this Week on Berlin."
"UAW Harvester OK 3 Year Pact."
"Open Senate Hearings on Drug Patents."
"Nigerians Want Peace Corps Expelled."
"Reconsider Testing Big Bomb, U.S. Asks Russia."
"Red China Chief Raps Nikita for Blast at Albania."
"Bloody Street Riots Worsen in Dominica."
"Adoula Regime Backed in UN-Katanga Treaty."

CXX—2649—Part 31

"Kennedy Names Randal Head of Volta Dam Team."
"Albania Strikes Back at Khrushchev."
"Kennedy Exercises to Strengthen Back."
"State Anti-Red Band's Arsenal, Leader Seized."
"Russia May Have Fired Super-Bomb."
"Hoffa Sues 25 Leaders of AFL-CIO."
"Ex-Zulu Chief Gets Peace Prize."
"Reds Claim Anti-Missile Defense."
"U.S. Makes New Berlin Crossing Test."
"JFK Urges Spending Economies."
"U.S. Russian Tanks Train Guns on Each in Berlin."
"JFK Unveils Plan to Spur U.S. Exports."
"Super Rocket Successful in First Test."
"Caterpillar on Strike."
"Red's Order Stalin's Body Removed."
"JFK Raises Budget."

That's the way it runs across the top, and its more dramatic to see them all because the same subjects plus crime dominate the lesser headlines, etc., as well, and the columnists are all talking about crisis here and there and strikes and new cars and such.

You can't find the word "recession" anywhere, and the closest one comes in a front page lower half story where an administration spokesman, Kennedy's Commerce Secretary, Luther Hodges "Says Depressed Areas Should Help Selves."

That's the way it really was. That was "Camelot," boys and girls. That was the "good old days." That was when 6.5 per cent unemployment was nothing to worry about and everybody was interested in superhoms, confrontations in Berlin, juggling power in Laos, the UN, South Vietnam and you-name-it, and when we were calling up the reserves and putting the National Guard on active duty from coast to coast.

Times change. And so do attitudes. But, today, when there is a proper concern about a 6.5 unemployment figure, it may help get it into a reasonable focus if we take notice that it was shamefully neglected the last time around.

In fact, researchers are telling us it isn't as bad today as it was in 1961 because, primarily, (1) jobless benefits are much higher and more available, and (2) because current unemployment figures come chiefly from teen-agers and women who were bringing in supplemental funds not the basic "living" of the family.

They also point out that the figures are swelled by people only briefly out of work—a turnover factor more than an enduring human problem.

There is the human problem in any such situation, and also the economic problem as to whether such indicators impact to make things much worse in future or do not.

The research suggests that, at least, the above factors would indicate the financial impact on the economy is not that great. But there is another factor altogether, which the news review of 1961 versus 1974 underlines.

There is a very different atmosphere and there is reason to be concerned about the effect of fear created by the heavy "jawboning" about recession-depression that has gone on so intensely by politicians and press this time.

That can, itself, create worse problems than we need.

What causes that big difference? The skill of the political leaders at beguiling the media into the "right" channels is one factor, of course. The Washington press corps affection or disaffection with a party or personality or style of reporting affects it. But the biggest factor clearly has been, how much other and bigger trouble were we in at the same time.

So, it surely isn't all bad. Indeed, thank God we are not burying financial difficulties under threats of war, shipping troops overseas, readying for combat in Southeast Asia, calling in the Guard and such! I'll take 1974 rather than back to 1961 any day.

C. L. DANCEY.

FRED OLSSON'S CONTRIBUTION TO THE DAIRY INDUSTRY

HON. ROBERT B. (BOB) MATHIAS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. MATHIAS of California. Mr. Speaker, this year Mr. Fred Olsson retired from a long and fruitful association with the Dairy Industry in California and in the San Joaquin Valley.

For many years when Fred was manager of the Knudson Visalla plant he was an active participant in an informal group known as the "Country Plant Operators" in the Tulare-Fresno-Kings Counties area. The members of this group were managers of the country plants in this area who met regularly over a long period of years to keep informed on what was happening in the production and marketing of milk and dairy products principally in California, and in the United States as a whole. A major function of this group was also to constantly improve the quality of the milk supply produced in the area as well as the dairy products manufactured in the area or shipping out in fluid form as milk, cream, or skim milk to the major consuming centers in California.

It was in the field of quality improvement and control that Fred was a major leader. He gave generously of his time and efforts with the producers shipping to his plant, as well as with competitors in joint industry programs, to constantly raise the quality standards of the milk in the area at the point of production, the dairies.

Since these programs involved the cooperation of the dairymen and the health departments and inspection agencies, he spent many hours personally contacting the individuals involved to convince and induce them to expend the extra efforts needed to produce the highest quality of milk, far above the minimum health standards, so that the shipments from the Southern San Joaquin Valley could best compete in the consuming markets.

Fred offered leadership in the programs to produce the finest manufactured dairy products from the plants in the Southern San Joaquin Valley. He shared with other managers his knowledge and experience in overcoming problems which often arose in manufacturing milk plants that endangered quality and Shelflife of dairy products. While his major efforts were devoted to the constant improvement and maintenance of the highest quality of the dairy products processed for his own company, he recognized that each company supplying milk and dairy products to consumers was his "Brother's Keeper," and low quality dairy products hurt the industry regardless of who sold them to the public. Others in the industry were well aware of Fred's thinking and were always pleased to have the opportunity for open discussion with him of milk processing procedures.

Fred was always conscious of the dairy industry's need of the goodwill and close relationship with other businesses which were essential to the smooth operation of the industry. Therefore, he was very active in community relations and keeping other businesses, such as the banks and feed companies, well informed on what was happening in the milk industry. His close contacts with banks and financial institutions were helpful to producers who needed loans and credit since he constantly emphasized the stability of the industry in California and particularly in the Tulare-Kings-Fresno counties area.

Banks and feed companies were well aware of the efforts the plants would expend to help a dairyman work out his financial and operating problems. Fred's public relations work in the field was a strong factor in building a good image for the dairy industry in the business community generally.

One other field in which Fred has done a great deal of work was that of labor relations, as it affected his own company and that of the entire industry.

When Fred came to the Valley in 1947 labor harmony between companies and union locals was at a low ebb. Through his efforts at his own plant, his patience, understanding, and sense of fair-dealing to both company and employee, a sound basis for working together was established. Fred spent many long hours with industry groups working on labor problems to the mutual advantage of both industry and labor.

TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE KENNETH J. GRAY OF ILLINOIS ON HIS RETIREMENT

HON. JOHN J. ROONEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 16, 1974

Mr. ROONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, recently I had the honor to praise a good, dear, and longtime friend from the State of Illinois, the Honorable LESLIE C. ARENS, upon his upcoming retirement from the House of Representatives following 40 years of service. It is now my honor to rise today, Mr. Speaker, to praise another outstanding Member, also with the Illinois delegation, who is retiring at the end of this session. I speak, of course, of the distinguished gentleman from the Prairie State, the Honorable KENNETH J. GRAY.

Before coming to the House 20 years ago, KEN was very active in many civic affairs and always interested in the betterment of his community and his part of southern Illinois. His membership in many fine civic and patriotic organizations led him eventually to politics and to election to the House of Representatives in November 1954.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

During his 20 years of service here in the House, KEN has become known to all of us as a capable, hard-working, conscientious member of the House Committee on Public Works. His counsel and advice are often sought on a myriad of subjects and problems. Most of us here in this Chamber have, at one time or another, consulted with KEN on a legislative problem. It is the finest tribute to KEN that his fellow Members of the House held him in such esteem that they sought his opinion on many complicated and complex problems concerning public works.

Mrs. Rooney joins me in wishing KEN a long, prosperous, and active retirement and we look forward to maintaining his friendship even after we leave this Chamber.

IMPORTANT SURVEY OF SECRECY IMPACT ON GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS UNDER EXECUTIVE ORDER 11652

HON. WILLIAM S. MOORHEAD

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. MOORHEAD of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, since June 1971 the Foreign Operations and Government Information Subcommittee has been conducting various studies, investigations, and has held public hearings on the operation of the Federal Government's security classification system—as it has functioned under Executive Order 10501 during the period 1953-72 and Executive Order 11652 during the 1972 to date era.

Last summer, our Subcommittee held hearings on my bill H.R. 12004, which would replace the Executive order classification system with a statutory system that would provide adequate safeguards for truly legitimate national defense secrets but which would help eliminate current practices of frivolous, illegal, and unnecessary classification markings to hide wrongdoing, corruption, or mistakes in judgment that might jeopardize future promotions. We will be reintroducing such legislation in the next Congress and will hold additional hearings next spring with the intent to report favorably a classification reform measure to the House next year.

Mr. William G. Florence, a former top security expert in the Air Force and one of the subcommittee's first witnesses in 1971 during our hearings on classification abuses, has recently conducted an in-depth study of the impact of the Executive order classification system on the various categories of private firms, institutions, and individual consultants who operate under contract with agencies of the Federal Government. Our subcommittee began initial explorations of this important aspect of the security classification problem last August and heard testimony on this subject from Mr. Albert H. Becker, research security coordinator at the Georgia Institute of Technology.

Mr. Speaker, at this point in the Record, I include a letter from Mr. Florence, now a consultant on Government Security Policy with the Center for National Security Studies, in which he summarizes the results of his study of the impact of the current Executive Order 11652 classification system of our Nation's private contractors with the Federal Government.

The letter follows:

CENTER FOR NATIONAL SECURITY STUDIES,
Washington, D.C., December 14, 1974.
Hon. WILLIAM S. MOORHEAD,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Foreign Operations and Government Information, Committee on Government Operations,
U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The President's secrecy system in Executive Order 11652 for classifying information in the name of national security as Confidential, Secret or Top Secret should be a major target for corrective legislation in 1975.

Watergate revelations and a succession of court room disclosures have shown that a real threat to our freedom lies in permitting Executive branch officials to misuse national security as an excuse for secrecy. The many abuses of the Executive branch security classification system include withholding from the American people massive volumes of information which belongs to them, the disclosure of which could not affect our national defense capability.

As you know, on November 21, 1974 when the Senate followed the House in voting to override the President's veto of the bill to amend the Freedom of Information Act, Congress said emphatically that there is far too much secrecy in the Executive branch. The amendments are now Public Law 93-502. One of them permits a Federal court to decide, in camera, whether information in a classified document being withheld by a government agency from an individual who requested access to it meets the Executive order classification criteria for secrecy.

Other legislative proposals pending in Congress, including your own bill, would preempt the President's security classification system altogether. A narrowly defined statutory basis would be established for the Executive branch to strive to keep secret such information as actually would impair the national defense. The purpose is to limit drastically (a) the type of information that could be included in the secrecy system and (b) the period of time that an item of information could be held in secrecy. I am pleased that hearings on the various bills for security classification reform were held earlier this year by your Subcommittee on Foreign Operations and Government Information and Senator Muskie's Subcommittee on Intergovernmental Relations.

This legislative effort could be of more interest than any other action by Congress on government secrecy. Of course, the proposals for keeping unlawful control measures from being applied and held on information parallels the basic purpose of the Freedom of Information Act. But it is the scope of authority which Congress might give Executive branch agencies to impose lawful secrecy measures on information that is of greatest concern.

Congress is abundantly experienced in exploring the effect of legislation, including a secrecy statute, on government agencies and their operations. However, the effect of statutory secrecy on private business firms and individuals that could result from government procurement and contracting operations is another matter.

At present, there are thousands of industrial firms and other organizations with millions of employees doing work subject to secrecy restrictions based upon the existing security classification system. As of July 1974, the Department of Defense was maintaining an industrial facility security clearance at 1293 facilities for Top Secret work, 9688 facilities for Secret work, and 122 facilities for Confidential work. Many millions of documents and other items with classification markings are in the custody of these facilities.

December 20, 1974

December 20, 1974

There are important questions as to what effect a statutory secrecy system might have on industry that call for thorough examination. For example, would the current unrealistic administrative secrecy rules be eliminated from research and development projects, or would statutory secrecy restrictions be established that could impact on essential interchange of technical information?

One seemingly insurmountable obstacle prevents communication between Congress and most business firms that are affected by secrecy restrictions. Almost no one engaged in classified defense work will discuss publicly the wasteful and illogical aspects of existing security classification practices. Industrial giants as well as small companies with government classified contracts refuse to criticize absurd secrecy requirements for fear that the government contracting department will take its business elsewhere.

I am not working to eliminate that communication gap by conducting a study to obtain facts about the application of the Executive Order 11652 security classification system to industry and academic institutions, and giving the facts to Congress and the public. I am doing this as a consultant to the Center for National Security Studies, and in liaison with your committee's staff director.

To date, visits have been made to selected research and development and manufacturing organizations with over 1200 Secret and Top Secret Department of Defense contracts totaling more than $550 million. Inquiries have also been made of numerous other companies working on approximately 1300 classified contracts worth over $680 million.

The visits and other inquiries were made on condition that specific facts given would not be identified publicly with the organization that supplied them. Here is a summary of information and conclusions furnished by representatives of the various companies and non-profit institutions participating in the survey:

1. There is as much secrecy in government contract work under Executive Order 11652 as there was under the previous order, No. 10501, which was superseded June 1, 1972.

2. Security classifications of Top Secret, Secret and Confidential are assigned to technical information by security classification forms and guidance pamphlets routinely prepared by military and civilian personnel who are oriented toward preventing publicity for their defense projects. This is how industry is flooded with security classifications. The widely heralded reduction in numbers of officials with so-called original classification authority under Executive Order 11652 means nothing to industry.

3. Very few individuals in the government who communicate with contractors about the security classifications specified for contract work have any idea of how unrealistic their secrecy requirements are for technical information and technological explorations. Government people do not understand the "damage to national security" classification criteria in Executive Order 11652. The "damage" factor is seldom used by an individual in assigning classifications to documents or in replying to a contractor's request for declassification actions.

4. The preponderance of technological information currently being designed in contracts as Confidential or higher does not qualify for secrecy under the restrictive "damage" standard in Executive Order 11652. In some types of contract work the degree of unnecessary classification approaches 100%.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

5. Because of wholesale unrealistic classification assignments in the past, and the inability of government people to cancel outdated classifications, many individuals engaged in research do their work in a field of knowledge permeated with security classifications. The markings are on general reference data, related technical literature, reports of past studies, and presentations given at professional seminars. This causes newly prepared studies to be marked with a classification solely because some old reference material has a classification.

6. Exemption of classified documents from the Executive Order 11652 declassification schedule of 10, 8, and 6 years for Top Secret, Secret and Confidential, respectively, has resulted in perpetuating classifications once they are imposed. Department of Defense exemption of information from declassification for 15 to 30 years is common practice. Government people simply prefer to prolong secrecy on an item of information rather than permit its declassification after passage of a reasonable period of time. Many contractors reported that from 90% to 100% of their current contract information is exempt from declassification. The average throughout industry is estimated at over 85%.

7. Dissemination of technical knowledge that is needed for national defense projects as well as civilian technological advancement is hampered by unnecessary security classifications.

8. There is tremendous waste of money and manpower resulting from (a) government inspectors periodically visiting contractors to check on the handling of material with security classification markings but which has no qualification for secrecy, and (b) the use of guards and special facilities to account for and protect such material in storage and in transit. (NOTE: If just 5,000 of the 11,000 cleared industrial facilities are spending an average of only $20,000.00 for handling and guarding material with unnecessary security classifications, that waste alone totals $100 million of the tax money that is going to contractors as reimbursement for overhead costs.)

9. Almost every contractor representative expressed the belief that legislative action by Congress is needed to correct the secrecy abuses resulting from the Executive Order 11652 security classification system. The objective would be to replace that free-wheeling system with a law stating a limited national defense secrecy criteria that would serve as a common policy or reference for everybody. But legislation should clearly distinguish between secrecy requirements normally applicable to strategic defense information and those that could be applied in comparatively rare instances when a brief period of secrecy might be appropriate for technical information.

I am deeply grateful for the opportunity to carry industry's messages to Congress regarding security classification practices. But this one-man study is not enough. Congress must have advice from business people themselves about proposals for secrecy legislation.

Since a great many people engaged in government classified work actually fear personal monetary loss if they should volunteer advice about secrecy practices and possible improvements, I suggest that the initiative lies with Congress to obtain their assistance. It would seem most appropriate for each member of Congress to make a special effort to communicate with constituents regarding proposals to establish a statutory secrecy system for information relating to the national defense.

Any degree of communication that might result from such effort could be most helpful to you and other committee chairmen in the endeavor to eliminate unjustifiable government secrecy.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM G. FLORENCE,
Consultant on Government Security Policy.

OUR TWIN PROBLEMS: ENERGY AND THE ECONOMY

HON. ROBERT L. LEGGETT

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. LEGGETT. Mr. Speaker, the House Democratic Caucus and the Democratic mini-convention in Kansas City have clearly set forth the critical national requirement for a program of energy independence. I am today filing a bill, offered originally by Senator STEVENSON, to create a Federal Energy Corporation to assist in doing the job.

We passed legislation this week establishing a national research and development program for nonnuclear energy. I personally believe the $20 billion of Federal energy research investment envisioned by the act over the next decade may not be sufficient. We may need a program of perhaps five times that level to pursue development of the various alternative technologies fully. But this legislation clearly represents a badly needed step in the right direction. Even the Oil Daily has recognized in a recent editorial that a crisis is upon us in the energy field and that governmental action of a comprehensive nature is required immediately.

We need action on our overall economic problems as much as on energy. In his editorial today, Bart Rowen of the Washington Post points up again our continuing condition of economic extremis. He says that inflation may become our No. 2 economic worry, with recession and unemployment becoming No. 1. Arthur M. Okun, former Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors, sees the economy continuing to go downhill throughout 1975, with "double-digit" unemployment the result, unless the administration takes vigorous action. According to Mr. Rowen, the U.S. economy will be the most depressed of all the 14 nations in the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development in 1975. He believes there may be a protracted and serious recession, not only here but also in the entire western world, unless the administration comes up with a bold program in January.

The two articles follow at this point in the Record:

[From the Washington Post, Dec. 19, 1974]
THE ECONOMY: "TIME IS GROWING SHORT"

The Ford administration is in the midst of the painful process of trying to shift gears to counteract what appears to be a devastating recession, without abandoning the fight against inflation.

It's a terrible dilemma, and there is no easy solution. The recession has moved along so fast and so deep that a budget deficit of $25 billion to $30 billion is now assured for fiscal 1976, and it is difficult to visualize the Ford administration proposing a substantial tax cut, in addition, to stimulate the economy.

Yet, Mr. Ford will have to come up with some kind of anti-recession package, including tax cuts, in his State of the Union and Budget Messages.

The deterioration of economic activity is clearly much worse than Mr. Ford's advisers had anticipated. Many outsiders, at the time of the economic summit meetings in September, insisted that the administration was mistaken in labeling inflation "the No. 1 economic problem," rather than recession. But even the gloom-and-doomers didn't pinpoint the spectacular collapse of the auto industry and the fast rise in unemployment.

The prospect of the moment is for a fourth consecutive decline in real Gross National Product for the three months ending Dec. 31—perhaps by 6 or 7 per cent. Unemployment is likely to pass 7 per cent early in 1975, and rise to at least 8 per cent by mid-year, according to Arthur M. Okun, former chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers under Lyndon Johnson.

That's scary enough. But unless the President and the Congress come up with a vigorous anti-recession program that consciously tags inflation as the No. 2 economic worry, economists like Okun see the economy continuing to go downhill all through 1975, with "double-digit" unemployment rates. Okun says that such a possibility may be only one in four, but that's enough of a chance to demand insurance against it.

What can be done? A beefed-up public service jobs program, and expanded unemployment insurance package is already being generated on Capitol Hill and will become part of the administration program.

But beyond that, many liberal and conservative economists have come to believe that a hefty tax cut has become an absolute necessity. Former assistant budget director Maurice Mann, now president of the San Francisco Home Loan bank board, has an intriguing idea built around "a negative tax surcharge." This would be a one-time reduction in personal income tax liabilities to be enacted before next April 15. For example, if the "negative tax surcharge" were 10 per cent, a taxpayer owing $5,000 to Uncle Sam next April would lop $500 off his bill.

Okun would try to direct a tax cut more specifically to lower income groups. Altogether, he would push for a cut of about $15 billion in the government tax-take.

Judging from past performance, such a program would be hard for President Ford and conservative advisers like Treasury Secretary William E. Simon and CEA Chairman Alan Greenspan to swallow.

Logically, they would have to abandon their firm position against any kind of direct intervention in wage and price decisions.

But time is growing short. That's the message that thoughtful Europeans—who once devoted all their concern to battling inflation—have been trying to convey to high officials here.

West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, on his recent visit here, urged President Ford and Mr. Simon to follow the lead of his country, which is cutting taxes, increasing public expenditure, and supplying a new tax credit to spur private investment. (The normally super-cautious Germans will have a budget deficit of their own in the $20 billion range next year).

As it looks now, the U.S. economy—the most important in the world—will be the most depressed of all of the 14 nations in the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) in 1975.

There is a question, says a recent OECD report, "whether the rest of the OECD could enjoy a sustained expansion of activity alongside such a weak picture for the United States." Translated, that means that unless Mr. Ford comes up with a bold program next month, there may be not only a protracted and serious recession here, but in the entire Western World.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

[From the Oil Daily, Dec. 4, 1974]
STILL NEEDED BUT LACKING: NATIONAL POLICY
(By Keith Fanshler)

We have talked in these columns so much of a U.S. energy policy and the urgent need to evolve and formulate a comprehensive, cohesive program, that the subject may seem time-worn, but it cannot be allowed to drop.

Looking at the subject in the perspective of what has taken place in key, important industry meetings late this year, the issue is more critical than ever. It is the industry's, and the government's, prime responsibility, and it is the public's imperative need for security and safety in its daily life and living.

The energy crisis persists, despite the unwillingness in many quarters of government and public to concede it. The fact that for the moment it is not immediately pressuring the public is really a fact somewhat unfortunate for working out a wise, appropriate formulation for creating such a policy, and implementing its early working.

Time continues to run, and accomplishment of this front, overall, is slow and sadly halting. True, some things of importance are in process of being worked out, but the broad, over-all, needed entity as a whole of a character required to do the job remains missing.

Increased supply of hydrocarbon energy is the basic needed element in the issue. Unfortunately, it remains a slow process, as the passing of years, since the energy problem began to take shape, testify. Meanwhile, efforts are being made, and they are good ones, to moderate the rates of demand. But this should be regarded for what it is—as a secondary and supplemental phase of the total problem and its solution.

Together, then, the need wise, effective programs of stimulating supply, strengthened and aided by a correlative, simultaneous activity of limiting demand.

If these two facets both prove productive in their progress, the broad, fundamental result will be a most constructive one and they together will set the nation far along the course it must pursue to render it secure against serious danger in this unsettled world.

But a sound policy is the heart and central factor in the whole matter. At this moment, it is unhappy but true that there is no assurance when an appropriate policy, strong and appropriate for the critical need, will be forthcoming. Certainly a look at Washington today is not such as to stimulate encouraging feelings on the subjects.

So the public and the nation are still waiting for a strong, appropriate national energy policy. The industry, too, inasmuch as much of its normal force and strength are now subject to government control, is likewise forced to await determinations which can come only from this same government.

It is unfortunate that many of these legal requirements are of a nature aimed at a viable, workable policy program, but are without the cohesion, the organization, the workability required by the nature of things to do the needed job and attain a momentum of force which would automatically build up added power as it proceeded, and thus achieve efficiency and operating productivity.

Thus under proper, able leadership and executive talent, working on a sound plan, this country could have a real national energy policy for the world to see and admire. When you say we have the worst form of government in the world, you have to add immediately: "—except all the others." Our government with all its faults can organize to do this great and basic job. Oil and gas men generally—the people of all energy industries, should bring every force to bear upon the public, so that this public in turn, shall demand that government produce a fundamental program and policy that will command respect and begin to get needed results. It will be good for the nation, it will contribute to betterment of world conditions and it will certainly help to sustain the position of our country for world leadership in this difficult national and international situation.

Needed: rational, national energy policy, and soon.

HON. CHET HOLIFIELD

HON. DON EDWARDS

OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I speak on this occasion with a great sense of poignancy, because, after many years of service to our country in the House of Representatives, the dean of the California delegation, CHET HOLIFIELD, is retiring. All of us in Congress and indeed all of the people of our country are losing the privilege of having the immense skill and devotion of this fine public servant as a Member of this body in the important years ahead.

Within a few days of my coming to the House in early 1963, I quickly learned to seek the counsel of CHET HOLIFIELD. I readily appreciated the high respect in which he was held by his colleagues, and so I wasted no time in trying to learn from this distinguished man. Mr. HOLIFIELD shared his expertise with me graciously and willingly. There was never a problem I could not take to him for guidance.

I think it accurate to state that the California delegation, the largest in the House, under the leadership of Dean HOLIFIELD has worked harmoniously and enthusiastically for the best interests of our State. Time after time Dean HOLIFIELD would call the delegation into emergency session to find the solution to an acute problem facing California. That we were successful in many instances is a great credit to our dean.

Others will speak of CHET HOLIFIELD's accomplishments. They are major and impressive. He always fought for programs to help the poor and the elderly. His devotion to individual rights, due process, and privacy is a special star in his crown.

It is not possible to talk about CHET HOLIFIELD without paying tribute to his partner of many years, our friend and his beloved wife, Cam. Cam made it possible for CHET to reach the highest pinnacles of achievement with her steady and loving support, with her warm understanding of the huge problems he faced, and her bravery and cheerfulness in times of disappointment and tragedy.

Mr. Speaker, I feel confident that CHET and Cam Holifield are not retiring from public life. I pray that they will return often to Capitol Hill and share again their friendship and wisdom with us. My best wishes go with them.

December 20, 1974

December 20, 1974

THE AMERICAN-ISRAEL FRIENDSHIP LEAGUE

HON. EDWARD I. KOCH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. KOCH. Mr. Speaker, the American-Israel Friendship League, located in my congressional district, is an organization dedicated to the promotion and development of mutual friendship between the people of the United States and the people of the State of Israel through the interchange of cultural, educational, artistic, and scientific knowledge between both democracies. At a time when the only democracy in the Middle East has been effectively excluded from the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization—UNESCO—the avowed purposes and goals of the American-Israel Friendship League take on even greater significance.

Mr. Speaker, I have often voiced my belief that the progress and security of Israel are in the highest national interests of the United States. While on occasion differences may arise between the United States and Israel, they do not affect the basic relationship between the people of both countries—a relationship based on the fundamental commitment to freedom and democracy.

The American-Israel Friendship League is a nonprofit, nonsectarian organization whose membership is open to all who subscribe to its principles, irrespective of their race, creed, or religion. For the interest of our colleagues, many of whom have associated themselves with the league, I am appending a list of the distinguished sponsors of the league:

AMERICA-ISRAEL FRIENDSHIP LEAGUE, INC.
President, Hon. Herbert Tenzer.
Vice Presidents: Harold Bernstein, Hon. Arthur Markewich, Hon. Abraham J. Multer.
Chairman of the Board, Dr. Harris J. Levine.
Associate Chairman, Raymond M. Patt.
Secretary, Herman Z. Quittman.
Counsel, Nathaniel S. Rothenberg.
Treasurer, Mike Funk.
Chairman, Finance Committee, Norman G. Levine.
Assistant Secretary, Mel Parness.

HONORARY SPONSORS

Hon. Carl Albert, Speaker of the House of Representatives.
Hon. Birch Bayh, U.S. Senator—Indiana.
Hon. Abraham D. Beame, Mayor—City of New York.
Hon. Emanuel Celler, Former Chairman, House Judiciary Committee.
Max M. Fisher, Industrialist.
Hon. Gerald R. Ford, Vice President of the United States.
Hon. Arthur J. Goldberg, Former Justice, U.S. Supreme Court.
Hon. Hubert H. Humphrey, Former Vice President, U.S. Senator—Minnesota.
Hon. Henry M. Jackson, U.S. Senator—Washington.
Mrs. Charlotte Jacobson, Chairman, World Zionist Org.—American Section, Inc.
Hon. Jacob K. Javits, U.S. Senator—New York.
Hon. Kenneth B. Keating, U.S. Ambassador to Israel.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

I. L. Kenen, Chairman, American Israel Public Affairs Com.
Philip M. Klutznick, Former Ambassador—U.N.

Hon. Louis J. Lefkowitz, Attorney General—State of N.Y.
Hon. Arthur Levitt, Comptroller—State of N.Y.

General S. L. A. Marshall, Michigan.
Hon. Thomas J. Meskill, Governor—Connecticut.

Rabbi Israel Miller, President, American Zionist Federation.

Hon. Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr., Majority Leader—U.S. House of Representatives.

Hon. A. Philip Randolph, President, A. Philip Randolph Institute.

Hon. Ogden R. Reid, U.S. Congress—New York.

Hon. Abraham D. Ribicoff, Senator—Connecticut.

Hon. Nelson A. Rockefeller, Former Governor—State of N.Y.

Hon. Peter W. Rodino, Jr., Chairman, House Judiciary Com.

Samuel Rothberg, President, State of Israel Bonds.

Bayard Rustin, Exec. Director—A. Philip Randolph Institute.

Dore Scharf, B'nai B'rith.

Hon. Hugh Scott, Minority Leader—U.S. Senate.

Jacob Stein, Chairman—Conf. of Presidents of Major American Jewish Org.

Hon. John B. Tunney, U.S. Senator—California.

Jack D. Weiler, Philanthropist and Civic Leader.

Elle Wiesel, Author.

Roy Wilkins, Executive Director—N.A.A.C.P.

Publications—Information, Ernest E. Barabash.

Art, Paul Sharon.

HORACE M. "BUCK" ALEXANDER

HON. GOODLOE E. BYRON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. BYRON. Mr. Speaker, recently Frederick County, Md., lost one of her most distinguished citizens, Mr. Horace M. "Buck" Alexander.

Buck Alexander served his county for almost 20 years as sheriff. He had been associated the past 7 years with the M. J. Grove Division of the Flintkote Co. in its sales department. He was one of Frederick County's most popular elected officials having also served 7 years in the Maryland House of Delegates.

Buck Alexander was also a great advocate of the Frederick Fair and he served for 17 years on the Agricultural Society choosing to retire last year as treasurer and financial clerk. A brief quote from the Frederick News sums up Buck's career and his standing with the people of Frederick County:

The name "Buck" Alexander became a real "household word" in Frederick County as this hearty, vigorous man, who enjoyed a rare love of people, engaged in numerous volunteer efforts and jobs that kept him among the people.

Buck Alexander will be greatly missed by his family, his friends, and the entire community in which he worked and engaged his talents for the betterment of all.

CLEAR THINKING ON OIL POLICY

HON. LES ASPIN

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Speaker, of all the shortages which plague this Nation, the shortage of clear-headed, insightful, nonpartisan analysis of the choices we face is perhaps the most serious.

One of the most reliable suppliers of this scarce resource is the public interest group called tax analysts and advocates.

Their weekly journal, Tax Notes, is a producing well of ideas. An example of the kind of product it supplies appeared in volume 2, No. 49, December 9, 1974.

I commend this estimate essay to the attention of all Members:

OIL AND TAXES OR SNAKE OIL AND ROCK OIL
(By Gerard M. Brannan)

The charade of government dealing with oil and profits is about played out this year but the show has been too successful to end its run for good. Thus, when the much-liberalized Ways and Means Committee gets down to work in the 94th Congress, we will hear again those tough speeches about windfall profits of oil companies and other speeches about the sanctity of profit incentives. However, it is a good bet that little effort will be spent to help the public understand what the policy options really mean.

THE PLOT

This essay is as much a drama review—or preview—as a policy analysis. Drama is an important art form and it may be helpful to view the anticipated debate as a drama.

To enjoy the presentation of "The Perils of Petroleum," you must pay attention to two important counter-plots along with the main story line. In addition, you must avoid getting bogged down with some spurious counterplots or red herrings.

The main story, of course, is whether or not Congress will repeal percentage depletion, that symbol of perfidy to tax reformers Congress came as close this year as it ever has to repealing the 22% percentage depletion allowance for oil and gas. However, the effort fell short as strategists both for and against repeal disagreed among themselves over whether this was the time to get the best deal for their side.

The repealers worked to end percentage depletion in one fell swoop, retroactive to last January 1. However, many of them were more than willing to settle for a three-year phase-out that would begin in 1974. That phaseout formula was contained in the bill (H.R. 17488) reported by the Ways and Means Committee to the House floor November 26. Complete repeal of percentage depletion for oil and gas will mean additional tax revenues of $2 billion to $3 billion a year.

COUNTERPLOT NO. 1: PRICE CONTROL

Presently, about 60% of U.S. produced oil is called old oil (i.e. roughly, oil from fields up to 1972 production levels). The price of this oil is controlled at $5.25. The other 40%, called new oil, sells at the market price, which is about $11.00. (The delivered price of imported oil is the marginal supply that controls the price.)

The price control authority under which oil prices are regulated is due to expire February 29, 1975. Such guessing as I have heard has been that the price control authority will be extended. The more interesting question is "What will be the price control level?" It is within the power of the Ford Administration to make the oil companies immune from the bite of repealing percentage depletion on old oil by raising the price ceiling to $6.25 (which should add about 2¢ to the price of gasoline).

Considering President Ford's pathological hang-up about the price of gasoline, it seems likely that the ceiling price on old oil will not be increased. No price increase, which would be a judgment that oil companies could eat the tax increase, would raise another interesting question: "If profits on old oil are so far that a 50¢ per barrel tax increase can be absorbed, why was the price ceiling raised as high as $5.25 in the first place?" (The price was about $3.50 in early 1973.)

The important point is that the Congressional deliberation about taxing oil companies ought to be evaluated in the light of answers to questions about what is going to happen to price control.

I will bet a tank of gas that all we'll get on this subject is some bovine excrement about "considering the matter later."

COUNTERPLOT NO. 2: THE WINDFALL PROFITS TAX

One of the more remarkable goodies in the current Ways and Means oil tax package oil profits tax package is a "windfall profits tax" based on the sale price of oil. This sounds like severe treatment of oil producers. The tax seems to rise to 85% on the part of the oil price above $6.50. This much follows a Treasury Department proposal but the committee added a wrinkle, one not very subtly suggested by former President Nixon. The wrinkle is that the windfall tax is rebated when the company invests enough in one or more of a long list of energy related activities. In 1975 the plowback credit is limited to about 3% of the windfall tax but thereafter the windfall tax is wiped out.

The point of this tax after 1975 is not clear at all. Possibly it is just a harmless snow job. A high windfall tax sounds tough. Rebate for investments sounds like we are providing incentives. There is some symbolism for liberals and conservatives alike.

There is, however, a more subtle result that deserves checking out. Under the windfall-tax-plowback-credit system, integrated oil companies will be in the position that, for them, new investments in the energy business will be almost free. There will also be the investment credit and accelerated depreciation incentives. Since selling energy resources must be the most profitable business in the country, it is not at all clear why extra investment incentives are necessary. If Congress insists on further subsidizing this investment, it is incomprehensible why the new subsidy should be available only to companies with windfall profits from producing crude oil.

This is just what occurs when the new subsidy is a reduction of the windfall profits tax. An unintegrated oil refiner gets none of this break because he has no crude oil profits. The integrated company will find that a new refinery is cheaper for it than it is for the unintegrated producer or the new company. This is a great system for preventing competition in the energy business.

RED HERRING NO. 1: FOREIGN OPERATIONS

I don't really expect the debate on oil profits taxes to spend much time on price control or this competition reducing nonsense of a plowback. I do expect endless yammering about some relative trivia. One is foreign oil profits. There are some relatively small defects of the present law in this area and the current bill deals with them, not magnificently but adequately. The fact of the matter is that the windfall profits are on domestic production, not foreign production.

RED HERRING NO. 2: SMALL DRILLERS

Another false trail in the debate will be the claims by "small drillers" for generous special treatment. The bill retains 15% percentage depletion for three years for the first 3,000 barrels a day, which is about 1.1 million barrels a year.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

In the first place, this is a ridiculous definition of small business. We are talking about receipts of nearly $10 million a year on the 3,000 barrel exemption.

More important, a small oil driller is better off than almost any other small business group in America. How many businesses have had their prices triple? We could debate the wisdom of extending new small business benefits to small businesses generally but to do it for the most prosperous small businesses of all, and then to define these favored children as having up to $10 million of income is just a rip-off.

A LOST OPPORTUNITY

What is so sad about the prospective debate on oil profits and tax reform is that there will be so much trivia and so little basics.

The general directions of a sound policy are quite clear as soon as one realizes that price control is a kind of tax. Telling an oil producer that he must sell $11 oil for $5.25 is, from the producer standpoint, like letting him sell the oil for $11.00 and imposing a tax of $5.75.

When the tax is disguised as price control, the benefit, just like a subsidy is distributed to oil consumers under the rule that the more oil you use the more subsidy you get. There could hardly be a more insane way to deal with an energy crisis than to pay people for using more energy. The rich get more benefit than the poor; the wastrel gets more than the saver.

Among other things this insane policy makes a mockery of our alleged international policy of trying to bring down oil prices. Americans buy oil products that reflect an average price of some new or imported oil costing about $11 a barrel and some $5.25 old oil. The oil consumer is then paying prices which reflect an average crude price of around $6.50 a barrel. This leads to more consumption of oil products than we would have if the OPEC price of about $11.00 (delivered) were built into product prices. The only thing that will bring oil prices down is inability to sell all the output at high prices. The U.S., by reducing prices to its consumers is protecting the OPEC cartel. Kissinger should sue Ford for non-support.

A final stupidity of the system is that by keeping the average oil price down we are discouraging oil substitutes. Sales of new oil can bring a price of about $10 but energy from solar or geothermal sources must compete with oil that sells at an average price of about $8.

RESULT: A TRAGEDY

Finally this price control system with its two prices for crude oil requires a highly complex system of business regulation to let each crude oil purchaser balance shares of high and low price oil.

Why does the Congress put up with this price control system? It sees price control as dealing with two problems:

Windfall profits for oil companies.

Burden on consumers from higher prices. These problems can be solved more intelligently by taxing oil companies (without the plowback nonsense) and distributing the tax proceeds to consumers in some such way, as a refundable income tax credit, that would not increase with consumption. The Ways and Means tax bill merely scratches the surface.

With a President who apparently files into a rage at the mention of higher gasoline prices there does not seem to be any hope for leadership from the Administration.

I started this essay as a drama review. My conclusion is that the show is a tragedy as well as a comedy but it is more tragic than comic.

December 20, 1974

(NOTE.—The views expressed in this article are those of the author and do not represent a position on legislation by Tax Notes or its publisher, Tax Analysts and Advocates.)

LESSONS OF HOOVER ERA APPEAR TO BE FORGOTTEN

HON. WALTER FLOWERS

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. FLOWERS. Mr. Speaker, many of my constituents have been complaining about the lack of leadership from the Ford administration in solving the problems of inflation and recession, and I agree with them.

President Ford does not seem to recognize the seriousness of our economic problems. Just last week, he said we are not in an economic crisis, and he defined a crisis as something that demands immediate and drastic action.

But there is no doubt in mind that we already have reached a crisis and that immediate and drastic action is overdue. Thousands of Americans are losing jobs each week, more and more plants are shutting down, the stock markets are seriously depressed, businesses are trimming capital spending programs, the auto and housing industries are disaster areas and the cost of living continues to climb sharply.

On top of this, the Ford administration has still not put forth a comprehensive program to conserve the energy resources we have now or to develop new energy resources.

President Ford must level with the American people about the state of the economy. He will find us willing to cooperate and sacrifice to cure our economic ills. We need decisive action, not aimless talk.

We must avoid the kind of Executive impotence which helped plunge this Nation into the depression of the 1930's. That point was made well by Dr. R. M. Havens, professor emeritus of economics at the University of Alabama, in a letter to the editor of the Tuscaloosa News, my hometown newspaper. I would like to share that letter with my colleagues:

LESSONS OF HOOVER ERA APPEAR TO BE FORGOTTEN

I have no desire to try to debate very complex economic problems in letters to the editor, but I feel that I must express my uneasiness when I see economists quoted on the front page of the Sunday Tuscaloosa News giving almost the same advice Herbert Hoover received from his economists in 1929.

Neither am I encouraged when I see President Ford following similar advice and then look at the stock market reports and the unemployment statistics.

Since I have been living on retirement income during the past four years, I do understand the seriousness of our inflation problem. On the other hand, I struggled through the depression years of the 1930s. Unemployment is not a "sacrifice" to belittle from a professor's comfortable office. We should remember that political democracy survived the German, French and other inflations that followed World War I, but began to collapse under the unemployment pressures of the depression decade.

December 20, 1974

I would be much happier if I could see our national government facing its economic problems and the international ramifications with some of the flexibility and intelligence shown by the New Deal in 1933.

Economic conditions never exactly repeat themselves, so past policies are never completely appropriate. But let us remember the lessons of the past as we face the difficulties of the future.

R. M. HAVENS,
Professor Emeritus of Economics.

SOUTH VIETNAM'S UNSEEN WAR

HON. PETER H. B. FRELINGHUYSEN

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. Speaker, I commend to the attention of my colleagues a thoughtful article by Crosby S. Noyes in this evening's Washington Star. Unfortunately too many of us these days give the appearance of disinterest in the fate of a gallant and beleaguered people, the South Vietnamese.

The article follows:

SOUTH VIETNAM'S UNSEEN WAR (By Crosby S. Noyes)

The news from Vietnam—in case anybody notices anymore—is bad again. The military pressure is being stepped up; casualties on both sides in the last few days have numbered close to 3,000—highest since the major offensives of 1968 and 1972.

It is incredible how quickly this war—once a central obsession of all Americans, however they felt about it—has been consigned to oblivion. It is almost as if we really believed "peace with honor" was achieved two years ago. If we think about the war at all these days, it is with irritation that pleas for our support are still being received from Saigon.

Indeed, this is the way that the war in Southeast Asia has always been looked on by most people, including large numbers of Vietnamese. Those who have opposed it saw it as an extension of Western colonialism—first by the French in the wake of World War II, subsequently by the Americans.

It was, in short, a war of the West against the East, of white people against Asians. Once the West pulled out, it was confidently predicted, the whole thing would be over. The South Vietnamese, dragged into fighting for their Western patrons, would quickly collapse and make peace with their fellow Asians. In the general view, the Communists would speedily triumph.

Well, it hasn't worked out that way so far and it may not work out that way for a long time to come. And the question that Americans now have to ask themselves—really for the first time—is how far they are willing to go in helping people defend themselves against aggression, without any direct American involvement.

A good many Americans might have preferred to have it otherwise. A quick collapse of the Saigon government would have borne out the contention that it was tyrannical and unrepresentative of the people of South Vietnam. It would have proved the futility and wrongness of our intervention in Southeast Asia and the inevitability of a Communist victory. It also would have relieved us of a number of obligations that, in a time of recession, retrenchment and other preoccupations, are becoming increasingly unpopular.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Certainly, the governments in Hanoi and Peking have counted on collapse. They, too, have consistently presented the war as one of Asians against Western imperialism—the puppets and lackeys in Saigon doomed to the rubbish heap of history. The departure of American forces two years ago was the signal for a huge buildup of Communist forces in South Vietnam. Today that concentration of North Vietnamese power confronts South Vietnam with the greatest military threat it has faced so far.

The North Vietnamese have never doubted the truth of their cause or their propaganda. The old men in Hanoi and Peking have devoted their lives to the single-minded belief that they must prevail in the end and that only the pernicious wickedness of the imperialist powers has so far prevented their success. To achieve it, they are willing to sacrifice as many of their young men as may be needed.

One may admire tenacity, but what of the people of South Vietnam, to say nothing of the rest of Southeast Asia? Is one still to suppose that this has been a phoney Western-inspired war without real substance except for sterile ideological differences—nothing that a sane man would die for if he had the choice?

The evidence is painfully clear—whether Americans like it or not, the South Vietnamese are still supporting their government and still fighting and dying as if they meant it. At some point, they must be recognized—and supported—as a gallant people who have suffered unspeakable brutalities at the hands of their Northern brethren and who have fought back with a tenacity that few Westerners will ever be able to understand.

The American Congress in its wisdom, of course, can do as it pleases. Having washed its hands and its mind of Vietnam, it can withhold its support with entirely predictable consequences. The voters who know nothing of Vietnam or its people will object very little.

But if the Communists win in the end, the evidence is that they will have to do it the hard way over the dead bodies of many thousands of South Vietnamese who were crazy enough to want to live in freedom and who declined to surrender to naked aggression. It is a choice that no one in this flaccid and distraught nation can deny them.

KEN GRAY

HON. OMAR BURLESON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 16, 1974

Mr. BURLESON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to join with the many friends and colleagues of KEN GRAY to wish him the best as he retires from Congress.

We have known KEN for his energy and dedication to the work of the House of Representatives and will miss him from our midst.

KEN will pursue other activities, I know, which will be challenging and Ruth and I wish for him the best of all good things in the future.

HUMAN RIGHTS IN RUSSIA

HON. EDWARD J. DERWINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I have urged the United Nations Commission on Human Rights to speak up in defense of people in the U.S.S.R. who are suffering systematic and indescribable torture because of their religious beliefs.

I call the particular attention of the Members to the plight of Ukrainian Rite Catholics in Western Ukraine and Western Byelorussia, those in union with the Roman Catholic Church.

At this point I wish to insert as part of my remarks excerpts from a story carried by the Religious News Service on the subject of Soviet persecution of religion:

Anatoly (Krasnov) Levitin, a Russian Orthodox layman who was recently allowed to leave the Soviet Union, also mentioned the "persecution" of members of the "Truly Orthodox Church," and several outlawed churches—the Initiativniki unofficial Baptists, the Reformed Seventh-Day Adventists, the Pentecostals and Jehovah's Witnesses.

But the writer said "the most awful thing is the persecution of the . . . Uniates (Ukrainian Catholics) and members of the 'Truly Orthodox Church,' which has become the norm of life, does not evoke the slightest indignation. This unheard of savagery is blatantly committed, yet calls forth no protest."

Tracing the history of the Ukrainian Catholic Church from the time of its unification with Rome in 1596, Levitin noted that restrictions and persecutions have followed the "Uniates" throughout their history, under the Russian Czar and under the communist government.

In 1946, he pointed out, upon the final reunification of the Western Ukraine and Western Byelorussia with the USSR "the Stalin regime undertook the persecution" of the Uniates and arrested the head of Ukrainian Catholic Church, Metropolitan (now Cardinal) Joseph Slipyi of Lvov and six other bishops.

He observed that a resolution of reunification of Ukrainian Catholics with Russian Orthodoxy was formulated and forced upon the Uniates. Priests who refused to comply were arrested, and those clergy who outwardly resisted the resolution were charged with treason and sentenced to 25 years in prison.

"No judicial inquiry was conducted," said Levitin. "All repressions were carried out through a special committee of the KGB, Soviet secret police."

"If we take into account that together with the clergy, students in the Uniate seminaries, parishioners, and the most active lay people were punished, then it is not surprising that the number of victims soon reached . . . 300,000 people," the 59-year-old dissident said.

Despite a series of persecutions over the years and the imprisonment and death of most Uniate bishops (although Cardinal Slipyi was released in 1962 after 17 years in prison and allowed to go to Rome), he said "the campaign to destroy the Uniates failed."

Today, Levitin noted, 80 Uniate priests function almost openly in Lvov alone. "They perform in their homes the Divine Service (liturgy) and, upon request, religious rites (of various kinds). Three Uniate bishops function in the underground. As soon as one dies or is arrested, another is immediately consecrated."

Levitin said the communist authorities are "obliged to tolerate this situation since they seem to feel that they cannot risk again a policy of mass repressions and the arrest of individuals, fines, and short-term imprisonment (15 days in jail for taking part in a liturgy) do not bring any results."

"All this indicates that the Uniates in the Western Ukraine and Western Byelorussia is a broad national movement," he said. "Its persecution constitutes not only religious repression, but also an infringement of the national rights of Western Ukrainians."

Stating that if commemorating the Pope during a Divine Liturgy and the recognition of him as head of the Church is a crime, Levitin said it becomes "incomprehensible why Latin Rite Catholics are not persecuted."

He said the tragic impact of the situation on thousands of human souls, "beaten and broken by the violation of their consciences," is further aggravating tensions between the Ukrainian and Russian peoples.

"It behooves the U.N. Commission," he asserted, "to come to the defense of the persecuted Uniates. This is a matter of elementary humanity."

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that this is just the tip of the iceberg, but I take this opportunity in commenting on this subject to emphasize the need for foolproof provisions of any agreement made with the Soviet Union. It may also be necessary for us to question the practicality of Secretary Kissinger's pursuit of détente.

Within the last 48 hours we have news stories of the Soviets raising objections to a supposed agreement they had reached with Secretary Kissinger on the question of Soviet Jewish emigration from the U.S.S.R. to Israel.

Many of the Members know of the recent persecution of Ukrainian historian Valentyn Moroz, who has been conducting a hunger strike. May I also remind everyone of the grudging release by the Soviets of Simas Kudirka, which was achieved only after the personal interest expressed by President Ford.

Last but not least, let us keep in mind that in dealing with the Soviet Union, whether it be on political, economic, cultural or even on the athletic competition level, we are dealing with a police state mentality and utter disregard for ethics and principles we take for granted and that we must not jeopardize the security of our Nation by wishful thinking over Soviet intentions or practices.

THAD DULSKI

HON. WILLIAM (BILL) CLAY
OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity we have today in setting aside time to pay a special tribute to THAD DULSKI.

His many years of distinguished service will not go unnoticed. I am pleased that I had the opportunity to come to know him personally these past 2 years as a member of his committee. As chairman of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee he has provided us with guidance and leadership.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Federal employees will long be indebted to him. He has laboriously sought to improve their benefits—be it health insurance, wage increases, retirement benefits, or better relations between labor and management.

Members of the committee will deeply miss him but I know we all wish him well in the years ahead.

HENRY LUECK OF KANSAS

HON. WILLIAM R. ROY

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. ROY. Mr. Speaker, a distinguished Kansan, Henry Lueck of Netawaka, has retired after 42 years in the grain business.

As owner and operator of "a country elevator," Henry Lueck earned the respect and friendship of his fellow citizens in the community. I have valued his advice during my service in the Congress.

Any words of mine in deserved praise of Henry Lueck would pale by comparison with those of his friends and neighbors in Jackson County and the surrounding area. And so, I wish to insert in the RECORD, and call to the attention of my colleagues in the House, the following editorial:

HENRY LUECK

The retirement this week of Henry Lueck with the sale of the Lueck Grain Company leaves a great big hole in the Jackson county business community that will not be quickly or easily filled. Hank Lueck has been a man whose interest in his business has been matched by his concern for his town and his country, both of which are rich in the fruits of worthwhile endeavors with which he was associated.

Hank's business career at the Lueck Grain Company has spanned 42 years. When he was only 19, an age when many of his contemporaries were still in school or hanging around the drug store soda fountain, he started the Lueck Grain Company in an old elevator which burned nearly 40 years ago. The growth of the company to the size it was this week when sold testify both to Hank's business acumen and his reputation for fair dealing with his farm customers.

This week in relating that he will be helping out at the elevator through the upcoming harvest season, Hank said he will no longer be coming to work at 7 a.m. and staying at the elevator until 11 p.m. These are the kind of hours he has kept, and one of the reasons is that he has never been too busy to put aside his own affairs for a few minutes or few hours to help in some kind of worthwhile community project.

His activities have been legion and it would be futile to try to recount them all here. He has been a tireless booster for his hometown, Netawaka, and has been involved in many projects for the improvement of the community. He has been a faithful member of his church and a Sunday School teacher for years.

Since his earliest years in business he has been an active member of the Holton Rotary Club which he has served as president and in many other important capacities. Only a year ago, he headed the campaign which raised the funds needed to insure the construction of an extended care nursing home for the county.

December 20, 1974

His influence has extended beyond the boundaries of his own county. He has held major offices in both the Kansas and National Grain Dealers Associations. For all of his adult life he has been a tireless worker in the Democrat party. Well known locally for his leadership as county Democrat chairman for years, he is equally recognized for his work for his party in district and state affairs.

It has been said, "Everyone talks about the weather, but no one does anything about it." The world we live in is like that, too. It is easy to find any number of people who can tell us what is wrong with our life and times, but those who are willing to do something to change them are few and far between. Hank Lueck has been such a man. He has always been ready to give his personal effort, and money as well, for anything that would improve Netawaka, Jackson county, the state of Kansas or his country. His host of friends wish him happiness in a well-earned retirement and rejoice that he will spend it among them.

THE LIFEBOAT ETHIC

HON. LEO J. RYAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, for years now, the whole world has been developing an increasing awareness of the potential disaster that will be faced if we continue to grow in population and to deplete the world's natural resources. Malthus spoke of it in the 19th century. Dr. Paul Ehrlich of Stanford has referred to the "population bomb" as more horrible to contemplate than the thermonuclear bomb. The late Gov. Adlai Stevenson referred to our tiny spaceship called Earth, and the whole world has now seen our small and fragile planet from the distance of space because of photographs taken by our astronauts.

We are all the victims already of the energy shortage because there are too many people drawing upon a newly limited resource of Earth called petroleum. We now pay too much for food such as sugar because of world supply imbalances caused by population growth and inadequate world supply and distribution systems. How much worse can it get? And for whom?

The enclosed article is most significant for at least one reason. A name has been given to the moral problem created by this massively complex subject. It is referred to as the lifeboat ethic. Like so many analogies, it is imperfect. But I believe the phrase will become as important in the rest of this decade as the word "ecology" became in the sixties. I commend the subject matter and urge you to consider the contents:

"LIFEBOAT ETHIC" SUGGESTED FOR UNITED STATES

(By Ronald Kotulak)

"I believe that those of us who will make our exists in the next decade or so may say, 'I lived in the most satisfying period in human history—the period from 1900 to the present.'"

Implicit in these words of Dr. Edward G. Rietz, chairman of the Chicago section of the American Chemical Society, is science's growing gloom about the years to follow this "most satisfying period."

December 20, 1974

Despite the horrors of world wars and nuclear weapons, scientists have until recently been generally optimistic about the future. But the voices of doom are being heard with increasing frequency and volume.

They are not coming from wild-eyed, long-haired, robed fanatics carrying placards proclaiming the end of the world tomorrow. The modern doomsayers are sober, respected, responsible scientists who are warning us that the world as we know it is coming to an end. Fairly soon, now.

HUMAN TIDAL WAVE

What they see is a devastating human tidal wave, perhaps some years away but nevertheless approaching at an inexorable pace.

The twofold problem, simply stated, is this: First the population of the world is growing too fast—each year there are 75 million more mouths to feed; second, the demand for food, fuel, and natural resources is outstripping the earth's ability to provide them. We are on a collision course with disaster.

Most experts agree we are in serious trouble. They differ only in their estimates of how severe the problem will be. Some predict catastrophe; others believe the problem is tough but still solvable.

At the very least, it appears, we are in for some profound changes.

"By the 1990s, I suspect, we will be a society almost 180 degrees different from what we are today," says Dr. Glenn T. Seaborg, former chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission.

"I see us in 1994 as a highly disciplined society, with behavior self-modified by social and physical conditions already being generated today. The permissiveness, violence, self-indulgence and material extravagance that seem to be some of the earmarks of today will not be characteristic of that society."

To many experts, one of the most unsettling things is that few ordinary citizens realize we are in a severe bind. The idea generally is dismissed in America because it simply seems preposterous in our affluent culture. And in the underdeveloped countries, where the problem is the most severe, there appears to be a general helplessness, a total inability to cope with it.

Our current oil shortage will be a blessing in disguise if it wakes up Americans to shortages that lie ahead for us in food and natural resources. Because we soon will be faced with some awfully hard choices.

LIFEBOAT ETHIC

Some of these excruciating decisions may now be upon us, says Dr. Garrett Hardin, professor of human ecology at UC Santa Barbara.

In one of the most disturbing suggestions made so far, Dr. Hardin says we must adopt a "lifeboat ethic" in America. The function of a lifeboat, of course, is to save lives in the event of a disaster.

Suppose a ship sinks and there are 1,000 people swimming for their lives—but only one lifeboat. When 50 people climb into the lifeboat, it is filled to capacity. Perhaps it will hold 5 or 10 more people if they are jammed in. But eventually a point is reached at which the lifeboat will sink if one more person struggles to climb aboard.

Hence the lifeboat ethic: Those who have managed to get aboard face the terrible and agonizing task of pushing away the others, who are doomed to drown.

Each country is its own lifeboat, Dr. Hardin says. The question: Is it possible for the more fortunate nations to help the less fortunate? The answer is no, Hardin says, because of the great birth rate of the latter group.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

About 72% of the world's people are poor. The population in impoverished countries increases by more than 2% a year, by only 8% in the U.S. So poverty is increasing. Of the children who will constitute the next generation throughout the world, 88% will be born poor, Dr. Hardin believes.

The humanitarian impulse is for the "have" countries to help the "have nots." But if international granaries were set up and all the grain of the world were deposited in them, the starving countries would simply empty them.

In the end, Hardin says, the rich countries would fall by the wayside as they too became poor. Where there is no control of population, it is not possible to share the wealth; only poverty can be shared.

IMMIGRATION ISSUE

What about unlimited immigration from poor countries to rich countries? Such immigration would only move the ecological load; America, the richest, would become poorer. Our land would be ruined faster and our grandchildren would become "have nots."

Legal immigration to America is about 400,000 a year, with another 600,000 people entering illegally, Hardin notes, wondering if it is not time to ask if we are wise to allow so many to enter each year.

"So long as nations multiply at different rates, survival requires that we adopt the ethics of the lifeboat," he says. "A lifeboat can hold only so many people."

"There are more than 2 billion wretched people in the world—10 times the population of the U.S. It is literally beyond our ability to save them all. And tomorrow there will be more."

"Both international granaries and lax immigration policies must be rejected if we are to save something for our grandchildren."

Dr. Hardin is not alone in his chilling assessment of the world problems. Why are the experts so worried?

NO. 1 PROBLEM

The obvious, overriding problem is population. The earth now supports 3.8 billion people, two thirds of whom are impoverished. By the year 2000 there will be 7 billion people.

There are not enough riches in the earth to bring this many people up to the level of affluence that we now enjoy in America. And at the current rate of increase, the population will swell to 30 billion in 100 years. If all of the earth's wealth was equally distributed, all would live in abject poverty.

Perhaps our troubles are due to man, the planetary disease, says Dr. Ian L. McHarg of the University of Pennsylvania, an expert on ecological planning.

"Man is an epidemic, multiplying at a superexponential rate, destroying the environment upon which he depends and threatening his own extinction. He treats the world as a storehouse existing for his delectation; he plunders, rapes, poisons, and kills this living system, the biosphere, in ignorance of its workings and its fundamental value," McHarg says.

The second big factor is the limited supply of earth's riches—food, fuel, and natural resources.

The world already is walking a famine tightrope, says Dr. J. George Harrar, president emeritus of the Rockefeller Foundation and principal architect of the "green revolution," the research effort that developed grain hybrids exceptionally responsive to fertilizers. The only thing preventing a massive famine now, he notes, is exported food—primarily from America.

Three countries are acting as a buffer between starvation and life for much of the world. The United States exports 65 million tons of grain, Canada 17 million tons and Australia 8 million tons. All other nations are food importers. Twenty-five years ago, most areas of the world exported food.

"This is a situation of dangerous dependence and one that could result in massive famine if there were one or two major crop failures in North America," says Dr. Harrar. Climatologists anticipate that, based on the cyclic nature of the weather, North America could well have a severe drought in the near future.

"I'm scared," admits Dr. Harrar. "We could have a lot of starvation by 1980. It is unrealistic to think that this could not happen."

COMPOUND INTEREST

We are attempting to deal with finite supplies or resources in the face of what appears to be infinite human potential for procreation. Our numbers are increasing like compound interest, and unless it is possible to stabilize world population through prompt and measurable progress toward zero population growth, the ultimate result can only be chaos, Harrar warns.

Catastrophic levels of population will be reached in the near future in some nations, Dr. Harrar says—those in which hunger, misery and disadvantage are already long established and persistent, with little apparent hope for a better future.

"The facts are that the world, in its present state of technology and with its present resources, cannot hope to support in dignity a population of 10 to 15 billion by the end of the next 50 years," he says.

"If these numbers do occur because we are unsuccessful in stabilizing populations, the least result will be severely reduced standards of living worldwide. But for millions, this will undoubtedly mean chronic malnutrition and starvation."

American food production is running at near capacity. Most Americans already have felt the effects of the squeeze. Idle croplands here have run out, and the price of major food commodities has just about tripled since 1960. The Energy Crisis will further exacerbate the world food crisis by sending the price of fertilizers and gasoline for farm machinery soaring.

GRAIN RESERVES

World reserves of grain, man's most important food source, are down to only 29 days' supply, compared to 69 days in 1970. About 51% of man's energy is derived from the direct consumption of grain, mostly rice and wheat. Add to this 13% from beans, peas, lentils and soybeans, and the total of man's energy derived from seeds of plants amounts to 64%.

As the world food problem gets worse, meat may become a rare item on the menu. Five people can be supported by directly consuming the same grain that would have to be fed to livestock as a source of meat for one.

Besides stopping the world population explosion, maximum efforts are needed to increase crop production, Dr. Harrar says. We cannot afford yields of 5 to 10 bushels of wheat per acre in one country and 40 to 50 in another when both could produce equally.

"An organized, integrated plan of action involving all nations could, through improvements in conventional agriculture, at least double annual world food production within a reasonable period of years," he says.

The United States, still a seller of food, has become a buyer of natural resources. The National Research Council notes that this country is almost completely dependent on foreign sources for 88 of the 74 nonenergy mineral commodities essential for a modern industrial society.

In 1970, the U.S. imported all of its primary requirements for chromite, columbium, mica, rutile, tantalum and tin more than 90% of its aluminum, antimony, cobalt, manganese, and platinum; more than half of its asbestos, beryl, cadmium, fluorspar, nickel and zinc; and more than a third of its iron ore, lead and mercury.

The cost of the imports is tremendous. The need to import raises serious questions not only in areas of national security (regarding the kind of blackmail the Arabs are using with oil) but in trade deficits as well; it could catapult the U.S. into bankruptcy.

In 1970 the country exported $5 billion worth of minerals and imported $9 billion worth for a deficit of $4 billion. At the present rate, the deficit in the year 2000 could grow to more than $60 billion, with more than half of the nation's raw materials coming from foreign lands—if we can get them.

LOWER-GRADE ORE

In a little more than 100 years of industrialization, we have arrived at the point where we can see the end of high-grade raw materials. U.S. steel mills, for example, are supplied in large part with materials that 20 years ago wouldn't have been counted as ore.

In the 1920's, copper mines weren't worked unless they had 5 to 30% copper. Today a mine appears attractive with only .5 per cent copper.

Anyone seeking reassurance in worldwide reserves of natural resources and fuels can forget it. Of the 20 minerals most commonly used in industrialized nations, only 11 will still be available in the world by the turn of the century, says Dr. Preston Cloud, the University of California geobiologist who headed the National Academy of Science's study on the national materials policy.

By the year 2042 we can count on only eight of the 20 commodities for the world, maybe three for the U.S. (molybdenum, perhaps iron, and coal).

Of course, there are huge undiscovered mineral and petroleum deposits in the earth. But even if there were five times the known amounts, it wouldn't make any appreciable difference in the long run if the population keeps growing.

For example, the world's iron resources could last 240 years at our present rate of use. But given the population growth and the increased demand for iron, the iron reserves will last only 93 years. Even if there were five times the known reserves, given the increasing population, the iron would last only 173 years.

The world's known petroleum reserves will last 31 years at the rate we used them in 1973. But at our present rate of growth, they will last only 20 years. Five times the known reserves would last but 50 years at our present rate of growth.

What this means is that America, the most affluent, luxurious and materialistic society ever known, may be the last good-time society.

"The American life-style, insofar as it depends upon materials, is changing and will continue to change in the near future as the nation pays the deferred social costs of past consumption and inequities in distribution and begins to calculate the costs of depletion, replacement or nonrenewable resources and environmental restoration and protection," says the National Academy of Science.

After studying the ominous prospects, the academy's national commission on materials policy said we must reexamine these commonly held beliefs: that natural resources can be used in whatever amounts are needed to meet public demand, that increases in production and consumption are measures of progress and the well-being of society, and that this cannibalistic growth should continue.

GUIDED GROWTH

Instead, the commission said, we should develop a new ethical concept of the environment as a finite resource belonging to all; we must guide economic growth, including the redirection of production and consumers' demands, and make laws to ensure these changes.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Because the key issue in the prospects for man's future is population control, Dr. Cloud says, there should be two new fundamental human rights:

1.—The right of the fetus not to be conceived, or if conceived, not born, in a world where its existence is likely to be precarious, threaten the security of its siblings or increase the hazard to the general welfare.

2.—The right of society as a whole, through democratic processes, to influence the size of populations in ways and directions that best assure a continuing flexibility of options—including access to such resources of food, clean air and water, essential raw materials, and space as best assure a meaningful existence.

Should voluntary measures not show good prospects of moving toward balanced populations within another decade, stronger measures should be seriously and democratically considered, Cloud maintains. After all, he adds, it is not such a large step from regulating the number of wives or husbands a person may have to regulating the number of children—and much more is at stake.

The doomsaying goes on. Dr. Kingsley Dunham, director of the Institute of Geological Sciences of Great Britain and one of the world's top authorities on ore deposits, says the world faces the prospect of mass death through famine and pollution within a few decades unless population and economic growth are somehow limited.

"In the past 20 years, we have experienced two global fears: the first, of nuclear and thermonuclear weapons by which mankind could totally destroy itself; and the second, of deterioration of the environment, producing the same result but more slowly and painfully," he says. "We seem likely to be called on to limit personal desires for the general good."

One of the gloomiest pictures of the earth's future was painted by scientists from six other nations and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology who used a computer to figure the relationships between population increase, agricultural production, natural resources depletion, industrial output and pollution generation. At our present rates of economic and population growth, the scientists concluded, the world will collapse around the year 2100.

Besides limiting population and stabilizing economic growth, man is going to have to learn to live in balance with nature.

He will have to learn to reuse his goods so that all essential materials remain in use. Dr. Seaborg says we will have to have a "recycle" society.

"By this I do not mean simply one in which beer cans and Coke bottles are all returned to the supermarket, but one in which virtually all materials used are reused infinitely," he says.

We are perhaps more responsible for the future of mankind than any other generation. The problem is sheer numbers. More than 4,000 years ago, there probably were only about 200 million people on earth. By the end of this year, there will be close to 4 billion.

Some historians have compared our troubled times to those black days in the 14th century when the bubonic plague was rampant, when there were papal schisms and a breakdown of the medieval social and political system.

The end of mankind seemed at hand. Yet the crisis passed and was followed by Columbus and an age of exploration, the invention of the printing press, Copernicus and a new understanding of the universe, Michelangelo and an uplifting of man.

Such an experience tells us that man is adaptable and that his actions cannot be predicted. There could be a dramatic change almost overnight in birth control, with no couple having more than two children. There could be new inventions, new discoveries that could make more material goods available for more people without harming the earth.

December 20, 1974

FAREWELL TO THE HOUSE

HON. HUGH L. CAREY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. CAREY of New York. Mr. Speaker, December 31, I shall resign from the House of Representatives where I have tried to serve the people of the United States since January 3, 1961.

Overriding every other feeling I have is a profound sense of gratitude. My appreciation for the opportunity to serve there goes first to the people of New York and the borough of my birth and residence—Brooklyn, N.Y. My neighbors not only gave me a chance to serve them in this legislature but rewarded me and my family constantly. People of all faiths, races, origins, and ages gave us their friendship, and encouragement, and trust. They spoke candidly and kindly of their needs and services and when they did not agree they were considerate of the fact that in a democracy judgments are bound to differ.

It was through their support and inspiration that I was able to be part of this Nation's progress over the last 14 years.

By returning me to the House for seven terms, they gave me the opportunity to join with men and women of this body whom I regard as some of the finest human beings I shall ever know.

In this respect, I am especially grateful to my colleagues in both the House and Senate whose friendship and counsel has enabled me to participate in the making of our laws, to care for our people and to realize our opportunities and limitations.

I value each day that I spent in the Committees on Education and Labor, Interior and Insular Affairs, Ways and Means, and the Joint Economic Committee.

I shall not dwell upon any personal efforts in legislation because whatever we did in education or help for the poor and the aged in the years 1961 to 1970 is a chapter in which credit is due to many joint committee programs.

It was, of course, a memorable opportunity to serve under the leadership of the late Presidents Kennedy and Johnson and my beloved colleague from New York, Senator Robert F. Kennedy.

To have arrived in time to know and serve with Speakers Sam Rayburn and John McCormack and to have the support and friendship of Speaker CARL ALBERT and our majority leader TTP O'NEILL has been my good fortune.

I thank my colleagues who helped me whenever my own efforts were inadequate. There were many who have passed from this life. I particularly want to remember the late Hale Boggs, our majority leader. I was pleased to second his nomination and we suffered a tragic loss when he failed to return from a mission to the district of our other departed colleague Nick Begich of Alaska. The late John E. Fogarty was my friend and inspiration in the area of health and legislation for the aging. The chairman who gave me a chance and helped me pass bills for the poor, the handicapped, and those in need as well as in the area of aid to education was Adam Clayton Powell. He has earned his place in the annals. He paid his dues.

December 20, 1974

And I want to thank all my colleagues of the Committee on Ways and Means for their considerate and effective work on legislation like revenue sharing. Chairman WILBUR MILLS in my estimation must be remembered for his great contribution to the guidance of our committee and his compassionate efforts to improve our system of care for the elderly, the mentally retarded, and those in the welfare system as he tried to lead us in its reform.

I am delighted as I leave that my close friends of the New York delegation are united and more effective than ever. I want each Democrat and Republican of New York, my friends, as allies for our great State.

As I leave this honor to serve New York as its 51st Governor, I hesitate to give advice or counsel to a body which has ample resources of its own. But I say to my colleagues as I depart that I was enriched by the opportunity to serve in the greatest deliberative body in the world and that if we did not do everything right that only proved that as men and women we were fallible. But in trying to do our best I hold that we have made our country strong enough to help the weak and we have will among us to ward off any crisis or challenge.

I wish to also thank all the members of my staff in Brooklyn and in Washington. No compensation could possibly repay those men and women who performed so well despite the frustrations they encountered in dealing with a person with so few redeeming qualities in daily labor.

In the perilous days ahead I shall pray for my country to the God who guards us.

I particularly would recall that when tragedy beset my family I found solace in the sympathy of my friends in the Congress in a very special way.

I look forward to the opportunities to come to Congress on behalf of the Empire State as its Governor.

I know that whenever I view the Capitol of the United States where Congress sits and the people govern, I shall always hold the same feeling I had as a small boy, as a freshman Congressman and as one who worked here for 14 years—that feeling, as one looks at the building which is at the core of our democracy, is that it is after all a shrine, a living testament. It is a place where the love of the law and man's best hopes are joined as in no other place in the world.

God bless our country and our Congress. I have loved my days among you and I leave not with regret but with gratitude that I was here for a time.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

THE FORESIGHT OF MELVIN C. HOLM

HON. WILLIAM F. WALSH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, one of this country's most serious problems involves our inability to look into the future, our inability to anticipate future crises and deal with them before they arise. We always seem to govern by crisis. What this Nation needs is political and business leaders with foresight to begin seeking solutions now to the problems that we will encounter in the decades ahead.

I believe I am fortunate enough to know such a man, a man who is the chairman and chief executive officer of one of the United States largest corporations. I speak of Melvin C. Holm of the Carrier Corp., which is headquartered in my home area of Syracuse, N.Y.

An article in this month's edition of Allegheny Airlines' Flightline magazine best describes Mr. Holm's foresight and I would like to share that article with my colleagues:

MELVIN C. HOLM

When Melvin C. Holm, the chairman of the board and chief executive officer of the Carrier Corporation was named the 1973 Man of the Year by the National Management Association, he outlined two major challenges for the near future: protecting the environment and coping with the nation's energy problems.

Without sacrificing any comforts, Holm explained in an interview at his Syracuse offices, the energy costs of buildings could be reduced by 40 to 50 percent through such things as architecture and construction material and more energy efficient heating and cooling systems. While these would be initially more expensive, they would save money as energy rates continue to climb.

In the solid waste disposal area, Holm explained that the Carrier Corporation has proposed a massive Syracuse heating and cooling plant that will be self-supporting and fueled by burning most of the 1200 tons of solid waste produced by Onondaga County's (Syracuse) half million residents each day.

Because of the worldwide petroleum problem and the fact that no one expects energy to ever again be as cheap as it was before the Arab oil embargo, Holm stated that now, "we have to do a better job of conserving how we use energy in various forms and in designing products more efficiently."

Holm has seen the tremendous growth in the air conditioning industry in the nearly 40 years since he has joined the Carrier Corporation, especially in the growth of home air conditioning since the 1950's. Central air conditioning, alone, for example, grew from five percent of the American households in 1969 to 15 percent in 1973.

An up-through-the-ranks executive of the old school, Holm is a man who chooses his words carefully. A son of Finnish parents, his father an immigrant, his mother born in the United States, Holm is a stern, squarish man. His face has the old Scandinavian look of a man who makes his living fishing in the cold North seas. His hair is white with a yellowish tint, he has a full lip, closely-cropped mustache and speaks in a soft sometimes gravelly voice.

Born on a farm in the upper Michigan peninsula, the 58-year-old executive joined the Carrier Corporation in 1937 after a two-week job hunt in New York City. He had traveled east from his home in Iron River, Michigan, selling subscriptions to the now defunct Deineator magazine. In Washington, D.C., his Congressman helped find him a job with the Resettlement Administration, one of the New Deal agencies, where he worked at clerical tasks for two years and attended night business school.

Although he was never to earn a college degree, Holm continued his studies on a part-time basis after he joined the Carrier Corporation. "I had the greatest college in the world right here—the Carrier Corporation," he explained.

Holm rose through the ranks of the Corporation—assistant comptroller in 1946; comptroller, 1950; vice president, 1955; treasurer and chief financial officer, 1957; executive vice-president, assistant to the chairman and director, 1960; president, 1965; and board chairman and chief executive officer, 1968—as the firm grew to 25,630 employees in 32 manufacturing facilities in eight states and ten foreign countries.

With 80 percent of the firm's business in the indoor environment field, Holm is convinced that air conditioning is an accepted necessary part of the American standard of living. Equating it with the significance of having indoor plumbing for the first time in Northern Michigan and "not having to go out in the night to the 'John' wading waist deep in snow drifts," Holm said no one would want to again do without air conditioning.

"We already know and have known for some time that we can reduce the energy costs of buildings 40 or 50 percent by such things as careful architecture, design and planning and better construction materials, carefully designed heating and cooling systems and improved efficiency of the heating and cooling equipment itself," Holm said.

Three years ago, for example, one of the lowest cost items in the building operating budget was the energy for the central cooling system—typically 20 cents per square foot per year. This in comparison to a building's janitorial services which were 80 cents per square foot per year.

The only limitation to the corporation's business opportunities, Holm believes, is in the limitation of men, material and money. The business opportunities are growing as the energy costs continue to climb.

Carrier is the world's largest producer of air conditioning. Its products range from those for heavy industrial use to the complex equipment for Chicago's Sears Tower, the tallest building in the world, to small individual units, everything in air conditioning except auto air conditioning.

"Part of the solution to dealing with the energy crisis," Holm emphasized, "is in the very deep interest we have in using solid waste as a source of energy." He cited Carrier's involvement in a solid waste burning system in Nashville, Tennessee, where the clean incineration of unsorted trash and garbage is used to heat and air condition nearly 30 downtown buildings.

The system planned for Syracuse which the Carrier Corporation will equip and install is a much larger operation. More than 1,000 tons of solid waste will be combusted, producing enough energy for nearly 70 public buildings in the downtown area.

"Obviously land-fills are not the long-run answer for solid waste disposal," Holm said. "We will be able to produce steam at a lower cost than produced today with gas or oil and the future savings will be greater as fuel costs go up."

There is also a savings, he further explained, in the every-day growing expenses associated with land fill disposal. In addition to nobody wanting dumps or land fills in their neighborhoods, potential sites where garbage and trash are buried are further and further away, increasing transportation costs.

With a pound of average composition solid waste releasing about 5,000 BTU's of heat, a ton of such waste, Holm said, is as valuable as one-third of a ton of coal or 65 gallons of No. 2 fuel oil or 10,000 cubic feet of natural gas.

Since the supply of trash is considered to be inexhaustible, the overall fossil fuel expected to be saved by the Syracuse facility is estimated at 15 million gallons of oil a year. Since energy costs are expected to double in five years, the savings is obvious.

Holm said that solid waste burning systems which are used in Canada and Europe will cut disposal costs to half of what they are now in Syracuse. What is noncombustible, sterile ash and ferrous metals (glass is reduced to sand by the intense heat) will be reduced to 15 percent by weight and five percent by volume.

In his Management Man of the Year acceptance speech, Holm said he agreed with Buckminster Fuller's definition of pollution as a "misplaced resource."

Holm's solution to the problems of pollution and energy shortages is to find ways of making pollution harmless and economically useful. In the one year since Holm made that speech, he has led the Carrier Corporation into making environmental consciousness and energy conservation good business practices of lasting benefit to the community and of economic benefit to the corporation.

HON. THADDEUS DULSKI

HON. ROBERT N. GIAIMO

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. GIAIMO. Mr. Speaker, I have had the pleasure to know THAD DULSKI and his lovely wife, Elizabeth, for many years. We were both elected to the 86th Congress and have served together in each succeeding Congress.

As chairman of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee and in his service on the Veterans' Affairs Committee, THAD DULSKI has led the way in fighting for legislation that had made a better America. As a legislator he dared when boldness was necessary; and he was cautious when caution was essential. He bent when compromise was appropriate, and was resolute when firmness was in order.

Blessed with extraordinary energy and remarkable legislative skills, THAD DULSKI's record of achievement stands as a far greater tribute to anything we can say today. His service to the working man and woman has been recognized by the UAW-AFL-CIO which in 1964 awarded him its Outstanding Service Award, and by the Manhattan-Bronx Postal Union which bestowed upon him its third annual James A. Elardo Memorial Award and Outstanding Service Award. His work on behalf of veterans has been recognized by the American Legion which gave him its Award of Merit, and by the American Veterans of World War II and the Disabled American Veterans which have awarded him Special Achievement Certificates. His efforts on behalf of the elderly is demonstrated by the Franklin Delano Roosevelt Memorial Award for service to senior citizens which he received from the UAW Retired Workers Council. His devotion to the old and fine American ideals of individual freedom and human dignity have been recognized by the National Captive Nations Committee which bestowed upon him the Taras Shevchenko Freedom Award and its annual Freedom Award.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

These are just a few of the tributes that THAD DULSKI has earned during his years in the House of Representatives. I am delighted to join my colleagues as Congress also gives a well-deserved tribute to a fine legislator and friend—THAD DULSKI.

TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE THADDEUS DULSKI

HON. CARL ALBERT

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I shall miss my friend THAD DULSKI who retires at the end of this Congress.

Sixteen productive and vigorous years in the House of Representatives has been the record of achievement on the national scene of this able and conscientious Member of the 37th Congressional District of New York.

The capstone of his House service has been his chairmanship of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee since 1967. When he began to chair that committee, he was the youngest committee chairman in the House of Representatives.

He is a native son of Buffalo, where he attended parochial and public schools, Canisius College, and the University of Buffalo. He is a veteran of World War II and served with distinction in the Internal Revenue Service and the Price Stability Administration.

In 1953 he began his career in elective office, winning terms as a district councilman in Buffalo and as a councilman-at-large. He came to the House at the beginning of the 86th Congress.

Under his chairmanship of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, the Postal Corporation had its beginnings. It has therefore not since been possible to blame him for late mail deliveries, especially at this time of the year. Many serious and complex issues of Federal personnel policy have been resolved by his committee during his chairmanship.

Many honors have come his way: The Taras Shevchenko Freedom Award of the National Captive Nations Committee; the Outstanding Service Award from the UAW and the AFL-CIO, in 1964; the 1965 Citizen of the Year Award from the Polish Professional Businessmen's Association of Buffalo; the Army and Navy Award from the 77th National Encampment Union of Buffalo; the Franklin Delano Roosevelt Memorial Award from the UAW Retired Council, for service to senior citizens; the Outstanding Legislative Achievement Award from the National Star Route Carriers; the Award of Merit from the American Legion; the Owen J. Kavanaugh Award from the

December 20, 1974

Buffalo Joint Council of Longshoremen, ILA-CIO-AFL; the Citizenship Citation from B'nai B'rith; and Special Achievement Certificates from the American Veterans of World War II and the Disabled American Veterans.

I wish him, his lovely wife, and his children many happy days ahead, during what I know will be a fulfilling and productive retirement.

ROBERT M. MENAUGH, SUPERINTENDENT OF THE HOUSE RADIO-TV GALLERY

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, those of us who are Members may often take for granted the efforts of the outstanding people who work in key supportive roles for the Congress.

Bob Menaugh, Superintendent of the House Radio-TV Gallery—later the House Radio-TV Gallery—from its establishment in 1939 through his own retirement earlier this year, is one Capitol Hill professional who deserves our thanks and recognition for his long and distinguished service.

As the dedicated Superintendent of the House Radio-TV Gallery, Bob Menaugh won equal status for broadcast journalism in the House, and directed the first national television broadcast of a state of the Union address—President Harry Truman's 1947 address—along with a number of other electronic media firsts.

A native of Salem, Ind., Bob Menaugh has earned a reputation on Capitol Hill and throughout the broadcasting industry as a patient, fair, and capable professional during his 35 years as Superintendent of the Radio-TV Gallery.

Personally, I have found Bob to be cooperative, loyal, accommodating, and competent. My contacts with him were always favorable, and I have the highest regard for him.

President Ford, Speakers ALBERT and McCormack, other House leaders and officials, leading figures in broadcasting, and many others have honored Bob Menaugh.

Mr. Speaker, I am confident that the following letters they wrote to Bob Menaugh on the occasion of his retirement should be of interest to those of us who would acknowledge his outstanding contribution:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, September 18, 1974.
Mr. ROBERT MENAUGH,
Radio-Television Correspondents' Galleries,
U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR BOB: Whenever I think back to my days on the Hill, I naturally think of you. I wonder how you are doing in retirement, and I want to wish you the very best. You were, after all, one of my favorite people during those years when I used to trot up to the House Radio-TV Gallery to see the boys and do my bit for the people back home via television and radio.

Whatever you are doing, I hope you are very happy. You deserve to be because you are one of the finest persons I have ever known.

December 20, 1974

Sincerely,

JERRY FORD.

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., October 23, 1974.
Mr. ROBERT M. MENAUGH,
Alexandria, Va.

DEAR BOB: It is with a feeling of great loss, but also with a deep feeling of appreciation that I take this means to thank you for all you have done for the House of Representatives, for the broadcasting industry, and above all, for me personally during your years as Superintendent of the House Radio and Television Gallery.

I want you to know that I have never worked with a more understanding, devoted, levelheaded or cooperative individual. Your friendship and your wise counsel will be missed by everyone in the House and certainly by me. Your selection to receive the John W. McCormack Award is indicative of how everyone around here feels about you. It is well known that your love for the House of Representatives is surpassed only by your love for your fellowman.

Mrs. Albert and all my staff join me in wishing you and your lovely wife every happiness during your retirement. We hope you will come back and see us soon. God speed!

Sincerely,

CARL ALBERT,
The Speaker.

BOSTON, MASS.,
July 5, 1974.

Mr. ROBERT M. MENAUGH,
Alexandria, Va.

DEAR BOB: Recently I received a letter from John Monahan in which he informed me of your recent retirement.

Your service in the Capitol goes back over 40 years during which you served as Superintendent of the House Gallery, the first one for 35 years.

Your years of service to the House have been outstanding and dedicated and have added to the prestige of the House of Representatives.

As Majority Leader and as Speaker, our relationship was far more than official. It was an association based on real understanding, friendship, and profound respect.

I am proud that in 1972 you were selected as the recipient of the John W. McCormack Outstanding Employee Award, created by the House employees in my honor.

With kind regards to you and your loved ones and my deep feelings of friendship and respect, I am,

Sincerely yours,

JOHN W. MCCORMACK.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., July 3, 1974.
Mr. ROBERT M. MENAUGH,
Alexandria, Va.

DEAR BOB: I just learned that you retired on June 30 as Superintendent of the House Radio-TV Gallery, the post which you have held since 1939. Certainly you have rendered long and faithful service and have witnessed four decades of history being made in what I consider to be one of the most interesting and challenging periods in the life of our Nation.

According to the records, there are only five Members of Congress left who were here when you began your service, and I happen to be one of them. This is a rather exclusive club, and we share a lot of mutual memories. Like you, I am retiring at the end of this year and am looking forward to a less hectic pace also.

Let me take this opportunity to say how much I have enjoyed working with you for so long and express the hope that your retirement brings you the best of everything. May I also express my deep appreciation for the many courtesies you have extended to me in the past, and I hope you will never hesitate to call on me if I can be of service in any way.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

With warm personal regards,
Sincerely,

LES ARENDS.

CBS News,
New York, N.Y., July 1, 1974.
Mr. ROBERT MENAUGH,
Radio-TV Gallery,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR BOB: This news of your retirement is disheartening. Oh, I'm confident it is suitable as far as you are concerned—you deserve some days of leisure. But what about the rest of us you are leaving behind?

It is hard to imagine the Gallery without you. It seemed you always were on your feet, standing there in the geographical center of whatever was the Gallery's real estate at the time (and what a great job you did in lobbying for and carving out the office space we so desperately needed) and I know I had the feeling that your position was assumed as a sort of command post from which you could direct the damage control parties whenever anyone dared attack our journalistic prerogatives.

You did that job in perhaps the only way it can be done, but certainly in the most effective way in the political environment in which we all chose to work—with the utmost patience, understanding, compassion and good humor.

Bob, the Gallery and the acceptance of radio and television correspondents as equals on Capitol Hill, was your doing. You leave behind a magnificent memorial, one in which we all hope you continue to play a major part if even as a "visiting professor."

Your friendship from the very beginnings of my career as a broadcast journalist has meant a great deal to me, for, indeed, without your help I never would have made it this far. And there are dozens of others who can say the same.

We are grateful, Bob. Have a great retirement—but don't go too far away or stay too long.

All the best,

WALTER CRONKITE.

NATIONAL BROADCASTING CO., INC.,
New York, N.Y., July 9, 1974.

Mr. ROBERT M. MENAUGH,
House Radio-Television Gallery U.S. Capitol, Washington, D.C.

DEAR BOB: The word I have just received about your retirement strikes me with particular force because of our long personal association, and I want to wish you the best of everything. I guess we all just considered you as much a part of Washington as the Capitol Dome, and never thought about the fact that everybody deserves a chance to put aside his duties and enjoy a well-earned retirement.

From the time Billy Vaughan first led me through the House Radio Gallery nearly thirty years ago, you have been unfailingly helpful, knowledgeable and unflappable—a source of strength and wisdom to me in every job I have held, as well as to the many NBC correspondents who have served in Washington—the David Brinkleys, Frank McGees, the Ray Scherers, Robert McCormicks, and countless others.

I remember how calm you always were during the many occasions of high drama in which you played a part—the great debates like that on the Taft-Hartley Bill, the appearances of Winston Churchill and other world leaders, the MacArthur "old soldiers" speech, and the day a group of assassins opened fire on the floor of the House and wounded several members of Congress. I'm sure you will remember many more of them than I do, and in better detail.

While your retirement leaves an empty place, particularly for all of us who have been so closely associated with you, the high standards of integrity and dependability you have set will serve as a model for those who come after you.

I know that Mr. Sam, Bill McAndrew, Earl Godwin and Bill Henry would want me to "strike a blow for liberty" in your honor, and pay tribute to your many loyal years of devotion to the Congress and to the cause of good broadcast journalism, which you have served so well.

My best to Helen and to you.

With warm good wishes.

Sincerely,

JULIAN GOODMAN.

RADIO-TELEVISION CORRESPONDENTS' GALLERIES

Washington, D.C., November 15, 1974.
DEAR ROBERT: I will attest to the fact that you left voluntarily. You did not have to be swept out of office as did almost all the Indiana Republican delegation.

Further I will attest you left here against my wishes, desires and needs!

There are so many things the industry owes you, but the most important is that you gave us class when we were struggling along in competition with the wires and newspapers. You not only understood all our problems, but you could negotiate for us with a diplomatic skill that would have shamed Kissinger. In fact one time Henry said to me, "Who the Hell, does Menaugh think he is—Benjamin Franklin?" I told him I thought that you thought you were a cross between Vice President Marshall, Beveridge and James Whitcomb Riley, and not a touch of Bill Jenner or Homer Capehart in your blood or your make up. Further more that you viewed Vance Harke as a rookie, although you had to admit he could go to his left and his right, especially if he came up holding greenbacks.

"If you're short," Vance always said, "I'll take your check."

Well, this is neither here nor there. We covered some ground together and I must say you always kept me pointed in the right direction.

I think it is fitting that both parties are now talking about curbing, if not abandoning, the traditional political convention. How can there be a convention of any merit without Robert MacFadden Menaugh?

The best prescription for you in retirement, the one that will guarantee you peace and comfort is not to think about all the characters you had to deal with in the job you handled so well.

Meany—we miss you, God Bless you and Helen.

JOSEPH MCCAFFREY.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES PRESS GALLERY

Washington, D.C., November 15, 1974.
Mr. ROBERT M. MENAUGH,
Chief, House of Representatives Radio-Television Gallery, U.S. Capitol, Washington, D.C.

DEAR BOB: Your departure automatically bestowed upon me the prestigious title of "Senior Superintendent" of the various media galleries of the Senate and House of Representatives; a role I have coveted for some time. However Bob, what the hell have you done with the car and expense account forms that accompany this post?

After thirty-two years of availing myself of your counsel and wit, the brief absence so far is already a serious void in my daily routine. Clearly, your name stands high among the gallery titans I have been privileged to know and be in association.

My every wish goes to you and Helen for many years of health and plenty.

Sincerely,

BENJAMIN C. WEST.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING,
June 27, 1974.

Mr. ROBERT M. MENAUGH,
Superintendent, House Radio and Television
Gallery, U.S. Capitol, Washington, D.C.
DEAR BOB: One of those vagrant breezes which occasionally wanders through these hallowed halls wafted its way into my obvious ears yesterday, "Bob Menaugh's retiring!"

"Hell's Bells," I said to myself, "this place won't be the same to me without that long, lanky, red-headed Hoosier refugee from the land of the paw-paw and the persimmon!"

I have come to look very much askance at the romantic month of June in recent years, because it seems to connote a growing exodus of good friends—and this year obviously is no exception.

Nevertheless, when I think—with great appreciation—of our many wonderful visits over the years; your gentle but lively good humor; your wise, considerate and kindly philosophy—so uniquely welcome and rarely different in the communications media world of today—I am sincerely gratified to have known and been privileged to call friend, one who will always be—to me—"A Gentleman from Indiana!"

Be sure to come back and pull on my latchstring occasionally, and meanwhile, all the best to you and yours.

Ever your friend,

PAUL C. BEACH, Sr.

THE SPEAKER'S ROOMS,
Washington, D.C., June 27, 1974.

BOB MENAUGH,
Radio-TV Press Gallery,
U.S. House of Representatives.

DEAR BOB: I am deeply saddened to learn of your retirement, which I understand becomes effective at the end of this month.

Little over a year ago, I had the pleasure of standing beside you as you received the highest honor the House of Representatives can bestow upon any of its employees, the John W. McCormack Award for Excellence. I am proud to share with you that honor.

As you know, I also have found it necessary to relinquish the reins of office, on doctor's orders. It is as hard for me as I know it is for you to give up a way of life which we both have shared for these many years, especially when there is still so much to be done. Our friendship goes back many years, and in reflecting on those early years I can remember only warm and pleasant thoughts.
You have been a pioneer in bringing radio and then television to the Congress. The Congress and the industry you have so ably represented owe you a great deal of gratitude. During our association I have found you to be a gentleman at all times, courteous to everyone, and a credit to the House of Representatives which you have served so faithfully and loyally.

May I wish you happy, healthy days in retirement. You have earned a good rest.

Please keep in touch and give my best to Helen and your daughter Judy.

Warmly,

LEWIS DESCHLER.

OFFICE OF DOORKEEPER,
Washington, D.C., July 1, 1974.

Mr. ROBERT MENAUGH,
Chief, Radio Television Correspondents' Gallery, House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR BOB: It is an honor and a privilege for me to be able to add my name to the long list of your friends and co-workers on Capitol upon the occasion of your retirement.

May the good Lord continue to bless and keep you in the golden years ahead.

With kind personal regards, I remain

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM M. MILLER,
Doorkeeper, House of Representatives.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

SOCIAL SECURITY: MY, HOW YOU HAVE GROWN!

HON. J. J. PICKLE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, when the social security system was established in 1935, it was envisioned as a supplemental protection for our retired citizens—now it is the full support of many citizens.
When the first social security tax was levied it took a nominal 1 percent out of the paychecks of American workers—soon it will consume nearly 13 percent.
When the social security system began, about 95 percent of the work force was included in the wage base. Now the social security tax is regressive, falling most heavily on the poorest. And cries of financial fiasco fill the air.

People are angry and concerned—angry over the bite social security takes, concerned they will never get to enjoy the full meal themselves, that the system will be defunct before they become eligible.

Social security is not about to fold up, but clearly it has changed. The Congress will be faced in the next few years with deciding what to do about the social security system and its problems in the modern world. I hope that we can begin that review with an open discussion of the system, of what it is, where we want it to go, and how we can get there from here.

I tried to take a preliminary look at these issues in a recent speech in my district. I would like to share those thoughts at this time.

Last year it dawned on many Americans that they paid more social security taxes than they did income taxes.

In recent months—for the first time—
American employees and employers are complaining about the costs, and other Americans are simultaneously complaining they cannot live on the amount allotted. Social security has now begun to fret and disturb the little man. Each year almost we raise the benefits with no end in sight, and raise the taxes to cover them; conceivably we could have a total 20-percent social security tax in less than 20 years.

"Social security"—just say those two words over to yourself a few times and it gives you a warm, secure feeling. It has been such a basic part of our lives since its beginning nearly 40 years ago that very few of us have paused to look carefully at the system and how it functions.

To understand its current problems we should first take a brief glance at the history of social security. It began in controversy near the end of Franklin Roosevelt's first term after a tough fight in the Senate Finance Committee. Its objective was to provide a floor of protection for the worker after his retirement, not a full support or insurance.
The starting tax was 2 percent—1 percent each on the wage earner and the employer—on the first $3,000 of income.
At that time about 95 percent were making that much or less.

December 20, 1974

I remember, and some of you do too, when this historic legislation was passed and I remember the collective sign of relief which greeted it. I was just a youth in 1935 when it became law.

In 1936, the Republican candidate,
Gov. Alf Landon of Kansas, attacked social security as a "fraud" on the workingman. Landon won only two States, Maine and Vermont. This gives you some gage of social security popularity, and that favorable attitude has endured over the years. Probably to often the social security system has gone unquestioned.

I recall in the 1964 Presidential campaign when Senator GOLDWATER hinted at the abolition of social security. Just the suggestion frightened people. Certainly his suggestion contributed somewhat to his dismal showing against President Johnson.

In 1939, coverage was extended to workers' dependents and survivors. Since its inception the program has broadened its base to a very wide degree. Now about 95 percent of the Nation's workforce pays social security taxes.

Self-employed persons except for professionals, State, local, household, and farm employees were all added during the 1950's, as were the military and the men of the cloth.

Disability payments were added in 1956, and a couple of years later dependents of those unable to work because they were disabled become eligible for benefits. Medicare was tacked on in 1965.

Social security now reaches almost all of the people in covered categories. Of our citizens over 65, 91 percent are receiving aid or are eligible to receive it.
Of those children under 18 and their mothers, some 95 percent will get benefits if the family money-earner dies.
About four-fifths of the population in the range of 21-64 can get disability benefits in case of a severe or prolonged injury or illness.

The social security tax to cover these payments increased very slowly in the first 15 years of the program. It was not until 1950 that there was a boost from 2 to 3 percent—with half paid by each employer and employee. Now the rate is 11.7 percent—5.85 each—on the first $13,200 annual income. Those who are self-employed pay 7.9 percent.

Next January 1, the wage base will increase to $14,100. In 1978 the employee and employer will each chip in at a 6.05 percent rate, and 7 years from now, in 1981, the rate for each fraction will rise to 6.30 and go to 6.45 by 1986—nearly 13 percent.

Despite these planned tax increases, the social security system could go into the red over the long run unless changes are made. Why is this?

Well, for one thing, the umbrella has been spread wide to bring under so many who previously had no protection against the death of the family breadwinner or a crippling injury which prevented one from working.

Another very significant factor has been the declining ratio of the number of workers for every recipient. In 1950

December 20, 1974

there were 12 working taxpayers for every retired beneficiary. Today there are only 3.2 workers for every person getting aid through the social security system. And with declining birth rates in each of the last 3 years, this ratio is very likely to grow smaller. In addition, the life span for the average American, through a higher standard of living, the advent of "wonder drugs" and other advancements in medicine, has steadily increased since the depression years, and this puts further pressure on the worker-recipient ratio.

Besides the extension of coverage and the decrease in birth rates and death rates, a third major factor that makes statisticians predict the social security trust may falter is the new procedure passed in 1972 for increasing benefits and taxes. Under it, if the Consumer Price Index jumps by 3 percent or more in a year, benefits will automatically be elevated by a like percentage.

In predicting future social security costs, the Social Security Administration has calculated that inflation will halt by 1981, after which the consumer prices will increase annually by 3 percent and wages by 5 percent, leaving a "real wage" margin of 2 percent. Social Security Administration officials say that this is based on the average of 2.25 percent in real wage increases over the last 20 years.

However, some critics are challenging these basic assumptions. They say that our economy has made definite changes, that from 1966-71, the real wage margin averaged only 1.4 percent and just 1.1 percent in 1972 and 1973. What will happen to the automatic increase principle if the SSA calculations are incorrect? Obviously, social security costs are affected by changes in the economy and costs could become astronomical if inflation continues unabated.

All these factors take on added significance when one looks at how the social security fund operates. Some workers might think their benefits will come from funds they have personally contributed, but the payments actually come from current taxes on his fellow workers.
Social security has evolved as a pay-as-you-go system where one generation transfers funds to a previous generation in expectation that their own successors will do the same. But what will happen if those active workers rebel against the rising social security taxes—and there is some danger of this within the next few years? This protest is fueled by the argument that the worker's tax burden is really twice as heavy as he realizes because the share of the tax paid by the employer could go to him in the form of wages or other fringe benefits.

Some voices have called for a straight cut in social security payroll taxes. The Congress should look long and hard at any such proposal, for the social security fund could be jeopardized with a straight-out cut.

What other obstacles does social security face? First, it faces the same obstacle as the rest of us—rising costs. So far, social security has done very well administratively. Its operating expenses, partially thanks to the marvels of the

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

computer world, are only about 2 cents on the dollar. This year a little over 30 million recipients will get about $68 billion in benefits. More than 98 million Americans will pay about $69 billion in social security taxes.

But social security outlays now equal about 23 percent of the Federal budget.
Social security taxes raise more money than do corporate income taxes. For many, many lower-income workers, social security taxes are higher than their Federal income tax. The social security tax has increased faster than any tax since World War II. Though the Social Security Administration has about $50 billion in accumulated trust funds, which would not cover a year's benefit payments, these moneys can only be invested in Federal securities.

There are several reasons why social security costs might sky-rocket beyond present levels, including:

First, increased medical care costs;
Second, equalizing benefits for males and females—at the time the law was written few women worked outside the home; and

Third, eliminating the retirement test for recipients under which a worker loses half of every dollar over $2,400 which he earns annually.

For the most part, the social security system has done what it was originally established to do: Provide a supplement, but not a living wage or a public assistance program, to those who have been deprived of income. The system was not conceived or financed as a total pension system but as insurance against substantial loss of income due to retirement, death of a spouse, or disability. Many have come, however, to expect much more of social security. Instead of a supplement, the system is now largely viewed as a basic floor which should provide a minimum but sufficient income for those who receive its benefits.

Because of its cost and deepening problems, some critics suggest that the social security system be eliminated.
Without supplying an adequate substitute, such an action would have an adverse impact. If, beginning today, no new workers were allowed into the system but the present numbers and recipients got the benefits they are due, the system would end up in arrears by nearly $2.5 trillion dollars even by conservative estimates. To eliminate the system without repaying the people who have contributed is obviously untenable. And abolishing social security would not solve the problem of supplying an insurance against the loss of income for the average American.

So the question comes, where do we go from here?

Should the Congress reduce the payroll taxes?

Should the Congress reduce social security benefits?

Should we dip into the general revenue fund to support needed increases?

Should the system be made voluntary?

Every question broached calls the attention of another. What about the regressive aspects of the tax? The less money you make, the higher percentage of social security tax you pay. Governor Rockefeller pays less in percentage terms in his social security tax than does his chauffeur, for instance. Is this right; should it be continued?

Hopefully the Advisory Council on Social Security, appointed by the Secretary of HEW every 4 years according to law to evaluate the whole system, will make some recommendations when it files its report around January 1. This body is composed of representatives of the public sectors, labor, business, self-employed, et cetera.

In the meantime, permit me a few observations:

The social security system is not in the red—and is not going broke now.

Social security, however, is no longer really a program to supplement income, or to give a floor of protection. It has practically become a needs formula.

If inflation continues or benefits increases continue, the social security tax alone can be the largest of Federal taxes.
Any juggling of the economy could cause grave troubles.

It is a current program: money raised today is spent—literally—tomorrow.

Employer and employees are feeling the pinch, and perhaps the employee is feeling it the most. The question lingers when one sees his deduction today: "Will I ever really get it all back tomorrow?"

The social security program has been and is the greatest safeguard against personal tragedy and deprivation we have ever known. It is often the only means that enables a poor person to live.
It was not intended to be this, but we have made it so. People depend on it when they are in tragic need. Yet the affluent draws the same amount whether it is needed or not. The pitiful cry goes out from the average recipient to "please raise our social security benefits." Inflation has ravaged their meager households.

We will need to reexamine and re-evaluate our entire social security program. I think it will be started next year, and it may be extended through a painful 2- or 3-year period. We are not going to do away with the social security program, and our discussion of the subject ought not—and must not—give rise to false rumors of cancellation. Our problems are, primarily, long range ones.

We must begin to discuss our alternatives, however, and reaffirm what we want social security to accomplish. The American people someday will set a ceiling on payments plus benefits of this kind. With other possible payroll taxes on the horizon, such as National Health Insurance, this will make the decision more acute.

Add to this the problems embedded in our welfare program, and we have a sobering and disturbing development.
Along with our reevaluation of social security, we must look again at the welfare programs.

Social security cannot be all means to all people. It is high time we open a national discussion on social security so we can keep it responsive and actuarially sound, and accomplish what we want it to do.

BAN THE HANDGUN

HON. JONATHAN B. BINGHAM

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, the letter which follows, written by Dr. James L. Luke, chief medical examiner for the District of Columbia, appeared in the Washington Post on November 2. Dr. Luke offers eloquent testimony both as to the necessity of a handgun ban, and as to the reasons why such a ban has not yet been enacted.

I ask my colleagues, what will it take? Will it take the assassination of another President or public leader? Will it take an unprecedented wave of handgun deaths in affluent suburbia? What tragedy or series of tragedies is necessary to stir this Congress to action?

It is my fervent hope that we have suffered enough tragedies to convince us of the need for a ban on handguns. Let us prove to Dr. Luke and to the rest of the public that his pessimistic perspective is uncalled for, that we will not ignore the problem, and that we are strong and wise enough to produce the solution.

I commend this letter to my colleagues' attention:

BAN THE HANDGUN

I have read with the greatest of interest over the past several years your various editorial comments relative to gun control. No compassionate person could possibly dispute the thesis you articulate, a forensic pathologist perhaps least of all, given our responsibilities for the investigation of the medical-legal aspects of some 200 annual firearms fatalities of all types in the District of Columbia.

However, in this communication I speak as a concerned private citizen.

My reaction to the issue has changed somewhat over the years, from one of enthusiastic approval of such wise journalistic support, anticipating the possibility of redress from such an urgent public problem, to one of profound sadness and utter frustration.

Absolutely nothing has been accomplished by all the rhetoric. The toll predictably continues. And in my view, it will continue, given current priorities and our unconscionable acceptance of the status quo.

My reasons for such a pessimistic perspective are varied and, I believe, are worthy of brief comment.

It is human nature to erase, and as expeditiously as possible, both the emotion and the memory of tragedy. Victims of violence and their families have no lobby for a cause which only for a moment might seem to them excruciatingly relevant. In addition, it is literally unthinkable to almost everyone to consider even the possibility of his own violent death. The belief that we are immortal has been impossibly counterproductive of remedy for a whole host of public health issues, ranging from cigarette smoking to automobile safety. Parenthetically, it has been attitudes such as these, more than anything else, that have served to restrict the development of the forensic sciences in this country and elsewhere, possibly the best vehicle whereby understanding of the dynamics and specifics of violence could be achieved.

I am all too familiar with such attitudes. Two inches of daily small-print at the bottom of the page seems to have convinced the public that it is always someone else, and thereby effectively to have immunized us to the problem itself. And with no problem, there are no solutions necessary.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

A corollary of the above is the fact that violence is, for the most part, an inner-city dilemma, overwhelmingly affecting individuals with only limited access to the national political power base. In this regard, it is interesting to note that widespread agitation for the abolition of handguns is generated only when persons of prominence are assaulted or killed and that editorial citations of illustrative case material continue to refer disproportionately to non-inner-city residents. Those opposed to hand-gun abolition and in a position to alter the situation are relatively unaffected by the problem and view the issue only as a potential infringement on their "right" to bear arms—an anachronism if ever there was one—and as an invasion of their civil rights. As with the recent narcotics epidemic, nothing seemed to get done until suburbia was affected. Here is yet one more example of the inability of our somewhat insulated political structure to respond appropriately—even to respond at all—to a vital life or death issue.

Obviously, hand-guns must be abolished. Nobody who sees the enormous magnitude of this human problem in its totality by dealing with the victims and their families on almost a daily basis could fail to believe otherwise.

In the final analysis our choice is very simple. Which is more important, the freedom to possess a weapon or the value we place on human life? It will take decades at best to remove sufficient numbers of weapons to alter the situation, even if hand-gun abolition were enacted tomorrow. But until meaningful remedy is accomplished, it should be clearly understood that a de facto conscious choice against hand-gun abolition has already been made. It is this choice that I find so difficult to accept.

I suggest that the time has long since past to rearrange our priorities—to consider all the victims, present and future, and to speak out for them.

JAMES L. LUKE, M.D.

TRIBUTE TO THADDEUS DULSKI

HON. RICHARD H. ICHORD

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. ICHORD. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to join with my colleagues in paying tribute to THAD DULSKI, retiring chairman of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee. THAD DULSKI is one of the most solid Members of this body, solid in both mind and body and positions. He has served as chairman of the House Post Office and Civil Service with great diligence and imagination, performed his duties as chairman of one of the standing committees of the House. I know the long hours and personal attention he devoted to the operations of the committee and to this House; and I know that he will be sorely missed when the 94th Congress reconvenes. THAD DULSKI is a modest unpretentious legislator who has always been willing to do the work that others have often taken credit for. He has always worked tirelessly for his constituents and for the party of his choice, the Democratic party. He has always said that he was a politician for which he offered no apologies. He is a politician in the old traditional sense: "One who is wise, sagacious, learned in the art of self-government." THAD DULSKI is a man, in my opinion, of whom this body needs more. He will indeed be sorely missed.

REPRESENTATIVE ROBISON INTRODUCES CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT FOR 6-YEAR PRESIDENCY

HON. HOWARD W. ROBISON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. ROBISON of New York. Mr. Speaker, I have chosen the occasion of the House's exercise of its 95th amendment responsibilities in confirming the Presidential nomination of NELSON ROCKEFELLER as Vice President to introduce a proposed constitutional amendment which would further revise the conditions of service of the U.S. Presidency. As I shall explain in some detail, there is nothing novel in my proposal that we act to institute a 6-year Presidency; yet, as I take stock of my experience in Congress during the administrations of five Presidents, and as I look for the most important and most enduring lessons of the "fallen" Nixon administration, the idea of a 6-year Presidency looms as perhaps the most fitting and most timely response that can be made to better fit the Presidency to our times.

Although my proposal for a 6-year Presidential term comes in the wake of serious abuses of the Presidency, it in no way seeks to be a patch-work solution for all of the evils which have come to define the term, "Watergate." My intentions are nearly the opposite, because discussion of a single Presidential term can be traced back to the first major speech of the Constitutional Convention when it was presented as part of the so-called Virginia plan by Edmund Randolph. Randolph's proposal sparked a lengthy and, in some cases, contradictory set of resolutions which at various times, resulted in convention ratification of a 7-year Presidency, a 6-year Presidency, and even a 6-year Presidential term with provision for reelection. However, it is to be noted that, unlike so many other provisions of the Constitution which grew for a quick consensus of the convention, the decision on the conditions of Presidential service took many twists and turns through a series of 60 resolutions until it reached final form.

It is almost as if that labored debate was never put to rest because, since that time, there have been introduced over 150 proposed amendments to the Constitution which would initiate a Presidential term of 6 years. There have been, as well, a number of Presidents who advocated the idea. Among them, Andrew Jackson used his first two State-of-the-Union addresses to Congress to forward the proposition, and succeeding Presidents Harrison, Buchanan, and Hayes each reiterated the proposal.

December 20, 1974

December 20, 1974

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

42035

During more recent days, Presidents Eisenhower and Johnson each associated themselves with the proposal for a single Presidential term. Johnson mentions his support for a single 6-year term in his book, "The Vantage Point," and he spoke of the proposal during a filmed interview with television newsmen, Walter Cronkite.

Although these initiatives were raised in varying contexts, and for varying reasons, my quick summary nevertheless serves to illustrate the centuries-long perspective of this proposal, which has been seen as appropriate during almost every era of U.S. history. Obviously, the conditions of Presidential life have changed dramatically since the early years of the 19th century when Andrew Jackson directly recommended to Congress that it institute a 6-year Presidency, yet so have many of the Nation's expectations for conditions and qualities of national leadership remained the same. During his second annual message to Congress, given on December 6, 1830, President Jackson counseled that the agent most likely to contravene the constitutional design of an independent executive and legislature was the Chief Executive. Jackson explained how his concern might be alleviated in this manner:

In order, particularly, that his appointment may as far as possible be placed beyond the reach of any improper influences; in order that he may approach the solemn responsibilities of the highest office in the gift of a free people uncommitted to any other course than the strict line of constitutional duty, and that the securities of this independence may be rendered as strong as the nature of power and the weakness of its possessor will admit, I can not too earnestly invite your attention to the propriety of promoting such an amendment of the Constitution as will render him ineligible after one term of service.

Jackson's forebodings over the potential for abuse of Executive power were not unlike the attitudes of those who were responsible for authoring the original constitutional terms of the Presidency. In both cases, a critical eye was turned to history's illustrations of the corrupting influence of power, and solutions were sought through adjustment of the design of the Presidency, itself.

This same, native concern over the abuse of Executive power is reflected time and again in the statements of those who advocate a single 6-year Presidential term, probably because the lesson of the origins of this country had been so thoroughly instilled in each generation of its citizens. From this standpoint, Watergate was merely a reminder of the seminal knowledge we all possess in on way or another that unchecked political power propagates itself until any freedom which stands in the way of the further expansion of that power is extinguished. This may explain the apparent "love-hate" relationship Americans seem to have with their most forceful national leaders. Some of our Presidents have been berated and vilified mercilessly while they served the country, and then raised on pedestals of adulation after their deaths. Others evoked emotional loyalty while they served and were later subjected to critiques of their conscientiousness and effectiveness.

Each of these tendencies comes from an instinctive national skepticism over the exercise of broad political power. That skepticism has been evident throughout this country's history and is, perhaps, most evident in the recurring call for a 6-year, single term Presidency. Public leaders, and even Presidents themselves, have constantly voiced the concern that we must take active steps to assure that the President does not become too closely associated with the Presidency.

There is another strain of argument that has appeared with some consistency during recent decades and which gains considerable momentum when traced chronologically. Speaking in support of a single, 6-year Presidential term in 1923, Iowa Senator Albert B. Cummins said of the office:

I have always believed that one term is enough. The great responsibility and the tremendous strain of the office are more than any man can stand.

The same sentiment is echoed by then former President Calvin Coolidge who cautioned six years later:

The Presidential office takes a heavy toll of those who occupy it and those who are dear to them. . . . The Presidential office is of such a nature that it is difficult to conceive how one man can successfully serve the country for a term of more than 8 years.

Although those who have some recollection of the Coolidge era would not want to suggest that it was without its problems, still the 1920's stand in today's perspective as a period of only modest activity by the Federal Government. At the end of that decade the country's population stood at 123 million while, today, the Federal Government serves 205 million Americans. During the final days of the 1920's, the Gross National Product stood at $90 billion, and we now live in the day of the trillion dollar Gross National Product. And—just one more of these comparisons—during the same period of time, the number of Government civilian employees rose from 600,000 to 2.85 million, an increase of about 380 percent.

Comparative statistics of this kind often distorts the story rather than tell it, but these do serve to emphasize the exponential growth of Federal Government—and, thus, Presidential—responsibility. It is perhaps because of the modern, ego-crushing responsibilities of the Presidency that Lyndon Johnson was led to suggest in his memoirs that a 6-year Presidency would better suit the times. And, one of Johnson's close aids, Joseph A. Califano, has emerged as a very forceful proponent of the idea.

When speaking before the Senate Constitutional Amendments Subcommittee in October 1971, which committee was convened to discuss the proposed constitutional amendment establishing a 6-year Presidency jointly introduced by Senators ARKEN and MANSFIELD, Mr. Califano spoke of the modern President as "running against the 4-year clock." His phrase was meant both to elicit the facts of life for today's Presidents and also to define a concept of the Presidency which strikes me as very pertinent to present-day governmental demands and responsibilities. The idea is best expressed in Califano's own words when he says:

Thus, the President who desires to reorder our national priorities by significantly shifting the expenditure of Federal resources is faced with a dream impossible of achievement in a single four-year term.

This notion takes on some definition when it is pointed out that a new administration does not begin to operate on an Executive budget of its own design until the President has been in office for a year and a half. It is then only a few short months before aspirants to the Executive office begin to publicly attack the President's program, so that it is rare that an incumbent President has more than promise to show the Nation after his first term.

This "race against the 4-year clock" is only half of the argument, however, since all of those who have supported the establishment of a 6-year Presidency have spoken of, or implied a concept of, the Presidency which suggests that a President must be given adequate time to exercise his leadership upon the country, but that he should not be given enough time to like being President too much. To again invoke a distinction often raised during this year's developing move toward impeachment, the President must not be allowed to become too closely identified with the Presidency.

To my mind, a constitutional amendment which establishes a 6-year term directly manifests the healthy skepticism which found its way into the initial design of our Government. We all live in a political environment which takes as its first principle that unrestrained political power can only endanger liberty; and we have witnessed in recent months the acting out of that truth.

There was a brief time during the most darkly clouded days of the Watergate era when I was not sure that the country would survive it intact. Perhaps my pessimism was imprudent or naive; but, still, I am not sure we can expect to live through another Watergate. We have seen in dramatic and painful detail what can happen; and it must now be our resolve to exercise our best abilities and instincts to protect the Nation, however possible, from letting it happen again—at least in the same way.

The concept of a single Presidential term has been with us since the first days of the Constitutional Convention, and the idea of a 6-year tenure has emerged again and again during the two centuries of the Nation's existence. It is not a makeshift solution; it is not a hasty and emotional reaction to all that was detestable in Watergate. It is, however, a long and carefully discussed alternative to the present manner of Presidential service, which offers to inhibit from the very beginning the conditions which lead to a Watergate—because a President who seeks and wins a 6-year Presidency must necessarily constrain his own expectations and ambition. He is challenged to consider only how he might most productively conduct his Presidency, so that his mark on history is forceful and beneficial. It is a privilege to associate myself with this proposal today and with those many colleagues who have expressed their support for such an amendment.

December 20, 1974

I must note that my introduction of this bill is also my final such act, since I am retiring from Congress at the end of this term. I know, therefore, that my act may be considered by some as a meaningless and futile gesture. However, I would like to believe that I addressed myself in a constructive fashion to the Watergate dilemma as it developed, and to the search for its proper solution, and that other, less-critical observers will thus see this initiative as related thereto and as an expression of hope to, thereby, encourage a continuing public and congressional debate in this area of concern.

SEVENTY-FIVE YEARS OF AMERICAN BUDDHISM

HON. PHILLIP BURTON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. PHILLIP BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce to my colleagues in the Congress that early this month, December 2 to be exact, the California State Senate in Sacramento appointed the Reverend Shoko Masunaga to be its chaplain. What is so newsworthy about this particular appointment is that Reverend Masunaga is the head minister of the Buddhist Church of Sacramento, so he will be not only the first American of Japanese ancestry, but also the first Buddhist on the continental mainland to be so honored.

It was particularly appropriate that this appointment came at the close of this year which marked the 75th anniversary of the founding of the Buddhist Churches of America, the largest and oldest of the Buddhist organizations in this country, most of whose members and ministers are Japanese Americans.

By coincidence, 1974 also marked the 750th anniversary of the founding in Japan of Jodo Shinshu, the sect of Buddhism that is exemplified by the BCA, and the 800th anniversary of the birth of Shinran Shonin, the founder of this particular Japanese Buddhist faith.

To celebrate these historic events, a national commemorative conference was held in San Francisco the last week in August, for it was in this city by the Golden Gate that the first Buddhist church was established three quarters of a century ago.

Since more than 5,000 members attended this commemorative conference last summer, representing the 100 temples and branches of the BCA on the continental mainland, it was undoubtedly the largest gathering ever of American Japanese. In addition, some 2,000 more from Hawaii, Japan, Mexico, Canada, and Brazil, among other countries, joined with their mainland coreligionists in noting this 75th anniversary of American Buddhism.

In conjunction with this celebration, the National Buddhist Women's Federation, organized as a national entity some 22 years ago in San Francisco, hosted the Fifth World Buddhist Women's Convention, the first time that this international federation has met in the Western Hemisphere. Delegates from most of the major Buddhist nations of Earth were present.

In this country where Judeo-Christian concepts often cause us to overlook the many and great contributions of other major world religions, even as we too often neglect to learn of the significant and substantial contributions which those of Asian ancestry have made to the development of our Nation, I am pleased to pay tribute to the BCA on the occasion of their 75th anniversary as an American institution.

THE BEGINNING

To appreciate the full significance of this celebration, we should know something of the early history of Buddhism in the New World, that is the Western Hemisphere.

There is an ancient legend in China that around 485 A.D., about a thousand years before Columbus discovered America, five Chinese Buddhist monks, taking advantage of the winds and currents, sailed eastward across the Pacific and landed on that part of this continent that is now known as Mexico. Advocates who theorize that this old tale is based on fact point to the various artifacts of the Mayan and Aztec cultures which closely resemble Chinese art. Several years ago, archeologists discovered some old pottery on the west coast of Mexico that resembled some prehistoric "rope" ceramics of the Japanese, theorizing that some Japanese might have tried to colonize Baja California long before the Spanish conquerors came to the New World. While there is no scientific evidence to prove these claims as yet, they not only arouse many interesting speculations but also suggest that the founders of the BCA may not have been by far the first Buddhists to establish a temple here in North America.

Of interest, too, may be that about a hundred years ago translations of Buddhist texts and books on Buddhism were imported from England and placed in the bookstalls of New York and other Atlantic coast cities. Probably the most notable American to become interested in the subject of Buddhism in those early days was Henry Steele Olcott, a colonel in the U.S. Army who traveled widely in Ceylon and Japan, born in New York in 1832 and died in 1907. In 1885, he published the first Buddhist catechism in English and was also the first to design the Buddhist flag, which is still in use today. It was flown in San Francisco during the 75th anniversary.

Another scholar who made a great impact on Americans insofar as Buddhism is concerned was an Englishman, an Edwin Arnold, author of the epic poem "The Light of Asia," on the life of the Buddha. His work went into six printings and more copies were sold in the United States than in Great Britain, according to the historians of that period.

About the same time, history was also being made on the Pacific coast. In the Gold Hill country at Coloma, northeast of Sacramento, the capital of California, is an ordinary field. But in a corner of this field on a gentle hill overlooking a quiet valley is a humble grave. On the stone monument is a crude inscription in both Japanese and English, "In Memory of Okei, died 1871, age 19 years, a Japanese girl."

Okei belonged to the first organized group of Japanese ever to come to the United States. This group was known as the Wakamatsu Colony, which hoped to grow tea and silk in this country, but which disappeared over the years.

In the next quarter of a century after the establishment of the first Japanese community, a small but steady flow of Japanese emigrated to the United States. On the basis of their Japanese birthplaces and the known facts, most of these early immigrants were Buddhists of the Jodo Shinshu tradition.

By 1897, about 3,000 Japanese lived in and around San Francisco. Among them was a young man by the name of Nisaburo Hirano. When two Buddhist priests, Eryu Honda and Ejun Miyamoto, came to America to survey the situation 75 years ago, Hirano immediately called together about 30 young men at the home of Dr. Katsugoro Haida and organized the Young Buddhist Association, the first Buddhist Sangha—Brotherhood—in the United States.

The young people then scraped together enough money to purchase a simple, wooden 3-story, 14-room building at 807 Polk Street. This became the first Buddhist temple in the United States.

The members then petitioned the headquarters of the sect in Kyoto, the ancient capital of Japan and the home of many Japanese Buddhist faiths, to send ministers to serve them in this new land. Finally, on September 1, 1899, two ministers, Revs. Shuei Sonoda and Kakuryo Nishijima, arrived in San Francisco. They were called "kaikyoshi," literally teachers who open the doors of the Dharma—the Teachings of the Buddha. The event justified an article in the San Francisco Chronicle of September 12, 1899.

Sonoda and Nishijima apparently were fluent in English, so they did not confine their activities to the Japanese alone. They also organized a non-Japanese group, called "The Dharma Sangha of America." Their early bulletin, Light of Dharma, lists among its contributors and subscribers such names as Dr. Norman C. F. Jones, E. R. Stoddard, and Agnes White.

As more and more Japanese emigrated to the United States, the social climate of relative tolerance developed into hostility, especially against the Buddhists. The racists and the fearmongers on the West coast, who had successfully secured national legislation to exclude the Chinese in the late 1880's, turned their prejudices and persecutions against the Japanese.

They charged that the Japanese could never be assimilated into the American cultural pattern, noting that the immigrant Japanese were not becoming naturalized citizens of the United States. They neglected to note that the alien Japanese, though lawfully admitted for permanent residence, could not by operation of Federal law become naturalized citizens of their adopted country.

December 20, 1974

Buddhists were singled out on the basis that they were adherents of an Oriental, un-Christian religion which could never be adapted to what they described as the American way of life. Even some Japanese had similar feelings and became Christians. So, in many respects the Buddhists in time became a minority within the Japanese minority and the special targets of the bigots and the hatemongers.

Western America historians have emphasized that the immigrant Japanese pioneers faced many more and crueler obstacles than most European immigrants to these shores. They had little education and what education they had was in an Asian, and not European, culture. They could not speak the dominant language of their adopted land and they inherited the half-century old bias and racism that had circumscribed and restricted the lives and fortunes of the earlier Chinese immigrants.

Though periods of violence and vigilantism, and the unique anti-Oriental persecution and prosecution of the Pacific coast, all of Japanese ancestry suffered through the vicissitudes of their lives. And, though the subject of greater attacks, because they could not seek the protection of their Christian brethren, the Buddhists were sustained by their faith and its philosophy.

While individual Japanese could not purchase land, because of the so-called Alien Land Laws of some 16 western States, there was no statute which denied Buddhists the opportunity to buy land for their temples. After all, the constitutional guarantee of religious freedom provided Buddhists with the right to purchase land for their churches. Accordingly temple lands were purchased and churches were erected throughout California and the West. In the short span of 10 years, for instance, churches were established in San Francisco, Sacramento, Fresno, Vacaville, Seattle, San Jose, Oakland, Portland, Los Angeles, White River—Washington, Placer, Watsonville, Stockton, Hanford, Guadalupe, Bakersfield, San Mateo, Marysville, Lodi, and Fowler.

By 1931, in spite of the enactment in the meantime of the Japanese Immigration Exclusion Act of 1924 and the earlier gentlemen's agreement to restrict immigration from Japan, 33 main temples and many branches had been established.

All the while, though retaining the spirit and the symbols of their faith, both ministers and lay leaders put forth their efforts to Americanize, as it were, the Sangha. Buddhist terms and concepts were translated into English. English-language services were encouraged. Materials were published in English and made available to all interested parties. Though Japanese-language schools were developed and Japanese cultural activities promoted, the BCA deliberately encouraged its members to actively participate as American citizens in various civic, charitable, and educational endeavors. As far as the BCA itself was concerned, it was an American institution, dedicated to helping its members become better citizens through the practice of Buddhism. In this sense, the BCA implemented what we today describe as a multicultural contribution to American life.

WORLD WAR II

December 7, 1941, was a fateful day, not only for all Americans, but more so for all American Japanese and their parents, for the attack by Japanese planes on Pearl Harbor in Hawaii loosened the chain reaction of events for those of Japanese origin in the United States unprecedented in American history.

Overnight, all American Japanese and their alien parents became suspect, especially Buddhists, because of their belief in what so many charged as a Japanese religion, forgetting that Buddhism began in India and spread throughout the world to become a truly international faith.

Unfortunately for the Buddhists, too many—including some in high places of responsibility—equated American Buddhism with the nationalistic Shintoism of militaristic Japan.

Since most Buddhist priests were among the so-called leaders of the Japanese communities in which they served, practically every Buddhist minister was arrested immediately after the Japanese attack on American soil as a precautionary move. Thus, the Buddhists were left virtually without any leaders at the most critical time of their great travail. While Japanese Christians found support in their white counterparts Buddhists could not find help within the larger American society.

In spite of their isolation and tragic situation, however, the then Buddhist Mission of North America released a statement reaffirming the loyalty of its members to the United States:

The suddenness and the unwarranted and inhumane attack upon these United States of America leaves us, the Buddhists in America, with but one decision: the condemnation of that attack. . . . The loyalty to the United States which we have pledged at all times must now be placed into instant action for the defense of the United States of America. . . .

Nevertheless, Executive Order 9066, signed by President Roosevelt on February 19, 1942, authorized the military commander of the Western Defense Command, without trial or hearing or any charges or accusations except that of being of the Japanese race, to evacuate and exclude "all persons to Japanese ancestry, aliens and nonaliens alike," from their homes and associations on the Pacific coast. Approximately half of the 110,000 evacuees who were herded off to what are euphemistically referred to as concentration camps, American style, were Buddhists, two-thirds of whom were American born.

Since the Army allowed the evacuees to carry only what they could in two hands, most of the Buddhist temples were transformed into makeshift warehouses where their members could store at their own risk whatever property could be moved there on short notice.

The first movement was to the so-called assembly centers, such as Tanforan and Santa Anita racetracks. Here, Buddhist activities were resumed immediately under the direction of such Caucasian Buddhist ministers as the Reverend Julius Goldwater and the Reverend Sunya Pratt in order that the detained Buddhists might be able to accept their fate and to live their religion in the dreary centers.

Subsequently, the evacuees were moved from the temporary quarters in fairgrounds and race tracks to 10 more permanent concentration camps of tar paper barracks in the deserts and river wastelands of the West. In these camps, Buddhists carried on their special activities, knowing that they had few—if any—friends and supporters outside the camps. Regardless, the National Student Relocation Council, largely financed by the Christian churches, provided scholarships for students who wished to continue their disrupted education in colleges and universities in the Midwest and East. And, the War Relocation Authority, charged with the responsibility for the camps after the arbitrary Army evacuation, showed compassion and understanding of the Buddhists not only in their activities within the camps, but also in providing them with opportunities for housing and employment outside the Western Defense Command. In these respects and more, America demonstrated the brotherhood-of-man ideal that is basic to all true religions.

In the century-old history of the Japanese in America, the most courageous act of total commitment was demonstrated by the young men who volunteered from behind these barbed-wire-fenced concentration camps into which their own country had forced them, to fight—and to die as many of them did—in the defense of their homeland.

They volunteered, not just for military service but for combat, against the German and Japanese enemies. Those who volunteered for the 442d Regimental Combat Team made that unique unit. In the words of then Chief of Staff Gen. George Marshall, the most decorated outfit in American history for its size and length of service. They were also known as the Purple Heart Regiment, since the unit suffered 309 percent in casualties, more by far percentage-wise than any other American infantry organization in the European and Mediterranean theaters of operations. And, those young volunteers who could speak Japanese served in the Pacific theaters in combat intelligence, facing far more terrible fates as prisoners if captured than their non-Japanese comrades-in-arms. Gen. Charles Willoughby, Chief of Staff for Intelligence for Gen. Douglas MacArthur, estimated that the use of these Nisei troops in the Pacific saved thousands of American lives and billions of dollars. More than half of those who volunteered and served in both the 442d and Combat Intelligence were of the Buddhist faith.

The first Japanese American to earn the Congressional Medal of Honor was Pfc. Sadao Munemori, who was evacuated from Long Beach, Calif. A volunteer with the 442d, he smothered a German-thrown hand grenade with his body to save the lives of his buddies. He died, but his fellow GI's lived to fight another day.

A Japanese American who won the Distinguished Service Cross was Sgt. Frank Hachiya, who was evacuated from Hood River, Oreg. A volunteer from the Minidoka Relocation Center in Idaho, he volunteered for intelligence work behind the Japanese lines in Leyte, in the Philippines. When American troops invaded Leyte, Hachiya with maps of the Japanese defenses hidden on his person, was shot by mistake by his own fellow American Marines. He dragged himself across the beach and presented the maps of the Japanese defenses to his own American commander. Though he died, thousands of his fellow Americans were saved.

Both were Buddhists. Both are examples—of which there are thousands—of the heroism and gallantry, not to mention dedicated loyalty, of Buddhist Americans who despite their religious scruples against warfare, volunteered, fought, and so many died, in the defense of their country, even though they—as American soldiers—were denied their Buddhist classification on their identification dogtags and could not have their Buddhist insignia mark their graves should they be killed in action against the common foe.

AFTER THE WAR

When the Pacific coast was reopened to the Japanese on January 31, 1945, both Christian and Buddhist churches became hostels for the returning evacuees.

So reports the documentary "Buddhist Churches in American History":

Classrooms filled with army cots. Community meals were served to all, job placement was organized and arrangements for food and gas ration books were made for all, regardless of religious affiliation. It was a true vihara in aiding the weary traveler in his return from wartime relocation centers. It was a meeting for the uncertain and a place to seek solace from the frightening racist reception that so often awaited the early returnees.

On the other hand, many Japanese Americans who resettled in the Midwestern and Eastern States decided to remain where they had been welcomed during World War II. The Buddhist resettlers regrouped themselves in cities like New York, Chicago, Cleveland, and Minneapolis and founded Buddhist temples in their new-found homes.

Of particular note was the help rendered by the Unitarian Church in New York, Chicago, Cleveland, Philadelphia, St. Louis, and Washington, D.C. Both Dr. Preston Bradley and Dr. Homer Jack gave invaluable aid to the Buddhists in the Chicago area, for instance, by their wise counsel and meaningful help, even helping them to locate suitable meeting places.

In Minneapolis, Father Daisuke Kitagawa, an Episcopalian clergyman, encouraged the Buddhists in the Twin Cities to organize their own church. Here again the Unitarian Church opened their doors to the Buddhists to hold their own services. Even today, the Buddhists of the area are using the facilities of the First Universalist Church, with the generous help of the Reverend John Cummins.

The experiences of World War II and, thereafter, have caused the BCA to understand and cooperate with the Christian and Jewish faiths in the common cause that calls all religions. Today, the BCA is a national association of Buddhist temples and branches, under the general direction of the Reverend Kenryu Tsuji, presiding bishop, with headquarters in San Francisco. Hikoji Karlyu, a nurseryman in Mountain View, Calif., is the lay president of BCA's Board of Directors.

The 75th commemorative conference, as noted earlier, was held in San Francisco August 24 to September 1, 1974. Co-chairmen for the event were Rev. Ejitsu Hojo and Tad Tomita, both of San Jose, Calif. Lord Abbot Kosho Ohtani of the Homba Hongwanji Temple in Kyoto, Japan, the spiritual leader of Jodo Shinshu, was the honored guest at the celebration. A cousin of the Emperor of Japan, the Lord Abbot is the 23d descendant of Shinran Shonin, founder of the sect, and the patriarch of 10,420 temples around the world, with 22,400 ordained priests, and with almost a million family members in Japan and more than 200,000 individual members in the United States. He has served four terms as the president of the Japan Federation of Buddhists.

President Gerald Ford sent the following message to the conference:

I wish to extend greetings to the 75th Anniversary Commemorative Conference of the Buddhist Churches of America and to express my most sincere wish on this historic occasion for the continued flowering of your faith throughout the United States as you seek the Buddhist presence.

It is in the finest American tradition for our citizens to look within their own being for spiritual guidance. Americans of Buddhist faith are a valued element of that heritage. Citizens of all faiths may draw inspiration from your devotion to the Buddha.

May this occasion be a memorable milestone for the Buddhist Churches of America. I wish to assure you of my goodwill and reverent respect.

The Ambassadors of Japan, Sri Lanka, Republic of China, Thailand, and India extended greetings to the conference in another historic gesture.

While the week-long celebration featured many religious and cultural demonstrations and exhibits, lectures and symposiums by leading Buddhist clergy and laymen, it is perhaps significant that it was the BCA, of all churches in this country, that sponsored for probably the first time an interreligion panel of the major religious orders discussing "How Can the Great Religions Cooperate for World Order, Peace, and Social Justice?"

An American Buddhist, Dr. Taitetsu Unno of Smith College, Mass. moderated this unprecedented panel.

The Reverend Bernhard E. Olson, of New York, currently the director of Interreligious Affairs of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, represented the Protestant denominations. Dr. Hammudah Abdal-Atis, now a professor at Utica College of Syracuse University, N.Y., represented the Islamic faith. A native of Egypt, he is the first graduate of Al-Azhar University in Cairo to receive a scholarship from a non-Egyptian institution of higher education and to pursue graduate studies in the leading universities of the United States and Canada. Rabbi Joseph Asher, of San Francisco, a refugee from Nazi Germany, is now the senior rabbi of the Temple Emanu-El, the largest reform congregation in northern California. A member of the American Jewish Committee's National Interreligious Affairs Commission, among many other responsibilities, he represented the Jewish religion. The Most Reverend Mark J. Hurley, bishop of Santa Rosa, Calif., a noted educator and author, and a member of the Catholic Bishops Committee on Interreligious Affairs, represented the Catholics of America. And Dr. Richard A. Gard of Washington, D.C., represented the Buddhists. A student in leading United States, Canadian, and Japanese universities, he was the Buddhist Affairs Officer for Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs of the U.S. Department of State and the Special Assistant for Buddhist Affairs of the Foreign Service Institute, also of the State Department.

Appropriately enough, the 75th Commemorative Conference concluded with a Buddhist memorial service to honor the Japanese-American war dead of all faiths, which was held at the San Bruno National Cemetery at San Mateo, Calif.

I know that my colleagues in the Congress join me in wishing the BCA another 75 years and more of success and achievement as an American institution whose members have proved anew that peoples of different races, religions, and national origins can come together in these United States and live together in peace and harmony, cooperating with each other in the common interest of all mankind and respecting each other's views as the individual right of every person.

For the information of Members interested in a short explanation of Buddhism in general and the Jodo Shinshu sect in particular through the courtesy of Presiding Bishop Tsuji the following memorandum has been provided:

A SHORT EXPLANATION OF BUDDHISM

Buddhism was founded about 2,500 years ago in India by Sakyamuni Buddha. It rapidly spread throughout Asia to become the predominant Asian religion and eventually was propagated to the Western Hemisphere. Like Christianity, Buddhism has many denominations or sects. It is estimated that there are about 500 million Buddhists throughout the world.

Today, there are about half a million Buddhists of various sects in the United States. The oldest and the largest organization is the Jodo Shinshu, or Shin, Sect. There are over one hundred thousand Shin Buddhists in the continental United States and a like number in the State of Hawaii.

Briefly defined, Buddhism is a religion of compassion and gratitude with the goal being the attainment of Enlightenment or Buddhahood.

The Shin Sect was founded by Shinran Shonin in the thirteenth century. The full name of the Sect is in Japanese Jodo Shinshu or the True Pure Land Sect.

Among the thousands of Buddhist scriptures, there are three sutras or aphorisms which deal primarily with the doctrine of the Shin Sect. Shinran Shonin chose them as the Sacred Canons of the Shin Sect. Inspired by these sutras and also by the commentaries of the Seven Patriarchs in India, China, and Japan, he became awakened to the essence of the teaching and wrote his famous book, Kyo Gyo Shin Sho (the Teaching, Practice, Faith, and Enlightenment) in which he succeeded in construing and systematizing the doctrine with his unusual spiritual insight.

The Shin Sect teaches: that we are to put our faith in Amida Buddha only; that faith will lead to happiness in this life and after death we will be reborn in the Pure Land of Amida where we will become Enlightened; that after attaining Buddhahood we can freely come back to this world in order to exercise Buddha's Compassion; and that we should strive in the cause of justice and humanity with the idea of thanksgiving for the great benefits we are able to enjoy.

The distinct features of the Shin teaching are:

1. Though practice is believed to be the only way of attaining Enlightenment in all the other sects, faith in Amida Buddha is the most essential in the Shin Sect.

2. While other sects teach that Enlightenment is attainable even in this world, the Shin Sect professes that it is realizable only after death.

3. While other sects keep celibacy and vegetarianism as a means of physical purification, the Shin Sect puts more emphasis on spiritual purity and allows the priests to lead a secular life with their families.

Thus, Shin Buddhism is a practical religion for the mass to follow and has attracted followers throughout the world.

Very appropriately, the 75th Anniversary of the Founding of the Buddhist Churches of America will include the Commemoration of the 800th Anniversary of the Birth of Shinran Shonin and the 750th Anniversary of the Founding of the Shin Sect.

TRIBUTE TO HON. KENNETH GRAY

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 16, 1974

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, the retirement of KEN GRAY from the House is an event which all of us in this body view with deep regret. It is therefore fitting on this occasion for me to pay tribute to the outstanding career of KEN GRAY who served the people of the 24th Congressional District in Illinois for the past 20 years.

KEN GRAY actually represented two constituencies, his friends in Illinois and the people of Washington, D.C. Through his work as chairman of the Subcommittee on Public Works and Grounds he worked hard at improving the city of Washington to make it more accessible for visitors. We were all glad to learn of yesterday's decision of Secretary Morton which will allow for construction to resume on the National Visitors Center at Union Station a project which KEN GRAY felt very strongly about and helped promote among his colleagues in the Congress.

I found KEN GRAY to be an interesting man with a quick wit and great intelligence. He laid claim to being one of the best dressed men in the Congress and his overall warm personality led to his developing numerous close friendships with his colleagues in the House many which will be continued in the coming years.

We are all saddened by KEN GRAY's retirement. He was a unique and dedicated servant and gentleman and deserves only the best for the future.

BUSING

HON. MARJORIE S. HOLT

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mrs. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, while the Nation endures conflict because an arrogant bureaucracy and unwise courts have imposed racial quotas on the schools, this Congress has repeatedly failed to heed the cries of protest from the overwhelming majority of our people.

We often make a mistake of assuming that the opposition to quota systems comes only from the conservative and moderate mainstream of American life.

To counter this assumption, I would offer today an excellent commentary which appeared in the Washington Post December 18, 1974, under the byline of Nicholas von Hoffman, who is not known to be conservative or moderate.

His commentary, you will note, deals with an antibusing article which appeared in the December issue of Ramparts magazine, an eminent organ of the political Left.

Mr. von Hoffman's article follows:

BEYOND BUSING

(By Nicholas von Hoffman)

"Every September, as the opening of school nears, white liberals steel themselves for moral paralysis over whether busing is a good idea or not; conservatives busily prepare speeches on 'quality education'; honest racists start getting nigger fever, and the Left prepares to be confused," writes Malecal Andrews, a black writer and intellectual in a symposium on busing in the December Ramparts, a superior left wing magazine.

Andrews' words may signal the decision by the American Left to leave off that confusion and junk their reluctant support for busing, an activity they never had much taste for anyway. Were it not for the Left's revulsion at the others who oppose busing, radicals might have denounced it years ago as the idiot escapade it has turned out to be.

"Busing is a racist, lazy, selfish decision made by people who don't want to take the time to do the work required to improve the quality of education in all our schools," writes Ericka Huggins, who would have been described a few years ago as a black, radical activist or worse. Today she is the director of a school for poor youth in East Oakland, and if, as an educator, her views on busing were formed long since, for other radicals the black-white scrimmages in South Boston this fall have turned uncertainty into conviction.

The news reports of that city's poorest whites and blacks pitted against each other in battle in which neither side had anything much to win was too reminiscent of interracial battles earlier in this century over jobs. So Noel Day, himself a black man, who took a leading part in the Boston school boycotts of a decade ago, writes:

"... White mothers wearing football helmets and carrying baseball bats to beat black kids may really think that they are keeping their children from being knifed; but underneath it all they must also know that Boston's blacks are their main competition for jobs, for decent housing, for self-respect, and in all those other races that poor and powerless people must run. . . .

"More students go to college, for example, from those high schools with large numbers of black students than from South Boston High School. The white kids in South Boston are as educationally 'deprived' and 'disadvantaged' as the black kids are . . . instead of pushing for better schools, black people and white people are fighting over who will sit next to whom in some of the worst schools in the nation."

By staking out a nonracist, antibusing position, the Left has enabled us to think about education as something other than the contorted transportation logistics of upper middle class, suburban lawyers and judges. Having ruled out any involvement with suburban school districts, these jurists are apparently mad enough to keep on truckin' the children of the poor from one lousy school to another ad eternam.

Another contributor to the Ramparts symposium, Miriam Wasserman, says it: "Integration-desegregation-busing has now become a policy of the authorities—courts and federal bureaucrats—with community support mainly from some middle class minorities and liberal whites." A perversion is the name Malecal Andrews fixes to it.

Since the Left is scarcely one voice or organization, it doesn't propose one alternate way of handling education, but the general direction of left wing thought, details aside, is fairly clear. The Left continues to advocate community control of schooling but not of the schools. The consensus seems to be that no system of community control in the present administrative and legal framework can be much better than gangsterism in its effects on the society at large and "a form of involuntary and unpaid servitude" for the children, to quote Edgar Friedenberg, psychologist and educational philosopher.

In the big city school systems, at least, matters have passed the remediable stage. The thing has degenerated into a species of racketeering. Racketeer administrators, racketeer teacher unions and text book publishers, racketeer teachers' colleges, consultants, social workers, equipment manufacturers, all of whom give as little for what they get paid by the local Pentagons of Pedagogy as the armament suppliers give to the big Pentagon of War.

Like the billions spent for foreign aid, of the billions spent on public education only the smallest part gets to the victims, as we might call the pupils whom we compel by force of law to pass their childhood and youth in these places. Unhappily, the job of abolishing the system and building a new one can't begin so long as we're locked into this infinite busing dispute. No matter what happens with it, the only conceivable winner will be General Motors. They sell the buses.

SPECIAL ORDER ON BILL TIMMONS AND GENE AINSWORTH

HON. GOODLOE E. BYRON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. BYRON. Mr. Speaker, with the retirement of Bill Timmons and Gene Ainsworth, the House loses two effective representatives of the administration. Their Government service includes many years of dedicated work on Capitol Hill and in the White House.

Bill Timmons and Gene Ainsworth have gained the respect of their many friends in the House of Representatives. Bill served 16 years on the Hill in various capacities before joining the administration as chief of the Legislative Liaison Office. Gene served as administrative assistant to Congressman SONNY MONTGOMERY and as chief of House legislative liaison for the past 2 years.

I commend the efforts of both these fine gentlemen, and I wish them success in their new endeavors.

A BILL TO GIVE TOP LEVEL GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES RETIREMENT PENSIONS COMMENSURATE WITH PAY RAISES WHICH THEY WERE DENIED

HON. CRAIG HOSMER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. HOSMER. Mr. Speaker earlier this year the President included in his budget message to Congress a strong recommendation for salary increases for government employees, including Members of Congress. Insofar as salaries over $36,000 are concerned, that pay raise was nullified by action of the Senate.

As a consequence thousands of top public servants are leaving the Government at the end of the year. They will go on the retirement rolls and many will take up second careers. This will result in a net monetary expense to the public and a net loss of very expensive capabilities, all because of a reluctance to pay these people what they can command in employment outside the Government.

Realistically, because the pay of members of Congress is a political hot potato, all this has come about. It keeps coming about year after year and is wholly self-defeating.

Unfortunately, it is likely to continue. As it does, the drainage of top notch people from the Government will continue.

It seems to me something ought to be done.

I do not think most people would fail to see the justice of at least allowing these Government servants in the higher pay brackets to receive the retirement benefits they would get except for the lid on pay. It might encourage them to continue in service until their normal retirement time. Certainly, it would be better than the situation as it now is. It would be a better thing for the Government and a better thing for the employees concerned.

To accomplish the foregoing I am today introducing legislation to amend the Federal Salary Act of 1967. I fully realize that this bill will die later in the day with the adjournment of Congress. However, the idea deserves to live. I hope it becomes a springboard in the next Congress for consideration of and action on this most important matter.

The text of my bill is set forth below. I do not presuppose that it would provide a definitive answer to the issue of what action should be taken when future pay raises for employees in the executive, legislative, and judicial branches are not approved and consequently retirement benefits are adversely affected. But I do believe this measure points toward a step in the direction of solving such a problem. I hope someone will take an interest in it in the 94th Congress of which I will not be a Member due to my own retirement.

H.R. 17680

A bill to amend title 5, United States Code, to provide that officials and employees subject to certain pay limitations, or with respect to whom pay recommendations under section 5307 of the Federal Salary Act of 1967 are disapproved, shall be credited, for civil service retirement purposes, with the pay which would be received if such pay limitations were not applicable.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 8331 (3) of title 5, United States Code, is amended by inserting immediately before the semicolon at the end thereof a period and the following: "For the purposes of this subsection, 'basic pay' also includes, in the case of an official or employee whose basic pay is limited by section 5308 of this title or section 4(d) or 5(e) of the Federal Pay Comparability Act of 1970 (Public Law 91-656), or with respect to whom pay recommendations under section 225 of the Federal Salary Act of 1967 are disapproved, the amount of additional pay, as determined by the Civil Service Commission for employees in the executive branch and by the appropriate pay-fixing authority concerned referred to in section 5307 of this title, or section 4 or 5 of such Act, for employees in the legislative or judicial branch, or the amount of additional pay proposed by pay recommendations under section 225 of the Federal Salary Act of 1967 disapproved by Congress, which such employee would receive if such pay limitation or congressional disapproval action were not in effect."

Sec. 2. The amendment made by this Act shall take effect on January 1, 1973. The official or employee shall deposit the total amount of additional retirement deductions that would have been deducted from his pay for such period if the pay limitations described in section 8331 (3) of title 5, United States Code, as amended by subsection (a) of this section, or congressional disapproval action, had not been in effect. If the employee fails to make such deposit, his annuity shall be reduced by 10 percent of such unpaid deposit.

MRS. GRIFFITHS REINTRODUCES TAX CREDITS AND ALLOWANCES ACT

HON. MARTHA W. GRIFFITHS

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mrs. GRIFFITHS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to reintroduce the Tax Credits and Allowances Act of 1974 with the following cosponsors: Mr. BENITEZ, Mr. GEORGE BROWN, Mr. DENHOLM, Mr. HARRINGTON, Ms. JORDAN, Mr. LENT, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. SEIBERLING, and Mr. SYMINGTON. This bill is the result of 3 years of intensive study of the public welfare system by the Subcommittee on Fiscal Policy, which I chair.

I urge my colleagues to examine the bill carefully, and to read the supporting documents prepared for the Subcommittee on Fiscal Policy and available from the Joint Economic Committee: "Income Security for American," and paper No. 16, "A Model Income Supplement Bill." Reform of income maintenance programs and provisions for tax relief should be high priority items for the new Congress. This bill reforms our welfare system and provides badly needed tax relief for modest- and middle-income workers. It would be a giant step forward.

NEEDED REFORM OF UTILITY PRICE STRUCTURES

HON. MORRIS K. UDALL

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, electricity is our fastest growing energy resource. Over the past few years, electricity use has grown at nearly 7 percent annually, meaning demand doubles in just 10 years. We cannot afford to continue to grow at this rate any longer. The industry has run out of technological improvements and new efficiencies of scale, and as we all know, fuel of all kinds is either scarce or very expensive or both.

Utilities currently use a declining block rate price structure, which stimulates consumption as consumption increases. A recent national test case before the Wisconsin Public Service Commission directed that the declining block rate structure be changed to a flat rate structure. Now the Arizona Corporation Commission is considering a similar change. This is an extremely important step in the direction of making wiser use of our scarce energy resources and will be, I hope, the beginning of a national trend.

The following article appeared in the Tucson Daily Citizen recently, and I commend it to my colleagues' attention:

UDALL PROPOSAL MAKES GOOD SENSE
The Arizona Corporation Commission is expected to approve, possibly in a matter of days, a radical change in rate structure proposed by Tucson Gas & Electric Co.

The change basically provides electricity cost relief to low-use customers at the expense of high-use residential and industrial consumers.

In short, the proposal reverses billing patterns. Traditionally, large consumers of electricity have been paying lower rates than low-use customers. The rationale behind the traditional rate structure is the cost of delivery of electricity. It is less expensive to a utility to supply large amounts of electricity to one customer—a mining company or industrial plant—than to deliver electricity to several residential consumers.

But in recent years, as costs of electricity have increased sharply, the low user proportionately has been hurt the most. Consumer groups pushed for a new rate structure, and some utilities have adopted the so-called "lifeline" structure.

TG&E's modified "lifeline" proposal may not be a new concept, but if the corporation commission approves the proposal as expected, the rate structure will be new to Arizona.

December 20, 1974

December 20, 1974

Under the plan, for example, the bills for residential customers using not more than 300 kilowatt hours of electricity per month would show only a 1.6 per cent increase. That rate generally would apply to consumers living in a small house, apartment or mobile home equipped with an evaporative cooler.

Residential customers using 2,500 kilowatt hours would face a 26.6 per cent rate hike. That rate generally would apply to a three-bedroom house equipped with refrigeration.

Industrial users such as the mines would see their rates go up 20 per cent to 26 per cent.

TG&E has been authorized by the corporation commission to raise $14.5 million in additional revenues. It now has presented to the commission this plan on how to raise this sum from various categories of users.

Obviously, the energy crisis is forcing everyone to find ways of conserving electricity, which is why the old practice of giving a cheaper rate to the highest consumers no longer makes much sense. In effect, low-use consumers had little incentive to save on electricity.

The rate structure recommended by TG&E is not without its drawbacks. High-use consumers may even test its validity in court, charging that it is discriminatory because it goes contrary to the cost-price formula.

But the plan, a means of helping low-income groups, which mostly are low-use consumers as well, is also a sensible and realistic approach toward providing incentive for high-use residential customers to conserve electricity.

The "lifeline" approach to restructuring rates upward appears to be the answer to the cost crunch for the utility as well as for the conservation of energy.

HILLEL BUTMAN—ONE MAN'S FREEDOM

HON. NORMAN F. LENT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to report to my colleagues on my efforts to secure one man's freedom. I have been working for many weeks with many very dedicated people around the world to secure permission for Hillel Butman, a Soviet Jew, to emigrate from the Soviet Union. Butman is presently in a prison camp outside Moscow. His crimes: Trying to maintain a Jewish identity, and wanting to join his wife and children in Israel. I have adopted Mr. Butman, as many of my colleagues have done for others, as my "prisoner of conscience."

I have been writing letters to Mr. Butman, his family and friends in Israel, his prison camp commandant, the Procurator General of the U.S.S.R., the Soviet Ambassador to the United States, and even to the Communist Party Chairman, in an effort to secure the least bit of information on his health and well-being. His family and friends have become alarmed over reports of his ill-health and his squalid living conditions. To date, I have not received a single reply, or even the courtesy of an acknowledgment, to any of my letters or telegrams to Soviet officials.

I have been working closely with the Long Island Committee for Soviet Jewry to obtain any possible information from the Soviet authorities. With the help of this committee, and with information provided by Mr. Butman's wife, Eva, I have received extensive data on his request to emigrate and subsequent events. This information has been invaluable to me in better understanding his plight and serves to reinforce my determination to see that he receives proper treatment and gains his right to emigrate.

I must express my admiration for Mr. Butman's humanity and his dedication to the principles of freedom which are so dear to us all. And I reiterate the pledge I have made to his entire family—I will never cease to do all I can to see that Hillel Butman is reunited with his family. This is one man's freedom.

THE ADMIRABLE 93D

HON. CHARLES W. WHALEN, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. WHALEN. Mr. Speaker, this morning the Christian Science Monitor assessed the work of the 93d Congress which adjourns today.

All of us can take pride in the accomplishments mentioned in the editorial. In behalf of my House colleagues, I would like to thank the Monitor's editors for their accolades. These 2 years have been extremely difficult ones. Thus, it is particularly pleasing to end on a positive note. The article follows:

[From the Christian Science Monitor, Dec. 20, 1974]

THE ADMIRABLE 93D

Americans are not in the habit of patting Congress on the back. More often than not, it is the target of criticism and the butt of "do-nothing" jokes. And so, as this historic Congress draws to a close, it warrants observing that the American legislature, when tested to the extreme, can perform vigorously, responsibly, and even with a measure of greatness.

Foremost, the 93d Congress will be remembered for surmounting one of the two greatest constitutional challenges in the nation's history. The Senate Watergate committee took up the crimes of the Nixon administration, and the House of Representatives, with reluctance but with strong conscience, inexorably moved toward impeachment. No one who watched the televised hearings of the House Judiciary Committee could have remained unmoved by the sense of justice and integrity that characterized the proceedings.

That probe forced the resignation of Richard Nixon and led to an unprecedented peaceful transfer of power. It also spawned needed reforms. Congress moved quickly to adopt a new system of financing political campaigns and voted to make Nixon's tapes and documents public property.

Significantly for the workings of political democracy, the 93d Congress reasserted the authority of the legislative branch vis-a-vis the executive, restoring a balance of power. It did so by curbing the presidential war-making ability and setting up a budget mechanism to improve control over federal spending.

Even apart from Watergate, this two-year Congress chalked up some admirable legislation. Countless Americans will benefit by the new minimum standards for private pension plans, the extension of federal aid to public elementary and secondary schools, and the authorization of funds to develop new sources of energy. And citizens of the District of Columbia can now elect their local officials.

Further, at this writing Congress was moving unflinchingly to enact the crucial foreign trade bill, despite Moscow's last-minute disavowal of any pledge on Jewish emigration. This basic legislation will give the President the power he needs to press for freer world trade.

Accolades are also due the House leadership, which got behind the reforms pushed through the newly constituted Democratic Caucus. The impending reorganization, including that of the powerful House Ways and Means Committee, is the most significant in recent decades.

The overall record is not without flaws of course. The 93d Congress failed to come to grips with such overriding problems as the economy, energy conservation, and tax reform. How the new 94th Congress—more Democratic, more reform-minded and a little more youthful—will tackle these and other issues remains to be seen.

But as the men and women of the 93rd speed homeward for the holidays, they deserve a "well done" from their constituents.

TIME FOR TALK'S OVER: HOW ABOUT SOME ACTION!

HON. EDWARD J. DERWINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Speaker, a truly commonsense and objective commentary on the approach that should be taken within the Government to combat our economic problems is very effectively presented by Paul D. Coffman, editor of the Star Sentinel Newspapers, in an editorial of December 11.

As we close down this session of Congress to return on January 14, to face major economic headaches, I hope these kinds of commonsense suggestions will be demonstrated in the Congress:

TIME FOR TALK'S OVER: HOW ABOUT SOME ACTION!

(By Paul D. Coffman)

During the past several months we have heard a lot of talk about inflation and recession. The Republican administration has blamed the Democratic Congress for inactivity and the Democrats have in turn blamed all of our woes on the Republicans.

I, personally, think that all of our national government officials, the labor unions, big business and the general public, as well, share a part of the guilt for the conditions that exist today. I might also add the media, both print and electronic, to the list, since they have done an outstanding job of spreading gloom rather than exposing the bright side of the situation.

Our federal government is so busy conducting investigations, appointing expensive study commissions and adding bureaucrats to the payrolls that little time is left to really work on reducing federal expenditures and cutting the fat out of a very wasteful budget.

The labor unions are so interested in keeping ahead of the rising cost of living that they care very little that one of their strikes throws thousands of others out of work and adds new fuel to the fires of inflation.

Big business is so concerned with the profit angle that it, too, keeps raising the prices to such an extent that profits in many instances are so far out of line that the public loses its trust in free enterprise.

And last, but not least, the general public is showing very little concern for the welfare of others. We are asked to reduce our speed on the highways to conserve fuel and about only half of the motoring public complies. Statistics have proven that we are not only conserving fuel by driving slower on the highways but are reducing traffic accidents and deaths even though only about half of us are cooperating.

Many of us are stocking up on items of food simply because we are told that prices are going higher and as a result we are not only creating scarcities, we are also driving prices to astronomical heights.

To say that we, the American people, are selfish is putting it mildly. We don't mind someone sacrificing as long as it's the "other guy." We must learn that what's good for the "other guy" is good for us too. It's time to stop talking about inflation and recession . . . it's time we start working together to do something about it.

BATTLE AGAINST HCRA

HON. STEVEN D. SYMMS

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. Speaker, certainly the members of the House Interior Committee and a few others in this Chamber are aware of the controversial sessions held this year to discuss the future of Idaho and Oregon's Hells Canyon along the Middle Snake. For those of you who followed the debate on the pages of Western newspapers, the various conservation publications, and even the editorial page of the New York Times, you know that many leading journalists tried to paint a very black and white picture of the decisions at hand.

Either Hells Canyon must be protected now, or be ravaged for all time—they said. As I pointed out to my colleagues innumerable times, Hells Canyon has been with us longer than mankind, and with no appreciable change along the face of the canyon and the riverbed. Faced as we are with increasing shortages of minerals, power, and all manner of natural resources, the additional few years of study needed to make a rational, sane decision on future management seemed like no price at all to pay for wisdom. Nothing, absolutely nothing, will be changing the face of the canyon in the meantime.

At this point in the Record, I would like to insert an editorial of December 9, 1974, from the Burley, Idaho, South Idaho Press, that states better than I am able the concerns of many in our State who appreciate the wisdom of this Congress—no matter how that condition of wisdom may have been reached—in delaying final decisions on Hells Canyon for the time being:

REPRESENTATIVE SYMMS FIGHTS BATTLE AGAINST HCRA

Rep. Steve Symms is waging a long but determined and courageous battle in the House Interior subcommittee to delay passage of legislation which created the Hells Canyon Recreation Area under the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act. This measure went through the Senate just before the election under the sponsorship of Sen. Frank Church on a voice vote with a half a dozen senators on the floor. Still there was one negative vote.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Symms is sponsor of a bill that would provide a four-year moratorium for any decision in the Middle Snake. This measure if passed by the House would give time for Idaho and the upstream waterusers to complete the state's resource study. This study was provided in the original 10-year moratorium passed by Congress in 1967 to defer any water diversion studies from the Snake River. The Idaho Water Resources Board will have this report completed on a statewide basis next year. It must be presented to the people and approved by the legislature and that could not possibly come before 1976.

When the Hells Canyon bill failed to win committee approval in the Senate, every water leader in southern Idaho hailed the event. Water authorities see the House as the last stand. Symms is speaking for upstream water users who are still solidly on record in opposition to the bill. Sen. Church and some of his supporters contend that the "protective language" in this bill protects Idaho water.

Attorneys for the irrigators have yet to admit this even though they did provide some of the language at the insistence of Sen. Church. That still did not mean that the irrigators accepted this verbiage in lieu of constitutional rights to beneficial use of Idaho's streams and lakes.

Constant reference is made to the unanimity of Washington and Oregon congressional leaders to the Hells Canyon Recreation Area. These states have always supported legislation that would endanger Idaho water because they have everything to gain and absolutely nothing to lose by such a stance.

Washington and Oregon in this very year will pump Columbia River water on some 180,000 acres of new irrigable lands in the Tri-Cities-Hermiston-Boardman areas of Washington and Oregon where the broad Columbia flows, fed by its largest tributary—Idaho's Snake. And they are looking to another 3 million acres all supplied from the Columbia. Why shouldn't these downstream states be willing to wipe off Idaho's water rights if they can get them through a HCRA area or any other means?

When the hearings were held on this bill last year at Lewiston, the Committee of Nine, historic wateruser agency, sent a stinging resolution in opposition to HCRA. It has yet to receive a line of mention in the Idaho Statesman, Boise daily newspaper which is hysterically pressing for the bill NOW. What's the big hurry? Nothing will happen in the Middle Snake without HCRA. But the environmentalists want to lock it up now and throw the key away for all time.

While we have problems in this area involving the rebuilding of a new dam at American Falls, we must not be oblivious to what's going on downstream at the behest of environmentalists and our friendly neighbors in Washington and Oregon.

THADDEUS J. DULSKI

HON. DON FUQUA

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Speaker, THADDEUS J. DULSKI, of New York, leaves a distinguished mark for us to follow as he leaves these Chambers upon our adjournment.

Since he was elected to the 86th Congress, Congressman DULSKI has been one of the real leaders in the House, particularly since 1967 when he assumed the chairmanship of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee.

It is in that area that he has made his legislative mark. He has presided over long hours of hearings which resulted in refinement of the laws pertaining to government service, and I can say without fear of contradiction that our Government operates more efficiently and more effectively because of his work.

Those of us who have enjoyed his friendship have particularly appreciated his candor and his grasp of detail.

Now he will take a well deserved rest and have more time to spend with his wife and family. He leaves with the full knowledge that he made his mark in the Halls of Congress and that he leaves a great many friends who will miss his advice and counsel.

To him and to his, we wish long life, good health, and many happy years.

TRIBUTE TO DR. CHAIM WEIZMANN

HON. ROBERT F. DRINAN

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. DRINAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues the second part of the American Israel Public Affairs Committee statement on Dr. Chaim Weizmann and the development of the State of Israel:

TRIBUTE TO DR. CHAIM WEIZMANN

II. PALESTINE HAS NEVER BEEN AN ARAB STATE
Despite the claims of the PLO, in its demand that a new Arab State should rise on the ashes of Israel's destruction, Palestine has never been an Arab State.

In 1914, when World War I erupted, Palestine was a province of the Ottoman Empire and had been one for 300 years.

In the days of antiquity a Jewish State had existed. But no independent Jewish State had existed since 63 BC, when the Romans invaded the Holy Land and destroyed Jerusalem.

With the fall of Rome, Palestine suffered the changing fortunes of the rest of the Byzantine Empire until, in 638, all of Syria, including Palestine, was conquered by the Moslems and ruled as a province under the Caliphate.

As the result of the Crusades, Christian states, including a Kingdom of Jerusalem, were set up in the area. Palestine was recovered by the Moslems in the Thirteenth Century. In 1518, it was conquered by the Turks and remained a province of the Ottoman Empire for three centuries.

When Turkey collapsed at the end of World War I, the British took over.

III. PALESTINE WAS NOT PROMISED TO ARABS

It was never the intention of those responsible for the Balfour Declaration and the Mandate to establish Palestine as an Arab State, so the historical records confirm.

Arab claims that the British government promised them an independent state in Palestine as well as independence of other areas, repeatedly have been denied by the British government and by Sir Henry McMahon, former British High Commissioner in Egypt. The Arab claim is based on an alleged promise of Sir Henry to the Sherif of Mecca, King Hussein of Hejaz, to do this in exchange for his help in arranging revolts of Arabs against the Turks, during World War I.

December 20, 1974

In June, 1922, Winston Churchill denied this, stating, "The territory of Palestine west of the Jordan was excluded from Sir Henry McMahon's pledge."

In 1937 Sir Henry, himself, in a letter to the London Times on July 23, 1937 denied that such a pledge had been made to King Hussein. In this letter he said:

"Many references have been made in the Palestine Royal Commission Report and in the course of the recent debates in both Houses of Parliament to the 'McMahon Pledge,' especially to that portion of the pledge which concerns Palestine and of which one interpretation has been claimed by the Jews and another by the Arabs.

"It has been suggested to me that continued silence on the part of the giver of the pledge may itself be misunderstood.

"I feel, therefore, called upon to make some statement on the subject, but I will confine myself in doing so to the point now at issue—i.e., whether that portion of Syria now known as Palestine was or was not intended to be included in the territories in which the independence of the Arabs was guaranteed in my pledge.

"I feel it my duty to state, and I do so definitely and emphatically, that it was not intended by me in giving this pledge to King Hussein to include Palestine in the area in which Arab independence was promised.

"I also had every reason to believe at the time that the fact that Palestine was not included in my pledge was well understood by King Hussein."

In May 1939, the British White Paper on Palestine, closing Jewish immigration into Palestine, also confirmed that no pledge was made that Palestine should become an Arab State, stating:

"His Majesty's Government regret the misunderstandings which have arisen as regards some of the phrases used. For their part they can only adhere, for the reasons given by their representatives in the Report, to the view that the whole of Palestine west of the Jordan was excluded from Sir Henry McMahon's pledge, and they therefore cannot agree that the McMahon correspondence forms a just basis for the claim that Palestine should be converted into an Arab State."

IV. SEVEN INDEPENDENT ARAB STATES EMERGED AFTER ALLIED VICTORY IN WORLD WAR I

Britain, which issued the Balfour Declaration, and the successful Allied war effort freed the Arab world from the suzerainty of the Ottoman Empire, which for 300 years had occupied the area.

Seven states—Egypt, Syria, Lebanon, Iraq, Saudi Arabia and Yemen—emerged as States at the end of World War I and, with Transjordan, established in 1922, obtained full independence at the end of World War II.

These States occupy an area of more than 1,600,000 miles with rich resources of land, water and oil, some like Syria and Iraq, requiring additional population to develop their countries.

The State of Palestine also emerged at the end of World War I. Under the terms of the Balfour Declaration issued on November 2, 1917, Palestine, in which the Jewish National Homeland was to be established, originally covered 45,000 square miles on both sides of the Jordan River.

In 1922, Britain truncated Palestine and established the State of Transjordan in a territory of 36,000 miles, three and one-half times the size of Palestine. Both Palestine and Transjordan were governed under the British Mandate.

On January 17, 1946, Transjordan became the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan and unilaterally gave independence by the British government.

CXX—2650—Part 31

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

TRIBUTE TO BILL TIMMONS AND GENE AINSWORTH

HON. JACK F. KEMP

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to join Mr. MICHEL and my other distinguished colleagues in paying tribute to Bill Timmons and Gene Ainsworth, two of the finest public servants I have had the privilege of working with since coming to the Congress.

The demands upon Bill as Assistant to the President for Legislative Affairs, and upon Gene, in his capacity as Special Assistant to the President, have, we know, been extraordinary. Their performances have, in my judgment, been extraordinary in response to these demands.

In matters of considerable import or of a lesser nature, involving both the White House and the entire executive branch, I have never found them wanting.

It takes a rare and very talented person to cheerfully and sincerely accept, in behalf of a constituent, an urgent problem in your congressional district or simply a personal request for information at any hour of the day or night or any day of the week. Even more remarkable is the ability to expeditiously cut through the labyrinth of the Federal bureaucracy to get the answers or action requested.

Bill, who served under three of our Presidents, and Gene, who benefited from his past Capitol Hill experience, are endowed with these rare, demanding qualities. They epitomize the excellence which public servants, at the highest level of Government in our United States, are expected to possess.

The people I am privileged to represent and I, personally, owe them enduring gratitude for their selfless service. I wish them the very best as they take other paths to new achievements.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is also appropriate to take this occasion to congratulate a friend, Max Friedersdorf, upon his new appointment as Assistant to the President for Legislative Affairs and another, long-time friend, Jack Calkins, who has moved on from a distinguished career with the Republican Congressional Committee to the White House.

I can think of no person more capable nor more experienced than Max to strengthen the already close ties we, in the Congress, have with our former colleague, President Gerald R. Ford.

As his predecessor, Max has those special skills, talent, and disposition which will assure the American people and their Representatives the most responsive service they expect from the Office of the President. Our long, happy, and mutually beneficial relationship with this distinguished public servant promises a new plateau in the level of White House-congressional relations.

Jack Calkins has an intimacy with the workings of a congressional office and a relationship with the President which can even further enhance the openness and accessibility desired and proclaimed by our President.

I wish these outstanding appointees the very best.

STANISLAUS COUNTY SHERIFF DAN KELSAY COMPLETES DISTINGUISHED CAREER

HON. JOHN J. McFALL

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. McFALL. Mr. Speaker, on January 11, the people of Stanislaus County in California will gather to honor Sheriff Dan Kelsay at a retirement dinner sponsored by the County Sheriff's Employees' Foundation.

Since 1951 Sheriff Kelsay has established a fine record of accomplishment and service to the people he has served.

In 1951, when Dan Kelsay was first elected sheriff of Stanislaus County, the department was a 50-man unit. During the following years, his leadership has transformed the department into an efficient and forward-looking organization of 246 well-trained personnel.

Prior to becoming Sheriff, Dan Kelsay established similar records of service in the communities of Oakdale and Patterson, both of which are located in Stanislaus County.

A native of Vale, Oreg., Dan Kelsay moved to California and established deep roots in Stanislaus County. I have come to know him and his lovely wife, Jo, very well.

Through the years, the people who have known Dan Kelsay, the dedicated men and women who have worked with and for him, and especially the people of Stanislaus County, have come to respect and trust this dedicated public servant.

I have said that Sheriff Kelsay has run an efficient department. That is true, but such efficiency has been built upon his deeply held consideration of the humane aspects of law enforcement.

Dan Kelsay is a man of strong character, who speaks softly and acts with a sense of understanding and compassion.

During his years as sheriff, Dan Kelsay has served at one time or another, as president of the Stanislaus County Peace Officers' Association; the California State Peace Officers' Association; and the California State Sheriffs' Association. He holds life memberships in each of these associations.

Sheriff Kelsay attended the 43d session of the Federal Bureau of Investigation National Academy in 1950. He is a member of the California Governor's Commission on Peace Officer Standards and Training. In 1964 he served as chairman of this commission.

An active member of the community, Dan Kelsay has served in directorships of the County Tuberculosis Association, the Crippled Children's Association, the Heart Association, the National Foundation March of Dimes in Stanislaus County.

For a decade he has served as a director of the local chapter of the American Red Cross and also serves as a director of the Stanislaus County Salvation Army.

His civic endeavors were recognized when in 1967 he was voted Citizen of the Year by the Civitan Club of Modesto.

The Stanislaus County Bar Association awarded him the Liberty Bell Award in 1969 and he received the community's "Good Egg Award" in 1971.

As Dan embarks upon his retirement, those of us who know him and are privileged to count him as a friend, wish him and his wife many wonderful years in which they will have the time and opportunity to do the things that a full career has not permitted.

THE RESPONSIVENESS OF PRESIDENTIAL COMMISSIONS

HON. STEWART B. McKINNEY
OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, one of the key problem solving devices within our framework of Government is the utilization of Presidential and congressionally appointed study commissions.

These bodies, the membership of which generally reflects a broad spectrum of U.S. citizens, are charged with multifaceted responsibilities, not the least of which is problem solving but to identify the root causes of those issues which deeply concern us. In delivering final reports to the President and to the Congress, the commissions attempt to outline a program of corrective action designed to eliminate injustices suffered by our fellow citizens and to propose constructive changes in the conditions which prompted the commissions' creation. With that as background, I would like to speak briefly today on the efforts of the National Commission on Fire Prevention and Control which, as you know, unearthed unjust hiring practices in some of our Nation's fire departments, a practice which did little to quell—and in some instances, served to foster—some of the civil disturbances our country's poorer communities suffered in recent times.

I am pleased to report that one of those who contributed to the Commission's successful product is a constituent of Connecticut's Fourth Congressional District, which I represent, Mr. Clayton Willis of Greenwich.

Mr. Willis, who is currently operating the Willis News Service in Washington, D.C., has long been involved in the field of human relations as well as in the international arena as a journalist, as a staff member of the U.S. Secretariat, on special assignment to U.S. Embassies abroad; as a lecturer at Federal City College in Washington, and he trained

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

American Indian, Spanish-speaking American, high school, and college students as journalists when he owned a weekly newspaper on the Southern Ute Indian Reservation at Ignacio, Colo.

In his work over the past 5 years with the Federal Government, Mr. Willis has spoken responsibly as evidenced in two nationally published articles: "Race Discrimination Found in U.S. Fire Departments," in the New York Times of June 5, 1973, by Bill Kovach; and "Blacks, Chicanos Find It Tough to Get Fire Department Jobs," in the Christian Science Monitor of June 18, 1973, by Jack Waugh.

In the Monitor article, Mr. Willis points to some of the bright spots in the hiring policies of our fire departments which have a total work force of more than 1 million firefighters. It is important to mention some of the positive work in this employment and tension-easing area which has taken place. As Mr. Willis said:

"A rare few big cities have turned themselves around and tried to erase such out-of-joint statistics without an order from a judge.

Laredo, Tex., even has a Spanish-speaking American chief of its fire department, Mike Perez, who testified about the ethnic hiring problem in fire departments before a hearing which the National Commission on Fire Prevention and Control conducted in Dallas, Tex. Fire Lieutenant Tommy Arevalo, a member of the National Commission on Fire Prevention and Control, was one of the first three Spanish-speaking Americans to be taken into the fire service in El Paso when he joined it in 1953.

I believe progress is being made, Mr. Speaker, and while much remains to be done, we can be pleased with the start this commission has given us.

PASSAGE OF NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION SAFETY ACT OF 1974, H.R. 15223

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Congress has adopted the National Transportation Safety Act of 1974, H.R. 15223, a needed measure for America's transportation industry and the public.

Title 1 of this bill changed the entire scope of the regulatory process controlling the shipment by all transportation modes of hazardous materials. This is a major step forward in implementing a coordinated, effective program to better insure safe transportation of these materials.

Section 108 governs transportation of radioactive materials on passenger carrying aircraft. The conditions for carriage of this material are stringent and will be made more stringent with the adoption of regulations by the Secretary of Transportation as provided in the bill.

December 20, 1974

I have noted with interest a resolution of the Airlines Pilot Association which stipulates various demands for more stringent regulatory controls over the shipment of hazardous materials by air.

The ALPA resolution sets a February 1 deadline for regulatory implementations of their suggestion. In view of the fact this Congress has today adopted landmark legislation in this area, I hope that the pilots will recognize that cooperation is a better course of action than confrontation. I suggest that the airlines, the pilots, and the Government work together for speedy implementation of this legislation and keep in mind the needs of the traveling and shipping public.

BILL TIMMONS

HON. TOM BEVILL

OF ALABAMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have the opportunity to pay tribute to my good friend, Bill Timmons, who has served as Assistant to the President for Legislative Affairs through a most difficult period and has done a remarkable job.

Each time I have called on Bill, he has responded promptly. He has provided my office staff and me with the best possible service, and for this I heartily commend him.

During hectic times when the executive branch and the Congress were working on some of the difficult problems which have confronted our Nation, Bill has remained calm, handling each assignment with competence, fairness, and dispatch.

During the years I have known Bill, I have come to trust his judgment, admire his integrity, and respect his opinion in every situation.

Bill Timmons is knowledgeable and has been an effective liaison for the White House. He exemplifies the very best in dedicated service to one's country. It has been my good fortune to know and work with Bill and I wish the very best for him and his family in future endeavors.

TRIBUTE ON THE RETIREMENT OF LESLIE C. ARENDS, OF ILLINOIS

HON. JOHN J. ROONEY

OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, December 16, 1974

Mr. ROONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, the end of any Congress brings with it not only the end of a particular legislative session but also the end of some long and distinguished congressional careers. As we all recognize, the end of this particular 93d Congress brings with it more than its share of retiring Members. One of the outstanding Members who will be retiring at the end of this session is my good and longtime friend from the Prairie State, the Honorable LESLIE C. ARENDS.

December 20, 1974

It has been my pleasure and honor to have served with LES ARENDS for many years in the Congress of the United States. I should like to note at this point, Mr. Speaker, that LES is one of the few remaining Members on either side of the aisle who has served longer in this most august body than I have. LES was a wise and wily veteran with 10 years' fine service to his credit when I first came here over 30 years ago.

I well know and greatly respect LES ARENDS. His knowledge of the legislative system and process is unparalleled as is his reputation for honesty and integrity. In a long and distinguished public career and as the Republican whip since 1943 he has always worked for what he thought was best for our country. His talents will be sorely missed not only by the people of the 15th Congressional District of Illinois, but by the State of Illinois and the whole House as well.

Mrs. Rooney joins me in wishing LES and his lovely wife a lengthy, prosperous, and peaceful retirement.

TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM E. TIMMONS

HON. ALBERT H. QUIE

OF MINNESOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. QUIE. Mr. Speaker, a dedicated public servant is leaving the employ of the White House and going into business for himself at the end of this year. I am happy to pay tribute to the outstanding record he has developed in both the executive and legislative branches of our Government.

Bill Timmons has served two Presidents in legislative liaison work. He grasped the myriad issues with great facility and tried to help weave the fabric of a national policy to benefit all of our citizens.

It was my pleasure to work closely with him on a number of issues involving the Education and Labor Committee. Occasionally, he differed with me when the views of the executive and legislative branches differed, but it was always on a high plane and mutual respect was always maintained.

His integrity has been unquestioned; his word has been his bond. His talents have been used to benefit government. They will now be turned to the private sector and I wish him well.

TRIBUTE TO BOB MATHIAS

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, one of the things which makes the House of Representatives such a great institution is the varied backgrounds which its Members bring to these Halls.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Along with the lawyers, businessmen, educators, and farmers, we have had an outstanding athlete and winner of the decathlon event in the 1948 and 1952 Olympics—BOB MATHIAS.

Bob brought to Congress the dedication to long hours of hard work required for athletic success. During the past 8 years, he has conscientiously served his constituents in the San Joaquin Valley of California—one of the richest agricultural areas in the United States. He is the third senior Republican on the Agriculture Committee, and the ranking minority member of the Cotton Subcommittee.

His experience as a representative of the United States at the Olympics, and on subsequent good will tours abroad on behalf of educational youth programs, has been put to good use on the Foreign Affairs Committee.

It has been a pleasure working with Bob on matters of particular importance to California. I certainly will miss his warm, down-to-earth personality.

Mrs. Anderson and I both wish Bob, his lovely wife Melba, and their family every best wish for the future.

HON. THADDEUS DULSKI

HON. THOMAS L. ASHLEY

OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. ASHLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is a particular pleasure and privilege to join in honoring my friend and colleague, THAD DULSKI, on the occasion of his retirement from the Congress.

THAD DULSKI has led a life of long and dedicated public service at the local, State, and Federal levels during which he has always had the integrity to follow his convictions, the courage to speak out on issues, and the perception to recognize national issues and interests over partisan and parochial concerns. He has brought great distinction to the chairmanship of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, and the people of New York's 37th District and indeed the entire Nation are indebted to him for the outstanding, faithful service he has rendered.

On a more personal note, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I am grateful for the warm and close friendship I have shared with THAD, one which I am sure will continue to endure in the years ahead.

HON. LES ARENDS

HON. OMAR BURLESON

OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, December 16, 1974

Mr. BURLESON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, As our friend and colleague, LES

ARENDS, plans to retire from the U.S. House of Representatives, after a long and enviable record, I rise to join in tribute to him. He has served the Nation and his constituency in a capable and dedicated manner for 40 years and it will not be the same without him.

While we will miss LES, I am glad to know he will remain in the Washington area and will look forward to seeing him from time to time.

We wish him the best of everything in his well deserved retirement.

TRIBUTE TO CONGRESSMAN OGDEN REID

HON. CHARLES W. WHALEN, JR.

OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, December 16, 1974

Mr. WHALEN. Mr. Speaker, through his years of Government service, Congressman OGDEN REID has contributed to the improvement of our Nation in almost every area of domestic concern and in our foreign policy endeavors.

Both in and out of Congress, BROWNIE has fought for programs designed to overcome poverty and secure civil rights. He has consistently supported efforts to achieve decent education, adequate child care, and public access to governmental information. As an outstanding member of the Education and Labor Committee, he successfully translated his concerns into strong and effective legislation. In this Congress, when he joined the Foreign Affairs Committee, his expertise in that field as a former Ambassador to Israel added immensely to our deliberations.

In working with BROWNIE on that committee and on numerous other issues of mutual interest, I have been most impressed by his perseverance, knowledge, and integrity. Thus, I hope that even though he is leaving the legislative branch, he will not deny the Nation the benefit of these qualities in future years.

HON. H. R. GROSS—THE CONSCIENCE OF CONGRESS

HON. WILLIAM A. STEIGER

OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. STEIGER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, often when one of our colleagues closes out a career in the House of Representatives, we will speak of the degree to which we and the American people are indebted to that individual for his or her contributions while serving as a Member of Congress.

In the case of one Member, who this week is retiring after 26 illustrious years in this body, nothing could be more literal or appropriate. H. R. GROSS has probably saved the American taxpayer more millions of dollars than anyone else who has ever distinguished these Chambers. With his sharp eye and his sharper wit, he has prevented the expenditure of unneeded dollars and the passage of unwise bills.

42046

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

December 20, 1974

The 94th Congress will have an unfillable void. The legend of H. R. Gross is likely to be passed on through the years as new faces come into these Chambers. And I hope his concern for the average citizen and his commitment to fiscal responsibility will also be passed on to Members of succeeding Congresses. It is a high goal to shoot for and I hope we are all worthy of it.

HON. THADDEUS DULSKI

HON. LOUIS FREY, JR.

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. FREY. Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of sadness that we say goodbye to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, THAD DULSKI. THAD has served in the Congress for 16 years and has been chairman of the committee since 1967. He has done an admirable job and his dedication and fairness are qualities which those of us in the minority deeply appreciate.

As a young member not on his committee, it soon became apparent that he was a decent man, a man who would take time to talk with you about problems that existed and who was never too busy to sit down and discuss political questions. His knowledge was broad and his interest in this country was great. His desire to reach the right decision and his willingness to work hard at it was obvious from the legislation and accomplishments of his committee.

I must add on a personal note that the only flaw I found in THAD was his inability to understand that the Miami Dolphins were the best team in football and that Buffalo, although good, was second.

We know the people of his district and State are going to miss him. More importantly, his services to this Nation and this Congress will also be missed. We wish him the best in the future. It has been a privilege to serve with the gentleman from New York.

NELSEN COMMISSION

HON. ANCHER NELSEN

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. NELSEN. Mr. Speaker, Mayor Walter Washington has submitted to the Congress the fourth report concerning the status of recommendations—451 in total—contained in the report of the Commission on the Organization of the Government of the District of Columbia—also known as the Nelsen Commission. He states that 201 of the 451 "have been put into effect and definitive action has been initiated on 133 others."

I consider the Commission to have been one of the major accomplishments of my years spent in the Congress. The large number of the recommendations implemented attest to their inherent value and also to the interest of the local government in being responsive to ways that may improve their operations, organization and management.

I commend Mayor Washington, the City Council members and all those in the District government who responded positively to the recommendations of our Commission.

GENE AINSWORTH

HON. TOM BEVILL

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment of the House's time to congratulate Gene Ainsworth, Assistant to the President for Legislative Affairs, for a job well done.

Gene, who worked as an assistant to Congressman SONNY MONTGOMERY before joining the White House staff, has contributed much toward developing a good working relationship between the Congress and the White House. During his tenure, Gene has made many friends on the Hill, and I know his services will be greatly missed.

Those of us who have worked closely with Gene during the past few months have come to respect his judgment and seek his counsel on many important legislative matters. In his association with Members from both sides of the aisle, he has always been most helpful and has won the respect of many Members.

The future is bright for Gene Ainsworth, whatever road of endeavor he may follow and I know we will hear of many more accomplishments from this fine young man.

I extend my sincere best wishes to Gene and his family.

LES ARENDS SPECIAL ORDER

HON. CHALMERS P. WYLIE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, December 16, 1974

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, in 1967 when I first came to Congress as a freshman one of the first persons to welcome me was the gracious and genuinely friendly minority whip LES ARENDS. He was generous with his time and expert advice which I really feel helped me to better serve my constituents.

I am only one of many persons this man from Illinois has willingly helped. In his 40 years in Congress LES ARENDS has won the admiration and respect from Members on both sides of the aisle. His statesmanship has transcended partisanship, and his service here has been a bright addition to the pages of American history.

LES ARENDS and his charming wife Betty have earned their years of retirement, but their presence here in Washington will be sorely missed.

It can be truly said that the shoes of LESLIE C. ARENDS will be tough to fill.

TRIBUTE TO DR. CHAIM WEIZMANN

HON. ROBERT F. DRINAN

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. DRINAN. Mr. Speaker, I commend to my colleagues the third part of the American Israel Public Affairs Committee statement on Dr. Chaim Weizmann and the development of the State of Israel:

Part Three:

VII. The Partition of Palestine into a Jewish and an Arab State, joined by an economic union, was voted by the United Nations on November 29, 1947.

VIII. Dr. Weizmann's Plea: Dr. Chaim Weizmann, appearing before the United Nations on October 16, 1947 to plead the cause of Jewish statehood, ended his address thus:

"A world which does not hear us in this moment of our agony would be deaf to the voice of justice and human feeling which must be raised loud and clear if the moral foundations of our society are to survive. If you follow the impartial judgment of your own qualified Committee and admit us to your honored table, we shall enter your company with a sense of the spiritual and intellectual challenge which the idea of the United Nations makes to the conscience of man. In giving us this opportunity you will be faithful to the noblest ideals which have been conceived by our ancestors and transmitted by them to the common heritage of the world."

ARAB STATES TELL U.N. THEY WILL NOT OBSERVE RESOLUTION

On November 29, 1947, after the vote, representatives of Egypt, Syria, and Iraq came to the U.N. podium to announce that the Arab States would not observe the resolution.

This promise was kept. The Arab States proceeded to make war on the Jews of Palestine, first by the so-called irregular Arab armies. And in May, 1948 after the State of Israel was proclaimed, by the regular armies of the Arab States.

During that war, the Palestine Arabs fled from Palestine at the call of the Mufti of Jerusalem to clear the way for what was to be the victory of the advancing Arab armies—a victory that never came.

Successive efforts to halt the flight of the Arabs were made, first by the Haganah, and later by the Provisional Government of Israel.

The Mufti, it should be recalled was a popular Palestine leader with a long-time record of complicity with terrorism; was an agent of the Nazis, by whom he was financed. He was a party to the Iraqi revolt against the Allies and the Nazi takeover there in 1941. He was a partner of the Axis in helping to bring about the extermination of European Jewry, as captured Nazi documents at the end of World War II confirmed. Four letters from the Mufti to the Foreign Ministers of Hungary, Bulgaria, Roumania and Italy, in May-June, 1943, counselled them against permitting their Jews to leave for Palestine, particularly Jewish children, saying it would be more proper and preferable to send all Jews to Poland—for "more severe control" and "active surveillance." The charnel houses of

December 20, 1974

Poland were not mentioned by name, but the certain and horrible death there was.

JORDAN ANNEXES PART OF WESTERN PALESTINE
The Arab State envisaged in the Partition Plan never emerged. Instead, Jordan, on April 24, 1950, annexed 2,800 miles of western Palestine, including the Old City of Jerusalem which it had captured in the 1948 War.

A series of armistice agreements signed in 1949 between Israel and the warring Arab States never advanced beyond that stage.

ARAB WAR ON ISRAEL CONTINUOUS

Instead, the Arab campaign against Israel continued through: closure of the Suez Canal to Israel shipping; continuous incitement of the Arab world for a second round to annihilate Israel; terroristic raids on all Israel's frontiers exposed to Egypt, Syria, Lebanon and Jordan; organized guerilla warfare by Fedayeen—whose new name is Al Fatah; insistence on Arab Refugee repatriation in Israel—in opposition to the recommendation of the experts that repatriation with compensation take place in Arab lands—in order to establish an internal fifth column in Israel to destroy her.

THE TRUE FACE OF ISRAEL

Despite the unremitting attacks on its survival since its establishment, Israel has consistently made progress as a democratic state with a stable government committed to advancing the progress of its people.

It has absorbed the survivors of the holocaust—who had been languishing in DP camps for two years after the end of World War II; the entire Jewish communities of Iraq and Yemen and virtually the entire Jewish population of Iran. It has given refuge and home to hundreds of thousands of Jews from Africa, Egypt, and Libya, made necessary by the organized campaigns against them, including physical violence. Those evacuated were able to leave only by leaving their possessions behind them. More recently, it has become the focus of flight from Soviet oppression.

This record is in striking contrast to that of the Arab States who in 28 years have chosen not to absorb in their own lands Arab refugees—their kin in background, language and culture, preferring to leave them in camps, a charge on international funds, principally those of the United States.

Israel has integrated these disparate communities of different cultural levels; advanced education; made progress to self-sufficiency; shared its know-how with other developing countries. And most striking of all, it has become a science resource for the world—building on the science legacy left to the State by Dr. Chaim Weizmann, through the Weizmann Institute of Science.

No other State in the world which emerged after World War II can claim such a record of commitment to democracy; to the advancement of its people. It is an example for the whole of the developing world.

That is why the United States, including the Congress of the United States has continued to express its friendship in terms of moral, financial and military support.

That is why, in seeking pacification of the Middle East, we are called upon to preserve the existence and integrity of Israel.

A firm, unwavering, unequivocal stand by this country can make this possible. That stand should be made clear without delay in terms of the PLO and its Soviet protectors cannot fail to understand.

THE CURRENT VALIDITY OF CHAIM WEIZMANN'S WORK

It is a poignant reminder of the starkness of our time that Chaim Weizmann's words, uttered 27 years ago at the United Nations, should continue to have such sharp validity today.

On October 16, 1947 he told the United Nations:

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

42047

"The Jews are only claiming in small measure what has been conferred upon the Arabs in abundant degree. There was a time when Arab statesmanship was able to see this equity in its true proportions. That was when the eminent leader and liberator of the Arabs, the Emir Feisal, later King of Iraq, made a treaty with me declaring that if the rest of Arab were free, the Arabs would concede the Jewish right freely to settle and develop in Palestine, which would exist side by side with the Arab states.

"My first thought on coming to Palestine in 1918 was to see the Arab leader and to reach such an agreement with him. This agreement was subsequently embodied in a Treaty. The condition which he then stipulated, the independence of all Arab territories outside Palestine has now been fulfilled.

"The area of Arab independence stretches far and wide. Independence is not the exclusive right of the Arabs. We Jews have an equal claim to it. This Assembly cannot possibly decree that the desire of the Arabs to possess an eighth state must obliterate the right of the Jews to possess a single centre of independent national life."

HERALD E. STRINGER

HON. WM. JENNINGS BRYAN DORN

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. DORN. Mr. Speaker, at the end of the year, Mr. Herald E. Stringer, National Legislative Director, the American Legion, will retire from that post after 10 years of service. Mr. Stringer has had a long, distinguished career in law, government, politics, and legislation, and he has directed the legislative efforts of the American Legion with a great deal of expertise and dignity.

The American Legion carries on a broad legislative program dealing with many committees of Congress in addition to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs. The organization is interested in matters relating to national defense, Federal employment, housing matters, and many other issues. In our dealings with Mr. Stringer, we have found him to be most knowledgeable and understanding of the legislative process. He has advanced the American Legion legislative program with great skill and I feel that the organization will be sorely pressed to find a replacement who can match his performance.

Mr. Speaker, we wish Mr. Stringer success in any endeavors he may undertake in the future and, of course, we will seek to cooperate with his successor on matters of mutual interest.

THE CHRISTMAS TREE

HON. BILL FRENZEL

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I voted against H.R. 421; the Christmas tree bill, because it was a complete mystery. There are some good things in the bill, such as doubling the deductibility of political contributions. The trouble is that very few of us know what else is in this bill.

I strongly object to procedures which allow us to vote on multiple matters of importance without having a printed copy of the bill or conference report, or without adequate notice of scheduling or without previous discussion in the House. It is one thing to debate and pass a trade bill which has been before the Congress for over a year. We know the basic issues on the trade bill. It is quite another to note for an unknown series of nongermane amendments not previously debated in this House. It may very well be a good bill, but I can't vote for it.

TRIBUTE TO BILL TIMMONS AND GENE AINSWORTH

HON. OMAR BURLESON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. BURLESON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I join other colleagues who have had a number of years of association with Bill Timmons and Gene Ainsworth, as they leave the service of the White House as liaison representatives to the Congress. Both of these fine gentlemen have performed in a way to bring the highest commendation from all of us. In their actions, both have exhibited an integrity and a dedication to be appreciated and long remembered by all of us who have had frequent contact with them on legislative matters.

It is my hope that both will find satisfaction in whatever new endeavors they may enter, and both certainly can be assured that, personally and officially, they are held in high esteem by those of us who have had their long association.

WILLIAM E. TIMMONS

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, of the changes now going on within the White House staff, one departure in particular will leave me with a sense of loss. I refer to Mr. William E. Timmons, who is leaving government after about 6 years of serving the Nixon and then the Ford administrations.

Bill Timmons, as Assistant to the President for Congressional Relations, has headed up the staff that maintained legislative liaison between the Congress and the Presidency. He has done an outstanding job.

One reason he is so well liked here on Capitol Hill is that he is a very dedicated and hard-working individual. Another is that he is very savvy and perceptive. And a third reason is that he came from a House staff and, therefore, his grounding in the way things operate up here was very good.

In the period 1963 to 1969, he was administrative assistant to then Representative, now Senator, Bill Brock of Tennessee. Prior to that he had had about 7 years on the staff of Senator Alexander Wiley of Wisconsin.

Bill has received a number of honors for his work within the Republican Party. He was very active in the Young Republicans. He served in the Air Force from 1951 to 1955.

The position he has held would be a difficult and demanding one under any circumstances. But the most unusual circumstances of 1974—the impeachment hearings in the Judiciary Committee and President Nixon's resignation of last August—made his job a tough one indeed. That he performed it so well is a tribute to his tact, his keen sense of duty and his selflessness.

President Ford, I am sure, will miss him, as will Members from all parts of the country here in the House, on both sides of the aisle.

As he enters private life, I want to wish Bill Timmons good luck in his new career. I am sure I speak for many in thanking him for his unfailing attention to his work and for the countless courtesies he has shown.

He is a great American.

PRESIDENT'S RESCISSION PROPOSAL WILL DEVASTATE HEALTH PROGRAMS FOR POOR MOTHERS AND CHILDREN

HON. EDWARD I. KOCH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. KOCH. Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the President intends to take budgetary action in January 1975 which will have very serious implications for maternal and child health and crippled children's services. With his budget message, President Ford will submit to the Congress a rescission proposal to reduce maternal and child health funds by $23 million. This represents a deletion of the increase over the President's budget. The President is also deferring increases approved by Congress under the fiscal year 1975 appropriations act for the third quarter, that is January-March 1975.

Under Public Law 93-53, the authorizing statute for these maternal and child health programs, the States are to receive funds for maternal and child health programs in fiscal year 1975 for an amount equal to that which they received in 1973. These programs are operating in this time of inflation on funding barely adequate 2 years ago. And now the President wants to reduce that amount by $23 million.

I will be sending a letter to President Ford informing him that his request for a rescission of the funds approved by the Congress for fiscal year 1975 for health services under title 5 of the Social Security Act in the amount of $23 million is not acceptable to those of us who have supported the programs and that the full amount appropriated by the Congress for these health services for mothers and children for fiscal year 1975 must be paid to the States to keep these programs viable.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Although we will shortly be in that time between Congresses, I will be sending to each office the draft of a letter to be sent to the President supporting full and adequate funding for these programs.

Under the new rules established by the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974, the President will be required to make the budget authority available for obligation if either House of Congress passes an "impoundment resolution" disapproving such proposed deferral. I will be introducing such a disapproval resolution in the 94th Congress.

HERNANDO COURTRIGHT, EL PADRINO DE LOS ANGELES

HON. JOHN H. ROUSSELOT

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. ROUSSELOT. Mr. Speaker, the State of California is extremely proud of its Spanish heritage and the traditions of our historically rich background are proudly upheld. It is with respect and gratitude that I pay tribute today to Hernando Courtright, a fellow Californian who has made an outstanding contribution to the city of Los Angeles and the State of California in maintaining an appreciation for the colorful customs and culture of early California. Hernando Courtright, proprietor of one of the world's most splendid hotels, the Beverly Wilshire Hotel in Los Angeles, is also El Padrino de Los Angeles.

Recognizing that Hernando Courtright has always represented the ideal of what a true Californian should be, the city of Los Angeles bestowed upon him the honor of "El Padrino Del Pueblo De Nuestra Senora La Reina De Los Angeles." He is the third Padrino, Godfather, of Los Angeles, a paternal, protective role dedicated to preserving the cultural heritage of early California—Harry Chandler was the first Padrino, and actor Leo Carrillo the second. Mr. Speaker, Californians are grateful to Hernando Courtright for his enthusiasm in artfully expressing the beauty, warmth, and hospitality of early California life.

A TRIBUTE TO GENE AINSWORTH

HON. BILL CHAPPELL, JR.

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. CHAPPELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to offer my appreciation and best wishes to Gene Ainsworth as he leaves his post as Assistant to the President for Legislative Affairs to enter private industry. It has been a privilege to work with Gene Ainsworth. He has been extremely effective in communicating my views and attitudes to the President and in turn providing me with timely and objective responses to my inquiries. He is a man of great ability and integrity and I am sure his future endeavors will be highly productive. We shall miss him on the Hill.

LES ARENDS

HON. JOHN W. WYDLER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 16, 1974

Mr. WYDLER. Mr. Speaker, I will miss LES ARENDS. He has had a distinguished career here in the U.S. Congress and has played an important part in the history of our Nation. I, however, will always think of him as a good friend from whom I learned much.

His service as whip to the Republican Party was a service that benefitted both the Congress and the Nation. He was truly the gentleman whip, and his services will be sorely missed by all.

CONGRESSMAN OTIS G. PIKE PAYS TRIBUTE TO CONGRESSMAN HUGH CAREY

HON. OTIS G. PIKE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. PIKE. Mr. Speaker, the privilege and high honor of joining friends and colleagues in paying tribute to HUGH CAREY is not to be passed up, least of all by me. To claim a warm personal friendship with HUGH CAREY gives me no particular distinction, since that makes me only one in that vast army of friends and admirers of HUGH CAREY. To have been named to succeed him on the Ways and Means Committee confers no special distinction on me, either; filling his shoes there is simply one more tough challenge for me to face. The unique claim that I can make is that I have been for many years Congressman CAREY's summertime Congressman.

In the summer, Shelter Island, N.Y., is the residence of the Governor-elect and his lovely family, and that happens to lie in my district. Shelter Island, let it be known, is a bastion of rock-ribbed Republicanism like which there is no other in all the State of New York. Twice during the past year, when the New York Times wished to take samplings of opinion from old line, true-blue, non-deviating Republicans, they sent their reporter to Shelter Island. In an astonishing tribute to him last November, the majority of Shelter Islanders voted for HUGH CAREY for Governor not because they loved their party less, but because they had come to love their friend and neighbor more. While they were as familiar as we all are with the outstanding leadership qualities of the public man, they became more familiar than most with the private man, the one wholly at ease with his friends, a ready wit, a proud and adoring father, a man able to survive personal griefs and misfortunes by drawing on seemingly inexhaustible inner strengths, in the end displaying what John F. Kennedy so admired in any person, "grace under pressure."

December 20, 1974

December 20, 1974

His departure from this Chamber would be an occasion for regret were it not for the fact that his enormous talents are at least as sorely needed in the Statehouse at Albany as they are here. New York has lost a great Representative; but it has gained a great Governor.

TRIBUTE TO MRS. IRENE NEESE

HON. THADDEUS J. DULSKI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. DULSKI. Mr. Speaker, after serving as Representative of the 37th District of New York for 16 years, I am retiring from Congress with mixed feelings.

On one side of the coin, I am convinced that I made the appropriate decision, and that it is right to leave this career to enjoy more leisure time.

On the other side of the coin, I regret leaving the good friends in Congress, and know I will miss the Members and staffers whose association has been most pleasant and helpful.

At a time when many tributes are being paid, including those so kindly offered to me, I think it is fitting that I pay tribute to my administrative secretary, Mrs. Irene Neese, who is also looking forward to retirement.

Mrs. Neese has been at my right hand since I came to Congress in 1959, having previously worked for my predecessor, among other Members. Her knowledge and experience, as well as her loyalty, dependability, and devotion to duty, were invaluable to me as a freshman Representative, and her assistance became almost indispensable through the years.

Mrs. Neese's energies, skills, and time have been unsparingly given to the great benefit of my constituents, and on their behalf I am pleased to say, "Thank you, Irene, for a great job beautifully done."

NEW CUBA, NEW CUBANS

HON. CHARLES W. WHALEN, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. WHALEN. Mr. Speaker, John P. Hoover, former U.S. Consul General in Havana, wrote of his impressions of present day Cuba in the November issue of "The Progressive."

Mr. Hoover now is an associate editor of the Latin American Service, and I believe his observations will be of interest to all of my colleagues:

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

NEW CUBA, NEW CUBANS

(By John P. Hoover)

HAVANA.—The squalor of Old Havana is gone—as are the beggars, the loiterers, and the idle; their comrades the bootblacks, car-washers, and lottery ticket hawkers; and the petty vendors who cluttered sidewalks with their pitiful displays of shoelaces, chewing gum, and plastic combs. Gone too are the prostitutes and pimps. Raggedurchins no longer pester passers-by with whining requests for handouts.

For one who, like myself, knew the Havana of old, this is a welcome change. Curiously, it is also a source of grudging satisfaction to that small remnant of the old aristocracy that chose to stay on in Revolutionary Cuba and take its chances with the Castro regime. These remaining well-to-do have been permitted to retain much of their wealth, and have learned to live with an increasingly tolerant and less fanatical Revolution. Though they have lost their erstwhile privileged status, they concede that the mass of their compatriots are better off than before.

My observations lead me to agree with them that the Castro government is doing more material and social good for a higher proportion of the people than any other regime in the island's history. More significant, in my opinion, is the psychological gain: Cubans have finally broken out of the mold of inferiority which Spanish policy and American prejudice pressed upon them. For the first time in four centuries, Cubans are proud to be Cubans.

Giving expression to this pride, Cubans are building a new nation on new bases: a modern society, an economy perforce dependent on the Soviet Union, and a people who have been retrained in Marxist moral and social values. Like other Communist states, Cuba offers none of the freedoms much of the Western world takes for granted—and the vast majority of Cubans in the new Cuba do not seem to care. Their apparent indifference, however, does not hide the fact that the loss of freedom is real and has brought palpable social and personal loss: Their options in making the daily decisions of life are reduced in number, and the spontaneity that used to be one of their most delightful characteristics is impaired. Nor does it disguise the fact that revolutionary fervor, though still a basic motivating force—especially among the growing class of bureaucrats and technocrats—has lost its rough, unhone edge.

Moreover, such institutions as the Committees for the Defense of the Revolution—there is one in every neighborhood—have acquired permanent status and work day and night to make people's lives easier and the Revolution more secure. In the best ward-healing tradition, they provide care for invalids, keep eyes on truant schoolchildren, make sure everyone get polio vaccinations, discourage work absenteeism, and mobilize attendance at political rallies. They also make a point of knowing everyone in their area and what he may be up to. From close-hand and protracted observation, I can confirm that these Committees in fact do some innocent things, but also that they are instruments that could be converted to their original purpose of totalitarian control, sniffing out and snuffing out counterrevolutionary dissidence.

The mellowed forty-seven-year-old Castro is a revered father figure, generally referred to as "our Commander-in-Chief." He clearly rules by consent of the governed—that great majority who, when speaking his name, lower their voices in affectionate respect. This deference they justify by the advances he has brought. His Cuba is so new and changed that it seems unrelated to the old, and those familiar with the former society can understand the new only at the cost of a radical shift in their preconceptions, interpretation of history, political philosophy, and standard of values. As one who knew pre-Castro Cuba, I felt, on returning recently, like Rip Van Winkle, who went to sleep before the American Revolution and could not comprehend the radical changes he saw on awakening.

Foremost among the changes is the end of unemployment, though the regime has been discovering that in Communist as in capitalist societies a certain proportion of the work force would rather loaf than work. Confronted by such irrefutable evidence of an antisocial attitude, and therefore of the government's failure to eliminate that defect among the people, Castro's officials must be constantly more innovative in devising various persuaders—hidden or open, voluntary or not—to keep workers on the job.

The workers enjoy definite advantages. Medical care, education, welfare benefits, and social security are free; rents cannot exceed 10 per cent of income, and taxes are hidden. (In a system of state-owned enterprises, the government takes its share of the GNP directly from profits at the source.) Since the prices of necessities are relatively low and take-home pay ranges from about $100 to $800 per month, even the humblest Cuban father no longer needs to worry about feeding and clothing his family. This is a satisfaction to Castro, fond as he is of proclaiming that his Revolution is of, by, and for the poor.

Education at all levels, from pre school to university post graduate, is another high priority of the Revolution, and it has been energetically promoted and munificently financed. Schools of different levels are within reach of all throughout the island, and all are free. The still dingy streets of Havana swarm with children who, in contrast with former times, are clean, neatly dressed, sturdily shod, and well-fed. While most are on their way to or from the Revolution's revitalized schools, Cuba's leaders worry about the social malaise suggested by the growing visibility of reluctant scholars—hands of school-age boys playing sandlot baseball, fishing along the sea wall, or loitering near tourist hotels.

The educational showpiece is the Lenin Vocational School on the outskirts of Havana, with its 4,500 boarding students of both sexes, rigorously selected on the basis of merit by tough examinations. So excellent are the equipment, the scale, and the work-and-study curriculum offered, that this institution could be a model copied to advantage in some of the world's more developed countries.

The government claims that the emphasis given to education and the nationwide literacy campaign of a dozen years ago have wiped out illiteracy. Allowing generously for exaggeration—for a slippage of, say, 10 or 15 per cent—Cuba would still rank high among the nations of the world.

Perhaps as a reflection of their new well-being, full employment, and better education, Cubans today seem more serious in their attitude toward life. Gone is the shallow gaiety with which they used to meet daily vicissitudes, the sardonic humor that helped them withstand the cruel discipline of hard times, and that, perhaps, shrouded an underlying despair that they or their country could ever be truly free and prosperous. They are sober, not sullen, apparently feeling that a responsible attitude toward the present is at last justified by their firm confidence in the future, their faith that things will keep on getting better. In social views they are egalitarian—no one is "better" than anyone else by sole virtue of heredity. Acquired socialist merit is the only just basis for hierarchical status. This equality frees them from the need to keep proving themselves, permitting them to be truly courteous.

December 20, 1974

In its self-extolled socialist idealism, Cuban society gives at least a superficial impression of altruism—the collective good is the greatest good. People do not seem to be motivated by competition for either material possessions or for the worldly position that would make their acquisition possible. The young, especially, ask how much they can do for their fellow man, not for themselves—an exalted attitude my admittedly baser view of human nature leads me to suspect will sooner rather than later be supplanted by old-fashioned selfishness and greed. But for now they contrast socialist ideals with the dog-eat-dog principle they see as the main motive power in capitalistic societies.

The young Communists in day-to-day charge of most of the institutions governing Cuban life are in their twenties and thirties, thoroughly indoctrinated but too young to have taken part in Castro's nation-forming guerrilla campaign, and with only dim childhood memories of bygone times. They are remote from the respected government counselors, the graybeards long in the high bureaucracy of the Communist Party. They hold in awe the veterans of the Sierra Maestra, now in their late thirties, forties, and early fifties, who fill the nation's middle and upper-management and professional slots. But in a few years, today's young will succeed Castro's cronies as decision-makers. Unless future developments change their perceptions of reality and of the national interest, Cuba will keep following the Moscow pattern—striving toward economic autarky, developing its economy in accordance with Communist models, adopting a more rhetorical and less active role in promoting Third World revolutions, banking fires of domestic revolutionary change, and slavishly following Soviet foreign policy leadership. It will remain subservient to—and, in major material respects, dependent on—Moscow, in mirror image of its deprecatd former relationship to the United States.

The former northward dependency is hardly a memory. Most people in Havana today can not even identify the former American embassy, before which, in the old days, visa applicants would swelter in blocks-long queues. Inside—the foreign interests section of the Swiss embassy occupies the building now—there is a besieged feeling. Outside, the atmosphere is relaxed. The military presence so prominent ten years ago has been greatly reduced. There are few uniformed men on Havana's streets, except for a normal complement of police, and there are almost no uniformed women at all on the streets.

Despite the reduction in military force, anti-American propaganda is vitriolic and provocative. All media give prominent play to bad news about the United States and find no room at all for the good. From early morning until late at night, the United States is a whipping boy, indispensable to the government in rallying public support.

A prominent Cuban newsman, for example, told me that the local press is mainly interested in telltale evidence that the U.S. society and economy are about to collapse—reason enough for editors to scrutinize the lurid revelations about Watergate and financial reports of commodity scarcities, inflation, and a plunging stock market. Five directors of the Tourist Promotion Institute told me flatly that Cuba is uninterested in American tourist trade, on the spurious grounds that in the past Americans visited Cuba solely to drink, gamble, and whore.

Official hostility to the United States, though dominant in the media, is not reflected in popular attitudes toward individual Americans, who are usually well received. But there is little room for Americans in Cuba. Tourist facilities are jammed, mostly with Cubans who are overcoming traditional provincialism by getting to know and enjoy some of the good life in their own island, but also with Russians, East Germans, Bulgarians, Romanians, Japanese, and Canadians. The world-renowned Varadero beach throngs with Russians, but hardly, a Cuban is seen on the satin sand. On the other hand, crowds of Cubans, but no Russians, sit around the Varadero kidney-shaped pool.

The two nationalities do not fraternize. Apart from the almost total language barrier, pasty white Slavs seem somewhat averse to their swarthy hosts. Soviet tourists herd around in organized groups—bulging in bright-patterned frocks and sport shirts, lug-ging bulky cameras, balancing awkward baskets, and wearing silly hats. They elbow through shops, lounge blearily in bars, and sit numbly in dim night clubs—dead to the sexy Cuban dance rhythms. What, one wonders, are these people doing so far away—culturally and geographically—from their home?

But the Soviets are everywhere. Passport restrictions mercifully spare all but a few Americans the crude shock of seeing the overwhelming Soviet presence—the degree to which the geopolitical rival seems to be in control, showing little evidence of any East-West detente in either word or action. Local officials' endless reiterations of eternal Cuban gratitude for Moscow's largesse would sit poorly with Americans, who would fume to see the Abraham Lincoln Institute (formerly the Cuban-North American Cultural Institute) taken over—complete with Lincoln's portrait—as a Soviet cultural indoctrination center.

However, enrollments in the language classes at the Institute show English as the two-to-one favorite over French, with Russian a poor third. And there are other signs that suggest Cubans still vibrate sympathetically toward their northern neighbor. Rock music is the rage, recordings of American singing groups mesmerize their hearers, baseball is the national sport, American movies draw mass attendance, and around the Varadero pool every transistor radio is tuned full blast to Miami. This kind of magnetic pull goes far to explain Castro's apprehension for his regime's stability were relations with the United States "normalized."

Still, Castro recently took some mincing steps toward softening the Cuban image. The utopian dream of building a pure socialist society is being deemphasized, on the practical grounds that it has failed to captivate the nation's youth. There is a generation gap; today's young are not as fervent revolutionaries as their elders, who in their tens of thousands flocked to follow Castro in overthrowing Batista. High officials voice firm confidence that the young will reject "the loathsome influence of capitalist consumer societies," only to find themselves fighting a losing battle against long-haired, denim-clad Cubans, part of the world-wide youth culture, who want cars, cameras, radios, television sets, and other conspicuous accoutrements of affluence as much as Cuban-exile youngsters in the United States. Officials are concerned: They see clearly that the Revolution, if it is to endure, must capture the imagination of the young just as Castro, in the Sierra Maestra, captured the imagination of his generation.

In the meantime, at the Tropicana, Havana's fabulous cabaret, modish young men and women writhe ecstatically to a brassy cacophony. The dance floor is a pulsing mass of bodies, bending and twisting like snakes with stomach cramps. Cuban youth has not so much changed as kept abreast of the times—though the high point of the Tropicana's nightly show is a seemingly endless extravaganza, a supercharged evocation of revolutionary fervor and love of country.

Another softening step is a recently announced reversal of farm policy, slowing down the trend toward large consolidated farms, and improving the status of the small farmers, who produce most of the island's tobacco and coffee as well as much of the grains, fruits, and vegetables, despite fifteen years of agrarian reform. The small farmers are, no doubt, pleased at the reassurance that their land tenure is secure, and that future modifications of the agricultural structure will be gradual.

Some wisps of change also waft from north of the Straits of Florida. MLW, Ltd., of Montreal, Canadian affiliate of Studebaker-Worthington, Inc., sold railroad locomotives to Cuba last March, without vigorous objection from Washington. In April, at least tacit approval seems to have been given to the sale to Cuba of cars, trucks, and spare parts by Argentine affiliates of General Motors, Ford and Chrysler—things Cuba has not been permitted to purchase directly in the United States. And there are growing signs that Washington is moving toward "normalization."

Sensors Claiborne Pell, Rhode Island Democrat, and Jacob Javits, New York Republican—both members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee—returned late in September from an unofficial visit to Havana which persuaded them that the time is "propitious" for U.S.-Cuban talks. Such talks might result, at least, in a resumption of trade relations.

If a direct exchange of Cuban sugar for American products were possible, the soaring world sugar price would pay for an increasing volume of exports from the United States, a measurable shot in the arm for our export trade. In consideration of the tight world sugar supply, some Latin American countries holding quota rights in the controlled U.S. market have been covering shortfalls in their own production with open-market purchases of Cuban sugar. Thus, in spite of the U.S. imposed trade embargo, Cuban sugar is already sweetening our coffee and our cornflakes.

A half dozen Latin American and Caribbean countries now have bilateral diplomatic relations with Cuba. With respect to multilateral hemisphere politics, the foreign ministers of two dozen countries agreed at their April conference, following the suggestion of the American Secretary of State, to consult their governments on the tricky question of inviting Cuba to the next foreign ministers' conference, at Buenos Aires in 1975. No firm consensus has developed, but Cuba's revolutionary government seems to think it has been invited.

For the moment, the major obstacle to a normalization of relations is posed by the hundreds of thousands of Cuban exiles in the United States who have not been able to forgive or forget the turn of political fate that sent them to their bitter diaspora. During fifteen years they have organized and funded an effective lobby, which has been at least as influential in preventing any softening of U.S. policy toward Havana as its Cuban counterpart was for so long in blocking any policy change toward Peking.

Meanwhile, in their resolute struggle for independence, Cubans dangle in suspended animation, still beyond reach of the spirit of detente to which the giant rivals for their affection are dedicated. Nationalism remains a powerful driving force; Cubans are more passionately Cuban than Communist. Their present self-respect, from whatever source it has been derived, augurs well for a more open and happier relationship with their neighbors in the future.

THE MAN WHO MADE PEOPLE LAUGH

HON. JOSEPH P. ADDABBO
OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. ADDABBO. Mr. Speaker, one of man's finer qualities is the ability to make people laugh.

December 20, 1974

A few days ago we lost one of the grandest story tellers of all times—Harry Hershfield. We claimed Harry Hershfield as one of ours; however, he belonged to all of mankind and his loss makes the world a little bit poorer.

I believe Rabbi Sholom Klass, in a column in the Jewish Press for the week of December 20, summarized Harry Hershfield's great ability as a humorist and a humanitarian. So that my colleagues may have the opportunity to read the Rabbi's splendid remarks, I would like to insert them in the Record.

HARRY HERSHFIELD—THE MAN WHO MADE PEOPLE LAUGH

(By Rabbi Sholom Klass)

I remember the day, more than ten years ago, when Joe Brovich, my general manager and I first walked into the small office of Harry Hershfield. I had heard that he had retired as a humorist and a raconteur and I had come to ask him to write a weekly column for the Jewish Press.

Tens of thousands of pictures were piled up on the floor and hundreds more occupied every square inch of the walls. Pictures showing Harry Hershfield shaking hands with presidents and kings of nearly every country in the world. Even a shrunken head from the chieftain of an African tribe hung on the wall. One picture from President Franklin D. Roosevelt bore the inscription: "Harry, get well before the country sinks into a depression for lack of laughter."

A sentence of Proverbs 22:29 came to my mind: "Seest thou a man diligent in his work, he shall stand before kings." Harry Hershfield was diligent in the work of making people happy.

Harry Hershfield was on the telephone telling jokes. People were constantly calling him asking for a joke. Public speakers, officials, and writers needed a joke and there was Harry with his encyclopedic mind always willing to oblige.

What was supposed to be a fifteen minute appointment turned out to be a two hour conference with Harry regaling us with jokes and laughter, interspersed with telephone calls and more jokes over the phone. He had a phenomenal memory when it came to repeating jokes.

One of the jokes he told us occurred at a time when the Police were being accused of brutality. A woman was being rushed to the hospital about to give birth when she went into labor in the taxi cab. The cab driver stopped his cab and summoned a nearby policeman who was directing traffic. The policeman ministered to the woman and soon a baby boy was delivered. When the policeman slapped the baby to make him breathe, the infant cried out: "Help! Police brutality!"

Besides writing for The Jewish Press Harry Hershfield was the perfect master of ceremony. There was never a dull moment when he was around and the room would ring with laughter when he began to talk. He gave of himself tirelessly to every worthwhile cause and he raised many millions of dollars for these causes. "Using me to M.C. was like using laughing gas to extract money," he would say.

Nothing could dampen his spirit, not even a protracted stay in the hospital. In recent months he was in and out of hospitals. He must have known that the end was near yet he had a smile and a joke for everyone who came by.

He may not have been religious in the traditional sense, but he will enter into Gan Eden, the World to Come. The Gemara Taanis 22a, tells a story that once Elijah, the Prophet, pointed towards two men in the market place and said to Rabbi Beroka, "these two men have a share in the World to Come."

CXX—2651—Part 31

Rabbi Beroka approached them and asked them, "what is your occupation?"

They replied: "We are jesters, when we see men depressed we cheer them up, furthermore when we see two people quarrelling we strive hard to make peace between them, so happiness can reign."

Harry Hershfield, if making people happy is the passkey to Heaven, you have now joined our many pious saints of old in Gan Eden.

TAIWAN'S ECONOMIC SUCCESS, A WESTERN WORLD EXAMPLE

HON. ROBERT L. LEGGETT

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. LEGGETT. Mr. Speaker, in the midst of the growing economic difficulties of the Western World, it is interesting to note that one nation in the East, the Republic of China on Taiwan, is doing a pretty good job of dealing with its economic problems. Through the unusual tactics of massive one-time increases in such areas as fuel, electricity, and wheat prices, followed by tight monetary and demand controls, Taiwan has broken its inflationary psychology, according to a Washington Post article. The effect has been striking. While consumer and wholesale prices rose 18 and 16 percent respectively right after last January's big increases in controlled prices, since then the indexes have actually declined.

There have, of course, been costs associated with the anti-inflationary program. Taiwan's balance of trade fell into deficit in the first 8 months of the year, due to higher prices and a shrinkage of the world market. But the Government believes the trend has been reversed and the deficit will decline for the rest of the year. And for the calendar year Taiwan's exports, according to an editorial in the Spokane Chronicle, are expected to top $12 billion, 20 percent higher than those of the People's Republic of China.

The effects of the anti-inflationary effort have also been felt on economic growth. But while Taiwan's real GNP growth this year is expected to be only about half of last year's, 6 to 7 percent against 12 percent, the 1974 rate is still far higher than we in the Western World have been able to achieve. And Taiwan has continued to press ahead with its nine key development projects, which include a steel mill, petrochemical complex, superhighways, and new ports. These are the economic projects that the Government believes are the key to the island's long-term growth.

I would like to include in the Record at this point four articles which show the sophistication of Taiwan in dealing with her economic problems.

The articles follow:

[From the Washington Post, Oct. 7, 1974]

TAIWAN TACTICS HALT INFLATION AT PRESENT

(By Don Oberdorfer)

Almost alone among the market economies of the world, Taiwan has temporarily checked the spiral of inflation. Nevertheless, the island's crucial export industries remain in trouble.

Unconventional tactics of massive "one-time-only" price hikes followed by tight money and strict demand controls are credited with at least a short-term victory over inflationary psychology.

"Since we took very harsh measures in January, inflationary pressures have been substantially reduced," said the minister of economic affairs, Y. S. Sun. His figures, which are accepted by U.S. Embassy officials as reasonably accurate, show that the wholesale price index has dropped noticeably and the consumer price index has dropped slightly since the big round of increases at the beginning of this year.

With few industrial or energy resources of its own, Taiwan is an island factory processing imported raw materials. Thus, price hikes of petroleum, metals, petrochemicals, imported grains and natural fibers are serious problems for the economy. To make matters worse, residents remember the runaway inflation which marked the Chinese Nationalists' final years on the mainland in the late 1940s. Their fear of a recurrence can cause near panic to buy at almost any cost before prices go even higher.

After secret deliberations, the government late in January ordered whopping increases of controlled prices—an 85 percent hike for gasoline, 94 percent for fuel oil, 80 percent for wheat and 9 to 134 percent for electricity with largest users paying most, and promised stunned consumers and businessmen that no more increases would be permitted.

To back up the words, tight controls were applied to the previously soaring money supply, and the national budget was tightened. Consumer price levels leapt 18 percent in a single month, and wholesale prices jumped 16 percent. "The public believed us when we said that there would be no more adjustments, and soon they settled down to business as usual. The inflationary psychology was sapped. Businessmen said they prefer this way so they could plan their future," Sun recalled.

The sharp price hikes and other stringent measures caused severe problems. Some small factories went bankrupt, while others, including large firms, appealed for special help. According to the vice minister of finance, Chun-Heng Tu, the government arranged about $40 million in working capital loans to some 100 companies in March. Tu would not confirm reports that the companies used the money to pay their taxes, but said smaller special loans were given for that purpose.

In another special measure, the government has ordered a postponement in loan payment due to commercial banks by the textile, plywood, iron and steel companies. These have been among the industries hardest hit by sagging export sales. Sun concedes that exports are having "a difficult time." A U.S. Embassy economic report pronounced the crucial export sector of the economy, particularly textiles, "in trouble."

Due to high prices and the shrinkage in the world market, Taiwan's exports have fallen behind imports for the first time in four years. Last year's trade surplus was about $750 million, but a trade deficit of about the same sum was recorded in the first eight months of this year. Sun believes the trend has been reversed and that the deficit will be somewhat smaller by yearend.

Despite a temporarily successful battle against inflation and, to some extent, because of the restrictive tactics employed in the fight, Taiwan's real-term gross national product growth this year is estimated by the economic affairs minister at 6 to 7 percent, about half of last year's level of 11.9 percent. That would be a considerable setback for an island with continental-sized external problems only a few hundred miles away and potentially serious internal problems stemming from minority rule by an exiled Chinese mainland elite. Still, such an economic performance would be better than most others in today's world.

[From the New Orleans Times-Picayune, June 8, 1974]

TAIWAN OVERCOMES ADVERSITY

If it is still a popular concept that the United States is being flooded by imports from the Far East, revision is in order.

Taiwan—Free China—where industrialization is booming, ran a trade deficit with the United States in March and April. Ambassador James C. H. Shen sees his nation's "Buy American" program inaugurated last year as changing the imbalance which had been favoring Taiwan.

Japan, where wages have been increasing dramatically, will have higher production costs on televisions and radios than the United States by 1975, it was predicted recently.

In reporting the reversal of the trade balance in Taiwan-U.S. trade, Mr. Shen updates the remarkable economic advances for the island republic. Last year, the total of goods and services was up 12.3 per cent over 1972; per capita income was up 8.1 per cent to more than three times that of Communist China and far above individual incomes for the Philippines, Korea and Thailand.

In terms of the United States, Taiwan is the seventh largest supplier of imports and fourteenth on the list of U.S. customers.

Were the Republic of China searching for excuses for a poor record, it could find a more than ample store in its leaving the mainland, its problems of converting from an agricultural economy, its power-play ouster from the United Nations and the other multi-faceted pressures exerted by Peking.

But it chooses to work all the harder to advance its peoples and make its way in the world market place. In so doing it has provided a leavening for the Far East and offered lessons from which the long-industrialized United States too can profit.

[From the New York Times, September 7, 1974]

TAIWAN PRESSES NINE BIG PROJECTS

TAIPEI, TAIWAN, September 7.—At every Cabinet meeting, Premier Chiang Ching-kuo asks for progress reports on what have become known here as "the nine big projects."

Despite steep increases in estimated costs and criticism from some economists and other commentators, the Chinese Nationalist Government appears determined to adhere to an ambitious schedule—completion of all nine before the end of the decade.

The projects—including new ports, a steel mill, a petrochemical complex, electrification of the railway system and construction of a superhighway the length of Taiwan—are expected to cost substantially more than $5-billion, or about half of Taiwan's current annual gross national product. Some of the construction has already begun; the rest is under advanced planning.

The critics have recently questioned the need to carry out so many projects simultaneously. They have also argued that the scale of the program will present manpower problems.

They contend that the materials and equipment that would have to be imported would aggravate the trade deficit that Taiwan has been accumulating following the worldwide increase in petroleum prices.

But Government officials, backed by other economists, have maintained that Taiwan has little choice but to push ahead with the program.

Without the projects, officials say, Taiwan's overtaxed port and inland transportation facilities will stifle the economy and the country's industrial development will be stunted.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Implicit in the high priority awarded the projects is their political significance. In the last few years, with the erosion of Taiwan's diplomatic position, Government leaders have become convinced that a strong economic base is Nationalist China's best guarantee of survival.

Three of the projects—the steel mill petrochemical complex and a large shipyard—are designed to speed Taiwan's development of heavier, more technologically advanced industry.

Much of the country's economic growth over the last two decades resulted from concentration on labor-intensive processing industries.

But Taiwan, whose biggest industry is textiles, is now approaching full employment. Her wage rates have risen well above those in such lesser-developed Asian countries as Malaysia and Indonesia.

To remain competitive in export prices and attractiveness to investors, Taiwan considers it necessary to encourage the growth of more sophisticated industry.

Of the total cost of the projects, roughly half is to be met through foreign loans, from both private banks and other institutions, including the United States Government's Export-Import Bank.

The remainder is to come from Government appropriations, contributions from state enterprises and bond issues.

The nine projects are: A 235-mile North-South Freeway, which is to connect the ports of Keelung in the north and Kaohsiung in the south. A first section, less than 40 miles long, was opened last month.

Work on electrifying the west coast mainline railroad, scheduled to start early next year. It is supposed to increase the railway's carrying capacity by one-third, cut running time by one-third and reduce energy consumption by half.

A rail line between the cities of Suao and Hualien on the mountainous east coast, to provide the first connection between the east coast railway and the main trunk in the west. At present, air and highway transportation links with the east coast are often disrupted by bad weather.

A new international airport at Taoyuan, 18 miles south of Taipei. It is to replace the over-crowded terminal and antiquated runway at Sungshan Airport in Taipei. Construction is scheduled to start next year.

A new harbor, now being built at Wuchu on the Taiwan Strait to serve the central Taiwan area near the city of Taichung. The port is scheduled to open in 1976.

The conversion of the fishing port of Suao, on the northern coast, into an auxiliary harbor for Keelung.

A steel mill in Kaohsiung, to be upgraded by the newly formed China Steel Corporation, which includes both Government and private investment. It is to have an initial capacity of 1.5-million metric tons (3,306 pounds) when production begins in 1977.

A shipyard at Kaohsiung. The Government holds 55 per cent of the stock in the China Shipbuilding Corporation, which will run the yard, with the rest owned by the Oswego Corporation of the United States (25 per cent), Camerna Navigation Corporation of Liberia (10 per cent), Associated Maritime Industries of the United States (5 per cent).

[From the Spokane Chronicle, Oct. 9, 1974]

TAIWAN'S TRADE SURPRISES

Recent trade figures released by the Republic of China (Taiwan) tell an interesting story and one that should be reassuring to Americans.

The booming island republic off the coast of Mainland or Red China has only 15.7 million people but its foreign trade this year is expected to top $12 billion or between one-fourth and one-fifth larger than the People's Republic of China on the mainland with 800 million people.

This alone is reassuring in showing that the United States would have been very unwise to cut all ties with Taiwan when it resumed diplomatic contact and trade with Red China, as the latter wished.

But the most encouraging thing in figures given out by Free China's Board of Foreign Trade is the growth in trade with this country and the interest in American goods, even when more expensive than others.

As per capita income increased in Taiwan—from $467 last year to $672 in mid-1974—people who had been saving to buy a small Japanese black and white television set now want big screen, color American sets, even at double the price.

Everywhere, Chinese officials say, an American brand name is regarded in Taiwan as a guarantee of high quality. U.S. appliances, air-conditioners and washing machines are selling briskly.

Only nine years ago, the Republic of China still was a recipient of U.S. economic aid. Today it ranks 12th among this country's 145 trading partners and Sino-U.S. trade is expected to top $4 billion this year.

Last year Taiwan sold $723 million more to the U.S. than it bought in this country, so there are plenty of American dollars there for American manufacturers to get back by sales there.

The Republic of China, which has one of Expo '74's most interesting pavilions, has accomplished its economic miracle, say its officials, by combining free enterprise with hard work.

WILLIAM E. TIMMONS

HON. MARJORIE S. HOLT

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mrs. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, William E. Timmons, Assistant to the President for Legislative Affairs, is leaving the White House at year's end.

As we all know, he performed a difficult mission with great skill during the recent times of extraordinary tension between the White House and Congress.

Through it all, he remained dedicated to his task of maintaining liaison between the branches of Government, and he is regarded with respect by this House.

He was always cordial and responsive in keeping the Members of Congress informed and in dealing with our multitudinous requests. We owe him our gratitude for a job well done.

Now that he is leaving the White House, we wish him well in his future endeavors.

TRIBUTE TO CONGRESSMAN DULSKI

HON. CLEMENT J. ZABLOCKI

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honor and a privilege to join my colleagues in paying tribute to my friend and esteemed colleague from New York (Mr. DULSKI) on the occasion of his retirement from the House of Representatives.

December 20, 1974

Mr. DULSKI has been a conscientious representative from the 37th district of New York and has earned the respect of his colleagues. As chairman of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee since 1967, Mr. DULSKI has demonstrated his expertise in the formation of important legislation affecting our postal and civil service personnel. He has been a dedicated and sincere legislator who has understood the problems of the people and at all times represented their interests.

My wife joins me in wishing Congressman DULSKI and his lovely wife good health, happiness, and success in his future endeavors.

AFSA ELECTIONS DECLARED NULL AND VOID

HON. JOHN M. ASHBROOK

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, recently the Director of Labor Management and Welfare Reports of the Department of Labor ruled that the 1973 election of officers of the American Foreign Service Association, the exclusive representative of employees of the Foreign Service of the United States, was null and void because of violations of Executive Order 11636.

In addition to the violations found by the Department of Labor, allegations of other violations have been raised by Mr. John Hemenway, a candidate for office in the election, in a letter addressed to me. Still another opposition candidate, John J. Harter, has filed a protest concerning the conduct of the election.

Because of the apparent seriousness of the findings and allegations made by the Department of Labor agency and by Messrs. Harter and Hemenway, the Hemenway letter is being referred to Secretary of Labor Brennan for his consideration. At this point I insert into the Record the April 25, 1974, letter of Mr. Hemenway to Department of Labor officials specifying 20 complaints alleged to have taken place during the 1973 election.

WASHINGTON, D.C., April 25, 1974.

DIRECTOR, U.S. Department of Labor, Labor-Management Services Administration, Office of Labor-Management and Welfare Pension Reports, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: The purpose of this letter is to file a complaint alleging violations in the Election of Officers of the American Foreign Service Association, as provided for in Title 29 of the Federal Register, Volume 38, No. 130, of July 9, 1973, regulation No. 204.63.

For the past month I have been in Spain, teaching with the College of the Air, University of Plano, Dallas, Texas. This communication is therefore written in some haste, in the belief that it is better to be timely than exhaustive. All of the elements of the complaint will be made, but the submission of evidence will be left for such hearings as the Department of Labor will see fit to order.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

To comply with section 204.63 of the regulations, the following statements are made: (1) I have exhausted the remedies available to me under the By-Laws of the American Foreign Service Association (AFSA); (2) A letter formally protesting the failure of the AFSA to meet democratic norms, as required by EO 11636 was written on 12 March 1974 and hand-delivered on 15 March 1974. (3) During my absence in Spain, a letter bearing the date March 27, 1974, signed by Michael R. Gannett, "Chairman, Elections Committee", AFSA was delivered to my house. In effect, this letter rejects my complaints in an eleven (11) page reply to my five (5) page letter of complaints.

As required by the regulations a copy of Mr. Gannett's ruling or decision is enclosed as is a copy of my original complaint. Mr. Gannett also sent me some enclosures, which weigh about five pounds. Most are not highly pertinent to my complaint, but they are available for the hearing or for the record, as appropriate. They are not enclosed with this letter of complaint.

Reference is also made to my earlier letter to the US Department of Labor complaining about the failure of the AFSA to follow widely-accepted norms and to Mr. Lurie's reply to me of December 4, 1973. Other correspondence of record between myself and AFSA officers and Mr. Gannett and others will be introduced at the appropriate time.

The elements of my complaint are exactly as I listed them in my letter to Mr. Gannett of March 12, 1974 (see enclosure). In fact, the evidence that the Foreign Service Journal (FSJ) has been used unfairly as a house organ to discriminate in favor of the incumbents continues to pile up. For the convenience of the Department of Labor, the elements of my complaint are summarized below:

(1) During the election, management was not neutral, but openly sided with my opponent, despite my telegrams to the Secretary of State to cease and desist.

(2) State Department officials having the responsibility to regulate employee-management relations refused to look into grievances I raised concerning interference in a timely fashion.

(3) Belatedly (16 December, 1973), management issued a directive designed to be ineffective, to constrain management and confidential employees from interference.

(4) Management specifically encouraged officials and confidential employees to vote without any similar encouragement to the rank and file.

(5) No effort was made to exclude voting by CIA and other excluded agencies in this STATE/USIA/AID labor election.

(6) AFSA officials failed to inform the membership properly of the coming election on, in accordance with the By-Laws.

(7) AFSA officials provided unequal facilitation to candidates seeking to inform the membership. This was inequitable and particularly important in an organization in which the only way to reach the membership is via State Department controlled pouch facilities, ordinary mail being both unreliable or extremely slow.

(8) Systematic suppression of announcements, news, and advertising of the election campaign, to the benefit of the incumbents.

(9) Unfair, inequitable, unequal and artificial limitations imposed on AFSA facilitation of materials distributed, to the benefit of the incumbents.

(10) Inequitable, unfair, and unequal use of the FSJ, the organ of the entire AFSA membership.

(11) FSJ hostility that is documented (toward John Hemenway) that carried into the campaign, to the benefit of the incumbents.

(12) Pattern of FSJ boycott of references to Hemenway carried into the campaign which was not, however, applied to other countries.

(13) Undemocratic By-Laws passed by the current incumbents for the sole purpose of making the elections less democratic (and to "qualify" as a "union" under EO 11636). This rigging as conducted by the beneficiaries, the current incumbents.

(14) Deliberate introduction by the FSJ of materials in the December issue calculated to limit the effectiveness of a presentation made by Hemenway. This was not done to other candidates.

(15) Violation by the FSJ of written instructions in the placement of an ad by Hemenway—part of a continued pattern of prejudicial behavior.

(16) Ballot system did not appear to guarantee secrecy, thereby chilling the amount of participation by members which doubtless formed a non-secret vote.

(17) The ballot was not secret, in fact.

(18) No check on the qualifications of the voters who actually voted.

(19) Ballot unduly complicated, with a high percentage of invalid ballots, demonstrating the undemocratic character of the election system used.

(20) Refusal to accept withdrawal of ballots by persons who discovered they had made an error, or voted out of ignorance prior to the counting of ballots.

It will be noted that the above points parallel the complaint made to AFSA (Gannett) on 12 March 1974, which was rejected by Gannett. There is ample evidence to support each complaint, Gannett and the Election Committee's self-serving statement to the contrary notwithstanding.

The net effect of the election was that, by undemocratic means, in an undemocratic environment, without any of the usual and restore democratic norms to the AFSA, who can not be said to be the result of a democratic election. The Executive Order the regulations are supposed to support has therefore been violated.

It is my request that the Department of Labor exercise its responsibility in this area and restore democratic norms to the AFSA, as required by EO 11636 and the pertinent laws and regulations of the United States.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. HEMENWAY.

THE FELICIAN SISTERS

HON. HENRY HELSTOSKI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. HELSTOSKI. Mr. Speaker, the Felician Sisters of Lodi, N.J., recently ended the celebration of their 100th anniversary in the United States with a concert dedicated to their friends and benefactors. The concert was a joyous celebration and a fitting tribute to the many contributions the Felician Sisters and their friends have made to mankind.

During a century of growth and 65 years in Lodi, the Felician Sisters have dedicated themselves to such noble endeavors as teaching, taking care of orphans, mission work and social service, and today it is an honor to pay tribute to these selfless and dedicated people.

Mr. Speaker, to commemorate further the celebration of the Felician centennial, I would like to share with my colleagues an article which appeared recently in the Bergen Record. Entitled, "Felicians End Centennial on a High Note," this article will give further insight into the important work being done by the Felician nuns. The article follows.

FELICIANS END CENTENNIAL ON A HIGH NOTE

Sixty-five years ago a small band of Felician nuns settled on the banks of the Saddle River in Lodi. Today, the order's Felician College serves nearly 600 students, and is also a center for Newark Archdiocese activities.

Last weekend, the Felician Sisters ended their centennial year in the United States with a concert in the college auditorium dedicated to their friends and benefactors. A 50-member chorus of nuns sang, and a narrative history of the Felician community from its founding in Poland to the planting of new roots in America was presented.

The first band of three nuns to come to Lodi in 1909 was branching out from Wisconsin, where the Felician Sisters had arrived 35 years earlier from Europe. They had been invited by an American bishop to open a novitiate and to send teaching sisters to all Polish parishes.

The sprawling New York metropolitan area, with its waves of immigrants and the demands of its missions, drew the sisters to Lodi where they purchased the Hennessey-O'Hare estate and laid the foundations for Felician College, a 595-student institution.

The original building compound consisted of a large stone residence, grist mill, silk factory, and a farmyard with a barn and workers' homes. The stone mansion became the first convent and chapel, while the grist mill was renovated and became the home to the first 13 of hundreds of orphans cared for by the Felicians.

In 1912, a frame house directly across Main Street was acquired to serve as the residence for the pastor of St. Francis de Sales church, who also served as chaplain for the community.

The silk factory's tenant vacated the structure at about the same time, and the building was razed. On the foundation, a red brick building was constructed as an orphanage—later to become known as Founder's Hall. This last remaining original structure serves as a residence for college students.

In 1913, the Province of the Immaculate Conception was founded. This created the need for an expanded convent which was dedicated in July 1916. In these early years, the convent housed the Immaculate Conception High School. The Normal School, started in 1923, evolved into the Immaculate Conception Teacher Training Institute, later authorized as a junior college which became Felician College in 1967.

Today the complex of the 22-acre institution also houses the new Immaculate Conception High School, a health care center for retired and infirm nuns, a Reading Center, the Newark Archdiocesan Office for Divine Worship, greenhouses, and residences for 600 sisters and staff.

In place of the orphanage which cared for dependent children during the past 60 years, the sisters have opened the Felician School for Exceptional Children.

The Saddle River has not been a friend to the Felicians. In the heavy floods of 1971, the river ravaged the new college campus causing more than $500,000 in damages.

Within the past two years, the college has been active in flood control by widening and dredging the Saddle River and by constructing retaining walls.

5,000 MEMBERS

The Felicians have had much to celebrate. During a century of growth and 65 years in Lodi, the Felician Sisters, now numbering more than 5,000 members, have branched into seven provinces in the United States serving in 31 states as well as in Canada, South America, and Europe.

Their work has multiplied from teaching

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

December 20, 1974

immigrant children to all levels of primary, special, intermediate, secondary, and higher education. The sisters also engage in hospital work, homes for unwed mothers, orphanages, and care of the aged.

The 570 Felician Sisters of the Lodi province staff more than 50 educational and charitable institutions in New Jersey in addition to work in Delaware, the District of Columbia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Oklahoma, Brazil, and Rome.

The centenary closing concert culminated a year of commemorative events which included four concerts, a mass of thanksgiving at the Sacred Heart Cathedral in Newark, a banquet, publications, and various other spiritual, social, and cultural activities.

MORE GOLDEN QUESTIONS

HON. HENRY B. GONZALEZ

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I have now had a chance to review some comments made by the Under Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Bennett, regarding the discussions between the United States and French Presidents on the island of Martinique.

From Mr. Bennett's comments, I gather that he believes we are on the verge of some important breakthroughs in making fundamental reforms of the international monetary system.

Mr. Bennett wants to remove gold from the International Monetary Fund. He also wants to remove all restrictions on government dealings in gold. Apparently, anybody who wants to use gold as a monetary asset would be free to do so, but those who had no such desire would not have to use gold. In other words, there would no longer be a single basis for valuing national currencies.

As far as this country is concerned, Mr. Bennett says that he would like to propose to Congress next year some legislation that would, among other things, abolish the par value of gold. There would no longer be an official price for gold.

It is evident from Mr. Bennett's remarks that the Government of France expects us to agree next month to let them buy gold, as well as value their holdings at the market price. In other words the last shreds of the 1968 monetary agreements will go out the window.

But I am not at all certain what will replace everything that is being tossed out. Neither is the Treasury—or if it does know what it is up to, it is not saying.

Somehow it seems inconsistent that the Treasury would accede to French demands to make gold a more important part of their monetary system—any by the simplest of logic, thereby make it more important to everyone else—while maintaining that they are doing just the opposite.

If the French objective is to make gold the basis of world money, and we have agreed to their demands—which we have—and our objective is just the opposite, wherein can we say that victory is ours? The only way that the Treasury has answered is to say that the French are happier now, and that they will be nice to us when negotiations continue next month.

There are many more questions than answers regarding gold and the world monetary system. The actions our Government has taken do not encourage me to think that the Treasury is any less impulsive in its actions than it was last summer, when it endorsed the resumption of private gold hoarding, and reopened the golden can of worms. Nor is the Secretary's track record very reassuring; his predictions and promises have a persistent way of coming back to haunt him—and unfortunately, the rest of us too.

The next Congress is going to be faced with the task of working out some new monetary rules. I am afraid that it will be a most unpleasant task.

SOVIET PRISONERS

HON. LESTER L. WOLFF

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. WOLFF. Mr. Speaker, over a year ago, I addressed the House to express my concern over the fate of young Boris Penson, a Soviet artist who was sentenced in the "Leningrad Trial" of December 1970 to 10 years in a Soviet labor camp. Over a year ago, I wrote to Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin urging that he intercede on behalf of Boris Penson, whose only crime seems to have been applying for a visa to emigrate. Like so many others of the defendants in the tragic 1970 hijacking trial in Leningrad, Boris Penson lost his freedom because he sought greater freedom, because he desired to emigrate from the Soviet Union. Particularly now, with the Soviets seemingly renouncing the agreements that have been made with regard to emigration, I feel it is urgent for the American people to reiterate our concern over the fate of these prisoners. We must let the Soviets know that we have not forgotten the countless men and women, like Boris Penson, who are suffering a harsh form of punishment merely because of their desire to emigrate.

I never did receive a response from Ambassador Dobrynin with regard to Boris Penson. The energies and talents of this gifted young man continue to waste away in a Soviet labor camp. Boris Penson first came to my attention during the summer of 1973 when several of his paintings, which had been smuggled out of the Soviet Union, were exhibited in my own district on Long Island. I was amazed at the high quality of these works and the genuine talent they reflected in such a young artist. Critics far more knowledgeable about the arts than I, who had the opportunity to see Mr. Penson's work either in the United States or Canada, acclaimed his paintings as first rate indeed. Such waste of human resources is truly a tragedy.

December 20, 1974

Mr. Speaker, I call upon my colleagues and the American people to voice their concern over Soviet prisoners who suffer daily simply because they desired to emigrate from the Soviet Union. We must enforce upon the Soviet authorities that our country does not compromise its principles where human rights and liberties are in question. We must continue our appeals on behalf of Boris Penson and the hundreds like him who have lost their fundamental rights and freedoms.

KEMP CITES AUTHORITATIVE ARTICLE IN DEFENSE OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

HON. JACK F. KEMP

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, central to the debate over capital punishment is the premise that life is sacred, and should be preserved at all costs.

Both proponents and opponents of the death penalty accept this premise, but differ in the conclusions they draw from it, and the policy proposals they make from it.

Opponents would argue that capital punishment represents the "cruel and unusual" punishment outlawed by our Constitution, and that no crime, however vicious, against humanity justifies the death penalty in retribution. The proponents argue that executing a murderer can never atone for the original crime, and the statistics show that the execution will not deter would-be murderers from carrying out their crimes.

On the other hand, proponents of the death penalty argue that no one who willfully takes the life of an innocent person should go unpunished by society, and that a prison term, usually shortened or commuted, hardly signifies society's resolve to preserve and protect human life. Society is justified in using the death penalty as the ultimate means at its disposal of assuring that convicted murderers do not repeat their crimes, and that would-be murderers are deterred to the fullest extent possible.

In the recent edition of Barrister, the national journal of the Young Lawyers Section of the American Bar Association, Prof. Burton M. Leiser of Drake University offers a highly informative argument in defense of capital punishment. Professor Leiser asserts that precisely because life is sacred, there are situations in which the State is morally justified in taking life to defend and preserve other lives.

In analyzing often-cited arguments in opposition to capital punishment, Mr. Leiser offers some useful insights into the fallacies of these arguments, and why the death penalty should be restored at the earliest possible time. Because Mr. Leiser was formerly against the death penalty, his article in favor of the death penalty is especially balanced and well thought out.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I insert Professor Leiser's article for the RECORD:

IN DEFENSE OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT (By Burton M. Leiser)

Because human life is sacred, the death penalty should be restored with all deliberate speed.

As a former advocate of abolition of capital punishment, I write these words with deep regret, for the humanitarian motives of those who oppose the deliberate execution of any man must find a sympathetic echo in the heart of every person who has an ounce of compassion within him. However, those very humanitarian objectives inevitably lead to the conclusion that some persons must unfortunately be put to death. And anyone who is seized with a sense of compassion for suffering humanity and is not committed to a doctrinaire refusal to allow the taking of human life under any circumstances ought, in my opinion, to agree that the death penalty is an evil that cannot be avoided so long as some men continue to disregard the vital interests of their fellow men.

Everyone would agree that society has an obligation to protect human life. Most people would also agree that as a concomitant of that protection, individuals must be given the right of self-defense, including the right—where necessary—to take the lives of others when their own lives or the lives of their loved ones are threatened.

Further, a corollary of society's duty to protect human life is the duty of its designated officials to use such force as may be necessary—including deadly force—to defend the weak and the innocent against those who come with arms and violence to do harm to them, and to defend the nation's vital interests with instruments of death, where necessary, against those who attack it from without. And finally, most people would agree that some personal liberties, such as the right to speak freely, to write and publish one's views on any subject, to worship in accordance with the dictates of one's conscience, and to be free from unreasonable physical and economic restraints, are so precious as to be on a par with life itself; and when those rights are seriously threatened, they believe that it is right and just that the threat be answered with as much force as may be necessary to overcome it.

From Socrates to Patrick Henry, they have proclaimed their readiness either to sacrifice their own lives or to take the lives of others when no other way could be found to preserve the liberties upon which they placed so high a value.

In short, an essential premise of my argument is the proposition that individuals, acting on their own behalf or as agents of a society, are sometimes morally justified in taking human life in defense of the lives and essential liberties of themselves, their loved ones, or those whom they are sworn to protect, and that the laws of the state ought both to recognize these rights and to give official sanction to them by institutionalizing them.

Although the general consensus of opinion in the United States is undoubtedly in agreement with this proposition and with the wisdom of conferring upon policemen and military men the right to use deadly force in appropriate circumstances, there is considerable conflict and some confusion over whether it is right or just for courts and juries to hand over to the executioner persons convicted of having committed dangerous and even fatal crimes. Splitting 5-4 in Furman v. Georgia (92 S. Ct. 2726 (1972)), and writing nine separate opinions, the Justices of the Supreme Court offered a welter of rationales for the positions they took, and some of them shifted radically from stands they had taken only a year or two earlier. It may be useful to summarize the principal arguments employed by the majority in Furman, for they are virtually identical with those that have been offered over the years by abolitionists. The summary will be followed by a detailed critique of the major arguments.

1. The poor and the underprivileged are executed far more often than the rich, and blacks suffer the death penalty far out of proportion to their numbers in the general population.

2. Juries have been arbitrary, capricious, and discriminatory in their selection of prisoners who have been condemned to death.

3. There is no convincing evidence that the death penalty is an effective deterrent to crime. In any case, it is not necessary as a deterrent to crime in our society.

4. Even if the death penalty were a deterrent to crime, it has ceased to be effective in our society since it is inflicted so seldom and since the time that elapses between the crime and the execution is often measured in years, and may be as long as a decade or more.

5. The death penalty is cruel in that it inflicts an inordinate amount of anguish and psychological torture upon the prisoner who waits in the death cell, it strips him of human dignity and of the most basic and elementary human rights, and it is irrevocable.

THE DISPROPORTION OF BLACKS AND THE POOR

There is no doubt that the poor and blacks are executed far more often than their numbers in the population would warrant. From 1930 to the end of 1970, 2,066 blacks and 1,751 white persons were executed in the United States, though in the total population, black citizens were outnumbered by whites in a ratio of eight to one. This fact constituted the sole ground upon which Justices Douglas, Stewart, and White—three of the five Justices who voted with the majority in Furman—rendered their decisions.

Some of them reiterated what had been written in earlier cases: that the Constitution's provision against cruel and unusual punishment does not apply to the death penalty as such. In Trop v. Dulles, for example, Chief Justice Warren (356 U.S. 86, 99), was joined by Justices Black, Douglas, and Whittaker in writing that "the death penalty . . . cannot be said to violate the constitutional concept of cruelty." And Justice Black had observed in 1971 that the Eighth Amendment "cannot be read to outlaw capital punishment." (McGautha v. Calif., 402 U.S. 183, 226)

Were it not for the fact that the death penalty is imposed upon blacks and the poor in such disproportionate numbers, these three Justices, at least, might have been on the other side. Unfortunately, their reasoning leaves much to be desired.

If such fallacious logic were consistently carried forward, it would be necessary also to outlaw imprisonment and fines; for even the most cursory study will reveal that the black and the poor and the disadvantaged constitute the vast majority of the populations of virtually every jail and penitentiary in the nation. If the test for cruel and unusual punishment is to be the extent to which a given penalty is imposed upon a representative sample of the population, then it is unlikely that any penalty will stand the test.

If there is a reasonable suspicion that our penal code, or any part of it, is being applied unjustly to a given segment of our population, then the solution is surely not to abolish the penal system or any given penalty. The appropriate solution would be to reform the system that imposed the sentences in a discriminatory way. I shall not attempt to pass judgment upon the extent to which discrimination has operated in the death penalty cases or in any other aspect of the criminal justice system.

It is sufficient to observe that an adequate remedy is at hand for any person who believes that he has been a victim of discrimination at the hands of a jury, regardless of the penalty that is imposed upon him. He may appeal the verdict, and if the courts find that his appeal has any merit, they can order a new trial. In the cases decided in Furman, no proof of jury bias was offered.

It may be appropriate to observe that blacks and the poor are no longer systematically excluded from trial juries, and that more and more defendants, black and white, rich and poor—including former Presidential assistants—are having their cases heard by juries composed of significant numbers of various minority groups.

Nor should one forget that certain kinds of criminal behavior—particularly those types that carry the heaviest penalties—may have been committed by members of certain minority groups out of all proportion to their number in the total population. If this is the case—and there is some reason to believe that it is—then it would be well to discover the causes of this phenomenon and to try to root them out. However, when black citizens, the poor, and the dispossessed are the most frequent victims of these very crimes, it is unjust and immoral to deprive them of any protection that the penal system is able to provide.

And if serious crimes are in fact committed more often by members of certain groups, then no one should be at all surprised to find that members of those groups are haled before the bar of justice, are found guilty of the crimes they have committed, and are sentenced appropriately. Under such circumstances, it would be as perverse for the courts to hold that juries were discriminating against these groups as it would be for an Israeli court to hold that because a disproportionate number of Arabs had been found guilty of terrorism, Israel juries were discriminating against a minority group.

THE ALLEGED CAPRICIOUSNESS OF JURIES

The charge by some of the Justices that American juries are capricious in their application of the death penalty is certainly shocking. The conclusion they draw from this supposed fact is more shocking still. For by some strange and unknown rule of logic, they conclude that since juries are arbitrary and discriminatory, the death penalty should be abolished.

Prior to 1830, the death penalty was mandatory and juries had no discretion whatever to set the penalty in capital cases. During the Nineteenth Century, humanitarians and abolitionists succeeded in having the law changed in one state after the other so that juries might be given the opportunity to save from the gallows some persons who had been convicted of what would otherwise have been capital crimes.

One result of this reform was a diminution in "jury nullification," the tendency of juries to acquit defendants when they felt that the death penalty was unwarranted. Now the Supreme Court tells us that this humanitarian reform has led to a state of affairs in which juries are actually exercising the discretion that was given them, and are refusing to send some murderers, rapists, and kidnapers to their deaths. If they were more consistent, and were condemning more men and women to the electric chair and the gas chamber, these Justices would evidently have concluded that the death penalty was not a cruel and unusual punishment. But since they have exercised the prerogative of mercy that the legislatures conferred upon them, their judgments are called "wanton," "capricious," and "freakish" by an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, who concludes that the death sentences that they do impose are "cruel and unusual in the same way that being struck by lightning is cruel and unusual." The weakness of the analogy is so evident as to obviate the need for comment.

The paradoxical conclusion with which we are left is this: If the system were more inflexible and if more people were executed, the death penalty would not be cruel and unusual punishment. Interestingly enough, it is as reasonable to decree that the death penalty should be mandatory as it is that it should be abolished, and in fact, some members of the Court have drawn precisely that conclusion.

Unfortunately, however neither solution helps much; for the culprit is not really the death penalty, but the jury. Whether the death penalty is abolished or made mandatory, we are still left with "wanton, capricious, freakish" juries who may lack the power to impose the death sentence, but continue to have the power to find guilt or innocence. The problem is not resolved; it is merely pushed back a step.

Some people insist with such conviction that the death penalty is not a deterrent that one begins to believe that they must have some positive proof. As it happens, they have none, although they can pull out charts comparing the crime rates in adjacent states as evidence for the proposition that those that have abolished capital punishment have crime rates that are comparable to those that have not. Such charts prove nothing, though, for other factors enter into the crime rate, including economic, political, and social conditions. Furthermore, murderers are not always fully aware of the latest legal developments in the states in which they happen to commit their crimes, and in any event, the long-term effects of many centuries of capital punishment undoubtedly continue to influence the conduct of many persons.

Even if there is a significant decline in the homicide rate after the abolition of the death penalty, it does not necessarily follow that the abolition of the penalty was the cause of the decline in homicides. In England, for example, the ten-year average murder rate fell from 4.1 to 3.3 per million from 1910 to 1939—a period during which the hangman was kept quite busy. Suppose the death penalty had been abolished in 1970, and suppose further that this had resulted in 100 additional homicides. The murder rate would still have declined from 4.1 to 3.5 per million and critics would have been drawn to the erroneous conclusion that since the abolition of capital punishment had been followed by a decrease in the murder rate, there must be no connection between the one and the other.

Statistics tell us very little, but common sense can be most helpful. Those who study the deterrent effects of the death penalty go to a variety of prisons, interview inmates there, and write articles in which they draw the astounding conclusion that the people they interviewed had not been deterred by fear of death. Of course not! What other conclusion might one expect from interviews with those who were not deterred? No one has ever contended that the death penalty, or any other, would deter every potential offender. We do argue that just as the threat of a license suspension is sufficient to persuade most drivers not to drive while they are intoxicated, so will the threat of execution be sufficient to deter most citizens from committing certain atrocious crimes which they might on occasion be tempted to commit.

Someday, perhaps, some ingenious researcher will devise a way to find out from those of us who have never committed capital crimes whether we have ever been sorely tempted to do so, and if we were, what deterred us. Many factors must enter into such determinations. One of those factors is undoubtedly fear of the punishment that might follow and its consequences to oneself and one's family. Although some potential criminals will not be deterred from their nefarious schemes, and some unstable individuals will not be deterred from committing serious crimes in moments of extreme passion by any sanction available to the modern state, most persons—who surely must include among them some potentially dangerous individuals—will be deterred by the instruments of social control that mankind has developed over the past four or five millennia.

In any case, there are some classes of persons, and some kinds of crimes, for which nothing but the death penalty could possibly serve as a deterrent. Empirical evidence is at hand.

During the seven years that have elapsed since the Six Day War, the Israelis have collected quite a number of Arab terrorists in their prisons. Since Israel has no death penalty, these prisoners have been given stiff terms, and they know that nothing they do will bring about a more serious punishment than the interminable years in prison they already face. Some of them have murdered their cellmates, and according to a recent article in the Jerusalem Post, "the men responsible admit their crimes, even showing the wardens the instruments they used. They do this quite willingly, knowing that they are already serving maximum terms and that they run no risk of being sentenced to death." (July 9, 1974, p. 8) Where such conditions prevail, human life itself loses all value and becomes a mere trifle that anyone may dispose of at will.

Just as the lifer cannot be deterred from committing the most atrocious crimes by the threat of another life sentence, so it is impossible to deter the potential terrorist, traitor, or revolutionary by the threat of a life in prison. Each of them, after all, expects the present regime to be overthrown and replaced by another, which will not only release him but give him a hero's welcome.

What, then, does he have to fear if he should happen to fall into the enemy's hands? But he might think twice if he hears that terrorists, traitors, and revolutionaries are swiftly tried and, if found guilty, executed. Again, this is not to say that every fanatic will be deterred by the threat of death. No doubt many will not. But others, who might be tempted to join the movement and participate in its most exciting activities, might discover, upon hearing that some of their closest friends had been hanged, that it is more profitable to tend to their tomato plants.

Although there is no proof that hijackers and terrorists would be deterred by the threat of the death penalty, it is surely not unreasonable to suppose that they might be. Now imagine the following situation. A terrorist who is very much afraid of dying dons a bullet-proof vest and, under the pretext of being a mechanic, climbs aboard a 747 airliner that has just been loaded with passengers. After placing a number of charges of plastic explosives in the various cabins, he jumps from the plane and heads for cover. Within a few seconds, three hundred passengers are blown into unrecognizable fragments.

If a few of his comrades had been executed, he might not have gone on this mission. But because of our humanitarian concern for their lives, we risked the lives of the three hundred innocent passengers. Since we do not know whether the death penalty is a deterrent (though we have good reason to believe that it is), we have no alternative but to take a gamble: we either take the lives of a few terrorists, whom we know to be guilty, and hope thereby to reduce the risk to the lives of the innocent passengers on the 747; or we spare the lives of the guilty and increase by some unknown percentage the chances that the innocent passengers will be blown up. On the premises outlined at the beginning of this article, I would have no hesitation about adopting the former course.

If the gamble turns out to be correct, not only have the passengers been saved; the potential terrorist who was deterred has also been saved from having committed an atrocious crime.

LOSS OF EFFECTIVENESS BECAUSE OF LONG DELAYS IN EXECUTING THE PENALTY

This is a little like arguing that since the little bit of good a starving community is receiving isn't doing them much good, we might as well not send them any at all. Just as the solution to this problem is to get the railroads to move the grain to the famished residents more rapidly, the solution the Court ignored would be to give capital cases top priority on court calendars so that they might be tried expeditiously and so that appeals might be heard and decisions rendered as soon after conviction and sentencing as possible.

THE INHUMANITY OF THE DEATH PENALTY

In a decision written by Justice Reed and concurred in by Chief Justice Vinson and Justices Black and Jackson, the Court once declared that "the cruelty against which the Constitution protects a convicted man is cruelty inherent in the method of punishment, not the necessary suffering involved in any method employed to extinguish life humanely." (67 S. Ct., at 376) No one would attempt to deny the suffering and the anguish that must be the lot of the condemned man. It is appropriate to observe, however, that he had the opportunity to avoid it but chose instead to risk the danger for some other benefit that seemed to him to render the chance worthwhile. His suffering is very real, but so was the suffering of his victims, and so will be the suffering of the victims of those others who might choose to commit similar crimes if they feel that they can do so with relative impunity.

Do we dare put our citizens into the position of the Arab terrorists in the Israeli prison, who know that their fellow inmates can take their lives without fear of punishment, since they are already suffering the greatest punishment that the Israelis can impose.

Can we assure the members of organized crime rings and bands of assassins that no matter what suffering they inflict upon their neighbors, the worst they can expect to suffer—if they are caught, tried, and convicted—is a life sentence which they know is seldom served?

If one has genuine reverence for human life, one must be at least as concerned for the lives of the innocent victims of murderous assaults as one is for those who are convicted of having committed murder. This may entail taking the lives of those who have demonstrated their lack of control where other human beings are concerned.

If any legal or political system loses its capacity to protect its citizens from bodily harm and from loss of personal liberties, it has lost most of its reason for being, and any claim it may have upon the allegiance of its citizens becomes very tenuous indeed. Ordinary men and women should not have to arm themselves against attacks by lawless persons who roam the streets. The imposition of penalties is one way society has of protecting its members from injury. To the extent that any mode of execution is painful or frightening to the victim, it is to be deplored. But despite the lurid stories and the occasional bungled executions, the methods employed during recent years are probably humane.

In any case, as long as there is reason to believe that the death penalty is a deterrent to some persons who might otherwise commit serious crimes leading to death or grave injury to innocent victims, the penalty ought to be retained.

However, before the penalty is reinstated, careful consideration should be given to the question of the extent to which it can reasonably be expected to deter certain crimes, such as domestic murder cases, rape, and the like. We might discover that we would want to reserve the death penalty for such crimes as murder for hire, kidnapping, political assassination, mass murder, airplane hijacking, terrorism, revolution, treason and genocide.

Genuine reverence for life is totally consistent with advocacy of the reinstatement of capital punishment, for it entails the proposition that every reasonable measure be instituted to preserve the lives and liberties of the victims of monstrous criminals.

ALOHA TO FISH BAIT MILLER

HON. SPARK M. MATSUNAGA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. Speaker, at the close of the session today, we will bid a fond aloha to one of our most beloved staff members—William M. Miller, known to us all as "Fish Bait." For nearly 30 years, Fish Bait has selflessly served his country, the House of Representatives, and each individual Member of the House as "Doorkeeper," an historic title which does not adequately describe the myriad of important details under his supervision.

In spite of his busy schedule, Fish Bait has never failed to find the time to assist Members of Congress and, through them, all the people of our country. I clearly recall that when I came to Congress nearly 12 years ago, he took the time to conduct me on a personal tour of the Capitol, pointing out its historic details. Countless numbers of my constituents have benefited over the years from his thoughtful gesture and they are particularly appreciative because they are citizens of our youngest State.

As I got to know Fish Bait better, I became convinced that he is part Hawaiian because he follows the old Hawaiian custom of greeting pretty girls with a kiss. It would give me great pleasure if he and his equally charming wife, Mabel, would visit the island State and allow me to conduct them on a tour. I know that they would find a second home there.

On behalf of Hawaii's people, I extend to Fish Bait and Mabel best wishes for continued happiness in retirement.

BILL TIMMONS

HON. EARL F. LANDGREBE

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. LANDGREBE. Mr. Speaker, during my 6 years in Congress, my relationship with the White House has always been extremely satisfactory, contrary to opinions expressed by many of my Republican colleagues.

WILLIAM E. TIMMONS

HON. JAMES H. (JIMMY) QUILLEN

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor for me to join in paying tribute to William E. Timmons, Assistant to the President of the United States. At the same time, I am saddened at his decision to leave the White House.

Bill Timmons is to be commended for his many contributions during his 20 some years in public service. He is an honest and honorable man who has achieved an admirable and outstanding record. He is able, hard-working, and loyal.

He will be greatly missed, because his talents have brought together throughout the years a winning combination in the Congress. His leadership and dedication are certainly shining examples for others to follow.

One of my happiest reflections as Congressman from the First District of Tennessee is working with Bill over the years—it truly has been a most rewarding experience.

I extend my best wishes to Bill, his wife, Mimi, and their family during the months and years ahead.

SALUTE TO WILLIAM E. TIMMONS

SPEECH OF

HON. ROBERT McCLORY

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. McCLORY. Mr. Speaker, it is a special privilege to join in paying tribute to one of the well-known personalities in the White House, Bill Timmons, who is leaving his post there shortly to enter the consulting and public relations business. Mr. Speaker, even before I had the privilege of meeting Bill Timmons, I became acquainted with his wife, Mimi, whose former career was on a congressional staff on Capitol Hill.

Bill Timmons, in his position as Assistant to the President for Legislative Affairs for the past 5 years, has displayed both skill and candor in his contacts with Members of the Congress. Bill Timmons has performed a most difficult function, as tensions in the Nation and between the legislative and executive branches reached a point of national crisis.

Mr. Speaker, Bill Timmons and his wife, Mimi, have provided grace and charm at White House affairs during these past years, and they have served to promote the good relations of our Nation on many occasions where representatives of foreign nations have been guests in our country.

Mr. Speaker, I know that Bill Timmons will experience a successful career in the private sector. I join my other colleagues in wishing him success. My wife, Doris, joins in extending good wishes for happiness and good health to Bill and Mimi Timmons.

SMALL COMMUNITY HURT BY COSTLY ENVIRONMENTAL PROGRAMS

HON. JAMES ABDNOR

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. Speaker, Mayor Alfred Fischer of Eureka, S. Dak., has asked that I make his thoughts concerning the harassment of small communities to comply with environmental regulations intended for urban America, known to my colleagues. I have made numerous efforts to communicate similar thoughts to those who are responsible for these regulations—without a great deal of success.

Perhaps my colleagues and the interested readers of the RECORD will pay more heed to the thoughts of a small town mayor who must agonize over these regulations in a hopeless effort to comply. Mr. Fischer's letter follows:

OFFICE OF THE MAYOR,
Eureka, S. Dak., December 13, 1974.
Hon. JAMES ABDNOR,
U.S. House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE ABDNOR: Why is so much pressure being brought to bear on small communities to participate in Solid Waste, Air Pollution and other costly programs? In a lot of instances, they are very unnecessary, and do not apply to rural communities of our size. Perhaps, area and population could be used as a guide as to which communities would have to participate. Surely, we a town of 1550 persons could hardly be compared with congested urban areas, such as Chicago, New York City or San Francisco. These cities have huge per capita tax rolls to help defray the expenses of controlling their environmental problems.

People in small areas cannot begin to compete with people living in larger cities. Our incomes are far less, but in order to purchase the equipment necessary for these projects our outlay would be as great as theirs. Many of the people in a small town are elderly and living on "fixed" incomes. Where are they supposed to get the money to participate in these programs? Then too, the elderly eat less, and what with inflation have very little garbage. Less garbage would reduce the need, even more, for huge land fill pits.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Our community is presently trying to find a new water supply, which is a very necessary and costly project. We feel that this project will add an additional money burden on our citizens. Why do all towns across the nation have to be categorized into the same schemes? As in our case, we need a new water system. Whereas, some other town may have need for a better garbage disposal system.

To sum it up, we feel that the citizens of each town should be able to decide which need has priority and can be met by their particular budget; and they should not be forced to participate in any programs for which they have no need.

Therefore, we would appreciate it, if when meeting with your fellow law makers, you would make known our thoughts.

Sincerely yours,

ALFRED FISCHER, Mayor.

LEGISLATION ON SPECIAL FOOD SERVICE PROGRAM

HON. CHARLES A. VANIK

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, on June 30, 1975, the authorization for section 13 of the School Lunch Act will expire. This section, known as the special food services program, provides needed food for low-income children during the summer months and in preschool nursery programs. For tens of thousands of children, the food provided by section 13 is the only really nutritious, balanced meal of the day.

Section 13 was first enacted in 1968 and has grown from a small pilot program into a major section of the School Lunch Act. In the current fiscal year, it is being funded at a level of approximately $110 million. The program has always had the enthusiastic support of the House and Senate committees. Chairman PERKINS of the House Education and Labor Committee has been particularly helpful with providing renewals of the authorization legislation. Chairman WHITTEN has been extremely supportive in the appropriations process.

Nevertheless, when the section 13 program is considered this spring, I hope that a number of improvements can be made in the program. It has been a very difficult program to administer. It is often hard to serve food to children in small day care centers or at summer playground sites. By its very nature, the program cannot be as efficient or orderly as the school lunch cafeteria program. I have questioned the good will of the Department of Agriculture hierarchy concerning this program. I believe that they have attempted to hold down their budget for section 13 by denying that hungry children are going unfed. They have attempted to limit sponsors of section 13 programs by making applications as difficult and time-consuming as possible. Program sponsors have been reluctant to participate because of this sea of red tape—and because the Department is often late in reimbursing costs.

December 20, 1974

As the original sponsor of section 13, I have been concerned that the program be properly administered. Therefore, a year and a half ago, I requested a full-scale General Accounting Office study of the administration of section 13. My office, and the staff of Senator McGovern's Select Committee on Nutrition, have attempted to follow the progress of this report.

Because of the scope of the report, the GAO has requested that it be made available to the entire Congress and we expect this in-depth study to be available by February 15. I am hopeful that it will provide a solid basis of constructive criticism which will help the authorizing committees improve the quality of this program.

Before the start of the 94th Congress, I hope to obtain the views of State program directors and program participants on how the legislation might best be amended. In 1971 and 1972, I polled the State directors on the need for additional appropriations. These questionnaires resulted in valuable information which helped insure more adequate funding for the section 13 program. I hope that this year's poll will lead to improvements in the structure of the law.

Presently, section 13 funds are divided among the States on a formula basis. I am concerned that the formula may provide too much money to some States—and not enough to others. Perhaps the formula should be revised, or abandoned in favor of a mandate to the Department to fund all eligible programs and insure that no child goes hungry.

In an effort to determine whether appropriation and formula levels are adequate, I am asking each State:

First. What is the State's formula allocation for fiscal year 1975?

Second. How many section 13 applications, both summer and year-round, has the State received? How many children will be served in fiscal year 1975?

Third. How many qualified applications were denied? How many children will go unserved?

There are other areas where the basic section 13 law should, perhaps, be amended. For example, because of extremely tardy USDA reimbursement of program sponsors, a number of sponsors have been forced to drop out of the program. Some out of business because of the Department's callous disdain of these contractors—many of which are small businessmen and minority contractors. Should, therefore, a mandatory reimbursement schedule be established? Should there be some "advance" of payments to help small suppliers participate in the program?

Many of the States have indicated that they need assistance in supervising the program. Should a specific portion of a State's funds be set aside for administration and inspection?

The reimbursement rates for the section 13 program are the lowest in the school lunch program. Should the reimbursement rates be tied to the regular school lunch rates? What level of reimbursement should be established?

What steps can be taken to increase the level of family day care participation.

December 20, 1974

What can be done to improve the variety and attractiveness of the food served in the program?

Should residential summer camps for low-income children be made eligible for section 13 programs?

In general, what changes and improvements should be made in the special food service program to make it more effective and efficient?

I am hopeful of obtaining a wide response to these types of questions. The answers will help ensure that the new section 13 program will be even better than the original.

WILBUR EUGENE AINSWORTH, JR.

HON. WM. JENNINGS BRYAN DORN

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. DORN. Mr. Speaker, I will be leaving the Congress at the close of this session. Before doing so, I want to express my appreciation to Gene Ainsworth for the outstanding service he has rendered the House, and to me personally, in his capacity as Assistant to the President for Legislative Affairs. Although his job has been a very difficult one, he has always made himself available whenever the Members of the House needed him, and we could always rely on the information he gave us. He is a man of the highest caliber.

Gene will be leaving the White House effective December 31, 1974. He plans to remain in Washington, where he will become a partner in a private business firm. I wish him much success in his private practice.

Before coming to Washington, Gene was active in the Mississippi State Chamber of Commerce. He served as director of economic resources, Mississippi Economic Council. He came to Washington as administrative assistant to my friend and distinguished colleague from Mississippi, Representative SONNY MONTGOMERY. He moved into the White House in July 1973 and since that time has provided assistance to the Members of the House on numerous problems dealing with legislative matters.

Mr. Speaker, before leaving the House I want to personally thank Gene Ainsworth for the many kindnesses and courtesies extended to all of us in this body. Mrs. Dorn joins me in wishing for him and his family continued success and happiness.

W. EUGENE AINSWORTH, JR.

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, one of the youngest and most promising members of the White House staff is leaving government for private life. I refer to W. Eugene Ainsworth, Jr., who has been part of the President's congressional relations staff with the House of Representatives.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

In 1973, when he was only 30 years old, Gene was tapped for the job he is now leaving. Prior to that he had been head of the staff of my good friend from Mississippi, Congressman G. V. (SONNY) MONTGOMERY.

The year 1974 was obviously not an easy one for Gene, just as it was not for his boss Bill Timmons or any of the rest of the White House's congressional relations staff. Serious attempts to impeach a President have come along only twice in two centuries. The liaison people were caught, and the saying goes, between a rock and a hard place in the series of events that led up to the cataclysm of last August 8.

Of course, much of the work these gentlemen do is just plain mundane—not exciting, not a headline in it anywhere. But it still is vital to the working of our system of government. It demands good people putting in long hours.

President Nixon and President Ford have been well and ably represented, here in the House, by Gene Ainsworth. As he leaves for a new career, I want to thank him for all that he has done and the many courtesies he has extended. I will be among the many who will miss him.

WILLIAM E. TIMMONS

HON. WM. JENNINGS BRYAN DORN

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. DORN. Mr. Speaker, before leaving the Congress, I want to pay tribute to my good friend William E. Timmons for the outstanding job he has done in his capacity as Assistant to the President for Legislative Affairs. Bill has served two Presidents and has served them well. He has headed a legislative team at the White House during some very difficult times; however, he has always acted with dispatch whenever I have called him.

Bill Timmons is a man of the highest character and integrity. Prior to going to the White House he headed the staff of my dear friend, the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, BILL BROCK. He moved to the White House and served as Assistant for House Liaison under my good friend, Bryce Harlow. He was subsequently named Assistant to the President for Legislative Affairs and has headed the legislative team for a number of years.

Mr. Speaker, Bill has been extremely effective in his position because he has always been fair. His loyalty to both President Nixon and President Ford was unquestioned; however, he has always been nonpartisan in his dealings with the Congress. He always did the very best job he possibly could for all Members of Congress, both Democrats and Republicans.

I wish Bill well when he leaves the White House and returns to private business at the close of business on December 31. He will certainly be missed by all of us who have served with him during the past 6 years.

J. NORMAN SHADE

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, few men command the love and respect of so many people as one of my most well-known constituents and dear friend, J. Norman Shade, of Pekin. Throughout his many years of service to the people of Pekin and the surrounding area, both as a public servant and as a private citizen, Norm Shade has earned the devotion and friendship of the thousands of people he has come in contact with. His public service spanned more than four decades—24 years as mayor of the city of Pekin, 8 years as a member of the Tazewell County Board of Supervisors, and 8 years as a State representative to the general assembly in Springfield. But perhaps more importantly, he has given tirelessly both his time and his money in helping his fellow man. It has been his "people-to-people" campaign that has distinguished Norm Shade as an outstanding public servant and a terrific human being.

It is with great pride that I share with my colleagues, the following articles paying tribute to my friend:
[From the Peoria (Ill.) Journal-Star, Nov. 24, 1974]

A MAN NAMED SHADE

Once upon a time there was a young man, in an age when cars were not really very common, who had access to a motor car.

(He also zipped around a good deal on his own motorcycle, in those times.)

This young man was unusual. Where others might have used that motor car only to exploit popularity with his young peers, this one was unusually conscious and sensitive about the elderly, too, and from time to time could be seen running errands or giving some elderly "friends" the experience of a "spin" in a car.

As he entered young manhood, this habit of what we now call "compassion" broadened into a clear concern, and a host of personal acts of consideration for individuals around the town who were less fortunate or tended to be neglected.

Some years after these habits were formed, the young man ran for a public office—one of the assistant supervisors to serve on the county board from Pekin, and he served on the board four years.

Some serious problems arose in city government, and he ran and ended up serving as almost the perpetual mayor of Pekin. He served 24 years as mayor, and eight in the state legislature.

He did not change his ways. Nobody really knows how many places he gave of his time and goods. He was a benefactor and an active worker for the Union Mission. He visited the hospital frequently, calling on large numbers of sick and injured often with small gifts. He never forgot the people in the Tazewell Nursing home. He constantly performed "small" acts of consideration for the residents of

December 20, 1974

"Golden Arms". He was a founder and tireless worker and giver for the Pekin Boy's club. He became beloved of the workers in the Handicapped Workshop through his constant help and personal attention. The list is well-nigh endless.

During those years when he also held public office, inevitably there were those who looked at J. Norman Shade's personal style of philanthropy and direct interest in people, one by one smiled knowingly and said: "Boy, what a great politician!"

Eventually, the years accumulated for Norm Shade as for all of us, and his legs began giving him some trouble, and such things and he retired from public office, semi-retired from his business activities—but never retired nor slackened his personal interest in people and his eternal concern for youth, for the elderly, or for the unlucky.

He is as busy as ever, years after retirement, in remembering, individually the folks at the Golden Arms, at the nursing home, in hospital, at the workshop, or the Union Mission's activities, the Boy's club, etc.

He hasn't changed a bit in that, and gives of his time and worldly goods as freely as ever.

To me, Norm Shade is the ultimate evidence that there is such a thing as a "good heart," a true, simple, straightforward spirit of concern for people as individual human beings.

And I wonder why, so much of the time, many of us seem to insist on treating such a thing as an impossibility in this world?

Why is it that a man can only be fully accepted for what he is in such matters when he is too young—or too old—to have a selfish reason for it?

What a shame that some of us cannot recognize "goodness of spirit" free from suspicion of a cheap ulterior motive until such motives are removed?

In all fairness, a host of Pekin people have always recognized Norm Shade's giant heart for what it was. The town was small enough for many to know his whole history intimately, and know his interest in people was real and not selfishly inspired. Far from it, his life illustrates the very opposite of selfishness—which is generosity right from the heart.

But many of those with less background looked upon these activities with a knowing smile and a cynical attitude.

As is so often the case, the smart guys were wrong.

For every Watergate, one suspects there are several "good hearts" if we would be decent enough to recognize them—instead of suspect the worst.

Yet, it is hard to imagine many as devoted in time and giving as Norm. If he had been a Rockefeller, the massive giving revealed by Nelson Rockefeller would look like stinginess in comparison!

It is nice when such a life is recognized by a mass of ones friends and neighbors, long after such recognition has any benefits other than those of human feelings and "good hearts," too.

Tonight, at the Moose Lodge, people of Pekin are going to honor Norm Shade because he is what he is—not as a political gimmick, and not as a retirement party or any other ritual affair.

The long "retired" former mayor will probably get the biggest "party" in the city's history just because he is what he is as a man and a friend of man.

As for any side benefits of staging the affair?

Just one—the Pekin Boy's club, naturally! That's Norm Shade right down to the ground.

[From the Peoria (Ill.) Journal Star, Nov. 25, 1974]

PEKINITES HONOR J. NORMAN SHADE
PEKIN.—J. Norman Shade was honored last night, five-fold, for his compassionate concern for his fellow man, and after 38 of his friends extolled his virtues, there wasn't a dry eye in Pekin's Moose Lodge 916.

Shade, who served 24 years as mayor of Pekin, eight years on the Tazewell County Board, and eight years in the state General Assembly, heard among other things, that: The state legislature last Friday unanimously passed a resolution urging the Department of Transportation to name the new bridge carrying I-474 over the Illinois River, the Shade-Lohman Bridge.

The announcement was made at the dinner by Sen. Roger Sommer (R-Morton), who introduced the measure, and Rep. James Von Boeckman (D-Pekin), who handled it in the House.

Lohman is another long-time Tazewell County political figure, who combined with Shade, served a total of 81 years in political office.

Shade received plaques from the Pekin City Council and the Pekin Boys' Club recognizing him for his outstanding and unselfish service to the community and to the underprivileged, the handicapped, the senior citizens and children everywhere.

He also received a plaque from the Moose Lodge itself, where he has been a member for the last 43 years. "In recognition of your outstanding service and dedication to people. You stand as an inspiration to all people everywhere."

Shade, who wiped tears from his eyes several times during the five-hour testimonial, also heard from members of his family and grandchildren and received two standing ovations from the crowd.

Master of ceremonies, James "Chink" Davis, said letters were received from 22 personal friends of the Shade family and political dignitaries, who could not be present for the event.

Lohman was Pekin city clerk for four years, a member of the City Council seven years, and a 10-term member of the General Assembly—five in the House and five in the Senate.

Proceeds from the $10-a-plate dinner will go to the Pekin's Boys' Club, a favorite of Shade and a club which he had a personal hand in establishing.

[From the Pekin Daily Times, Nov. 25, 1974]
RESOLUTION TO NAME I-474 BRIDGE AFTER SHADE, LOHMAN ANNOUNCED ON SHADE'S DAY
(By Marge Barnard)

A "This Is Your Life, J. Norman Shade" program presented Sunday at Moose Lodge culminated with Senator Roger Sommer announcing that a resolution passed in the house Friday named the Interstate 474 bridge at North Pekin the Shade-Lohman Bridge.

The announcement came as a surprise and gained the apparent approval of all present when the 350 guests present applauded in the standing ovation.

Senator Sommer said the measure was introduced by him and handled in the House of Representatives by James VonBoeckman, where the resolution was unanimously approved.

Martin B. Lohman is the veteran of political figures in the community, and was the statesman who was responsible for the passage of a bill for the construction of the present Pekin Bridge. It was noted.

Shade served as mayor for the city of Pekin for 24 years, eight years as a member of the Tazewell County Board of Supervisors and eight years as a state representative.

Lohman served as Pekin's City Clerk four years, member of the Pekin City Council seven years, and five terms as state representative and five terms as a state senator. Together, Shade and Lohman served a total of 81 years in political office.

Lohman, who was the first speaker of the evening, noted that he remembered when Shade was born on Haines Avenue, where he still lives.

Touching on Shade's notoriety for "betting on the horses" Lohman said, "I used to go to the races with Norm. I bet on the jockey and he bet on the horse that chased the rest of them in."

In a more serious moment, Lohman commended the outstanding work done by Arlene Ruestman, Senator Sommer's secretary, and Delores Rees, Shade's secretary, for getting the honorary dinner program together.

Mrs. Vera Bonk, said she had been maid of honor at the Shade wedding on April 9, 1923. She noted that she received a bouquet of flowers from Norm and Helen on their 50th wedding anniversary. "I had forgotten," Mrs. Bonk said.

Roy "Peach" Preston commented that he had served with Shade in the Elks Club Crippled Children's program.

He remembered also taking a carload of ballplayers from the Salvation Army to St. Louis to a game on one occasion. Peach said they could not find Norm and his carload but Peach had decided it was time to eat supper. Peach said one boy in the back could be heard saying, "No let's wait for Norm. Peach is too tight."

Shade's daughter, Joan Caldwell, had many loving memories of her father. Joan said she recalls her feeling of pride when Pekin's Municipal Band would march by their home on Haines Avenue playing "For He's A Jolly Good Fellow."

City Attorney Alfred W. Black noted that Shade infected him with city government 28 years ago, and commented that he is "still sick with that infection." Black said, "I have been given great responsibilities Norm is responsible for."

"He built many things for the city. Pekin became a better place to live because of what he did."

"The Salvation Army was a hole in the wall on lower Court street. Norm decided they were going to have a new building. Literally, alone he caused the erection of the building on Derby street."

"He would call me and say Joe Bloke is a friend of yours, he is a contractor, and we need a new roof on that building."

"He was very hard to get along with when he was doing things for others but he never used that pressure for his own benefit."

Tazewell County Clerk Roy Lowry noted that he and Shade were elected to the Tazewell County Board of Supervisors in 1935. There were 26 members on the board, 13 Republicans and 13 Democrats.

Lowry (D) said Shade (R) was elected chairman of that board because Lowry crossed the party lines and voted for Shade as board chairman and has never regretted the vote.

Lowry presented Shade with certified copies of his (Shade's) birth certificate and marriage certificate.

In doing so Lowry chided, "Norm did you go to school to learn to write the way you do now?"

Bob Monge, in a more serious vein, noted "There was no generation gap with Norm." Monge recalled the depression in the 1930's and he and his friends being treated to carnival rides by Shade. "We used to go to the Princess Candy Kitchen for cokes after school and Norm would be there to pick up the tab," Monge noted.

Then Monge noted lightly that he later went into the real estate business and had some deals with Norm. "I would tell him that I was paying too much and he would tell me I was getting a bargain," Monge said.

George Leitner recalled working with Norm, a 46-year member of the Pekin Moose Lodge, on Christmas parties for children in 1932.

Former Police Magistrate Julius Janssen was called to the speaker's table to greet Norm, but he was unable to speak in his own behalf.

It was noted by Master of Ceremonies James "Chink" Davis, that Janssen would make mention of one-third of a million dollars in gambling fines, picked up from taverns weekly by Shade, which was used to build City Hall.

December 20, 1974

Frank Drury, former member of the Pekin Police Department remembers Norm organizing the first school patrol, furnishing them with raincoats and rainhats. He recalled coaching a basketball team made up of a Sunday School class, taught by Norm, at the Salvation Army. Members of that basketball team were asked to stand, and Sid Parker and Chink Davis rose to their feet.

Joe Berardi, Minier Police Chief and former member of the Pekin Police Department, spoke in behalf of the hundreds of World War II veterans who received letters from Norm and were treated to spaghetti at Minnie's or the Illinois Hotel when home on leave. About 12 veterans in the crowd stood when Berardi asked how many were there that were the recipients of Shade's generosity and thoughtfulness.

Charles Wright, from WBYS Radio, Canton, served on an LST boat with Ed Olt in 1944. Wright said he came from the west coast but became acquainted with Shade thru the letters received by Olt.

Clementine Chapman, Director of the Tazewell County Nursing Home expressed appreciation to Shade for the visits to the elderly at the nursing home. Mrs. Chapman noted that each month a sheet cake is sent to the home by Shade and it bears the name of each birthday person during that month, and a monthly party is held when the cake arrives. Mrs. Chapman noted that Shade also visits the home each Christmas and brings a gift to each patient.

Jim Harris, former manager of Carp's Department Store, noted he remembers being greeted on the street by a gentleman with a wide brim hat saying, "You are a stranger in town." Harris said the greeting came from Shade and he no longer felt that he was a stranger.

Harris recalled Ann Vogelsang, Shade's secretary, coming to the store each Christmas to buy clothing for the needy. It was noted that Harris provided those clothes at half price.

Bob Caldwell, said his father-in-law was shrewd as well as all the other nice things people were talking about. Caldwell remembered his "courting days" and what he had to go thru to get Shade's blessing.

Rev. Hubert Entwistle, of Calvary Baptist Church, told the group that Shade's warmth and generosity has been far-reaching and has been felt in Blackburn, England.

Entwistle recalled it was shortly after World War II when he received a letter from an English editor wanting to know what could be done for the children in Blackburn, who had not tasted candy in many months.

Entwistle recalled that Shade immediately got the ball rolling and due to Shade's influence every child in Blackburn, a city larger than Peoria, received a bag of candy for Christmas.

George Saal, recalled that 20 years ago he and Shade were elected to the General Assembly together; and Ed Pree former Administrative Assistant to Governor William Stratton recalled Norm winning him $5 on a horse that came in third.

Former State Representative Warren Billhartz, of Collinsville also remembers being the recipient of a dog, "Scamp."

Those who know Norm well, also know that he cared only about clothing that was needed by the underprivileged and cared not what was worn by himself.

Billhartz chided, "I was the only one who ever asked him who his tailor was. He said it was Marcell of Mason City. Now, Marcell has gone on to greater things. He is now designing clothes for the Columbo Show," bringing a rise of laughter from guests.

Ann Vogelsang, former secretary for Shade, remembers Shade and providing an exciting and interesting job, besides laying the groundwork for the Everett McKinley Dirksen Research Library.

Don Smith, former Pekin Police Chief, presented Shade with two "legal lottery tickets." Smith noted that he and Shade agreed to disagree on a number of things, mostly the enforcement of the gambling ordinance.

Chuck McCord, who managed the Pekin Letters for 26 years expressed appreciation for Shade implementation of that group; Jim Williams, former Director of the Tri-County Community Workshop said there would not have been a vocational center for the handicapped if it had not been for Shade; Attorney Jack Coney, of Peoria, recalled his father's friendship with Norm.

Mayor William Waldmeyer remembers Shade being mayor when Waldmeyer was Finance Commissioner and mayor pro-tem. He recalled Shade wanting an ordinance amended. Waldmeyer said city council convened and Waldmeyer made the motion for the amendment but there was no second. Shade asked Waldmeyer to sit as mayor pro-tem. Shade did not leave the room, but sat in Waldmeyer's chair and seconded the motion. Waldmeyer noted the motion was beat three to two.

Willard Birkmeyer thanked Shade for the wisdom and experience given during 1971 and 1972 when Shade was elected and served as commissioner in the city of Pekin.

Roy Layne presented Shade with a plaque in behalf of Pekin Moose Lodge 916 commending Shade for his service to the community.

In responding to the comments, Shade said, "I feel humble. I have received more compliments than I deserve."

Shade recalled, "Bat Lohman, the senator's brother, got me into politics. He thought I should serve as president of the 'Douglas Dads' where Joan was going to school."

"I remember the Pekin Bridge bill was passed in 1967 after Dean McNaughton sent some fliers to Springfield showing the bridge in an up position and they couldn't get it down."

"Turning to his grandchildren, Shade said, 'Now maybe if my grandchildren don't grow old too soon they may be able to drive across that bridge when they come to Pekin.'"

In finality Shade said, "If I had been an orator like Waldmeyer maybe I could have run for the Senate."

As Shade returned to his chair, his 350 relatives and friends responded in a standing ovation.

GILMAN CONDEMNS PALESTINIAN TERRORISTS

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, tonight the House of Representatives will adjourn and the Members will go their separate ways. We do this in the confidence that we have no need to fear the darkness, and that our Nation will still be reasonably intact when we return a month hence.

But there is a nation in the world where concerned men and women have no such confidence—where every day is borrowed time, bringing them closer to the possibilities of hostilities and disaster. I am speaking of Israel.

The future has never been darker for this valiant little land, Mr. Speaker. Surrounded by hostile neighbors, under attack in the forms of the world by biased combinations of Communist, Third World and Arab Nations, struggling with a vast debt and economic hardship, Israel now must live also with the knowledge that any moment can bring the next—and possibly the last—Arab-Israeli war.

Well-meaning nations on both sides of this dispute have made sincere efforts to negotiate a settlement. Our Nation has been striving to mediate the differences between the parties and bring about a lasting peace in the Middle East. But all sincere and well-directed efforts to secure peace have been endangered by the actions of an explosive, irresponsible, and intractable group of murderers and terrorists who call themselves the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Perhaps it is a good sign that the issue of Palestine has come to the forefront of negotiations in the Middle East, because the Palestinian problem has always been, and threatens to remain, the biggest single stumbling block in the path to peace.

But it is not a good sign that the organization claiming to represent the people of Palestine comes to the forum of peace bearing a gun. And it is not a good sign that the U.N. has welcomed this non-nation.

Mr. Speaker, along with many of my colleagues, I was both dismayed and revolted to observe the hero's welcome given Yasser Arafat at the United Nations in November. It was hard to believe that this man, who has publicly claimed responsibility for actions which have resulted in scores of violent deaths—including the murder of women and children—should be allowed to stalk into the General Assembly of the United Nations, carrying a gun, and be accorded so loving a reception. Perhaps it is just a further symptom of the Arab-Communist-Third World axis which is extending its control of the U.N. with every passing month.

Israel was limited to a single speech in the General Assembly session on the Palestinian question, while her enemies paraded, one after another, to the rostrum to denounce her. Israel was deprived of all financial assistance through the United Nations Scientific, Educational and Cultural Organization, UNESCO, despite that body's supposedly nonpolitical mandate.

Israel stands in grave danger of losing her seat on that committee and even in the General Assembly.

With every one of these hostile, narrowminded and offensive actions, the United Nations' ability to act as the sponsor of world peace is further eroded. The words of our General Assembly delegate, John Scali, should be heeded well by this coalition of small states that carry so large a chip on their shoulders. It must be borne in mind that without the support of the major powers, the actions of the United Nations are empty and without effect.

Along with a growing number of our colleagues, I have begun to raise serious questions about the value of the United Nations as "The Tyranny of the Majority" becomes its rule of order. The United States provides a quarter of all the financial assistance needed to keep the United Nations going, yet we are seeing a seemingly endless stream of dogmatic, one-sided and propagandistic decisions and opinions issuing from a coalition of states—the Communists, the Arabs, and the Third World—who, taken together, make up only a minority of the populations represented in the United Nations. Perhaps these delegates should ask themselves what future the United Nations will have without the support of the United States.

By embracing Yassir Arafat, the pistol-packing murderer of children, the General Assembly has sanctioned world terror. The fruits of this action are horrible to contemplate.

Yet the United Nations is not the only place in the world where men seem to have lost their reason. The entire history and activities of the PLO pose a grave peril to the existence of Israel. The recent Arab summit meeting in Rabat voted to officially recognize the PLO as spokesmen for the Palestinians and allocated $2 billion to "liberate" Palestinian soil.

Does this action legitimize the PLO? Does this action compel us to sit down at the same table with gun-toting killers as though they were legitimate representatives of a legitimate cause?

The Detroit Free Press, on November 29, described the PLO as "a terrorist organization dedicated to the killing of Jews and the destruction of Israel. It is a root organization of a number of terrorist groups torn by tactical disputes and personal rivalries but united by the common aim of wiping out the state of Israel. Its leaders are self-appointed and they have maintained themselves in power by using terror against their own people—they are responsible for international kidnapping, hijackings, and terror."

The PLO's basic document, the Palestinian National Covenant of 1968, declares that Israel has no right to exist, that the 1947 agreement partitioning Palestine and establishing the State of Israel should be declared null and void and that armed struggle is the only way to liberate Palestine.

Are these the kind of statements we can expect to lead to responsible and sincere negotiation? Or only to more war and bloodshed?

The Richmond Times-Dispatch, on November 16, 1974, reminds us that "this is the same Yassir Arafat who has been accused of giving orders to the Black September thugs who murdered American charge d'affaires George C. Moore and Belgian charge d'affaires Guy Eld in the Saudi Arabian Embassy in Khartoum, the Sudan on March 2, 1973. Do we forget so soon? Does a fresh shave and flowery rhetoric make a statesman of a pistol-packing desert rat?"

Mr. Speaker, only one party in the Middle East has expressly shut the door to negotiation as the road to peace. Only one party has denied the existence of Israel and has denounced any negotiations which permit Israel to remain on the continent. All of the other parties to the Arab-Israeli dispute are willing to talk to each other, are willing to sit down with each other. We do not minimize their differences, for there are vast areas still in dispute and peace often seems far away—but at least none of these other parties has declared its intention to participate in no procedure which results in the preservation of Israel. Only the PLO has done this. The manner in which the United States responds to these threats will determine the future of freedom and liberty in the world.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Perhaps the PLO is hoping that a new energy crisis in the United States, combined with a renewal of the Arab oil embargo, will make the American people tire of Israel and want to sell out our principles and our ally for oil. They should not delude themselves. Our Nation did not knuckle under to this kind of blackmail last year and we will not do so this year.

No, Mr. Speaker, as long as the world continues to bow down to terrorists there will only be bleak prospects for any lasting peace in the Middle East. We can hardly expect any nation to negotiate its own existence, and yet this is exactly what Israel would have to do in negotiating with the PLO. How can we expect Israel to sit down at the bargaining table with a group that has publicly declared its commitment to her destruction?

Now more than ever, is the time for our Nation to stand firm beside Israel. We must make clear we will neither tolerate nor be bound by the ridiculous decrees of the Arab puppet coalition in the U.N., and will not flinch from our staunch support of Israel.

Our Nation is the only real friend that Israel has. We must not desert her in this hour of need.

POLITICAL PATRONAGE IN THE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION AND THE GSA

HON. THOMAS F. EAGLETON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, on October 17, 1974, I submitted for the Record a series of articles in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch which reported allegations of illegal hiring practices of the Civil Service Commission and the General Services Administration.

This excellent investigative reporting has continued, and in an attempt to bring this serious abuse of political patronage to the attention of Congress, I ask unanimous consent that the latest articles on this subject be printed in the Extensions of Remarks.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Nov. 13, 1974]

GSA SPECIAL TREATMENT FOR REPUBLICAN'S BROTHER

(By Lawrence E. Taylor)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—Two high-level federal officials apparently played roles in giving red-carpet treatment in 1969 to the job-hunting brother of a Republican with influence in the Nixon Administration.

The officials are Robert L. Kunz, former administrator of the General Services Administration, and Daniel T. Kingsley, a former commissioner of the agency. Kunz is now a judge on the United States Court of Claims. Kingsley's nomination for a seat on the Federal Power Commission is expected to be sent to the Senate soon by President Gerald R. Ford.

The name of a third top government official, Civil Service Commission chairman Robert E. Hampton, has also been raised in connection with the case, but his role has not been determined.

Documents obtained by the Post-Dispatch show that Kunz and Kingsley figured in a 1969 effort by the General Services Administration to find a job for Donald C. J. Gray, brother of Robert K. Gray, who was Cabinet secretary under the late President Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Robert Gray has been the occasional escort of Rose Mary Woods, personal secretary to former President Richard M. Nixon.

In September 1969, Robert Gray, then a vice president in the Washington office of Hill and Knowlton, Inc., a public relations and lobbying firm, wrote Kunz to tell him that Donald had sold his Hastings, Neb., farm and was "looking for non-Nebraska pastures for his future."

Robert Gray noted that his brother, then 49 years old, was "quite a guy" and attached a resume of Donald's business career.

This letter set off a series of events that resulted in General Services Administration officials apparently violating Civil Service rules in their eagerness to find a career job for Donald Gray.

Civil Service rules require that such career Government jobs be filled only after qualified applicants are competitively screened.

In Donald Gray's case, this rule apparently was all but ignored, although his friends have insisted that he was not aware he received special consideration. Gray would not talk with a reporter and did not return telephone calls made to his office.

The red-carpet treatment for Gray included arranging interviews for him with top officials at General Services Administration, obtaining White House political clearance and offering him a job before the Civil Service requirements for the position had been met.

Gray noted with pleasure his reception in an Oct. 8, 1969 letter to administrator Kunz. "The privilege of numerous interviews has provided me a broad view of GSA and I am impressed with the constant high quality of the people you have assembled in your team," he wrote.

At the top of the letter a hand-written notation appears: "Rod, what are we doing on this?"

This was an apparent note to Rod Kreger, assistant administrator at the agency under Kunz. Kreger and his assistant, Donald J. LeMay, had already done quite a bit, records show.

They had scheduled interviews for Gray with the agency's three commissioners in charge of various departments. One of these commissioners, Kingsley, had responded by saying that he would take Gray as a deputy director of the special program division, a post then paying about $20,000 a year.

In an interview, Kingsley denied any knowledge of special treatment for Gray.

In a long career in private business, Gray had been a design engineer for aircraft and helicopter programs and had moved on to management jobs in the industry. Later, he worked for a Hastings, Neb., grain bin manufacturer before starting his own irrigation business.

Kingsley said he could not remember whether he had interviewed applicants other than Gray for the job.

Kingsley denied offering Gray any job before the necessary Civil Service requirements were met.

LeMay, however, did offer Gray a job 22 days after Kingsley said he had a post open

December 20, 1974

December 20, 1974

and well before the Civil Service acted on the application.

Kingsley said in the interview that "LeMay was not qualified to offer him (Gray) a job."

When LeMay made the job offer, an official at the General Services Administration apparently talked with Civil Service Commissioner Hampton about Gray.

A hand-written note in the file says, "Bob Hampton called about Don Gray." The unsigned note is dated Oct. 24, four days before LeMay made the job offer to Gray.

A Civil Service spokesman said Hampton would not respond to questions about the case because a civil lawsuit was pending on related subject.

Hampton and two other Civil Service commissioners are being sued by GSA employees who face disciplinary action by the commission for allegedly violating rules and giving politically favored job applicants special treatment. The two employees allege that Hampton was aware of the favoritism and took part himself in a political referral system.

Hampton has denied the charge. He has also been implicated in other cases of political job-finding for favored applicants.

His role in the Gray case is less certain, however.

The Civil Service Commission refused at first to certify Gray for the General Services Administration job and twice said he was not qualified, GSA documents show.

Eventually, Gray submitted a more detailed resume of his activities, and in December he was certified by the commission.

In that same month, the Civil Service Commission convened a panel to evaluate all applicants for the job that was to be given to Gray. Whether there were other applicants, or whether any were recommended to GSA along with Gray, could not be learned.

In a Dec. 16 memo to Kunz, Kreger said that the commission would not certify Gray for the job "until the results of our job advertisement is known."

Kreger continued: "This means that we will not be able to put Donald Gray into the position in property management and disposal service until the week of Jan. 12, 1970. We could, however, put him on as a consultant if you so desire."

Kreger informed Kunz that he had taken steps to ensure that similar delays in certifying other chosen job candidates would not occur.

Kunz, through a law clerk in his judge's office, refused to discuss the case. The clerk said the Court of Claims had a policy of not allowing its judges to discuss outside matters.

The abuse of consultant programs by hiring unqualified or politically favored persons for special work has been another area of difficulty alleged at GSA.

In Gray's case, however, there is no indication that he was hired temporarily as a consultant to tide him over until his job appointment came through.

He was officially hired on Jan. 19, 1970, and the formal announcement was made by Kingsley.

Kingsley left the agency about a year later and joined the White House staff as a special assistant to former President Richard M. Nixon.

The Senate Watergate Committee has reported that in his White House job, he engaged in "a program to ensure that political considerations were taken into account in Government staffing long before the 1972 election campaign began."

This personnel operation was part of a system called the "responsiveness program" and labeled by Senate investigators as a violation of Civil Service regulations and some federal laws.

Kingsley has denied that he acted improperly in the program and says he is eager to testify before the Senate Commerce Committee on his nomination to the Federal Power Commission.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

The nomination, made by Nixon last summer, expired automatically in the current 30-day congressional recess. Kingsley said he expected President Ford to resubmit the nomination.

An investigator for the Commerce Committee said that Kingsley "was always around where something improper was taking place." The investigator said, "He never initiated anything, but he was always willing to go along."

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Dec. 5, 1974]

NAMES GSA LEADERS IN ALLEGED JOB PATRONAGE RING
(By Robert Adams)

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—Arthur F. Sampson and Robert L. Kunz, the present and former heads of the General Services Administration, were personally involved in an alleged patronage ring at that agency, the man who said he ran the operation has told federal investigators.

Donald J. LeMay, who was in charge of the "special referral unit" at GSA from 1969 to 1971, named both men under oath in a series of affidavits given to the Civil Service Commission.

The affidavits, copies of which have been obtained by the Post-Dispatch, directly implicate Sampson and Kunz in an operation which the commission has said illegally pulled strings to place favored candidates in career federal jobs.

By law, such career jobs are to be filled on merit. Political considerations and preferential treatment are forbidden.

In his sworn statements, LeMay said that Sampson would sometimes give a direct order that action be taken if his subordinates were having trouble placing someone.

LeMay described an incident in which Kunz said he was going to call a General Services Administration official "and tell him to find a job" for a man who had a friend at the White House. The man later got a job at the federal agency. Kunz now is a judge in the U.S. Court of Claims.

LeMay described also a system of "trade-offs" designed to curry favor in the General Services Administration with powerful men on Capitol Hill. "If it was not possible to build a building in a particular Congressman's district, perhaps a friend of his could be hired," LeMay said.

In addition, LeMay charged that pressure from the White House had been applied to get a career job for an applicant who had a friend on the White House staff.

The General Services Agency is the agency that runs buildings and buys supplies for the Federal Government.

LeMay's present title is director of the agency liaison division in the federal agency. During the September 1969-November 1971 period, when LeMay headed the "special referral unit" Kunz was agency administrator and Sampson was commissioner of the agency's federal supply service and its public buildings service. President Richard M. Nixon appointed Sampson to succeed Kunz as administrator in 1972, after Nixon named Kunz a judge.

The Post-Dispatch previously has quoted documents that appear to indicate involvement by both Sampson and Kunz in the alleged patronage ring. Disclosure of LeMay's affidavits marked the first time that a leader of the referral unit had implicated them under oath.

Detailed accounts of LeMay's charges were read to aids of Sampson and Kunz by the Post-Dispatch. Both men, through the aids, refused to comment.

One aid said that Sampson felt constrained because the question of civil service violations at the General Services Administration is in litigation. He said Sampson believed it would be an abuse of the power of the press if LeMay's accusations were published now.

LeMay was one of eight staff members and officials at the General Services Administration charged by the Civil Service Commission last January with violating civil service laws. The Commission recommended that LeMay be discharged.

Last summer, the commission agreed to reduce the recommended penalty to a 60-day suspension in exchange for his co-operation. Three of the eight persons charged have gone to court to challenge the commission's authority to discipline them.

The commission has charged that the special referral unit engaged in giving illegal preferential treatment to jobseekers referred by political sources.

In his affidavit on Sampson, LeMay said Sampson knew favors were being done, and was involved in doing some himself.

LeMay said that when he told Sampson that certain persons should be given special treatment the reaction was "generally dubious." But LeMay added: "He did not seem to be concerned about the propriety of the decision to accord such preferential treatment, but rather with his desire to favor candidates whose placement would most further his personal advancement. He seemed to be interested only in applicants from Pennsylvania."

Both Sampson and Kunz are Pennsylvania Republicans. The Post-Dispatch has previously reported that Pennsylvanians often seemed to receive favored treatment at the General Services Administration.

LeMay said that Sampson would pass on his instructions to his deputies, Larry F. Roush and John Price. "If Mr. Roush or Mr. Price experienced problems in placing an individual, and if Mr. Sampson wanted a particular action taken, Mr. Sampson would contact the operating official and direct that it be done," the affidavit said.

LeMay said Sampson also was involved in processing "special referral" applications other than LeMay's. "His involvement was with Pennsylvania applicants who were referred to him through his own sources," LeMay said.

LeMay said he would learn about these accidentally, when Roush or Price would report to him on a job-seeker, and LeMay would not know about it. "They would then say that it must be one of the commissioner's," LeMay said.

Price would report to him on a job-seeker, and LeMay would not know about it. "They would then say that it must be one of the commissioner's," LeMay said.

LeMay stated that when Sampson was head of the supply service and building service "he was responsible for ensuring the co-operation of FSS and PBS personnel with my office in the processing of special emphasis cases . . . When Mr. Sampson became administrator, he assumed over-all responsibility for the entire agency-wide program."

With respect to Kunz, LeMay said that he, too, knew that certain persons were getting preferential treatment, and took part in giving such preference.

LeMay said he did not think Kunz was aware of whether other, bona fide candidates were being considered. "In cases in which the political motivation to place a particular candidate was paramount, he would not have cared," LeMay said. "In other cases, if he knew that a better qualified or a minority candidate had been brushed aside, he would have cared."

LeMay said his opinion on this was based on the receipt of "specific instructions regarding special referral cases from Mr. Kunz, through Mr. Corneal. Also, I have been called into the administrator's office on one or two occasions to detail my activities concerning certain cases. He also complimented me on my work."

Bruce Corneal was Kunzig's personal assistant and is one of the eight charged with violations.

LeMay cited three specific cases that he said indicated Kunzig's personal involvement in doing favors for some candidates: The cases of John J. Jaeschke, Lyle E. Hutchison, and Dwight W. Jones.

LeMay said Kunzig called him into his office on Aug. 13, 1971, to ask about Jaeschke. Kunzig told him that Tod Hullin, a White House aide, had called him about Jaeschke, "and that, when we had a controversial case like this he (Kunzig) would like to be informed," LeMay's affidavit said.

According to LeMay, he told Kunzig that Rod Kreger, who was then the No. 2 man at the General Services Administration, had asked the agency's transportation and communications service (TCS) for a decision on Jaeschke that day.

"Mr. Kunzig said he was going to call Bill Foote, deputy commissioner of TCS, and tell him to find a job for Jaeschke," LeMay said.

In another affidavit, LeMay speaks of receiving pressure from the White House to place Jaeschke despite "bad references" on him.

He said that Allan Kaupinen, who was then at the White House, told him that his supervisors "were putting pressures on him to find something" for Jaeschke. "He, in turn, started putting pressure on me," LeMay said of Kaupinen.

"His phone calls were frequent and, when I told him we had received bad references on Jaeschke, Mr. Kaupinen personally escorted me into the inner sanctum of the White House (Mr. Ehrlichman's offices) with Tod Hullin for a pep talk. Mr. Kaupinen also suggested that the Jaeschke case was so 'hot' that Mr. Ehrlichman might want to speak personally to the administrator about him," John D. Ehrlichman was chief domestic adviser to President Richard M. Nixon.

In a telephone interview, Foote acknowledged getting a call from Kunzig. He said it was the only call on a personnel matter he recalled getting from him.

Foote said Kunzig asked him to speed up the reference checks on Jaeschke. Foote said that although Kunzig did not demand that Jaeschke be hired he gathered that this was Kunzig's desire.

He said he had already interviewed Jaeschke and found him qualified and that he told Kunzig this. "When he says 'Speed it up,' you don't need to ask questions twice," Foote commented.

"We knew he (Jaeschke) had a White House connection, and it didn't surprise me that Mr. Kunzig would be interested."

Jaeschke was hired shortly afterward as a traffic management specialist at a GS-12 level under Foote. He is now a GS-13, for which the salary range is $17,500 to $23,000 a year.

Hullin, who is still at the White House, acknowledged talking to Kunzig about Jaeschke. "I said: 'I know you don't look on GS-12's, but he's a good guy, and if you can help him get an interview with the right guy, it would be appreciated,'" Hullin told the Post-Dispatch.

Jaeschke said he had not known of any string-pulling on his behalf. Kaupinen, who later went to the General Services Administration and was one of the eight charged in the alleged patronage ring, deemed pressuring LeMay to hire Jaeschke.

On the Hutchison and Jones cases, the Post-Dispatch reported earlier that both Kunzig and Robert Hampton, chairman of the Civil Service Commission, appeared to be involved.

LeMay said that on Nov. 3, 1969, Corneal gave Kunzig a note saying that Hampton and a prominent Republican were recom-

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

December 20, 1974

mending Hutchison. The note said that Michael Norton, who was then an aid to Kunzig, knew Hutchison and "says he's a dog." LeMay said Kunzig wrote back: "Have Norton see me."

On March 25, 1970, LeMay said, Kreger wrote a note to Kunzig telling him that Hutchison was being given a career job after being considered a "must case."

"Mr. Kunzig wrote 'fine' on the memo and returned it," LeMay said.

On the Jones case, LeMay cited a Jan. 15, 1971, memorandum from Kreger to Kunzig saying that Hampton had referred Jones, who was a cousin of Texas Republican Representative. "I told Bob Hampton that I knew you would want to do everything possible to help," the memorandum said. "I gave the papers to Jack LeMay and asked that he give this matter urgent priority."

At another point, LeMay said, Kreger wrote Kunzig a note telling him of the special efforts to place Jones. LeMay said that Kunzig wrote back "Let's do all we can—I agree—Thanks."

Jones was later given a career job in the Kansas City regional office of GSA.

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Dec. 6, 1974]

TELLS OF HIRING ORDERS BY WHITE HOUSE (By Robert Adams)

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The White House sent some job seekers as "must cases" to the General Services Administration and other federal agencies as part of what apparently was a government-wide patronage system under the Nixon Administration, federal investigators have been told.

The system, which involved a thick manual of instructions and an elaborate reporting procedure, was outlined by Donald J. LeMay, a General Services Administration official, in affidavits given to the United States Civil Service Commission.

LeMay, who ran the "special referral unit" at the agency from 1969 to 1971, gave details about the alleged patronage operation.

The Civil Service Commission has charged the referral unit with doing illegal favors for job candidates.

LeMay alleged that improper checks into whether a job-seeker was a Republican or a Democrat were made by at least five agency staff members. He said that when great interest in a job candidate was shown by a powerful political figure, special efforts were made to get the applicant a job.

LeMay reported also that the agency "was and is especially solicitous" of persons referred by politicians from Pennsylvania. LeMay said in his sworn statements, that each application from that state was marked by a piece of note paper on which Pennsylvania was written in large letters.

Both Arthur F. Sampson, the present head of the General Services Administration, and Robert L. Kunzig, his predecessor, are prominent Republicans from Pennsylvania. LeMay said Kunzig's personal assistant told him in at least two cases that Kunzig "would like to help out" Senator Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, the Senate Republican leader and a political associate of Kunzig, by placing a job candidate.

Federal law requires that career jobs in the Federal Government must be filled strictly on merit. Civil Service regulations prohibit political patronage or other favoritism in such jobs.

LeMay is director of the General Service Administration's agency liaison division. He headed the special referral unit there from September 1969 to November 1971.

In that time, Kunzig was administrator of the agency and Sampson was commissioner of the agency's federal supply service and public buildings service.

Sampson became administrator in 1972, after Nixon named Kunzig as a judge on the U.S. Court of Claims. The Post-Dispatch reported yesterday that LeMay swore both Kunzig and Sampson were involved in the alleged patronage ring.

LeMay was one of the eight GSA staff members charged by the Civil Service Commission last January with violating Civil Service laws. LeMay should be dismissed, it reduced its recommendation to a 60-day suspension after LeMay agreed to co-operate with its investigation.

LeMay said the White House used a priority system involving at least three categories. The first was a "must." This meant, LeMay said, that "the agency was required to place the individual."

The second was "high priority." LeMay said this meant that "several job interviews were required and that every effort should be made" to place the individual.

The third category, LeMay said, was "courtesy interview."

"This priority system was used on a government-wide basis," LeMay said. "I know this to be the case because: (1) Acquaintances at the White House and in other agencies so informed me; and (2) the White House representative who introduced the program informed us that it was a Government-wide program."

LeMay said a team of White House officials dropped off a manual to be used in handling job-seekers referred from the White House. He said it was "a fairly thick, unbound document."

Besides the priority system, LeMay said, the manual contained reporting formats and gave reporting deadlines. "As I remember, the deadlines were monthly," LeMay said. "The reports required included names, dates received, date interviewed, etc., status reports, category of referral, home state of the applicant, ethnic background, etc."

Despite the interpretation placed on the "must" designation, however, LeMay said the General Services Administration sometimes told the White House it could not use an individual, and there were no repercussions.

In testimony before the Senate Watergate Committee earlier this year, Frederic V. Malek, the Nixon Administration official who drew up the controversial "Responsiveness Program" for politicizing the bureaucracy, admitted that special referral units existed in most agencies. But Malek contended that the intention was to respond to White House and congressional requests rather than violate the law.

The Civil Service Commission, however, has uncovered evidence indicating that such laws were apparently violated at the General Services Administration the Department of Housing and Urban Development the Department of Health Education and Welfare, and possibly several other agencies through the referral units.

LeMay cited five agency staff members who he said had made political affiliation checks on career job-seekers. The five were Rod Kreger, who was then the No. 2 man at GSA; Michael Norton, now the agency's regional administrator in Denver; F. Bruce Corneal, who was Kunzig's personal assistant; Robert Yock, an assistant general counsel, and Oliver Thurman, now commissioner of the regional federal supply service in San Francisco.

"I have occasionally been present in offices when such checks were made, and I have left files with certain officials so that such checks could be made," LeMay said. He said he was sure others besides the five men he cited were involved.

LeMay described a stairstep progression by which individuals were rated, with the help of the improper political checks.

"If high interest was expressed by a top political figure... and if the applicant was well qualified, we would go all out and generally he would get a job," LeMay said.

"If the applicant was minimally qualified,

December 20, 1974

but still enjoyed strong support, we would still refer him out and try to help, regardless of his political affiliation or that of his sponsor.

"If the candidate was a well-qualified Republican but did not have any great degree of support, we would refer him out to see if he could be matched up with a job."

"If the candidate was a well-qualified non-Republican without any great degree of support, we would refer him to personnel to be handled through regular channels."

"If the candidate was minimally qualified and enjoyed no great degree of support, we would return his application," LeMay said.

LeMay gave two examples in which political checks for career jobs—which are against the law—were allegedly made. The first involved Peter T. Glading, who was being considered for the job of director of sales for the property management and disposal service in January 1970.

LeMay said Norton indicated that he had made several calls to the office of Senator Charles M. Mathias, Jr., a Maryland Republican, to find out Glading's political leanings. But Norton indicated that Glading was not a registered voter and Mathias's office had not been able to find out which party he belonged to.

It later developed that Glading had been recommended indirectly by a member of the Nixon Inaugural Committee. He eventually got the job.

A spokesman for Mathias said his office sometimes did make political registration checks at the request of agencies, but assumed it was for non-career jobs. "I think we'd have very little tolerance for being sucked into playing political games, if that's what happened," he said. Glading said he had not known a check had been made on him.

The second case was that of Lawrence A. Davis, who applied for a job as director of the General Services Administration's office of environmental affairs in November 1970. LeMay said Norton told him Kreger thought Davis "sounds good if GOP."

Davis, however, turned out to be a Democrat. "I sent my application in, and that's the last I heard," Davis told the Post-Dispatch.

Norton, Yock and Thurman said they could not recall making or ordering such political checks. Kreger and Corneal refused to comment.

"I was shocked when I saw that," Yock said. Asked about LeMay's allegations in general, Norton declared: "I think it's hogwash."

On the Pennsylvania referrals, LeMay said he was told to keep Corneal, Kunzig's aid, advised of the status of all applications who had Pennsylvania sponsors.

LeMay said Corneal's instructions on Pennsylvania cases usually depended on the urgency of the need to place the individual, on the location and level of the job desired, "and the degree of the administrator's personal interest in the case."

LeMay said he knew that Corneal made political affiliation checks on persons with Pennsylvania backgrounds. He said that whenever an application from Pennsylvania was given him by anyone else, "I was to give the application to Mr. Corneal, who would then advise me if it was 'all right to process' the application."

LeMay said that in two Pennsylvania cases, those of J. Ronald Smith and Harold D. Kitchen, Corneal "told me orally that the administrator would like to place them."

"He said that these two referrals were 'musts' for Senator Scott's office, but not necessarily for GSA," LeMay continued. "In other words, Senator Scott's office felt that it was essential that they place these individuals, but GSA had not accepted these as 'must' cases. Mr. Corneal said, however, that the administrator would like to help out Senator Scott."

Both men got jobs. "The decision to make a strong effort... was not based on merit,

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Dec. 11, 1974]

HEAD OF GSA TRIED TO PUSH CAREER OFFICIALS OUT OF JOBS (By Robert Adams)

WASHINGTON, Dec. 11.—Robert L. Kunzig, former head of the General Services Administration, personally tried to maneuver the agency's 10 career regional administrators out of their jobs in 1969 and 1970 in apparent defiance of Civil Service rules, information obtained by the Post-Dispatch indicated today.

A sworn statement given to the Civil Service Commission by Donald J. LeMay, who allegedly ran a patronage operation at GSA for more than two years, said Kunzig, was directly involved in a scheme to oust the agency's top regional officials.

LeMay's affidavit said that Kunzig, who is now a judge in the United States Court of Appeals, had personally visited each regional administrator "to persuade him to vacate his position" after plans were devised to get each one to depart.

In addition, some of the regional administrators who were forced out told the Post-Dispatch that Kunzig had bluntly said his motives were political.

Edward V. Kline, who was administrator for the GSA region with headquarters in New York, said Kunzig told him: "You're one of the best regional administrators we have, but unfortunately you're a Democrat and have to be replaced."

Gerald E. McNamara, who was chief of the Denver regional office, said Kunzig had suggested that he try to get a job with one of the contractors he had dealt with at GSA.

McNamara said Kunzig had told him, in substance: "Certainly, if you have been in this job all these years, you must have done favors for some contractor who will put you on his payroll."

By law, agency officials are forbidden to take politics into account in filling federal career jobs. In addition, Civil Service rules forbid attempts to manipulate a career employee out of his job for reasons other than poor performance.

Today's disclosures marked the latest in a series concerning the purported involvement of Kunzig and others in the patronage scandal at the agency.

The Post-Dispatch reported last week that other affidavits by LeMay had named Kunzig and Arthur F. Sampson, the current administrator of the agency, as being involved in the alleged patronage operation. The Civil Service Commission has charged that special favors were done for some job-seekers at GSA in violation of Civil Service laws.

In his affidavit, LeMay noted that only two of the 10 regional administrators had survived the attempt to oust them—one because of "his exceptional ability," and the other because he was close to retirement.

"I am sure they had also been able to secure some sort of support," LeMay said in an apparent reference to personal or political backing within the agency.

McNamara described his experience with Kunzig in a letter to Representative David N. Henderson (Dem.), North Carolina, chairman of the House subcommittee on manpower and Civil Service. McNamara made the letter available to the Post-Dispatch and elaborated in a telephone interview.

When the Nixon Administration took office in 1969, McNamara said, one of the first visitors to the Denver GSA office was Kunzig.

Kunzig "asked how soon I was leaving my position," McNamara said. "I told him that I was neither eligible for retirement, nor was I ready to give up my position for any other reason."

"He (Kunzig) stated that the Administration considered the regional administrator's job as a political one—not a Civil Service appointment—and that they wanted it filled with Administration people."

McNamara said Kunzig then made the remark about getting a job with a contractor. "I was insulted by this remark," he said. "Mr. Kunzig was taken aback by my attitude. He made several telephone calls from my office to local politicians inquiring as to their availability for appointment to my position."

McNamara said that several months later he was told a job was being set up for him in Washington as "special assistant to the special assistant to the administrator." He said he believed that the post was a sham and that he would be transferred indefinitely from place to place. He resigned that October.

McNamara had been head of the Denver regional office since 1962. His replacement, a Republican political figure, later resigned after a controversy over a political donation.

LeMay said James Hardgrove, GSA personnel director, had "devised the plan for convincing the regional administrators to vacate their positions. Each situation was different, and the plan was tailored to take advantage of the particular circumstances in each case."

"Once the plan was established, the administrator (Kunzig) personally visited each regional administrator, to persuade him to vacate his position," the affidavit said. He said a follow-up visit was usually made by Hardgrove or Willard L. Johnson, Jr., the former assistant administrator for administration.

Hardgrove and LeMay are among the eight GSA employees who were charged by the commission last January with violating Civil Service laws. LeMay gave the affidavits to the commission last July, and the commission reduced his recommended penalty from dismissal to a 60-day suspension without pay.

The 10 regional administrators at GSA in 1969 were Paul Lazzaro, Boston; Kline, New York; David Phillips, Washington; Wilbur H. Sanders, Atlanta; Robert L. Pendergast, Chicago; Richard W. Austin, Kansas City; John M. McGee, Fort Worth; McNamara, Denver; Thomas E. Hannon, San Francisco, and Eugene R. Thissen, Seattle. Of the 10, only Hannon is still in the same job.

LeMay's affidavit noted that Austin had accepted a transfer to the GSA's Washington office, but at a lower pay grade than he had held in Kansas City. Sanders was transferred to Washington but later left the agency.

LeMay cited several regional heads who were asked to resign or retire. "I remember that Mr. Lazzaro was most unco-operative, and Mr. Hardgrove told me that he really had to work on him," he said.

McNamara told the Post-Dispatch he would be willing to testify under oath at hearings by Henderson's subcommittee on the patronage scandal. The hearings are planned for some time next year.

Thissen described Kunzig as heavyhanded. "He told me the name of the game was politics, and he wanted my job," Thissen said in a telephone interview.

"I was given the choice of being transferred to Washington to a job that was going to be abolished, or retiring." Ultimately, he retired.

Thissen, like some of the other regional administrators, said he talked with Civil Service Commission staff members but was told there was not much they could do: "The local Civil Service people couldn't have done anything about it without the full support of the commission in Washington—and apparently they didn't have it," he said.

Pendergast, who was Chicago regional director, said he reminded Kunzig that his job was a career Civil Service job, not a political job. "That probably was one of my more foolish statements," said Pendergast, who is now retired. "He didn't seem to be Civil Service oriented. He was politically oriented."

December 20, 1974

Austin, who is now deputy assistant commissioner for real property in the GSA's Washington office, said Kunzig "alluded to the fact that it was a new administration, of a different party and a different persuasion."

He said he had accepted the transfer to Washington at a lower-pay grade because it would have been impossible to do an effective job as regional administrator without Kunzig's support in that post.

"I told him, of course, that I had been around for quite a while, and had been loyal in administering the programs of whatever Administration was in office at the time," Austin related. "He said it had absolutely nothing to do with the way the region had been run, but he felt it was essential to have his own selection in the job."

In one of his more unusual visits, Kunzig called on Hannon, of San Francisco, in a hospital where Hannon was recovering from surgery for cancer. He told Hannon he wanted his job, Hannon said.

"He asked me to think about transferring to Washington or to some other agency, or resigning, or something," Hannon said. "At the time, I just was not up to discussing it." Later, however, Kunzig told Hannon he wanted him to stay. Of the hospital visit, Hannon says, "I think there were a fair number of people who didn't think that was the way to handle it."

Joseph B. Scott, assistant general counsel at the Civil Service Commission, said the commission had not had time to investigate since receiving LeMay's affidavits.

When he was told of the comments to the Post-Dispatch, Scott said the charges "raise serious questions and are certainly something the commission would want to look into further. Depending on the facts as they develop, appropriate action would be taken."

Some of the ousted regional administrators were replaced by men on "limited executive assignment," which does not require going through the regular competitive system. The commission has said, however, that such jobs are no less under the merit system than regular career jobs and cannot be filled on the basis of politics.

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Dec. 12, 1974]
POLITICAL JOB BACKING BY CIVIL SERVICE HEAD
(By Robert Adams)

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12.—Robert E. Hampton, chairman of the Civil Service Commission, personally referred at least 17 job seekers to federal agencies from 1968 to 1974 and passed along political information in at least four of the cases, commission documents showed today.

The great majority of the 17 appeared to be for career jobs, which Civil Service laws say are to be filled strictly on merit without regard to political considerations.

The documents, which were made available by the commission at the request of the Post-Dispatch, could be interpreted as showing that Hampton was himself involved in the kind of patronage activities now being investigated by the commission in several other agencies.

In one case, Hampton forwarded a resume to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare which included the fact that the applicant, Miss Roberta Dorn, had worked for former President Richard M. Nixon in campaigns since 1946. It said also that she had been active in Republican politics in college.

In another case, Hampton passed along to the Department of Housing and Urban Development a letter from a third party saying that the job applicant, George J. Niles, "is a sturdy friend of this Administration."

The documents include papers on Dwight W. Jones and Lyle E. Hutchinson, who later were treated as "must cases" by the General Services Administration and got career jobs there.

The papers show that Hampton sent along to GSA a resume of Hutchinson's stating that he was a registered Republican and had done precinct work. Hampton further told a top GSA official that "if at all possible, he would like to help Representative Robert Price, a Texas Republican, who was a first cousin of Jones."

The documents indicate also that Hampton's office was told by GSA that both Jones and Hutchinson were receiving special attention at that agency, despite civil service rules preventing such favoritism. Hampton, however, apparently did nothing to interfere with the special attention.

In addition, the documents show that Hampton's own staff apparently kept close track of the progress of several of the cases within the commission.

At least 10 separate notations appear on a piece of Hampton's stationery concerning the progress of certification papers on a man named Paul Griffith, who was applying for a career job at the Social Security Administration in 1973.

Hampton was not available for comment. An informed commission source, however, told the Post-Dispatch that Hampton's position has been that he neither did nor intended to do anything improper.

"Mr. Hampton didn't refer anybody with the expectation, or the hope, that he would be treated in a preferential manner," the source told the Post-Dispatch in response to a series of questions about the documents. "He was not playing games with the merit system."

The source acknowledged, however, that a personal referral by the man who is supposed to be the No. 1 watchdog on the merit system could be open to misinterpretation by the receiving agencies.

Some of Hampton's files showed strong personal interest in a case and some showed only nominal interest.

In one case, Hampton noted in a 1968 letter to a Department of Transportation official concerning Col. John G. Dailey that Hampton had worked with Dailey in the Air Force.

"Any consideration you can give him will be appreciated," Hampton said. In a handwritten postscript, he added: "P.S. He's a good man—you may remember him."

The Post-Dispatch first disclosed last September that documents existed linking Hampton to cases in which preferential treatment had allegedly been given to candidates for career federal jobs in violation of the Civil Service laws.

At that time, the Post-Dispatch reported that Hampton had personally referred Dwight Jones, a first cousin of Republican Representative Price, to GSA with the notation: "If at all possible, I would like to help Congressman Price." Jones was treated as a "must" by GSA and got a career job in the agency's Kansas City regional office.

Later, the Post-Dispatch disclosed that Hampton's name was also linked to the case of Hutchinson, who was treated as a "must" despite a highly disparaging reference by a GSA staffer. Hutchinson was given a career job as a specifications writer at GSA.

Questions about Hampton's role in job referrals have also arisen in connection with a lawsuit against the commission filed by three of the eight GSA staff members charged with operating a "special referral unit" which allegedly did illegal favors for some job candidates.

Court papers filed by the staffers have charged that it is "bureaucratic hypocrisy" for Hampton to sit in judgment on them for their activities on a special referral unit, when Hampton himself was making job referrals.

Hampton, 52 years old, was named as a Republican member of the commission in 1961. He was appointed chairman of the three-member panel by President Nixon in 1969.

In the case of Miss Dorn, the commission documents show that Hampton sent her resume to Robert C. Mardian, who was then an official in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, on Feb. 4, 1969. Mardian worked for the Nixon re-election committee in 1972. He is one of the five defendants in the current Watergate cover-up trial.

The referral note from Hampton, like many among the 17 cases in Hampton's files, alluded to an earlier conversation with the recipient.

"Bob—as per our conversation, attached is the resume on Miss Dorn," the memo to Mardian said.

The resume in the file indicated, among other things, that Miss Dorn worked for the Nixon-Agnew ticket in 1968, had done volunteer work for Nixon in campaigns since 1948, and "participated in Republican activities" in college. She listed F. Donald Nixon, brother of the former President, as a reference.

Another document in the file indicates that she was discussed earlier with Hampton by Harry S. Flemming, who was then a special assistant to President Nixon.

"A per our conversation of today I am enclosing a resume of Robert Dorn," a memo from Flemming to Hampton dated Jan. 24, 1969, says. "I mentioned to you on the telephone that there are very special circumstances surrounding her case." The memo did not elaborate.

Miss Dorn was considered for jobs at other agencies also, the documents show.

In an interview in September, Hampton told the Post-Dispatch that to the best of his knowledge Jones and Hutchinson were the only persons he referred who actually got government jobs. In discussing the matter today, however, the commission source speaking for Hampton acknowledged that no one had ever checked to see how many of the 17 were actually placed.

Of six that could be readily checked, the Post-Dispatch found that three ultimately received federal jobs, two did not, and one said he was offered a job but turned it down.

Jones and Hutchinson got jobs at GSA, the agency that runs buildings and buys supplies for the Federal Government. Miss Dorn now works in the civil rights division of the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration. Although she declined to discuss the Hampton referral or her current job, another source said her job was a career Civil Service job and not a political appointment.

On the George Niles case, the documents show that on March 10, 1969, Hampton referred his resume to Jack E. Crawford, a HUD official, along with a letter of recommendation from Edward A. McCabe, a Washington attorney. McCabe's letter said of Niles: "He's a good friend, has been active in the field of housing and is a sturdy friend of this (Nixon) Administration."

The letter said Niles was especially interested in a particular job, and that he understood the job could be filled either through Civil Service or through an excepted appointment, which does not fall within the non-political rules. Niles, however, told the Post-Dispatch he felt he was qualified principally for career jobs.

December 20, 1974

Hampton got a brief letter of acknowledgment from Crawford at HUD. Later, Hampton wrote Crawford to add that Niles was entitled to a 10-point veteran's preference in seeking a job.

Niles, however, says he didn't get a job. "I went over to HUD and saw people, but I never had anything offered to me," he said.

Title 5, Section 3303 of the United States Code prohibits a person in an agency from acting on, or even receiving, any information on a job-seeker regarding his political party from a Congressman or a Senator. In addition, Civil Service Rule 4.2 provides that all disclosures about political affiliation "shall be ignored" in filling career jobs.

A commission source who declined to be identified defended Hampton's forwarding of the letters on Niles and Miss Dorn which indicated that they were Republicans. The source noted that the job Niles was particularly interested in might have been filled on a non-career basis.

The source defended the inclusion of the information about Miss Dorn's Republican activities in college and her campaign work for Nixon. "That's a legitimate part of her background and experience," the source contended. "The rule says that party affiliation should be ignored, but it doesn't say all references should be expunged from all applications. A prospective employer might want to call the people she worked for in the campaign and find out how well she does her job."

John W. Macy Jr., chairman of the commission from 1961 to 1969, said he was reluctant to criticize Hampton without a detailed knowledge of the specific cases involved, but added:

"The kinds of referrals he apparently made can be misunderstood. It's important to refrain from doing that in any way that would appear to be in conflict with the merit system."

TRIBUTE TO DR. CHAIM WEIZMANN

HON. ROBERT F. DRINAN

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. DRINAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues the first part of an excellent statement prepared by the American Israel Public Affairs Committee which pays tribute to "one of the titans" of our times, Dr. Chaim Weizmann.

As November 27 was the 100th anniversary of Dr. Weizmann's birth, this is a fitting moment to trace the development of the State of Israel and the considerable role Dr. Weizmann played in this process.

I highly commend this most informative statement to my colleagues:

Because November 27 is the 100th Anniversary of the birth of Dr. Chaim Weizmann, the first President of the State of Israel, this is a fitting moment to pay a deserved tribute to "one of the titans" of our century, the scientist-statesman who was a Founding Father of the State of Israel, and its first President, whose scientific contributions in two wars and thereafter have placed the civilized world in his debt.

It is also a moment to re-examine the record, to place the problem of the Middle East in perspective, to judge objectively whether the existence of the State of Israel does indeed constitute a historic injustice against the Arabs, as has been charged.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Such a review is made urgent by the developments of recent weeks. In the course of this month, we have been witness to an extraordinary and insolent attempt to turn the clock backward and to rewrite history in order to destroy the State of Israel.

In the process, the United States has been charged with imperialism; its honor impugned for its support of the State of Israel; the names of George Washington, Abraham Lincoln and Woodrow Wilson invoked to sanction terror and destruction; the Jews of the United States and the world accused of conspiracy against their home countries, of divided loyalties, by reason of their support of Israel; Israel accused of racism and threatened with exclusion from the UN.

The United Nations has lent itself to this insurrection against its raison d'être, and its binding decisions by the leader of the Palestine Liberation Organization, according the honors of a head of state to Yasser Arafat, who definitely appeared on the platform of the international agency for peace with a gun on his hip.

Surrender to the PLO effort, if it is underwritten by the United Nations will destroy the meaning of the UN Charter and ultimately, the United Nations itself.

The United States, which has played so large a part in the creation of the Jewish National Homeland in Palestine culminating in the creation of the State of Israel, cannot remain passive in the face of the newest assault designed to place the world in thrall to terror. Obviously, there can be no peace based on terror.

For those of us deeply concerned with achieving a peaceful settlement in the Middle East, it is important that there be no yielding to the blackmail of terror or of oil, both on moral and practical grounds. Blackmail has a voracious appetite—which is never satisfied.

Urgent is a review of the facts in order to give perspective to a policy that can be defined, supported and implemented, to achieve peace.

Let it be noted:

L. THE HISTORIC AMERICAN POSITION ON A JEWISH HOMELAND IN PALESTINE

A. American interest in, and support of the establishment of the Jewish National Homeland dates from the period of World War I.

On November 2, 1917, the British government issued the Balfour Declaration declaring: "His Majesty's government view with favor the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people and will use their best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of this object, it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine, or the rights and political status enjoyed by Jews in other countries."

The issuance of the Balfour Declaration was obtained by Dr. Chaim Weizmann by many years of intensive effort. It was given to the Jewish people, not to the Jews of Palestine and its intent was the ultimate establishment of a Jewish Commonwealth in Palestine.

In fact, as early as 1922, a Colonial Office White Paper affirmed the Balfour Declaration was "a pledge made by the British government to the Jewish people."

Winston Churchill confirmed this in 1922 and again in 1939, in the course of a Parliamentary debate on the British White Paper, which closed Jewish emigration into Palestine. Winston Churchill, opposing the White Paper, said of the Balfour Declaration:

"It was not made to the Jews of Palestine. It was not made to those who were actually living in Palestine. It was made to world Jewry and in particular, to the Zionist associations. It was in consequence of and on the basis of this pledge that we received important help in the war, and that after the war we received from the Allies and Associated Powers the Mandate for Palestine. This pledge of a home, of refuge, of an asylum was not made to the Jews in Palestine, but to the Jews outside Palestine, to that vast, unhappy mass of scattered, persecuted, wandering Jews whose intense, unchanging, unconquerable desire has been a National Home."

On February 13, 1931, the British Prime Minister in a letter to Dr. Chaim Weizmann, then President of the Jewish Agency, said that the undertaking (the Balfour Declaration) and the Mandate "is an undertaking to the Jewish people and not only to the Jewish people of Palestine."

B. Prior to its issuance, the Balfour Declaration had been passed on and approved by President Woodrow Wilson.

On March 3, 1919, President Woodrow Wilson declared: "I am persuaded that the Allied Nations, with the fullest concurrence of our own government and people, are agreed that in Palestine shall be laid the foundation of a Jewish Commonwealth."

On February 19, 1918, the Balfour Declaration was approved by the French government, on May 18, 1918, by the Italian government.

On April 25, 1920, it was approved by the Allied Conference at San Remo, where the Mandate for Palestine was assigned to Great Britain.

Three years later, the Mandate came into force, when it was ratified by the Council of the League of Nations, giving recognition to "the historical connection of the Jewish people with Palestine and to the grounds for constituting their National Home in that country."

Fifty-five countries agreed to the terms of the Balfour Declaration and the Mandate.

C. On December 3, 1924, a convention was signed by the United States and Great Britain, in which the United States reaffirmed the endorsement of the Balfour Declaration, accepted the terms of the Mandate for Palestine as defined by the Council of the League of Nations on September 29, 1923, and set forth the rights of the United States with respect to the decisions on Palestine as equal to those of the Member Nations of the League of Nations.

D. Successive American Presidents of the United States who followed Woodrow Wilson in office, Warren Harding; Calvin Coolidge; Franklin D. Roosevelt; John F. Kennedy; Harry Truman, committed themselves to the support of the creation of a Jewish State.

E. The Congress of the United States, in 1922, 1924, 1942, 1945, by resolution; and by declaration submitted to the President of the United States, called for the United States to expedite the building of the Jewish National Homeland in Palestine.

F. In June 1944 and July, 1944, the Republican and Democratic conventions each adopted resolutions calling for free Jewish emigration into Palestine and the establishment of a Jewish Commonwealth there.

G. At the end of World War II, with the confirmation of six million Jews massacred in the gas chambers and ovens of the Nazis, President Harry S. Truman accepted the challenge to conscience, and opened initiatives for an open-door policy to admit the Jewish survivors to Palestine. Winston Churchill, defeated in the election, following the end of the war was succeeded by Ernest Bevin. He refused to approve President Truman's request, and the effort failed.

H. When the issue came to the United Nations, in 1947, and Britain announced its intention to relinquish the Mandate over Palestine, President Truman's support was de-clive in the outcome of the vote on the UN Partition Resolution. The United States was the first country in 1948 to recognize the new State of Israel, established under the terms of the November 29, 1947 United Nations Partition Resolution.

LETTERS SHOW CONFIRMING ROCKEFELLER VICE PRESIDENT A WISE ACTION

HON. HENRY P. SMITH III

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, yesterday this House of Representatives confirmed the nomination of Nelson A. Rockefeller to be Vice President of the United States. That this was a wise action is further attested by the following two letters which I am delighted to share with my colleagues.

O. K. ARMSTRONG,
Republic, Mo., December 18, 1974.

HON. HENRY P. SMITH III
Member of Congress from New York, House Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN SMITH: In line with our recent conversation, I appreciate this opportunity to send to you, and for the Record, my hearty endorsement of Hon. Nelson A. Rockefeller to be the next Vice President of the United States.

I am a former member of Congress from Missouri, and since 1944 have been a member of the Editorial Staff of Reader's Digest.

Back in early 1950 I had the pleasure of doing research for an article on the work of Nelson A. Rockefeller in Peru, South America, in assisting the government and private industry of that country to move forward in economic production and growth. The article was first published in the July 1950 issue of NATION'S BUSINESS, with the title "American Partners in Progress."

Since that time I have had the honor to write many articles referring to the tremendous contributions Mr. Rockefeller and his family have made to industrial and social progress, at home and abroad. Governor Rockefeller's almost countless gifts have benefitted humanity in education, in medical and scientific research; in support of religious causes; in assistance to the progress of minorities—especially to black people.

I deeply regret that not more of this aspect of the generosity of Governor Nelson A. Rockefeller and his family was brought out at his hearing on confirmation before your Judiciary Committee. Like millions of other American citizens who know about and appreciate Rockefeller's generous stewardship of his wealth, I am delighted that he is willing to continue to serve the people of this nation as Vice President.

Cordially yours,

O. K. ARMSTRONG.

THE REVEREND

HUBERT C. MATHEWS, D.D.,
Springfield, Mo., December 3, 1974.

TO THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MEMBERS: After starting out as a boy preacher in 1913 and holding pastorates of churches in Missouri, Nebraska, California and Massachusetts, beginning in 1918 and extending forty-five years, I retired as an active pastor in 1963, and now live in Springfield, Missouri.

Upon my retirement I was accorded a pension under a plan of the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of the American Baptist Churches of the U.S.A.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

This pension plan was made possible by generous gifts from many people. By far the greatest gifts, however, came from the Rockefeller family to what was then known as the Northern Baptist Convention. The pension greatly assists in providing living expenses for my wife and me.

Many thousands of ministers in many denominations all over the United States have been assisted in a similar manner by the stewardship of the Rockefellers in the use of their wealth.

I send to your committee this letter to call attention to the help the family of former Governor Nelson A. Rockefeller has been, and continues to be, to ministers and religious workers.

Very truly yours,

HUBERT C. MATHEWS.

ROTARY INTERNATIONAL ESTABLISHES GOOD WILL BETWEEN CALIFORNIANS AND PAKISTANIS

HON. DON EDWARDS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of my colleagues one of the most impressive programs of good will and international cooperation that has come to my attention in recent months. Through the sponsorship of the Rotary International Foundation, an exchange program between the people of Pakistan and the people of California has been established. As a result, in January a delegation of outstanding young Californians, two of whom I am proud to represent in my congressional district, will have the opportunity to visit Pakistan, meet with their counterparts in business and government, and share ideas which I know will be of mutual benefit and value.

The members of the California delegation include Richard L. Henning of Cupertino, who is assistant dean of students of Foothill Community College; Robert A. Nelson, Sr., of Fremont, city clerk and management services director for the city; Harvey J. Kiekelson of Santa Cruz, who is an executive for Wells Fargo Bank; Robert W. Peters, Sr., of Palo Alto, the supervisor of physical education and athletic programs for Palo Alto Unified School District and football coach for Cubberly High School; Nicholas J. Randall of Hayward, a sales executive for Field Enterprises Education Corp.; and Frederick J. Styles of Saratoga, who works for the deputy director of NASA Ames Research Center.

I regret that time does not allow me to elaborate on the impressive individual accomplishments and achievements of these young men. Each one has excellent credentials, and, as a delegation, I feel they will represent us with great credit.

I wish them well on their exciting and rewarding journey. And I wish to extend my compliments and gratitude to His Excellency President Sulfikar Ali Bhutto and the Government of Pakistan, without whose cooperation this outstanding opportunity would not be possible. We are all grateful to President Bhutto and the Pakistani Government, as well as the Rotary Foundation, district 517, for fostering this important program of international cooperation and good will.

INDIAN ARBITRATION

HON. WALTER E. FAUNTROY

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, the trade bill has occupied the Congress intently in recent days. Certain representations were made on the floor of the Senate in the course of debate on the bill concerning a friendly but sensitive government. I speak of the remarks of Senator TAFT, of Ohio, concerning the Government of India, made on December 13 as the Senator introduced amendment No. 2070 to the Senate bill. I believe that our relations with a country such as India should not be prejudiced by the omission of relevant facts. There is another side of the story that I should like to place in the Record.

I make no comments on the merits of the Taft amendment, which would deny certain preferential tariff treatment to any country which "fails to act in good faith" in recognizing arbitration awards in favor of U.S. citizens or companies. I do, however, believe that the amendment should be considered with all the available facts, accurately reported.

First, Senator TAFT stated that:

I am extremely concerned over the apparent refusal by the Indian Government to honor its contracts and to accept arbitral awards rendered in favor of Americans.

If one surveys the balance of the statement, one finds that the target of Senator TAFT's criticism—with the exception, dealt with below—is in reality the Indian corporation with whom American companies deal, not the Government of India. Although there is a vast tendency to identify all Indian corporations with their Government, there is in law and fact all the difference in the world. When one is speaking of Indian corporations, it is not fair to speak of an "apparent refusal by the Indian Government to honor its contract." There has been no such refusal by the Indian Government insofar as I am aware.

Second, Senator TAFT then stated that the "Indian Government has refused to honor arbitration awards made in favor of American parties," but instead has "thrown" these awards to its own courts for redetermination of the issues on the merits, "thus defeating . . . determination by an impartial tribunal."

This is an inaccurate concept of what goes on in these matters. Arbitration awards proceed out of arbitration, which is agreed to by contract—in this case between United States and Indian parties. These awards, in India and in the United States, are binding on the parties, unless the parties agree to review of the award by the courts or the award violates provisions of substantive law. Then—in the United States or in India—the parties, by negotiations, choose in their contracts which country courts shall have jurisdiction. In each case in which Indian courts have taken jurisdiction over these matters, this was the choice of the contracting parties. And in each such case, resort to that court was made because the parties had originally agreed to court review of the awards, or because the award violated the law. Again, this type of review is guaranteed by our own law.

December 20, 1974

Third, Senator TAFT also points out that review of the arbitral awards by Indian courts violates the Arbitral Awards Convention of 1971, to which the United States and India are both signatories. It is hard for me to see why this is so, especially since there has been no contention whatsoever by our own State Department that this convention has been violated in any way. The fact of the matter is that current arbitral procedures in India and in the United States both comply fully with the Convention.

Fourth, Senator TAFT refers to the grievance of an Ohio corporation which contracted to construct a turnkey plant for the production of fertilizer in India. The other contracting party was an Indian corporation. A dispute arose over the contract and the parties went to arbitration. The Indian party then asked for review of the award by an Indian court for the reason that the award itself violated the law.

The essential fact, as I understand it, was that both parties—the American and the India companies—had agreed in their contract that any dispute arising under the contract or in arbitration would be resolved by an Indian court. As were all terms of this contract, this agreement was negotiated and agreed to freely by the American company.

Fifth, it was also contended that the Government of India maintains a policy that all commercial arbitrations must be conducted in India, allegedly at great expense to American contracting companies. The particular Indian company involved in the dispute with the Ohio company was owned by the Government of India, but this is not generally true of Indian companies. It may well have been that the Government of India as a stockholder in that particular case insisted on arbitration in India. But it is misleading to spin from that the conclusion that all Indian companies, publicly or privately owned, insist on this. There simply is no such governmental policy regarding arbitration and if there were, American companies negotiating with their Indian counterparts could simply refuse to agree to it. That is certainly open to them.

Sixth, finally, Senator TAFT stated that:

Indian Courts have been notoriously prejudiced against American parties.

Anyone who has had any contact with Indian courts becomes instantly aware of their tradition of fierce independence, not only from the parties before them, but also independence from any dictates of the executive arm of their own government. The controversy over the nationalization of Indian banks taught the Indian Prime Minister this lesson.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

We should legislate in trade matters with all the facts before us, as accurately reported as possible. The foregoing points are offered in this spirit.

HON. HUGH CAREY

HON. SAMUEL S. STRATTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to join today in honoring HUGH CAREY upon his retirement from the House of Representatives, to become, on January 1, 1975, the Governor of the Empire State of New York. His departure is a great loss to the House, but it is indeed a great gain for the people of my State of New York. HUGH CAREY will surely be another in the great line of Democratic Governors of New York State.

In HUGH CAREY we lose a tireless and knowledgeable colleague. During his 14 years of service to his country and his constituents in this body HUGH CAREY served with distinction on several important House committees, including the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs and the Committee on Education and Labor. In the Education and Labor Committee he authored numerous laws for the benefit of handicapped children, and was a principal author of the first Federal educational assistance bill, the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965. In 1970, HUGH CAREY was unanimously elected to the Ways and Means Committee and his work on that committee for the people of his State and his country is well known to all of us, especially the legislation for Federal revenue sharing.

In addition Mr. CAREY served on the Joint Economic Committee during this Congress.

Mr. Speaker, HUGH CAREY has been a mover and a leader in this House. His leadership capabilities and his dogged determination were dramatically demonstrated in his remarkable campaign for the governorship of New York this past year.

I am sure he will bring these same qualities into the executive chambers of New York when he takes office on January 1.

We of the New York delegation will miss HUGH CAREY in the 94th Congress, but we look forward to working with Governor CAREY in 1975 for the benefit and the best interests of all the people of New York State.

THE VICE PRESIDENT AND THE PRESIDENT

HON. FRANK E. DENHOLM

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. DENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, this has been truly a historic session of the Congress of the United States of America.

The awesome legislative workload of this Congress has been overshadowed by reports of the news media of unprecedented events by personnel of the executive branch of this Government. The consequence of which failures of men and the fortunes of men have exceeded the productivity of men in the public interest.

The 25th amendment imposed a duty upon this Congress that none of us can escape. Although all of us defend and uphold the Constitution—many of us have reservations as to the merit of provisions of the 25th amendment that preclude the historic practice of the people to decide upon alternative candidates by secret ballot for the highest offices of our land.

Neither the constitutional law nor the facts before us provided an easy alternative. We had to vote against or for a single nominee—a decision wholly contrary to alternatives exercised in the election processes of this system of government for nearly 200 years. Those decisions and the investigations now completed by Members of the 93d Congress have not been easy but in all cases the results have been produced with diligence, due care and a sincere sense of judgment and reason. The expressed will of Congress is not without error in all things but in selecting a Vice President and a President we pray the test of time to prove the judgment of Congress to be right.

The underlying dangers, if dangers they may be, is that free elections can no longer be entrusted to the people as electors at large. The exemplary work of the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey, the Honorable PETER W. RODINO, JR., Chairman of the House Committee on the Judiciary, and the members of that committee, may prove to be of merit superior to the test of manipulated campaigns that distort more than enlighten the minds of multitudes of men in free elections. I am certain that I am not alone in the conclusion—perish the thought. Let us hope that men have learned from the wrongs of the past and that the spirit of "good faith" shall prevail among the elected and equally abide among all of the electors that democracy as we have known her shall never die.

ACCOUNTING OF TOTAL EXPENDITURES

HON. DAVE MARTIN

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 1974

Mr. MARTIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, the Select Committee on Committees was established in January 1973, with a total authorization of $1,500,000. I feel that the Members should have an accounting of total expenditures through November 30, 1974. I list these expenditures below and you will note that $656,409.73 has been spent thus far with an unexpended authorization remaining of $843,590.27.

The existence of this committee ends with the 93d Congress, so there is still 1 month of expenditures to go before the books are closed:

EXPENDITURES	Cumulative for fiscal period
Stationery and supplies.....	$4,647.71
Periodicals and publications.....	2,611.28
Telephone and telegraph.....	1,414.00
Equipment.....	9,187.04
Travel.....	3,654.58
Consultants.....	12,100.00
Witness fees.....	5,931.40
Reporting service.....	13,350.00
Miscellaneous.....	27,586.67
Salaries.....	575,927.05
Majority—cumulative.....	315,857.22
Minority—cumulative.....	260,069.83
Total expenses.....	656,409.73

DEPARTURE FROM THE WHITE HOUSE STAFF—WILLIAM E. TIMMONS

HON. JOHN J. RHODES

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 16, 1974

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, it is with considerable personal reluctance that I note the departure from the White House staff of William E. Timmons, my good friend, who did such an exceptional job as head of the congressional liaison staff.

As minority leader, I depended heavily on Bill's assistance and counsel. He was unfailingly helpful and consistently kind in his dealings with me, and other Members of Congress.

It was our good fortune—and the Nation's—to have had a man of such great ability and unquestioned moral fiber serving in the executive branch at a time of low public confidence in Government. Bill Timmons is a prominent member of a large list of men and women who in the face of great difficulties, served the previous administration with honor and distinction. As was written by the highly respected Washington Post journalist, David Broder:

For them, there is special irony in the title of Carl Bernstein's and Bob Woodward's fine best-seller about the Watergate case, "All the President's Men." They know—if no one else does—that it was only a handful of the President's men and none of the President's women who were responsible for the scheme that brought their administration to ruin.

Mr. Broder singled out Bill Timmons as a prime example of those people worthy of the greatest respect and admiration for his work for the country.

Mr. Speaker, we in the Congress similarly owe Bill Timmons a special debt of gratitude for the great work he did on behalf of us all. As he prepares to enter the private sector, we wish him the very best of success and hope that his successor will approach the high standard of professional excellence which he established and maintained throughout a very difficult period in our Nation's history.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

I wish to thank Bill Timmons for many things, but most of all for the warm personal friendships Betty and I continue to enjoy with him and his wonderful wife, Mimi.

JAMES J. BRADDOCK

HON. HENRY HELSTOSKI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. HELSTOSKI. Mr. Speaker, James J. Braddock, the "Cinderella Man of Boxing," and one of North Jersey's leading citizens died November 29 at the age of 68. A resident of North Bergen, Mr. Braddock was best remembered for defeating Max Baer for the heavyweight boxing title as a 10-to-1 underdog.

As heavyweight champion, Mr. Braddock became a symbol and inspiration for men and women everywhere, for through his efforts in the ring he showed the world what one man could accomplish with courage and determination, even in the face of seemingly overwhelming odds.

A former member of the Boxing Hall of Fame, Mr. Braddock fought 85 professional bouts during his 17-year ring career. He compiled an excellent record of 51 victories, including 26 by knockout. He also won 45 amateur bouts in succession before turning pro in 1926.

However, James J. Braddock was more than a fighter; throughout his life he made many important contributions to his neighbors and community. He was active in a variety of fund-raising events including the Max Baer Heart Fund, one of the major projects of the Fraternal Order of Eagles.

Mr. Speaker, an article concerning Mr. Braddock's career appeared recently in the Bergen Record, and in view of the fact that it gives further insight into this remarkable man I would like to take this opportunity to share this material with my colleagues:

JAMES J. BRADDOCK, AT 68, BOXING'S "CINDERELLA MAN"
(By Bob Freeley)

NORTH BERGEN.—James J. Braddock, the "Cinderella Man of Boxing," died in his sleep Friday in his home. He was 68.

The flat-nosed fighter earned his nickname when, as a 10 to 1 underdog, he outpointed Max Baer on June 13, 1935, for the heavyweight title. He lost the title to Joe Louis by a knockout on June 22, 1937.

Braddock, a member of Boxing's Hall of Fame and the last of the Irish heavyweight champions, fought 85 professional bouts during a 17-year ring career. He won 51, including 26 by knockouts.

After his defeat by Louis, he fought and defeated Tommy Farr in the Garden on Jan. 21, 1938, keeping himself among the heavyweight contenders. Ten days later, he announced his retirement.

POLITICAL ASPIRATIONS

The former champ lived in a comfortable home at 7712 Park Ave., which he built after his bout with Louis. An active Democrat, at one time he ran unsuccessfully for freeholder. In 1970, the township commissioners made a bipartisan effort to get Gov. William T. Cahill to name Braddock as state boxing commissioner.

December 20, 1974

Braddock had been active in fund-raising events for combatting heart diseases. One of his projects was the Max Baer Heart Fund, a major project of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, of which he was a member. He frequently assisted community groups in fund-raising drives and spoke at civic functions.

In 1957, Braddock became a construction worker and crane operator, marking a return to the heavy manual work which filled his lean years during the Depression. He was one of 140 men employed by American Bridge Co. to work on the massive steel components of the Verrazano-Narrows Bridge.

BORN ON WEST SIDE

Braddock was one of seven children born to Joseph and Elizabeth Braddock in a tenement flat on New York's West side. He originally was named James Walter Braddock but changed his middle name to the initial "J" in honor of his fistie idol, James J. Jeffries. He won 45 amateur bouts in succession—30 by knockouts—before turning pro in 1926.

Braddock was a parishioner of St. Joseph of the Palisades R. C. Church in West New York and a member of the Knights of Columbus. He also was a member of Local 825, International Union of Operating Engineers, in Newark.

Surviving are his wife, Mae; two sons, Jay of Saddle Brook and Howard of Cliffside Park; a daughter, Rose Marie DeWitt of Teaneck; four brothers: Ralph, Jack, Joseph and Al; two sisters, Nellie Mallon and Julia Klink, and six grandchildren.

REDUCE SALARIES

HON. LOUIS FREY, JR.

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. FREY. Mr. Speaker, there is a great lack of confidence by the American public in the ability of the Congress and the administration to handle the economy. We all realize the need for concentrated action—partisan politics can only hurt this Nation.

Part of this lack of confidence is based on the perception by the public that Congress and the administration want the individual American to bear the burden, and seem unwilling to take the leadership. Time after time I have constituents ask, Why do you not cut your salary and that of the President and his Cabinet? The cut could be contingent on the balancing of the national budget. The more I have thought about it, the more it makes sense.

We should provide the leadership. By taking this step, we can ask people to follow our example. I hope the President considers such a recommendation for his state of the Union message.

December 20, 1974

KEEPING CONSTITUENTS INFORMED

HON. JOSEPH M. GAYDOS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, over the past several years it has become increasingly important that greater communication between elected officials and the public be established. The news media has done a creditable job in most instances of keeping the Nation informed on issues of national interest, but space and time limitations prevent focusing in on issues relating directly to individual congressional districts.

Recognizing this need, most Members of Congress attempt to inform their constituencies and ascertain public opinion through periodic newsletters and questionnaires. I have used these as well as other written communications such as an Info-Gram and Lightning poll when an item of information or public reaction is more immediate in nature. The cost of paper, printing, and other operational expenses is borne in part by individual contributions to the Gaydos Public Service and Information Committee. During the first session of the 93d Congress, receipts amounted to $6,007.93; expenditures amounted to $5,855.69, leaving a closing balance of $152.24 for the year.

In the second session, receipts plus carryover were $5,402.24 and expenditures were $4,646.45 leaving a closing balance of $755.79, as of December 9, 1974.

Since August of 1969, I have also conducted weekly Saturday morning workshops in my district as well as a home phone poll to further promote a bidirectional flow of information. The exchange of ideas has been most beneficial to me and I am grateful to all of those who give freely of their time, funds, and assistance.

TYPOGRAPHICAL CORRECTIONS TO CORPORATE TAX STUDY

HON. CHARLES A. VANIK

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, December 18, 1974, I delivered a special order speech on the effective U.S. corporate tax rates paid by America's leading corporations.

As usual, the GPO printers did a magnificent job in putting this extremely complex speech into type. There were, however, several typographical errors which I would like to have noted for the permanent Record. Because of the extreme interest in this study, I would like to list the corrections at this point in the Record:

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

ERRATA

The following typographical errors should be noted. The correct reading is in quotes: On page two, table C, Commercial banks, adjusted net income before Federal income tax 1973 "802".

On page three, text in the third column, phrase reading, their aggregate adjusted gross income... should read, their aggregate adjusted "net" income...

On page three, in alphabetical order the following companies should read: Shell Oil Co.—1973 effective tax rate "25.4%".

Sun Oil Co.—1972 approximate current Federal income tax "9,044".

Texaco, Inc.—1972 adjusted net income before Federal income tax—"869,711".

On page four, International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. 1973 adjusted net income before Federal income tax: "469,966".

On page five, in alphabetical order the following companies should read:

Genesco, Inc.—1973 effective tax rate "...".

Genesee & Western Industries, Inc.—1971 effective tax rate (percent) "10".

Owens-Illinois, Inc.—1970 effective tax rate (percent) "36.5".

Raytheon Manufacturing Company—1973 adjusted net income before Federal income tax "81,658".

Teledyne, Inc.—1970 effective tax rate (percent) "31.8".

On page six, in alphabetical order the following companies should read:

Transportation Corporation list: Southern Ry Co.—1972 adjusted net income before Federal income tax "100,844".

Retailing Corporation list: Safeway Stores, Inc.—1970 effective tax rate (percent) "49.8".

On page eight, column one, paragraph eight, phrase reading, effective tax rates of 13.4 percent and 97 percent respectively... should read, effective tax rates of 13.4 percent and "9.7" percent respectively...

AMERICANS ARE THE BEST-FED, BEST-CLOTHED PEOPLE IN THE WORLD

HON. JAMES ABDNOR

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. Speaker, as we close the 93d Congress, we remain the best-fed, best-clothed people in the world. If we are to remain so, however, my colleagues and the interested readers of the Record will do well to read and carefully consider the thoughts expressed to me in the letter from Mr. and Mrs. Fred Gnirk, Burke, S. Dak., which follows:

BURKE, S. DAK.,
December 5, 1974.

Representative JAMES ABDNOR,
Washington, D.C.

HONORABLE MR. ABDNOR: We supported you in the recent election and ask for your support of our farm products, beef and pork.

We have 4 sons, all college graduates, three of whom are farmers and cattle and hog raisers and feeders. One son, with a Masters in Education and Political Science, and two sons with Bachelors in Mechanical Engineering from the School of Mines & Tech of Rapid City, S.D., have chosen to be farmers and livestock producers. Our youngest son, David, graduates this month, Dec. 20, 1974, and was chosen "Outstanding College Student of the Year" in the United States.

The boys have borrowed money to buy extra land, machinery and livestock. The 2 older sons farm and raise and feed cattle. Because of the drought, their feed is fed up, and now they are buying feed to winter the cattle and to finish out the calves and heaves. They will lose heavily when the calves and heaves are marketed, which will be soon.

David went into partnership with his father in hogs—500-600 hogs. They are buying all the feed, corn and supplement. David has gone on 5 interview trips to industries in the mid-west.

However, he is still considering to come home and farm and raise hogs, if there is a future in it.

All three boys could have done much better in the industrial world—but all three boys chose to come back to the soil!

Without help and support from us, if we can do it, three more good and true farmers will have to quit, due to the tragic decrease in the selling price of their livestock, purchased to replenish when prices were inflated, plus the increase in the price of feed, and the lowered yields due to the drought. We, ourselves, are ready to retire in 2 years, we can hold on. But who will grow and feed the meat for the nation, if our young farmers go bankrupt?

There are hundreds like our sons, all your future farmers and feeders of the world. We felt revitalized people when the prices went up the early part of the past year, our work and slavery was rewarded. But only for a short time and bang it was done!

The Congress had better think upon this, and act before it is too late. The old farmers cannot go on—the young ones will, but cannot if such conditions continue.

Thank you.
Sincerely,

Mr. and Mrs. FRED GNIRK.

TRIBUTE TO GENE AINSWORTH

HON. JOHN J. RHODES

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the occasion of the final day of session for the 93d Congress to pay a well-earned tribute to Mr. Gene Ainsworth, who will be leaving his position on the White House congressional liaison staff to enter the private sector.

Mr. Ainsworth is well known to many Members of the House of Representatives and is equally well respected for the skill in which he approached his important responsibilities. It was his fate to serve in the executive branch at a time of low public confidence in Government. However, despite many difficulties, he served his administration and country with great distinction and uncommon ability for such a young man.

We wish Gene the very best of luck as he prepares to meet the challenges of the business world and express to him our profound gratitude for a job well done.

WILLIAM E. TIMMONS, "A JOB WELL DONE"

HON. ELFORD A. CEDERBERG

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 18, 1974

Mr. CEDERBERG. Mr. Speaker, the true stature and mark of any individual can usually best be judged as to how one serves and reacts under pressure and difficult, demanding situations. For 6 years, William E. Timmons, as Assistant to the President for Legislative Affairs, has literally existed in a "pressure cooker." Even under normal, routine circumstances his was a difficult assignment in maintaining liaison between the Congress and the White House. We all are aware of the tremendous additional burdens of that job in the past several months. But, Bill Timmons performed magnificently—without question, "a job well done."

As Bill now prepares to leave the White House and his service to our country, I am honored to join with so many other Members in expressing appreciation for his outstanding work and to wish him even greater success and happiness in the years ahead.

It has been my distinct pleasure to know Bill personally for the nearly 15 years since he first came to Washington, D.C., as administrative assistant for then newly elected Congressman WILLIAM BROCK, now U.S. Senator Brock, from Tennessee. Bill Timmons was a natural—a great personality and with an extremely keen mind and sharpness.

He joined the White House congressional liaison staff in January 1969, and quickly rose to the top spot in directing the administration's vital contact with the Congress. He was a great spokesman for the White House in his representation of the administration's positions on vital legislative issues.

In my 22 years in Congress and dealing with six different administrations, I can attest that the professionalism of the White House congressional office was never higher or finer than that of Bill Timmons' group.

I do not know Bill's future plans as he leaves this White House leadership role, but I am positive that whatever his endeavors he shall be highly successful. He has proved to be a man of great dedication and integrity. He has given his country the very best and for this, we are grateful.

I wish him the greatest possible future success, happiness and good health in the years ahead.

EQUIPMENT LEASING—THE INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT GONE WILD

HON. CHARLES A. VANIK

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. VANIK. Mr. Speaker, the current issue of Fortune magazine carries an impressive 27-page advertisement on the rapidly expanding equipment leasing industry. This industry, which is expanding at an annual rate of 15 to 20 percent, is almost entirely a creature of our tax laws.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Presently, we give a 7-percent investment tax credit on the purchase of new industrial equipment. Many companies whose tax payments are already low find that they cannot use the credit to the fullest extent. Through a leasing arrangement, they can convey this tax benefit to a financial institution—such as a commercial bank—in return for favorable financing. The bank buys the equipment, qualifies for the tax credit, and then turns around and leases the equipment to the original company at a cost below that of financing an outright purchase. Everybody's happy except the U.S. Treasury, which suffers a loss.

The Fortune advertisement reveals the absurd extent to which this practice has grown. Among other things, the American taxpayer is subsidizing:

The leasing of two portable $20,000 handball courts for the largest swim and tennis club in Northern California;

A potato chip cooker for a food company in Utah;

Furniture and fixtures—everything from kitchen sinks and carpeting to beds, bar stools, and chairs—for several national motel chains;

Electric golf cars to country clubs;

Horses and cattle to U.S. investor syndicates; and,

Elephants, zebras, lions, amusement rides and concession stand equipment for a commercial park in Puerto Rico.

Mr. Speaker, this advertisement provides vivid testimony to what happens when a tax subsidy gets out of hand. Congress never envisioned the open market exchange of tax benefits that the practice of equipment leasing represents. It is time we carefully reviewed this area to see how effective the investment tax credit actually has been in stimulating needed investment in our economy. I suspect the answers are not encouraging for the tax avoider.

WAGE-PRICE CONTROLS PLUS JOBS NOW

HON. ROBERT L. LEGGETT

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, December 20, 1974

Mr. LEGGETT. Mr. Speaker, it is apparent that recession and unemployment may well have moved ahead of inflation as our major economic worry. Unemployment at 6.5 percent in November is projected to reach 7 or 8 percent by mid-1975. Moreover, some economists are saying it may reach double-digit levels if we do not move firmly in the next year. We must face the agonizing dilemma of dealing with a rapidly deepening recession without abandoning the fight against inflation.

December 20, 1974

One widely accepted remedy for our unemployment problem is a public or emergency jobs program. This is an approach that finds little opposition, and just yesterday we approved a conference report on a bill that would authorize $2.5 billion for public service jobs, with the House having originally authorized $2 billion and the Senate $4 billion.

We must recognize that programs at these levels, however laudable, may not have much effect on the unemployment picture. According to a recent article in the Los Angeles Times by Robert J. Samuelson, even a $4 billion annual program would provide only 500,000 jobs, less than 1 percent of employment versus our current 6.5 percent unemployment. Furthermore, many of these jobs may disappear by "displacement" if State and local governments use the money to hire people they would have hired anyway with their own funds. Mr. Samuelson says more than 50 percent of the jobs created may be lost this way.

Economists such as Otto Eckstein believe that jobs programs of 4 or 5 times the level we approved, together with a tax cut of at least $15 billion, would be necessary to have a real impact on unemployment. This brings us face to face with the fundamental question of whether we can really curb inflation without a lengthy period of relatively high unemployment. Milton Friedman thinks measures like those proposed by Otto Eckstein would, after an initial decline in inflation, push us back up to 15 percent inflation within 2 years.

It is analysis of this sort that leads me to conclude that wage-price controls are inescapable. If we are to continue to fight inflation while at the same time undertaking the jobs and tax measures needed to reduce unemployment, we must have a comprehensive program of wage-price-interest-profit controls. It is for this reason that I am introducing together with Congressmen Moss and PARMAN legislation which would mandate wage-price controls. I think this measure is in line with the decision taken by the Kansas City Democratic mini-convention and the House Democratic Caucus to move forcefully to deal with our economic problems.

Bob Samuelson's thought-provoking article on public jobs programs and the economy follows:

PUBLIC JOBS PROGRAM NO PANACEA FOR ECONOMY

(By Robert J. Samuelson)

As the White House and Congress grapple with the double infirmity of inflation and recession, only one widely-suggested remedy seems to command anything like universal support: public service jobs.

Almost every other proposal—wage-price controls, a tax increase, spending cuts, a tax reduction—has its own powerful camp of critics. But virtually no one is against public service jobs. Even President Ford, cautioning against executive gloom about the economy, may agree to support a larger public service job program than he originally proposed.

This consensus appears to represent little more than common sense.

With the unemployment rate (6.5% in November) at its highest level since 1961, public service job proposals have an irresistible popular appeal. For the last month, the White House and Congress have been struggling less to assure that new legislation passes than to see who gets most of the credit. A $2 to $4 billion program is almost certain to become law soon, probably before the end of the year.

December 20, 1974

But how much good will it do?

Well, not as much as the widespread support might indicate. In fact, the available evidence suggests that the results may be rather modest.

Creating new jobs directly may be a slightly more effective way to stimulate the economy than an equally large tax cut or spending increase, but the program isn't big enough to change the employment picture dramatically. At an average salary of $7,500 to $8,500 a year, a $4 billion annual program would create about 500,000 jobs, less than 1% on the unemployment rate.

Moreover, the program's stimulating effect may wear off rapidly as a result of what economists call the "displacement" effect. In plain language, this means that once city and state officials—who do all the hiring—see that the federal government is picking up the tab for local jobs, they will use federal funds to hire people they would have hired anyway. After six months or a year, more than 50% of the "new" jobs may be lost in this way, many economists believe.

Those who hope that public service jobs will aid the poor and the disadvantaged may be disappointed. State and local officials tend to hire the best-qualified job-seekers—who aren't necessarily the poorest and most disadvantaged. As unemployment rises, the dilemma—choosing between people who need jobs most and those who appear best qualified—intensifies, because there are more experienced jobless workers.

Finally, if—as many economists believe—a prolonged period of relatively high unemployment is the unavoidable price of curbing inflation, then a jobs program may simply postpone the inevitable, or cause more inflation. And many economists who believe differently—that is, they favor a strong stimulus to relieve unemployment—think a jobs program will be too small to do much good.

At least the first three of these sobering conclusions qualify as more than mere conjecture. Although most Americans probably associate "public service" employment with the Depression's Works Projects Administration (WPA), a recent experiment—the Public Employment Program (PEP) in 1971—represents a much more reliable indicator of what may happen. And evaluations of PEP suggest the results outlined above.

Against these likely achievements, the overwhelming political support for a jobs program seems strangely out of proportion. The mystifying disparity has a simple explanation: The political consensus is more apparent than real.

Huddled under the common label of "public service" employment are a number of wildly different concepts. The label covers huge permanent programs aimed at cutting into the high unemployment rates of poverty pockets, where heavy joblessness persists even during periods of prosperity. The White House has embraced a far more limited concept. Despite President Ford's recent pledge to back a program significantly larger than he originally proposed, his basic position remains unchanged. The White House program is intended to be a temporary novocaine for the recession, designed as much to avoid the appearance of being callous as to bring down unemployment. Specifically, the Administration opposes any program that might turn into a perpetual source of federal funding for local and state jobs.

And that's precisely what many mayors and city managers, hungry for new money to support their sagging budgets, want. They may get it, too. PEP was a temporary program, but, when it was due to expire, Congress responded to protesting mayors and county executives by including a similar (though somewhat more modestly-funded) program in the new Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA).

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

"I think that public service employment is now locked in," says Robert Anderson, director of manpower for the National League of Cities. "The only question is the extent to which it will be funded. But I don't see any retreat."

Whatever the future, there is little doubt that a large-scale jobs program is eminently feasible now. If the PEP experience is any guide, one non-problem will be creating new jobs quickly. Under PEP, a totally new program, localities hired 100,000 workers (about 55% of peak employment of 182,000) within the first five months.

Now, things may move even faster. The new legislation probably will waive some requirements that local officials disliked (for example, the requirement that only workers who have been unemployed 30 days or more can be hired). More important, many cities are anticipating the legislation by preparing job lists. Chicago, for example, already has selected about 2,500 jobs, and Samuel Bernstein, assistant to the mayor for manpower, estimates that most could be filled a month after a go-ahead from the Labor Department.

Nor should the jobs consist primarily of make-work. To be sure, many of the PEP jobs were deliberately intended to be easily switched on and easily switched off; perhaps a quarter to one-third of the PEP employees were put to work repairing roads, fixing buildings, or caring for parks, where officials usually believe they have a large backlog of undone work. (Indeed, the Ford Administration implicitly favors these kinds of jobs because they would permit a smoother phase-out of the program.)

But many jobs have been spread throughout existing city agencies. In Pittsburgh, the city hired security guards for its schools. San Francisco added to the staff of its parole department. In San Jose, public service workers were used to maintain public library hours when city budget cutbacks threatened reduction. And, in Detroit, the city is now using CETA funds to hire bus drivers.

